

START ROLL 70\6

BOSTON PUBLIC LIBRARY

NEWSPAPER CLIPPINGS

SEPT 22 1929

May Permit Play

MAYOR EDWARD W. QUINN

WILL PRODUCE PLAY NEAR HERE
IF BAN PREVAILS

Guild Offered Theatre in Cambridge—Mayor Quinn Considers Permit

NICHOLS REMAINS
ADAMANT, IS BELIEF

If the Theatre Guild is finally defeated in its plans to stage Eugene O'Neill's "Strange Interlude" in Boston, it will be presented as close to this city as possible in order to gratify the thousands who have joined its protest against Boston's ban on the play.

This tentative decision was made yesterday by the guild leaders as they prepared for a meeting at the Hotel Warwick in New York city tonight to decide on the next step to overcome the difficulties in the way of a Boston presentation.

The University Theatre, Harvard square, Cambridge, has been offered to the guild by Charles E. Hatfield, owner, with the understanding that the offer is conditional upon the willingness of Mayor Edward W. Quinn to sanction the stage version in Cambridge. Hatfield has been to Mayor Quinn, who said he would take the matter under consideration pending developments in Boston.

The University Theatre, which seats about 2000, is slightly larger than the Hollis Street Theatre, the original playhouse sponsoring the production. It is by far the most accessible from downtown Boston of any outlying theatres so far proffered the guild, being only a few minutes from Park street.

The guild representatives are still awaiting a reply from Mayor Nichols to their last request for reconsideration. This was accompanied by a copy of the book version deleted so as to agree with the play. The mayor, still confined to his summer home in Hingham, with a bad cold, has indicated that his position remains unchanged. This virtually puts it up to the executive board of the theatre guild to decide at the New York meeting tonight between these courses:

- 1 To ask Mayor Nichols to witness a special performance of the play.
- 2 To appeal to the board of censorship which consists of the mayor, Police Commissioner Wilson and Chief Justice Bolster of the municipal court.
- 3 To take the fight against the city's censorship to the courts.
- 4 To take the play outside Boston, possibly to Cambridge.

PROTESTS PILE UP

The Guild board consists of Theresa Helburn, executive director, who has been in Boston all of this week fighting the local battle; Lawrence Langner, playwright and patent attorney, who accompanied her; Maurice Worthheim, Helen Westley, actress; Philip Mollner, playwright and stage director, who produced "Interlude" for the Guild, and Lee Simonson, one of the country's best known scenic artists.

Protests against the "banned in Boston" label affixed to the play by Mayor Nichols continued to pile up yesterday. Allyn Brewster McIntyre of 160 State street, Boston, wrote to the Mayor:

To deny the citizens of Boston the right to witness performances of "Strange Interlude" is to turn back this civilized day and age more than 300 years and destroy conditions for which our Pilgrim fathers fought and died—Liberty in Speech and Thought. Next year we shall celebrate the 300th anniversary of the founding of this great commonwealth. Are we to usher in this celebration with a hasty decision on your part which violates all the admirable principles involved in this celebration?

"You may add my name to those protesting against indecency," was the terse remark of Charles W. Burton, superintendent of broadcasting for the Edison Electric Illuminating company.

Benjamin S. Van Wyck, 101 Milk street, Boston, wrote:

To His Honor, Mayor Nichols:

Dear sir: Please don't be silly about this Strange Interlude production. You have in the language of the baseball field, "pulled a very bad bone." Having done it, why not be man enough to yell out loud, "My error," and prevent any further harm to Boston's welfare?

There have been enough things happen in the last five years to affect Boston adversely, and while this is a very minor thing, nevertheless it is a straw in the wind and only helped to increase the amount of ridicule now hurled at us.

Having made a "bone," be willing to acknowledge it and come out with flying colors, rather than hold a silly boy attitude of "I must be right because I am I."

P. S.—I do not know whether you know it or not, but Boston is the best little come-on for the publishing business and is so easily baited that the most sincere desire of every publisher of note is to have one of his books banned by Boston. The reason is that the books are then ordered by mail direct from publisher and he gets the 40 per cent, which ordinarily goes to the bookseller.

Another Bostonian, E. M. Quimby, writes from the University Club:

This latest demonstration on the part of the mayor of Boston makes it increasingly difficult to realize that we belong to a so-called democracy. If such a ruling as to what may be heard or not heard, seen and not seen, had been made by the Tyrant of Boston; or by Petronius Arbitrator; or even the Admirable Crichton, it would be more easily understood.

It may be a phase of self-delusion in my personal right to discriminate between right and wrong; good things and bad things; justice and injustice, which prompts me to add my feeble protest against the authority which insists on telling me what I shall read, what I shall see and what I shall hear and, incidentally, what I shall taste.

Three more protests ran as follows: From Mrs. Francis V. Bulfinch, Springdale avenue, Dover:

To the Theatre Guild,

Hollis Theatre.

I protest against the action of Mayor Nichols in banning "Strange Interlude" from Boston.

I was born and brought up in Boston, and I am a graduate of

Smith College. I have always been interested in the Theatre and try to see the best of the plays that come to Boston.

Very sincerely,
MRS. FRANCIS V. BULFINCH.
(MARGARET S.) BULFINCH.

Miss Theresa Helburn—We wish to be counted among those who are protesting the banning of "Strange Interlude." It is a stupid performance, utterly incompatible for a magistrate of a city of supposedly cultivated and educated taste. We trust you will succeed in giving the performance.

WANDA AND FRITZ TAUBER.
Directors of the Theatre Guild,
Boston, Mass.

Gentlemen—In response to your request over the radio to write Mayor Nichols of Boston concerning his censorship of "Strange Interlude" I want to inform you that I have done as you requested, and now I want to register with you as one who is sick and tired of this kind of interference with things that the people should see and hear. They must think the citizens of this nation are to be treated like a lot of little children.

Sincerely,
SAMUEL BRAMHALL.

PROTESTS FOUR IN
Among those whose protests against Mayor Nichols's action, received yesterday by the Theatre Guild, were:

Mrs. Anne L. Bowen, 80 Walnut street, Natick.

Mrs. A. W. Johnson, 30 Wayland street, Wollaston.

Benjamin S. Van Wyck, 101 Milk street, Boston.

Eugene Schwerdt, Eugene Schwerdt, Jr., Mrs. Kittie Schwerdt and Max W. Schwerdt, 200 Summer street, Boston.

Mr. and Mrs. M. Cooper, Mills.

Samuel Bramhall, 31 Hamilton street, Lawrence.

Miss Mary Johnson, 32 Oakview terrace, Jamaica Plain.

Mrs. Gertrude Hills, 32 Oakview terrace, Jamaica Plain.

Wanda and Fritz Tauber, Melrose Highlands.

Horace W. Frost, 74 State street, Boston.

Mrs. Francis V. Bulfinch, Springdale avenue, Dover.

Henry and Isabella Schulz, 4412 Washington street, Roslindale.

Lena C. Parmenter, Fred C. Parmenter, Fred S. Parmenter, 485 Ash street, Boston.

Allyn Brewster McIntyre, 150 State street, Boston.

E. W. Quimby, University Club, Boston.

Charles W. Burton, superintendent of broadcasting, Edison Company, 39 Boylston street.

Leroy W. Coons, 204 Clark road, Brookline.

P. S.—I do not know whether you know it or not, but Boston is the best little come-on for the publishing business and is so easily baited that the most sincere desire of every publisher of note is to have one of his books banned by Boston. The reason is that the books are then ordered by mail direct from publisher and he gets the 40 per cent, which ordinarily goes to the bookseller.

Another Bostonian, E. M. Quimby, writes from the University Club:

This latest demonstration on the part of the mayor of Boston makes it increasingly difficult to realize that we belong to a so-called democracy. If such a ruling as to what may be heard or not heard, seen and not seen, had been made by the Tyrant of Boston; or by Petronius Arbitrator; or even the Admirable Crichton, it would be more easily understood.

It may be a phase of self-delusion in my personal right to discriminate between right and wrong; good things and bad things; justice and injustice, which prompts me to add my feeble protest against the authority which insists on telling me what I shall read, what I shall see and what I shall hear and, incidentally, what I shall taste.

Three more protests ran as follows: From Mrs. Francis V. Bulfinch, Springdale avenue, Dover:

To the Theatre Guild,

Hollis Theatre.

I protest against the action of Mayor Nichols in banning "Strange Interlude" from Boston.

I was born and brought up in Boston, and I am a graduate of

Smith College. I have always been interested in the Theatre and try to see the best of the plays that come to Boston.

Very sincerely,
MRS. FRANCIS V. BULFINCH.
(MARGARET S.) BULFINCH.

Miss Theresa Helburn—We wish to be counted among those who are protesting the banning of "Strange Interlude." It is a stupid performance, utterly incompatible for a magistrate of a city of supposedly cultivated and educated taste. We trust you will succeed in giving the performance.

WANDA AND FRITZ TAUBER.
Directors of the Theatre Guild,
Boston, Mass.

Gentlemen—In response to your request over the radio to write Mayor Nichols of Boston concerning his censorship of "Strange Interlude" I want to inform you that I have done as you requested, and now I want to register with you as one who is sick and tired of this kind of interference with things that the people should see and hear. They must think the citizens of this nation are to be treated like a lot of little children.

Sincerely,
SAMUEL BRAMHALL.

PROTESTS FOUR IN
Among those whose protests against Mayor Nichols's action, received yesterday by the Theatre Guild, were:

Mrs. Anne L. Bowen, 80 Walnut street, Natick.

Mrs. A. W. Johnson, 30 Wayland street, Wollaston.

Benjamin S. Van Wyck, 101 Milk street, Boston.

Eugene Schwerdt, Eugene Schwerdt, Jr., Mrs. Kittie Schwerdt and Max W. Schwerdt, 200 Summer street, Boston.

Mr. and Mrs. M. Cooper, Mills.

Samuel Bramhall, 31 Hamilton street, Lawrence.

Miss Mary Johnson, 32 Oakview terrace, Jamaica Plain.

Mrs. Gertrude Hills, 32 Oakview terrace, Jamaica Plain.

Wanda and Fritz Tauber, Melrose Highlands.

Horace W. Frost, 74 State street, Boston.

Mrs. Francis V. Bulfinch, Springdale avenue, Dover.

Henry and Isabella Schulz, 4412 Washington street, Roslindale.

Lena C. Parmenter, Fred C. Parmenter, Fred S. Parmenter, 485 Ash street, Boston.

Allyn Brewster McIntyre, 150 State street, Boston.

E. W. Quimby, University Club, Boston.

Charles W. Burton, superintendent of broadcasting, Edison Company, 39 Boylston street.

Leroy W. Coons, 204 Clark road, Brookline.

P. S.—I do not know whether you know it or not, but Boston is the best little come-on for the publishing business and is so easily baited that the most sincere desire of every publisher of note is to have one of his books banned by Boston. The reason is that the books are then ordered by mail direct from publisher and he gets the 40 per cent, which ordinarily goes to the bookseller.

Another Bostonian, E. M. Quimby, writes from the University Club:

This latest demonstration on the part of the mayor of Boston makes it increasingly difficult to realize that we belong to a so-called democracy. If such a ruling as to what may be heard or not heard, seen and not seen, had been made by the Tyrant of Boston; or by Petronius Arbitrator; or even the Admirable Crichton, it would be more easily understood.

It may be a phase of self-delusion in my personal right to discriminate between right and wrong; good things and bad things; justice and injustice, which prompts me to add my feeble protest against the authority which insists on telling me what I shall read, what I shall see and what I shall hear and, incidentally, what I shall taste.

Three more protests ran as follows: From Mrs. Francis V. Bulfinch, Springdale avenue, Dover:

To the Theatre Guild,

Hollis Theatre.

I protest against the action of Mayor Nichols in banning "Strange Interlude" from Boston.

I was born and brought up in Boston, and I am a graduate of

Smith College. I have always been interested in the Theatre and try to see the best of the plays that come to Boston.

Very sincerely,
MRS. FRANCIS V. BULFINCH.
(MARGARET S.) BULFINCH.

Miss Theresa Helburn—We wish to be counted among those who are protesting the banning of "Strange Interlude." It is a stupid performance, utterly incompatible for a magistrate of a city of supposedly cultivated and educated taste. We trust you will succeed in giving the performance.

WANDA AND FRITZ TAUBER.
Directors of the Theatre Guild,
Boston, Mass.

Gentlemen—In response to your request over the radio to write Mayor Nichols of Boston concerning his censorship of "Strange Interlude" I want to inform you that I have done as you requested, and now I want to register with you as one who is sick and tired of this kind of interference with things that the people should see and hear. They must think the citizens of this nation are to be treated like a lot of little children.

Sincerely,
SAMUEL BRAMHALL.

PROTESTS FOUR IN
Among those whose protests against Mayor Nichols's action, received yesterday by the Theatre Guild, were:

Mrs. Anne L. Bowen, 80 Walnut street, Natick.

Mrs. A. W. Johnson, 30 Wayland street, Wollaston.

Benjamin S. Van Wyck, 101 Milk street, Boston.

Eugene Schwerdt, Eugene Schwerdt, Jr., Mrs. Kittie Schwerdt and Max W. Schwerdt, 200 Summer street, Boston.

Mr. and Mrs. M. Cooper, Mills.

Samuel Bramhall, 31 Hamilton street, Lawrence.

Miss Mary Johnson, 32 Oakview terrace, Jamaica Plain.

Mrs. Gertrude Hills, 32 Oakview terrace, Jamaica Plain.

Wanda and Fritz Tauber, Melrose Highlands.

Horace W. Frost, 74 State street, Boston.

Mrs. Francis V. Bulfinch, Springdale avenue, Dover.

Henry and Isabella Schulz, 4412 Washington street, Roslindale.

Lena C. Parmenter, Fred C. Parmenter, Fred S. Parmenter, 485 Ash street, Boston.

Allyn Brewster McIntyre, 150 State street, Boston.

E. W. Quimby, University Club, Boston.

Charles W. Burton, superintendent of broadcasting, Edison Company, 39 Boylston street.

Leroy W. Coons, 204 Clark road, Brookline.

P. S.—I do not know whether you know it or not, but Boston is the best little come-on for the publishing business and is so easily baited that the most sincere desire of every publisher of note is to have one of his books banned by Boston. The reason is that the books are then ordered by mail direct from publisher and he gets the 40 per cent, which ordinarily goes to the bookseller.

Another Bostonian, E. M. Quimby, writes from the University Club:

This latest demonstration on the part of the mayor of Boston makes it increasingly difficult to realize that we belong to a so-called democracy. If such a ruling as to what may be heard or not heard, seen and not seen, had been made by the Tyrant of Boston; or by Petronius Arbitrator; or even the Admirable Crichton, it would be more easily understood.

It may be a phase of self-delusion in my personal right to discriminate between right and wrong; good things and bad things; justice and injustice, which prompts me to add my feeble protest against the authority which insists on telling me what I shall read, what I shall see and what I shall hear and, incidentally, what I shall taste.

Three more protests ran as follows: From Mrs. Francis V. Bulfinch, Springdale avenue, Dover:

To the Theatre Guild,

Hollis Theatre.

To Address Y. W. C. A.

Rhoda E. McCulloch, editor of the Woman's Press, official organ of the organization, who will address Boston secretariat staff at all-day conference of Y. M. C. A. at Marblehead next Wednesday.

Mrs. George C. Whipple, 21 Chauncey street, Cambridge.

Talcott Parsons, 909 Memorial drive, Cambridge.

John Alden Degen, 77 Waban Hill road, Chestnut Hill.

Samuel A. Levine, 270 Commonwealth avenue, Boston.

Joseph B. Groce, 70 State street, Boston.

Horace W. Frost, 74 State street, Boston.

N. N. Duse, 31 Milk street, Boston.

Mary C. Sawyer, 507 Worcester street, Wellesley Hills.

Brookline.

Mrs. Stephen R. Dow, 86 Beacon street, Chestnut Hill.

Mrs. Frederic L. Chase, 285 Governor street, Providence, R. I.

Mrs. Summer Brooks, 14 Channing street, Cambridge.

R. W. Fay, 99 Brattle street, Cambridge.

Hale J. Walker, Cambridge.

Robert R. Thurber, 1 Federal street, Boston.

Ernest O. Miller, 5 Fresh Pond lane, Cambridge.

Sylvia Annable, Kennebunkport.

Genevieve M. Fuller, Milton.

Gertrude M. Baker, 144 Prospect street, Fall River.

Grace Morrison Poole, 8 White avenue, Brockton.

Frank Jones, Malden.

Mrs. William Borland, 153 Beacon street.

Miss Loraine Leeson, 256 Commonwealth avenue, Boston.

Margaret D. Christian, Wellesley.

Lionel G. Gale, 206 State street, Boston.

Mrs. Herbert Rogers, 166 Clark road, Brookline.

Mrs. George D. Rowell, 25 Fresh Pond avenue, Cambridge.

Blanche Merritt, 9 Portland street, Lynn.

Mrs. Earl Howard, 103 Prospect street, Pawtucket, R. I.

John B. Hawkes, 98 Pinckney street, Boston.

Ralph Potter, Brookline.

Marie R. Kingston, box 4, station A, Boston.

Carlton B. Guild, West Medway.

Florence H. Forté, 50 Carver road, Newton Highlands.

Mrs. James Jackson, 9 Fairfield street, Boston.

Horace Stevens, M. D., 15 Trill street, Cambridge.

I. Norman Levin, 402 Harvard street, Brookline.

Ruth A. Crossman, 60 Dean street, Taunton.

Ruth D. Cutter, 246 Brattle street, Cambridge.

Mary A. Hartwell, Waltham.

James Hitchcock, 6 Strong place, Boston.

Mrs. G. H. Chamberlain, 21 Cumberland avenue, Brookline.

A. E. Prescott, 12 Pinckney street.

Ruth Nutting, 39 Summit avenue, Brookline.

Mrs. F. J. Oakes, 278 Warren street, Brookline.

Ruth E. Perkins, 15 Davis street, West Newton.

Benjamin S. Van Wyck, 101 Milk street.

Miss Mildred R. Howland, 30 Bay State road, Boston.

Mrs. H. N. Berry, 54 Nahant street, Lynn.

Mrs. C. A. Belash, 5 Chestnut street, Boston.

Jane A. Patterson, Wayland.

Mrs. L. W. Riddell, 123 Walker street, Cambridge.

Edward L. Hubbard, 37 Temple place, Boston.

Mrs. A. L. Strauss, 11 Copley street, Brookline.

Dr. E. G. Thorp, Massachusetts General Hospital.

Mrs. Hilbert F. Day, 34 Kirkland street, Cambridge.

Mrs. George A. Cutter, 201 Village avenue, Dedham.

Mr. and Mrs. Howard J. Barnett, 248 Marlborough street, Boston.

Lena E. Odell, 20 Mt. Vernon street, Boston.

Alice F. Marsh, 34 School street, Dedham.

Mrs. H. P. Richmond, Chestnut Hill.

Elizabeth M. Wood, 40 Commonwealth avenue, Boston.

Charles S. Grover, 31 Milk street, Boston.

Lola Rantoul, 12 Revere street, Jamaica Plain.

Mrs. Edward W. Perkins, 38 Chestnut street, Wellesley Hills.

S. Agnes Dunham, 46 Lovering street, Boston.

Mrs. C. W. Clark, 38 Concord avenue, Cambridge.

Elsa R. Hart, 36 Fenway, Boston.

Mrs. Carl Rudnick, 35 Columbia street, Brookline.

Mrs. Max Frankel, 12 Commonwealth avenue, Boston.

John Alden Degen, 77 Waban Hill road, Chestnut Hill.

Samuel A. Levine, 270 Commonwealth avenue, Boston.

Joseph B. Groce, 70 State street, Boston.

Horace W. Frost, 74 State street, Boston.

Guild to Send Mayor Stage Script of Play

Seeks to Placate Nichols on "Strange Interlude" Before Recourse to Courts

Before having recourse to a Federal injunction to restrain Mayor Nichols from preventing performance of Eugene O'Neill's "Strange Interlude" in the Hollis Street Theater Sept. 30, representatives of the Theater Guild today sent the acting version of the play to their attorney, Robert G. Dodge, for him to present to the mayor. Miss Theresa Helburn, executive director of the Guild and member of the board of managers, and Lawrence Langner, another member of the board, said that Mayor Nichols would be asked to study the text and to note deletions which have been made and reconsider his ban and base decision on this text rather than the printed book which he read and which has now been sold out by Boston book stores.

Sarcasm accompanied many of the signatures asked for on the first tally today on the postcards of protest which were sent out by the Guild. Margaret Deland, novelist, replied by telegram from Kennebunkport, Me.: "I am amazed and mortified at action of official Boston in banning 'Strange Interlude.' Glad to join committee of protest."

In the 150 cards, letters and telegrams, each stating the writer has recruited four other protestants, there was only one writer who disagreed with the Guild and sided with Mayor Nichols. Dr. J. Dallinger Barney of the Massachusetts General Hospital and lecturer at Harvard Medical School, extended the offer of his services to the Guild, as did Dr. Horace Paine Stevens of 620 Commonwealth avenue. Rev. Raymond A. Chapman of St. Stephen's Church, wrote: "Keep up the fight—to the courts if necessary. We're all with you."

While the Guild was giving out these expressions of opinion, Mrs. Maurice Sapers of Brookline, president of the Women's Scholarship Association, an organization interested in higher education for women which has been in existence for twenty-three years, called at the Ritz-Carlton rooms to ask if any assurance had been received on production as that organization has taken 600 tickets—practically the entire membership—and seeks to sell.

At the same time, Pemberton square was jammed when word spread that the following notice was on display in one of the sidewalk bookstalls at Jackson's Book Store, 28 Pemberton square:

IMPORTANT NOTICE

Any person or persons under 75 years of age and living in Boston, who wishes to purchase any of these books—Hamlet—Prints—Brochures—leaflets—pages, or parts or portions of such, which contain, include, or mention such words as—

Ankle—leg—arm—damn—hell—split—piffle—devil—Hades—Whoopee, etc., etc., and so on—

Must first present a signed affidavit from his, or her, or its mother and countersigned at City Hall, not later than the year 1901, attesting that the earth is flat, that angels do not have wings, that all other nations, creeds, born or unborn, have a right to differ in opinion, or have opinions, from Bostonians; that the Cabots and the Lowells did not descend from a cod or cods or other fish.

When presenting the said affidavit the dime, nickel or Nichols, in payment of such books, pamphlets, etc., above mentioned the dime or other coins must first have been personally tested at the Philadelphia mint and so certified by the director of that mint.

Millions of books have been printed, and about 10,000 are issued each and every year, but we, the publishers, heretofore agree to guarantee that we have read every book, page and word, and that we are in the position, situation and condition to find, point out, know, disclose and explain, each and every word which is banned, prohibited and excluded from the vocabulary of all infants under 75 years young.

Holy of Holies, Boston, Sept. 20, 1929.
(Signed) JACKSON'S

Cites Reviews and "Uncle Lads"

Rev. Walter S. Swisher of the Wellesley Hills Unitarian Church, wrote: "I am all the more surprised at the ban on the play in view of the fact that reviews with all kinds of salacious jokes and indecency more unclad than the law allows are shown freely in Boston. 'Strange Interlude' seriously considers the fundamental problems of life."

Emile Reinhold of the Hotel Kenmore took exception to the ban by "the self-appointed keeper of the morals and virtue of Boston citizens."

Mrs. Frank Chouteau Brown, wife of one of the three readers of books for the "Watch and Ward Society," wrote that she had obtained the four signatures asked for and would endeavor to get more.

Others who reported that they had signed protest cards included Mrs. Charles J. Overlander, 443 Marlboro street; Guy H. Lee, 91 Newbury street; F. H. Church, Jr., 41 Kilby street; Mary L. Wheeler, 91 Pineknay street; Cornelia Brooks Fenno Quintus, 159 Newbury street and Mary Langdon Coffin, 154 Newbury street.

Following a presentation of their side of the case over WEEI at six o'clock last night, in which they were joined by Walter Pritchard Eaton, dramatic critic and author, the Guild representatives issued a written statement that as a result of a conference of Attorney Robert G. Dodge with Guild Counsel Charles Riegleman in New York yesterday the fight for presentation here is carried a step further in the understanding that there are grounds for believing that the Federal courts might take jurisdiction in the matter of banning the play.

The joint statement of Miss Helburn and Mr. Langner was as follows:

"The Guild's fight for the production of its play, 'Strange Interlude,' is carried a step farther as the result of a conference held today with our Boston counsel, after consulting with our New York attorney, who makes it appear that there are grounds for believing that the Federal courts might take jurisdiction in the matter of banning the play."

"The point of law upon which this opinion is based cannot be disclosed for obvious reasons at this time. Before taking so drastic a step as to bring the matter before the Federal courts, the Guild will furnish the mayor with the

THE BOSTON HERALD TUESDAY, SEPTEMBER 24, 1929 OUR MAIL BAG

FROM JUDGE GRANT

To the Editor of The Herald:

I do not believe in literary censorship. A stream will not rise higher than its source, nor fall much lower. The right to discuss social problems freely is a safeguard to liberty. A play that had run all winter in New York and the gauntlet of London might well have encouraged Mayor Nichols to emulate the example of the saloon keeper, who when asked "Is Michael Doherty good for a drink?" replied "Has he had it?" An easy-going world, outside of Boston, had already accepted the play that has caused all this bother. But our mayor at least has shown himself a man of courage, and as the New York Times hints in its pleasant article "By-Products" yesterday, Boston is entitled to its own opinion even against the world.

The essential inquiry in every controversy is "What are the facts?" Not many who are vociferously discussing this question have read the play. I bought and read it months ago, as I do everything that O'Neill writes. He is an important literary artist, fearless and dynamic. I admire much of his art and some of its dramatic consequences. But I take off my hat to Mayor Nichols for his courageous verdict on "Strange Interlude," in the face of that portion of the younger generation intent on crowning all heroes of irregular sex life as Madonnas.

I submit to the people of Boston a skeleton of facts, which none can controvert, and inquire what mooted issue do the facts subserve. In my opinion the play is a study in morbid sex psychology, Pelon on Ossa in its grotesque sequence of repugnant and most improbable events.

1—Nina, the heroine, whose lover has been killed in the war, and whose marriage to her before his departure has been obstructed by her father's appeal to the lover's sense of honor, leaves home and gives herself successively to half a dozen invalided soldiers.

2—Nina decides to marry a man whom she does not love in order to have a child. She becomes pregnant, but is informed by her mother-in-law of a deep strain of insanity in her husband's family to which her husband is the only exception. She consents to have a child, and thus render her husband happy. Nina convives with a young physician, already an acquaintance, to render her pregnant again, with the result that they fall desperately in love. A child is born, which the husband believes is his, and the drama proceeds like a wounded snake to its lengthy end with his, and her son indifferent to her, bitten, and an ancient lover, a tepid novelist whom she has accused of seducing himself in his own books.

Can any modification in the stage version obliterate the basic muddiness of this plot? The great writings of the past from the Greek dramatists to the days of Flaubert, however scornful of current morals, have always sought to depict actual truth. But what does "Strange Interlude" portray except sexual vagaries spun out to the dimensions of a disagreeable surgical operation for the deletion of a too smart world?

And one thing more. The New York Times pointed out also yesterday that there were no longer Puritans in Boston. True again. Either the language of respectability or the maw of the young intelligentsia has absorbed them. The name of our censor is Casey, which suggests the race that has largely supplanted them in Boston. As one who has both Brahmin and a Unitarian helped for 30 years to keep the scales of justice even between Puritan and Catholic in this community, I know well the virtues of that race. Chief among them is a spiritual decency and unwillingness to substitute for the things that are lovely and of good report nauseous vagaries masquerading as naturalism.

If in this instance Boston makes herself ridiculous by her ban, so much the better. It was Boston who threw the tea chests overboard a century and a half ago. This challenge by Mayor Nichols to the complacency of the band of untrammelled but self-adoring young men and women who tell us what to read and why, will show at least that our majority, however big game, still purpose to keep seaward under cover. Were Broun Heywood, Sinclair Upton and Edna Millay St. Jim these names) to parade down Park avenue stark naked in midsummer, it would be cool and comfortable, this would be natural as Adam and Eve. One must only to open the current Geographic magazine to see that the native of the primeval Papua do so still. But if the case some successor of Anthony Comstock should invoke an obscure Victorian law that landed them in jail, it would be able to answer to

Robert Grant, former speaker of the Massachusetts House, commended the latter to his stand favoring repeal of the Volstead act. The gist of Dr. Gordon's communication was as follows:

It seems to me that the last and the hope of society is in the education of the people. Until evil is seen to be no law or combination of laws can any adequate way prevent men and women from producing it. . . . Let us, therefore, appeal to Caesar, as indeed you have done, and refuse to rest the integrity of the state upon the wilful thought and methods of sincere, but inhuman men and women."

Within 24 hours from the time Dr. Gordon's letter appeared in print a group of women dry workers, numbering among them the most militant in the country, made sharp reply to Dr. Gordon. One sentence of the reply will suffice:

Dr. Gordon would seem to be, as far as a woman is concerned, something of a superficial anarchist; that is, one who believes that education can do it.

During the past week the secretary of the Constitutional Liberty League, Fredrick W. Cook, turned over to the league the referendum petition for circulation throughout the state. The league must obtain the signatures of 20,000 registered voters by Dec. 15, before the secretary can transmit the initiative referendum to the Legislature.

The league has so organized its efforts that it expects to experience no difficulty in obtaining the signatures. It will also be prepared to obtain additional 5000 early next year in event that the Legislature fails to pass the repeal bill, in order to carry the question to the voters at the next election.

ACTIVE CAMPAIGN

An active campaign is to be conducted on both sides. The letters of Walker and Dr. Gordon are the first of many that it is expected will come from persons who have changed attitude on the prohibition subject. The drys will also be prepared to counter propaganda and some in-ming months are ahead.

It seems to be little doubt that Franco-Americans of Massachusetts, numbers of whom voted the Democratic ticket at the last election, are quite solidly entrenched within

By WENDELL D. HOWE

There have been four outstanding developments in the news of the past week having a direct bearing on the political situation in Massachusetts, all of which are worthy of mention. In the order in which they occurred, these developments were as follows:

1.—The announcement of the Rev. Dr. George A. Gordon, pastor emeritus of Old South Church, supporting the movement for the repeal of the Baby Head act.

2.—The renewed enthusiasm of the Franco-Americans of Massachusetts for Republican party, so clearly shown in the complimentary dinner in Boston United States Senator Felix Hebert Rhode Island.

3.—The collapse of the Roosevelt Club attempt to cause disruption within the publican party and the retirement of local Committeeman Louis K. Liggett, which has succeeded only in bringing wholesale resignations from that

4.—The banning of the Pulitzer prize "Strange Interlude," from Boston Mayor Nichols, probable candidate for United States senator, who may not be to what extent he has weakened candidacy.

DR. GORDON'S STAND

Dr. Gordon, in his letter to Joseph P. Keefe, former speaker of the Massachusetts House, commended the latter to his stand favoring repeal of the Volstead act. The gist of Dr. Gordon's communication was as follows:

It seems to me that the last and the hope of society is in the education of the people. Until evil is seen to be no law or combination of laws can any adequate way prevent men and women from producing it. . . . Let us, therefore, appeal to Caesar, as indeed you have done, and refuse to rest the integrity of the state upon the wilful thought and methods of sincere, but inhuman men and women."

Within 24 hours from the time Dr. Gordon's letter appeared in print a group of women dry workers, numbering among them the most militant in the country, made sharp reply to Dr. Gordon. One sentence of the reply will suffice:

Dr. Gordon would seem to be, as far as a woman is concerned, something of a superficial anarchist; that is, one who believes that education can do it.

During the past week the secretary of the Constitutional Liberty League, Fredrick W. Cook, turned over to the league the referendum petition for circulation throughout the state. The league must obtain the signatures of 20,000 registered voters by Dec. 15, before the secretary can transmit the initiative referendum to the Legislature.

The league has so organized its efforts that it expects to experience no difficulty in obtaining the signatures. It will also be prepared to obtain additional 5000 early next year in event that the Legislature fails to pass the repeal bill, in order to carry the question to the voters at the next election.

ACTIVE CAMPAIGN

An active campaign is to be conducted on both sides. The letters of Walker and Dr. Gordon are the first of many that it is expected will come from persons who have changed attitude on the prohibition subject. The drys will also be prepared to counter propaganda and some in-ming months are ahead.

It seems to be little doubt that Franco-Americans of Massachusetts, numbers of whom voted the Democratic ticket at the last election, are quite solidly entrenched within the Republican fold. They give every indication that they intend to remain there. Their enthusiasm was evident at the dinner on Tuesday night in the Hotel Statler in honor of United States Senator Felix Hebert of Rhode Island, the first Franco-American to be elected to the upper branch of Congress—and an exceedingly staunch Republican.

Senator Hebert never wastes the opportunity to let the people of common ancestry with him know that he is a Republican, that he believes in the principles of the party thoroughly and he has little sympathy for mugwumps. He showed the other night that he has little sympathy with those who attempt to discredit political organizations, who try to wreck them by boring from within, or who try to set themselves up on a pedestal above them.

His remarks on this score were published, but the diplomatic way in which he led up to the subject could not be given for want of space. He said: "A distinguished European once said that in America every one believes himself to be a statesman; that like a million ants on a log floating in the stream, every ant thinks it is steering the log. I sincerely hope this may continue to be so. Let us boast of it. The fact is that under our form of government, the station, is called upon to pass judgment on the management of our government at each succeeding election. It follows, then, that every one in America does have a voice in the conduct of our political affairs, and that is what makes our country the most glorious and the most powerful and the most prosperous on earth."

"But," continued the senator, and then he assailed those who oppose party organization and party responsibility—without which there is grave doubt that the government of the United States would have survived as a republic.

LOSING IN MEMBERSHIP

Judge Raoul Beaudreau of Marlboro, who was appointed to the bench of the superior court by Gov. Allen, was one of the guests of the evening, and made a happy appearance. By appointing him, Gov. Allen has established a deep bond of friendship with the Franco-Americans of the state, and they are a most appreciative people.

The Roosevelt Club, after its fiasco of last Tuesday evening, when about 35 members only responded to the call of the president for a special meeting in Gilbert hall, Tremont Temple, appears to be losing in membership. A short time ago the membership was announced as 800. A few days later the president said the number was 714. It would be interesting, perhaps, to know what it is now.

Strangely enough, only a few of the members who attended the meeting actually participated in the voting on the various resolutions which were allowed to go to a vote. For instance, on what was regarded as the most important resolution of all, that setting forth the announcement that in matters of man-management the chairman of the Republican party in the state, the vote for the resolution was 15 to 4 against.

Strictly speaking, none of the resolutions adopted at the meeting have any standing so far as the club itself is concerned, as there was not a quorum present. The president only a few days before had said that 50 members constituted a quorum of the club.

LIGGETT NOT MENTIONED

It was significant, perhaps, that no resolution mentioning National Committeeman Liggett was offered. There would have been some fireworks had such a resolution made an appearance, for there were several members of the club present who were interested solely

Boston Daily Globe

which allowing certain theatres in Boston to run their usual shows, and allowing the book of the play to be

"Not Be Used as a Tool"

Dr. Keefe declared: "I never opened against any- heard it. bl to have pass judge- from the favorably We must le, and de- author, protect it- ses, but we liticians to city. Let's be used as the Republican fold. They give every indication that they intend to remain there. Their enthusiasm was evident at the dinner on Tuesday night in the Hotel Statler in honor of United States Senator Felix Hebert of Rhode Island, the first Franco-American to be elected to the upper branch of Congress—and an exceedingly staunch Republican.

BAN ON "STRANGE INTERLUDE" WILL PROVE SERIOUS POLITICAL BLUNDER FOR MAYOR NICHOLS

Senator Hebert never wastes the opportunity to let the people of common ancestry with him know that he is a Republican, that he believes in the principles of the party thoroughly and he has little sympathy for mugwumps. He showed the other night that he has little sympathy with those who attempt to discredit political organizations, who try to wreck them by boring from within, or who try to set themselves up on a pedestal above them.

His remarks on this score were published, but the diplomatic way in which he led up to the subject could not be given for want of space. He said: "A distinguished European once said that in America every one believes himself to be a statesman; that like a million ants on a log floating in the stream, every ant thinks it is steering the log. I sincerely hope this may continue to be so. Let us boast of it. The fact is that under our form of government, the station, is called upon to pass judgment on the management of our government at each succeeding election. It follows, then, that every one in America does have a voice in the conduct of our political affairs, and that is what makes our country the most glorious and the most powerful and the most prosperous on earth."

"But," continued the senator, and then he assailed those who oppose party organization and party responsibility—without which there is grave doubt that the government of the United States would have survived as a republic.

LOSING IN MEMBERSHIP

Judge Raoul Beaudreau of Marlboro, who was appointed to the bench of the superior court by Gov. Allen, was one of the guests of the evening, and made a happy appearance. By appointing him, Gov. Allen has established a deep bond of friendship with the Franco-Americans of the state, and they are a most appreciative people.

The Roosevelt Club, after its fiasco of last Tuesday evening, when about 35 members only responded to the call of the president for a special meeting in Gilbert hall, Tremont Temple, appears to be losing in membership. A short time ago the membership was announced as 800. A few days later the president said the number was 714. It would be interesting, perhaps, to know what it is now.

Strangely enough, only a few of the members who attended the meeting actually participated in the voting on the various resolutions which were allowed to go to a vote. For instance, on what was regarded as the most important resolution of all, that setting forth the announcement that in matters of man-management the chairman of the Republican party in the state, the vote for the resolution was 15 to 4 against.

Strictly speaking, none of the resolutions adopted at the meeting have any standing so far as the club itself is concerned, as there was not a quorum present. The president only a few days before had said that 50 members constituted a quorum of the club.

LIGGETT NOT MENTIONED

It was significant, perhaps, that no resolution mentioning National Committeeman Liggett was offered. There would have been some fireworks had such a resolution made an appearance, for there were several members of the club present who were interested solely in that phase of the situation. They were ready to have their say in opposition to the entire proceedings and then sever their connection with the organization on the spot. As it was, an amount of effort could induce such persons as Frank B. Hall of Worcester, former chairman of the Republican state committee, and Mrs. Frank Roe Batchelder of Worcester, present vice-chairman of the state committee, who were present, to speak or otherwise take part in the special meeting.

Only one individual's resignation as a director of the club has been made public by the president thus far—that of Representative Henry L. Shattuck of Boston, House chairman of the legislative committee on ways and means, and one of the ablest men ever to sit in the Massachusetts General Court. The fact is, however, that there have been large numbers of resignations. Mayor Nichols has made a peculiar start as a candidate for the Republican nomination for United States senator, at which his friends assert he is pointing. His banning of the "Strange Interlude" in Boston, which has brought more ridicule on a city that is already the laughing stock of the world because of its ridiculous censorship practices, is hardly expected to win votes, for no one seriously believes that the mayor is thinking of running for high political office on a purist platform.

MAYOR'S ENTHUSE

It is rather a pity that the mayor, or his advisers, chose such a course, for Mayor Nichols has made a name for himself as the chief executive of the members, to city and can point with considerable pride to some of the accomplishments which have been made during his four-aid, to in- things stand at the present time all of the accomplishments will be forgotten, while he will never be able to shake the cry, "He banned 'Strange Interlude.'" History will thus remember him, not for his financial record, not for the establishment of the Boston port authority, not for his Boston traffic commission, not for many other worth-while creations for which he has been responsible, but as a contributor to further indignities which Bostonians must suffer when they leave the confines of their narrow streets to venture forth, whether it be to foreign capitals or to Hickville Cor-d play," the

CLERGY

The censorship idea is wrong at the core. The only thing thus far accomplished by the order to ban "Strange Interlude" has been to stimulate interest in the play, to cause many thousands of people to buy and read it in book form who otherwise would not have been interested, and to antagonize other thousands of people needlessly.

From the political standpoint, at least, Mayor Nichols has committed what the Japanese would call hara-kiri. He will be wise indeed if he finds a way out of the dilemma in which he now finds himself.

MONDAY, SEPTEMBER 23, 1929

STUPID AND JUVENILE

[From the Hartford Courant]

On the ground that "Strange Interlude" presents a "disgusting spectacle of immorality and an advocacy of atheism, of domestic infidelity and the destruction of unborn life," Mayor Nichols of Boston has reiterated his refusal to allow Eugene O'Neill's drama to be presented in his city. According to the mayor, representatives of the Theater Guild who talked with him about the play produced no new facts to cause him to alter his opinion of it.

This is all very stupid and juvenile. Obviously the special statute under which the mayor, police commissioner and chief justice of the municipal court of Boston are empowered to revoke or suspend licenses for theatrical performances in that city was meant solely as a safeguard against obscene displays on the stage. It is absurd to suppose that the act conferred the mantle of dramatic critic upon political shoulders. Yet these three men mulishly persist in banning the play despite the protests of intelligent men and women, including the Pulitzer prize committee, who have seen or read "Strange Interlude" and found it a magnificent drama.

If Boston simply allows its officials to prevent the production of this play, the city is in for a barren theatrical season. Men who do not like domestic infidelity can hardly be expected to pass very much of Shakespeare's work. Cynicism will probably be driven outside the city limits because he is not God fearing, and one shudders at the thought of what the mayor would do and say if the Guild attempted to produce "The Cenci."

TOOK THE "SENSE" OUT OF CENSORSHIP

[From the Worcester Telegram]

It is not clear whether Boston will, after all, get a chance to see "Strange Interlude," but the todo stirred up by Mayor Nichols' action in banning the play seems reasonably certain to make Boston see how silly Boston is.

And that will be a gain. Boston has been strangely willing to tolerate utterly stupid censorship of literary and dramatic material. For the most part, the performances in absurdity have been given by the police head. Now the thing has spread to the mayor himself. That part of Boston which has done no more than raise superior eyebrow while sister cities hooted at the antics of its official clumps stamping their flat feet upon Dr. Pangloss and his company, who were to be viewed with suspicion because of unpopularity, is now coming to feel that it ought to do something for the preservation of its reputation for ordinary intelligence. There is prospect that its protest will be sufficiently vigorous to bring about improvement. It is entitled to a bit of sense in censorship.

CENSORSHIP AGAIN

[From the New Haven Journal-Courier]

We have no comment to make upon the justice of Boston's ban of the Eugene O'Neill's "Strange Interlude," one of America's great plays. None seems necessary. But there is humor, we believe, in a study of Boston's consistency in the matter.

The inveterate foe of censorship is consistency. Once adventured on the road of suppression, the wisest censor learns the unhappy fact that the world is not organized in blacks and whites, but contains a terrifying confusion of neutralities in browns and grays. No play is wholly bad; no book is wholly and there is no standard by which one salacious novel can be compared with the next. The result is that censorship is largely a series of uncorrelated, spasmodic leaps in the aesthetic dark. The censor rules out a work that should plainly pass and permits one that should plainly be banned. He suppresses something that should be suppressed and takes similar action against something quite innocent. Or, as Boston has done in this case, he retires an artistic masterpiece in one guise while allowing it in the other.

For the published version of "Strange Interlude," containing many purple passages deleted from the playing version, has sold steadily in Boston for months. There has been no difficulty in buying it, even in public bookstores, and an examination of the crime reports of the city shows that its effect has been undecernible. Why, then, should the playing version be banned? It cannot be that Boston thinks actions sinful when expressed in human terms which are pure when only written down in words. And it is not that. Boston has merely made one of the illogical leaps in the dark which characterizes censorship everywhere. Lacking a code, a principle, a standard, it has lugged at random and not "Strange Interlude." We should like to see statistics on the sales increase of the book version in the next few weeks.

anscript

224 WASHINGTON STREET, BOSTON, MASS.

MONDAY, SEPTEMBER 23, 1929

STUPID AND JUVENILE

[From the Hartford Courant]

On the ground that "Strange Interlude" presents a "disgusting spectacle of immorality and an advocacy of atheism, of domestic infidelity and the destruction of unborn life," Mayor Nichols of Boston has reiterated his refusal to allow Eugene O'Neill's drama to be presented in his city. According to the mayor, representatives of the Theater Guild who talked with him about the play produced no new facts to cause him to alter his opinion of it.

BOSTON EVENING TRANSCRIPT
FRIDAY, SEPTEMBER 20

Guild to Send Mayor Stage Script of Play

Seeks to Placate Nichols on "Strange Interlude" Before Recourse to Courts

Before having recourse to a Federal injunction to restrain Mayor Nichols from preventing performance of Eugene O'Neill's "Strange Interlude" in the Hollis Street Theatre Sept. 30, representatives of the Theater Guild today sent the acting version of the play to the mayor, Miss Theresa Helburn, executive director of the Guild and member of the board of managers, and Lawrence Langner, another member of the board, said that Mayor Nichols would be asked to study the text and to note deletions which have been made and reconsider his ban and base decision on this text rather than the printed book which he read and which has now been sold out by Boston book stores.

Sarcasm accompanied many of the signatures asked for on the first tally today on the postcards of protest which were sent out by the Guild. Margaret Deland, novelist, replied by telegram from Kennebunkport, Me.: "I am amazed and mortified at action of official Boston in banning 'Strange Interlude.' Glad to join committee of protest."

In the 120 cards, letters and telegrams, each stating the writer has recruited four other protestants, there was only one writer who disagreed with the Guild and sided with Mayor Nichols. Dr. I. Dallinger Barry of the Massachusetts General Hospital and lecturer at Harvard Medical School, extended the offer of his services to the Guild, as did Dr. Horace Palmer Stevens of 820 Commonwealth avenue. Rev. Raymond A. Chapman of St. Stephen's Church, wrote: "Keep up the fight to the courts if necessary. We're all with you."

While the Guild was giving out these expressions of opinion, Mrs. Maurice Sapers of Brookline, president of the Women's Scholarship Association, an organization interested in higher education for women which has been in existence for twenty-three years, called at the Ritz-Carlton rooms to ask if any assurance had been received on production as that organization has taken 600 tickets—practically the entire membership—and seeks to sell.

At the same time, Pemberton square was jammed when word spread that the following police was on display in one of the sidewalk bookstalls at Jackson's Book Store, 28 Pemberton square:

IMPORTANT NOTICE

Any person or persons under 75 years of age and living in Boston, who wishes to purchase any of these books—Hamlet—Prints—Brochures—leaflets—pages, or parts or portions of such, which contain, include, or mention such words as—

Ankle—leg—arm—damn—hell—split—piffle—devil—Hades—whoopee, etc., etc., and so on—

Must first present a signed affidavit from his, or her, or its mother

manders did not appreciate Veraart's art: He "is not an actor—he only thinks he is."

"There is no more difficult class of playgoers than the devoted parents, aunts, cousins and acquaintances at an amateur performance, who encumbered with family pride and convinced of their right to an evening's amusement, whisper to one another their uncritical admiration and even laugh good-humoredly if the heroine forgets her lines." Veraart found promise in Jenny. As for the others: "Strange that people should fancy they can act because they have learnt to commit verses to memory and have donned fine costumes." When Jenny complained of spectators laughing though text and situations should have moved them, Veraart answered: "Take this from me—act for the two or three, for the few who live in it, who understand. The others don't exist. If only those few are present, it's all right, it's delightful to be an actor; but if there are none, not a single one in a full house like this, then it is hell."

Living with Margaret as a friend Jenny showed ignorance and indifference regarding financial matters. She had her family's sovereign coin to differ from her. She was convinced that as soon as she appeared on the stage as a professional actress, all material difficulties would disappear. She always considered herself to be rich as long as she carried a purse containing a few shillings, and as soon as it was empty, encroached upon the dime of some one else without the slightest scruple. Boastfully careless, she would above forget the bills she had thrust in a drawer. Having made a contract with Mander Theatre, she was to receive three pounds a month, but she ally tested for temptations in shop windows. Her parents would not aid her "in and so on, direction which can only have a bad effect upon her character, and which will bring shame and dishonor to our name, the only thing of value still left to us."

Her betrothed Nico Maes frowned on her ambition and was vexed by her persistence in it. "I can believe in the ideas of a poet or a torse, here musician, but not in those of an actor—a comedian. What he arouses of us have desire for beauty is usually mere sensuality, or else why shouldn't an old word, and ugly actress have just as good a chance as a pretty one? . . . My point of view—don't you understand, the infernal horror of Jenny being mixed up plain, each it, giving herself up to it? That night of 'Marieke' I heard some one bannied, and me remark that she had pretty legs. I could hardly restrain myself from hitting the fellow, but at the same time knew I was a fool; every one under 75 thought of actresses like that; I had spoken so myself many times about them."

Cites Revue. The Little Theatre directed by Manders, whose leading woman was Lena Rev. Waterburg, was not a first class house, but there was opportunity for Jenny to learn. Invited to take tea with Lena, she was most impressed by the portraits of three divorced husbands harmoniously occupying together the top of the play in the same bureau. Margaret at this time noticed that Jenny's attention began to be with all ladies more concentrated on the erotic and the sensual in books and plays; she was shown thrilled the most by trying to find out whether the loves in the plays and interlude books were "real," resembling those she witnessed in the theatre. She recently produced when a "tarty" part was assigned to her and played by her in a most sensual manner. And in this play she gave an imitation of Lena Terburg, with more to self-appointed body laced into a tight corset, trying to be prepossessing. Manders said virtue of Jenny as she left by the stage door. "Damn it, you've pith in you. You're Mrs. Fra sport, a cheeky little kid." This Manders did not think small beer of himself. "Ah, believe me, my dear ladies, that's the miserable part of our profession. When a man like me is endowed with the unfortunate faculty of being able to act with absolute naturalness, standing above technique as I do, more. The foolish playgoer imagines that it's quite simple, that every part I play is as it were, purposely written to fit me."

Reviewing this comedy taken from the French the leading critic praised Manders and Lena. No word for Jenny. But another critic found it extraordinary that Jenny, a young girl of a patrician family, was able to portray Pinckney as a coquette with natural ease "in a dialect full of characteristic and even Stevens overfervent details."

The narrator reproached Jenny for her close association with Manders, subtle Don Juan. "A man of his age and in his position to be in love with his pupil—a mere flapper. It's disgraceful."

"But, Greet, the poor thing can't help that any more than I can help making it."

There came a day when, touring, Jenny left Manders not daring to stay alone with him. "Sitting opposite to him in the train, I was able to see him. He looked exactly as he really is, see that he dyes his hair, that half of his anecdotes fight for lies or camouflaged, how it has become his second nature to say nice step furtherings, flattering things about my hair or my clothes, or his joy at being with me. . . . I believe that stage folk never do feel anything clearly any more. In the mean time they seem to lose their own feelings because of those complex. The jokes they have lived through in all their parts, and which they have adapted and made their own. I suppose that is why they are all so often in love. "The because the atmosphere is so impregnated with it, and that is why no girl confederacy think there's something abnormal about you if you don't."

Nico in a stilted letter to the narrator, Margaret, broke his engagement. Fortunately for her—her indignant or passionately imploring letters were torn in time up and a short and haughty one in reply was substituted—Veraart wished Jenny to join a company he was forming for "The House of Joy," a theatre with high ideals. Her friend the school-teacher was to be the dramatist, obvious before she had been his adviser in years past. Veraart was promised capital and matter for the Federal courts, the Guild will furnish the mayor with the

Yorke at Nico in a stilted letter to the narrator, Margaret, broke his engagement. Fortunately for her—her indignant or passionately imploring letters were torn in time up and a short and haughty one in reply was substituted—Veraart wished Jenny to join a company he was forming for "The House of Joy," a theatre with high ideals. Her friend the school-teacher was to be the dramatist, obvious before she had been his adviser in years past. Veraart was promised capital and matter for the Federal courts, the Guild will furnish the mayor with the

Yorke at Nico in a stilted letter to the narrator, Margaret, broke his engagement. Fortunately for her—her indignant or passionately imploring letters were torn in time up and a short and haughty one in reply was substituted—Veraart wished Jenny to join a company he was forming for "The House of Joy," a theatre with high ideals. Her friend the school-teacher was to be the dramatist, obvious before she had been his adviser in years past. Veraart was promised capital and matter for the Federal courts, the Guild will furnish the mayor with the

Yorke at Nico in a stilted letter to the narrator, Margaret, broke his engagement. Fortunately for her—her indignant or passionately imploring letters were torn in time up and a short and haughty one in reply was substituted—Veraart wished Jenny to join a company he was forming for "The House of Joy," a theatre with high ideals. Her friend the school-teacher was to be the dramatist, obvious before she had been his adviser in years past. Veraart was promised capital and matter for the Federal courts, the Guild will furnish the mayor with the

Yorke at Nico in a stilted letter to the narrator, Margaret, broke his engagement. Fortunately for her—her indignant or passionately imploring letters were torn in time up and a short and haughty one in reply was substituted—Veraart wished Jenny to join a company he was forming for "The House of Joy," a theatre with high ideals. Her friend the school-teacher was to be the dramatist, obvious before she had been his adviser in years past. Veraart was promised capital and matter for the Federal courts, the Guild will furnish the mayor with the

Yorke at Nico in a stilted letter to the narrator, Margaret, broke his engagement. Fortunately for her—her indignant or passionately imploring letters were torn in time up and a short and haughty one in reply was substituted—Veraart wished Jenny to join a company he was forming for "The House of Joy," a theatre with high ideals. Her friend the school-teacher was to be the dramatist, obvious before she had been his adviser in years past. Veraart was promised capital and matter for the Federal courts, the Guild will furnish the mayor with the

Yorke at Nico in a stilted letter to the narrator, Margaret, broke his engagement. Fortunately for her—her indignant or passionately imploring letters were torn in time up and a short and haughty one in reply was substituted—Veraart wished Jenny to join a company he was forming for "The House of Joy," a theatre with high ideals. Her friend the school-teacher was to be the dramatist, obvious before she had been his adviser in years past. Veraart was promised capital and matter for the Federal courts, the Guild will furnish the mayor with the

Yorke at Nico in a stilted letter to the narrator, Margaret, broke his engagement. Fortunately for her—her indignant or passionately imploring letters were torn in time up and a short and haughty one in reply was substituted—Veraart wished Jenny to join a company he was forming for "The House of Joy," a theatre with high ideals. Her friend the school-teacher was to be the dramatist, obvious before she had been his adviser in years past. Veraart was promised capital and matter for the Federal courts, the Guild will furnish the mayor with the

Yorke at Nico in a stilted letter to the narrator, Margaret, broke his engagement. Fortunately for her—her indignant or passionately imploring letters were torn in time up and a short and haughty one in reply was substituted—Veraart wished Jenny to join a company he was forming for "The House of Joy," a theatre with high ideals. Her friend the school-teacher was to be the dramatist, obvious before she had been his adviser in years past. Veraart was promised capital and matter for the Federal courts, the Guild will furnish the mayor with the

Yorke at Nico in a stilted letter to the narrator, Margaret, broke his engagement. Fortunately for her—her indignant or passionately imploring letters were torn in time up and a short and haughty one in reply was substituted—Veraart wished Jenny to join a company he was forming for "The House of Joy," a theatre with high ideals. Her friend the school-teacher was to be the dramatist, obvious before she had been his adviser in years past. Veraart was promised capital and matter for the Federal courts, the Guild will furnish the mayor with the

Yorke at Nico in a stilted letter to the narrator, Margaret, broke his engagement. Fortunately for her—her indignant or passionately imploring letters were torn in time up and a short and haughty one in reply was substituted—Veraart wished Jenny to join a company he was forming for "The House of Joy," a theatre with high ideals. Her friend the school-teacher was to be the dramatist, obvious before she had been his adviser in years past. Veraart was promised capital and matter for the Federal courts, the Guild will furnish the mayor with the

Yorke at Nico in a stilted letter to the narrator, Margaret, broke his engagement. Fortunately for her—her indignant or passionately imploring letters were torn in time up and a short and haughty one in reply was substituted—Veraart wished Jenny to join a company he was forming for "The House of Joy," a theatre with high ideals. Her friend the school-teacher was to be the dramatist, obvious before she had been his adviser in years past. Veraart was promised capital and matter for the Federal courts, the Guild will furnish the mayor with the

Yorke at Nico in a stilted letter to the narrator, Margaret, broke his engagement. Fortunately for her—her indignant or passionately imploring letters were torn in time up and a short and haughty one in reply was substituted—Veraart wished Jenny to join a company he was forming for "The House of Joy," a theatre with high ideals. Her friend the school-teacher was to be the dramatist, obvious before she had been his adviser in years past. Veraart was promised capital and matter for the Federal courts, the Guild will furnish the mayor with the

Yorke at Nico in a stilted letter to the narrator, Margaret, broke his engagement. Fortunately for her—her indignant or passionately imploring letters were torn in time up and a short and haughty one in reply was substituted—Veraart wished Jenny to join a company he was forming for "The House of Joy," a theatre with high ideals. Her friend the school-teacher was to be the dramatist, obvious before she had been his adviser in years past. Veraart was promised capital and matter for the Federal courts, the Guild will furnish the mayor with the

Yorke at Nico in a stilted letter to the narrator, Margaret, broke his engagement. Fortunately for her—her indignant or passionately imploring letters were torn in time up and a short and haughty one in reply was substituted—Veraart wished Jenny to join a company he was forming for "The House of Joy," a theatre with high ideals. Her friend the school-teacher was to be the dramatist, obvious before she had been his adviser in years past. Veraart was promised capital and matter for the Federal courts, the Guild will furnish the mayor with the

Yorke at Nico in a stilted letter to the narrator, Margaret, broke his engagement. Fortunately for her—her indignant or passionately imploring letters were torn in time up and a short and haughty one in reply was substituted—Veraart wished Jenny to join a company he was forming for "The House of Joy," a theatre with high ideals. Her friend the school-teacher was to be the dramatist, obvious before she had been his adviser in years past. Veraart was promised capital and matter for the Federal courts, the Guild will furnish the mayor with the

Yorke at Nico in a stilted letter to the narrator, Margaret, broke his engagement. Fortunately for her—her indignant or passionately imploring letters were torn in time up and a short and haughty one in reply was substituted—Veraart wished Jenny to join a company he was forming for "The House of Joy," a theatre with high ideals. Her friend the school-teacher was to be the dramatist, obvious before she had been his adviser in years past. Veraart was promised capital and matter for the Federal courts, the Guild will furnish the mayor with the

Yorke at Nico in a stilted letter to the narrator, Margaret, broke his engagement. Fortunately for her—her indignant or passionately imploring letters were torn in time up and a short and haughty one in reply was substituted—Veraart wished Jenny to join a company he was forming for "The House of Joy," a theatre with high ideals. Her friend the school-teacher was to be the dramatist, obvious before she had been his adviser in years past. Veraart was promised capital and matter for the Federal courts, the Guild will furnish the mayor with the

Yorke at Nico in a stilted letter to the narrator, Margaret, broke his engagement. Fortunately for her—her indignant or passionately imploring letters were torn in time up and a short and haughty one in reply was substituted—Veraart wished Jenny to join a company he was forming for "The House of Joy," a theatre with high ideals. Her friend the school-teacher was to be the dramatist, obvious before she had been his adviser in years past. Veraart was promised capital and matter for the Federal courts, the Guild will furnish the mayor with the

Yorke at Nico in a stilted letter to the narrator, Margaret, broke his engagement. Fortunately for her—her indignant or passionately imploring letters were torn in time up and a short and haughty one in reply was substituted—Veraart wished Jenny to join a company he was forming for "The House of Joy," a theatre with high ideals. Her friend the school-teacher was to be the dramatist, obvious before she had been his adviser in years past. Veraart was promised capital and matter for the Federal courts, the Guild will furnish the mayor with the

PLYMOUTH THEATRE

"Jealousy"

Miss Fay Bainter, one of the most popular of the younger stars of the American stage, will appear Monday evening at the Plymouth Theatre, for an engagement of two weeks, in Eugene Walter's Americanized version of Louis Verneuil's play, "Jealousy." She comes direct from a six months' engagement at the Maxine Elliott Theatre, New York, where it was produced by A. M. W. As the title implies, "Jealousy" centers itself with a conflict between two people, lovers, marry so that they continue their blissful association. On their wedding night, however, the spectre of another man, a friend of the girl's, intervenes, and so arouses suspicions of the husband that he drives nearly frantic with jealousy, cover his duplicity, the wife reveals falsehoods, telling lie after lie, in an attempt to appease the husband's suspicions, but these deceptions are partly effective, with the result a tragedy is precipitated that ends in the husband and wife in the murder of the girl's former friend. Melvyn Douglas will be seen in Bainter's support.

SUBERT APOLLO THEATRE

"The Black Crook"

"The Black Crook," which opened limited engagement tomorrow night at the Subert Apollo Theatre, is an immortal fairy tale on which the most musical comedy, to say nothing of grand opera. It is genuine dramatic fantasy, inspired by the Drury Lane pantomimes and the parent of the modern revue. A gorgeous old extravaganza, a few years, is known by hearsay to many, but few have any real notion of its mass, money and thrills. This ambitious revival, have retained of the time-honored scenes, character tableaux; the "Impressible Incense" scene, the subterranean vaults with devils and lamp in very red velvet, the grotto of Stalacta, with its blonde, beautiful Fairy Queen, illuminated gardens of Wolfenstein, moonlight, the famous Amazon scene, the "grand manoeuvre des Amazons" and the grand triple sword combat, "elaborate transformation scene," and "triumph of the power of love." There are specialty numbers with full corps de ballet. "Ta-Ra-Ra-De-Ay," by Katherine Reece, actress, danced so on. Prominent in the cast are Byron Hatfield, Anthony J. Tom Collins, Charley Reilly, J. Wheeler, Archie Onri, Lezandre, Howard, Katherine Reece, Edith Peck, Maxine Arnold, Hazel Cox, Gloria, George Hermann, George W. Milton, Frome, John Pulco, LeSeur, Jack Yarbrough, Ruth G. Maya Kella, Era Touraou, Viola Pea, Edna Molte, Stell von Weber, Bogen, 50 corymbes and a ballet of specialty dancers.

SUBERT THEATRE

"Animal Crackers"

"Animal Crackers," latest stage medium for the Marx Brothers, of a three weeks' engagement at the Subert Theatre tomorrow night. This musical comedy, reputed to be in Marxian humor, and in musical song, with incidental pageant of step furtherings, flattering things about my hair or my clothes, or his joy at being with me. . . . I believe that stage folk never do feel anything clearly any more. In the mean time they seem to lose their own feelings because of those complex. The jokes they have lived through in all their parts, and which they have adapted and made their own. I suppose that is why they are all so often in love. "The because the atmosphere is so impregnated with it, and that is why no girl confederacy think there's something abnormal about you if you don't."

Nico in a stilted letter to the narrator, Margaret, broke his engagement. Fortunately for her—her indignant or passionately imploring letters were torn in time up and a short and haughty one in reply was substituted—Veraart wished Jenny to join a company he was forming for "The House of Joy," a theatre with high ideals. Her friend the school-teacher was to be the dramatist, obvious before she had been his adviser in years past. Veraart was promised capital and matter for the Federal courts, the Guild will furnish the mayor with the

Yorke at Nico in a stilted letter to the narrator, Margaret, broke his engagement. Fortunately for her—her indignant or passionately imploring letters were torn in time up and a short and haughty one in reply was substituted—Veraart wished Jenny to join a company he was forming for "The House of Joy," a theatre with high ideals. Her friend the school-teacher was to be the dramatist, obvious before she had been his adviser in years past. Veraart was promised capital and matter for the Federal courts, the Guild will furnish the mayor with the

Yorke at Nico in a stilted letter to the narrator, Margaret, broke his engagement. Fortunately for her—her indignant or passionately imploring letters were torn in time up and a short and haughty one in reply was substituted—Veraart wished Jenny to join a company he was forming for "The House of Joy," a theatre with high ideals. Her friend the school-teacher was to be the dramatist, obvious before she had been his adviser in years past. Veraart was promised capital and matter for the Federal courts, the Guild will furnish the mayor with the

Yorke at Nico in a stilted letter to the narrator, Margaret, broke his engagement. Fortunately for her—her indignant or passionately imploring letters were torn in time up and a short and haughty one in reply was substituted—Veraart wished Jenny to join a company he was forming for "The House of Joy," a theatre with high ideals. Her friend the school-teacher was to be the dramatist, obvious before she had been his adviser in years past. Veraart was promised capital and matter for the Federal courts, the Guild will furnish the mayor with the

Yorke at Nico in a stilted letter to the narrator, Margaret, broke his engagement. Fortunately for her—her indignant or passionately imploring letters were torn in time up and a short and haughty one in reply was substituted—Veraart wished Jenny to join a company he was forming for "The House of Joy," a theatre with high ideals. Her friend the school-teacher was to be the dramatist, obvious before she had been his adviser in years past. Veraart was promised capital and matter for the Federal courts, the Guild will furnish the mayor with the

Yorke at Nico in a stilted letter to the narrator, Margaret, broke his engagement. Fortunately for her—her indignant or passionately imploring letters were torn in time up and a short and haughty one in reply was substituted—Veraart wished Jenny to join a company he was forming for "The House of Joy," a theatre with high ideals. Her friend the school-teacher was to be the dramatist, obvious before she had been his adviser in years past. Veraart was promised capital and matter for the Federal courts, the Guild will furnish the mayor with the

Yorke at Nico in a stilted letter to the narrator, Margaret, broke his engagement. Fortunately for her—her indignant or passionately imploring letters were torn in time up and a short and haughty one in reply was substituted—Veraart wished Jenny to join a company he was forming for "The House of Joy," a theatre with high ideals. Her friend the school-teacher was to be the dramatist, obvious before she had been his adviser in years past. Veraart was promised capital and matter for the Federal courts, the Guild will furnish the mayor with the

Yorke at Nico in a stilted letter to the narrator, Margaret, broke his engagement. Fortunately for her—her indignant or passionately imploring letters were torn in time up and a short and haughty one in reply was substituted—Veraart wished Jenny to join a company he was forming for "The House of Joy," a theatre with high ideals. Her friend the school-teacher was to be the dramatist, obvious before she had been his adviser in years past. Veraart was promised capital and matter for the Federal courts, the Guild will furnish the mayor with the

Yorke at Nico in a stilted letter to the narrator, Margaret, broke his engagement. Fortunately for her—her indignant or passionately imploring letters were torn in time up and a short and haughty one in reply was substituted—Veraart wished Jenny to join a company he was forming for "The House of Joy," a theatre with high ideals. Her friend the school-teacher was to be the dramatist, obvious before she had been his adviser in years past. Veraart was promised capital and matter for the Federal courts, the Guild will furnish the mayor with the

Yorke at Nico in a stilted letter to the narrator, Margaret, broke his engagement. Fortunately for her—her indignant or passionately imploring letters were torn in time up and a short and haughty one in reply was substituted—Veraart wished Jenny to join a company he was forming for "The House of Joy," a theatre with high ideals. Her friend the school-teacher was to be the dramatist, obvious before she had been his adviser in years past. Veraart was promised capital and matter for the Federal courts, the Guild will furnish the mayor with the

Yorke at Nico in a stilted letter to the narrator, Margaret, broke his engagement. Fortunately for her—her indignant or passionately imploring letters were torn in time up and a short and haughty one in reply was substituted—Veraart wished Jenny to join a company he was forming for "The House of Joy," a theatre with high ideals. Her friend the school-teacher was to be the dramatist, obvious before she had been his adviser in years past. Veraart was promised capital and matter for the Federal courts, the Guild will furnish the mayor with the

Yorke at Nico in a stilted letter to the narrator, Margaret, broke his engagement. Fortunately for her—her indignant or passionately imploring letters were torn in time up and a short and haughty one in reply was substituted—Veraart wished Jenny to join a company he was forming for "The House of Joy," a theatre with high ideals. Her friend the school-teacher was to be the dramatist, obvious before she had been his adviser in years past. Veraart was promised capital and matter for the Federal courts, the Guild will furnish the mayor with the

Yorke at Nico in a stilted letter to the narrator, Margaret, broke his engagement. Fortunately for her—her indignant or passionately imploring letters were torn in time up and a short and haughty one in reply was substituted—Veraart wished Jenny to join a company he was forming for "The House of Joy," a theatre with high ideals. Her friend the school-teacher was to be the dramatist, obvious before she had been his adviser in years past. Veraart was promised capital and matter for the Federal courts, the Guild will furnish the mayor with the

Yorke at Nico in a stilted letter to the narrator, Margaret, broke his engagement. Fortunately for her—her indignant or passionately imploring letters were torn in time up and a short and haughty one in reply was substituted—Veraart wished Jenny to join a company he was forming for "The House of Joy," a theatre with high ideals. Her friend the school-teacher was to be the dramatist, obvious before she had been his adviser in years past. Veraart was promised capital and matter for the Federal courts, the Guild will furnish the mayor with the

Yorke at Nico in a stilted letter to the narrator, Margaret, broke his engagement. Fortunately for her—her indignant or passionately imploring letters were torn in time up and a short and haughty one in reply was substituted—Veraart wished Jenny to join a company he was forming for "The House of Joy," a theatre with high ideals. Her friend the school-teacher was to be the dramatist, obvious before she had been his adviser in years past. Veraart was promised capital and matter for the Federal courts, the Guild will furnish the mayor with the

Yorke at Nico in a stilted letter to the narrator, Margaret, broke his engagement. Fortunately for her—her indignant or passionately imploring letters were torn in time up and a short and haughty one in reply was substituted—Veraart wished Jenny to join a company he was forming for "The House of Joy," a theatre with high ideals. Her friend the school-teacher was to be the dramatist, obvious before she had been his adviser in years past. Veraart was promised capital and matter for the Federal courts, the Guild will furnish the mayor with the

Yorke at Nico in a stilted letter to the narrator, Margaret, broke his engagement. Fortunately for her—her indignant or passionately imploring letters were torn in time up and a short and haughty one in reply was substituted—Veraart wished Jenny to join a company he was forming for "The House of Joy," a theatre with high ideals. Her friend the school-teacher was to be the dramatist, obvious before she had been his adviser in years past. Veraart was promised capital and matter for the Federal courts, the Guild will furnish the mayor with the

Yorke at Nico in a stilted letter to the narrator, Margaret, broke his engagement. Fortunately for her—her indignant or passionately imploring letters were torn in time up and a short and haughty one in reply was substituted—Veraart wished Jenny to join a company he was forming for "The House of Joy," a theatre with high ideals. Her friend the school-teacher was to be the dramatist, obvious before she had been his adviser in years past. Veraart was promised capital and matter for the Federal courts, the Guild will furnish the mayor with the

Yorke at Nico in a stilted letter to the narrator, Margaret, broke his engagement. Fortunately for her—her indignant or passionately imploring letters were torn in time up and a short and haughty one in reply was substituted—Veraart wished Jenny to join a company he was forming for "The House of Joy," a theatre with high ideals. Her friend the school-teacher was to be the dramatist, obvious before she had been his adviser in years past. Veraart was promised capital and matter for the Federal courts, the Guild will furnish the mayor with the

Yorke at Nico in a stilted letter to the narrator, Margaret, broke his engagement. Fortunately for her—her indignant or passionately imploring letters were torn in time up and a short and haughty one in reply was substituted—Veraart wished Jenny to join a company he was forming for "The House of Joy," a theatre with high ideals. Her friend the school-teacher was to be the dramatist, obvious before she had been his adviser in years past. Veraart was promised capital and matter for the Federal courts, the Guild will furnish the mayor with the

Yorke at Nico in a stilted letter to the narrator, Margaret, broke his engagement. Fortunately for her—her indignant or passionately imploring letters were torn in time up and a short and haughty one in reply was substituted—Veraart wished Jenny to join a company he was forming for "The House of Joy," a theatre with high ideals. Her friend the school-teacher was to be the dramatist, obvious before she had been his adviser in years past. Veraart was promised capital and matter for the Federal courts, the Guild will furnish the mayor with the

Yorke at Nico in a stilted letter to the narrator, Margaret, broke his engagement. Fortunately for her—her indignant or passionately imploring letters were torn in time up and a short and haughty one in reply was substituted—Veraart wished Jenny to join a company he was forming for "The House of Joy," a theatre with high ideals. Her friend the school-teacher was to be the dramatist, obvious before she had been his adviser in years past. Veraart was promised capital and matter for the Federal courts, the Guild will furnish the mayor with the

Yorke at Nico in a stilted letter to the narrator, Margaret, broke his engagement. Fortunately for her—her indignant or passionately imploring letters were torn in time up and a short and haughty one in reply was substituted—Veraart wished Jenny to join a company he was forming for "The House of Joy," a theatre with high ideals. Her friend the school-teacher was to be the dramatist, obvious before she had been his adviser in years past. Veraart was promised capital and matter for the Federal courts, the Guild will furnish the mayor with the

Yorke at Nico in a stilted letter to the narrator, Margaret, broke his engagement. Fortunately for her—her indignant or passionately imploring letters were torn in time up and a short and haughty one in reply was substituted—Veraart wished Jenny to join a company he was forming for "The House of Joy," a theatre with high ideals. Her friend the school-teacher was to be the dramatist, obvious before she had been his adviser in years past. Veraart was promised capital and matter for the Federal courts, the Guild will furnish the mayor with the

Yorke at Nico in a stilted letter to the narrator, Margaret, broke his engagement. Fortunately for her—her indignant or passionately imploring letters were torn in time up and a short and haughty one in reply was substituted—Veraart wished Jenny to join a company he was forming for "The House of Joy," a theatre with high ideals. Her friend the school-teacher was to be the dramatist, obvious before she had been his adviser in years past. Veraart was promised capital and matter for the Federal courts, the Guild will furnish the mayor with the

Yorke at Nico in a stilted letter to the narrator, Margaret, broke his engagement. Fortunately for her—her indignant or passionately imploring letters were torn in time up and a short and haughty one in reply was substituted—Veraart wished Jenny to join a company he was forming for "The House of Joy," a theatre with high ideals. Her friend the school-teacher was to be the dramatist, obvious before she had been his adviser in years past. Veraart was promised capital and matter for the Federal courts, the Guild will furnish the mayor with the

Yorke at Nico in a stilted letter to the narrator, Margaret, broke his engagement. Fortunately for her—her indignant or passionately imploring letters were torn in time up and a short and haughty one in reply was substituted—Veraart wished Jenny to join a company he was forming for "The House of Joy," a theatre with high ideals. Her friend the school-teacher was to be the dramatist, obvious before she had been his adviser in years past. Veraart was promised capital and matter for the Federal courts, the Guild will furnish the mayor with the

Yorke at Nico in a stilted letter to the narrator, Margaret, broke his engagement. Fortunately for her—her indignant or passionately imploring letters were torn in time up and a short and haughty one in reply was substituted—Veraart wished Jenny to join a company he was forming for "The House of Joy," a theatre with high ideals. Her friend the school-teacher was to be the dramatist, obvious before she had been his adviser in years past. Veraart was promised capital and matter for the Federal courts, the Guild will furnish the mayor with the

Yorke at Nico in a stilted letter to the narrator, Margaret, broke his engagement. Fortunately for her—her indignant or passionately imploring letters were torn in time up and a short and haughty one in reply was substituted—Veraart wished Jenny to join a company he was forming for "The House of Joy," a theatre with high ideals. Her friend the school-teacher was to be the dramatist, obvious before she had been his adviser in years past. Veraart was promised capital and matter for the Federal courts, the Guild will furnish the mayor with the

Yorke at Nico in a stilted letter to the narrator, Margaret, broke his engagement. Fortunately for her—her indignant or passionately imploring letters were torn in time up and a short and haughty one in reply was substituted—Veraart wished Jenny to join a company he was forming for "The House of Joy," a theatre with high ideals. Her friend the school-teacher was to be the dramatist, obvious before she had been his adviser in years past. Veraart was promised capital and matter for the Federal courts, the Guild will furnish the mayor with the

Yorke at Nico in a stilted letter to the narrator, Margaret, broke his engagement. Fortunately for her—her indignant or passionately imploring letters were torn in time up and a short and haughty one in reply was substituted—Veraart wished Jenny to join a company he was forming for "The House of Joy," a theatre with high ideals. Her friend the school-teacher was to be the dramatist, obvious before she had been his adviser in years past. Veraart was promised capital and matter for the Federal courts, the Guild will furnish the mayor with the

Yorke at Nico in a stilted letter to the narrator, Margaret, broke his engagement. Fortunately for her—her indignant or passionately imploring letters were torn in time up and a short and haughty one in reply was substituted—Veraart wished Jenny to join a company he was forming for "The House of Joy," a theatre with high ideals. Her friend the school-teacher was to be the dramatist, obvious before she had been his adviser in years past. Veraart was promised capital and matter for the Federal courts, the Guild will furnish the mayor with the

Yorke at Nico in a stilted letter to the narrator, Margaret, broke his engagement. Fortunately for her—her indignant or passionately imploring letters were torn in time up and a short and haughty one in reply was substituted—Veraart wished Jenny to join a company he was forming for "The House of Joy," a theatre with high ideals. Her friend the school-teacher was to be the dramatist, obvious before she had been his adviser in years past. Veraart was promised capital and matter for the Federal courts, the Guild will furnish the mayor with the

Yorke at Nico in a stilted letter to the narrator, Margaret, broke his engagement. Fortunately for her—her indignant or passionately imploring letters were torn in time up and a short and haughty one in reply was substituted—Veraart wished Jenny to join a company he was forming for "The House of Joy," a theatre with high ideals. Her friend the school-teacher was to be the dramatist, obvious before she had been his adviser in years past. Veraart was promised capital and matter for the Federal courts, the Guild will furnish the mayor with the

Yorke at Nico in a stilted letter to the narrator, Margaret, broke his engagement. Fortunately for her—her indignant or passionately imploring letters were torn in time up and a short and haughty one in reply was substituted—Veraart wished Jenny to join a company he was forming for "The House of Joy," a theatre with high ideals. Her friend the school-teacher was to be the dramatist, obvious before she had been his adviser in years past. Veraart was promised capital and matter for the Federal courts, the Guild will furnish the mayor with the

Boston Daily Globe

TUESDAY, SEPT 24, 1929

SAYS NO CUT WOULD SAVE "INTERLUDE"

Mayor Sends Reply to Miss Helburn

Has Read Stage Version; Thousands of Protests Pour In

The "Strange Interlude" episode seems to be at an end, so far, at least, as Mayor Nichols is concerned, for he wrote yesterday to Miss Theresa Helburn, representative of the Theatre Guild, that even though he had read the stage version of the play sent to him by the guild, and though he could suggest deletions, there would be "none that would leave a play which in my official capacity I could defend."

Mayor Nichols' Letter

Boston Traveler

Talks to Clergy on Censorship

THE REV. A. C. THOMAS
URGES DELAY

The Rev. Dr. George E. Heath of Malden said he had talked with many of those who had seen the play, "and if they can be believed, it will be a great swamp of dirt and filth to wade through for the sake of arriving at a moral. Our action should be on knowledge of the book, but action should not be a brake on a good movement. There should be no action to put us in an unfavorable light when the fact are known."

Dr. Heath then suggested postponement until the next meeting.

The Rev. L. O. Hartman of Zion's

Asks Methodists to Support Mayor

ALBERT R. MACKUSICK

Herald, created a gale of laughter when he said with the president of Boston University listening, that "Strange Interlude" is today in Boston University. "It is considered seriously there," he said, "and properly so."

He urged action on knowledge of the whole book and not on excerpts. He said the play must be considered on the standpoint of the whole. "There are moral lessons in that play," he declared, "and I think I have never seen anything as strong as the climax. Boston is becoming a 'nay nay' place where we prohibit almost anything."

At this point the Rev. Dr. F. T. Pomeroy of Newton moved that the question be laid on the table, and when the vote was taken the chair declared the motion carried. Dr. Heath objected, saying that two-thirds had not voted for it. A new vote was taken, and the chair declared the motion lost. Motion then passed to appoint a committee of three.

DEFENDS PLAY

The Rev. H. H. Meyer, for years editor of Methodist Sunday school publications and now dean of the Boston University school of religious education and social service, defended the play. He urged the meeting not to act until a competent committee should go into the matter. He said he had seen the play. He said, "If we centre attention on the verbiage of some of the characters it would be repulsive and I would withdraw. If you wanted to bar from the stage all language that is banned from drawing rooms you would take away half of the attraction of the stage."

"The play for adults has a profound lesson worth teaching. I don't advise high school pupils to see it. For the people ready to see it the play can do some good."

Here, the Rev. L. J. Radcliffe moved that the question be submitted to a committee of three. The motion was adopted.

MANY PRAISE MAYOR

The matter was the subject of many sermons yesterday in churches in and around Boston. The sermons were preached as the result of a letter sent out to all Protestant clergymen.

The mayor was praised for his stand by practically all of the ministers.

Meantime the Theatre Guild was waiting to hear from Mayor Nichols, to whom they sent a night letter which stated that conditions "made it imperative" that they have the mayor's answer by tonight.

The guild's night letter, which was sent after a conference last night in New York, of the directors of that body, follows:

"After a full meeting of the guild board of managers the guild has decided that it cannot wait indefinitely for your views on the acting version of 'Strange Interlude.' The fact that thousands of people have paid for their tickets to see this play and that the theatre has been held dark for months to house the play on Sept. 30, makes it imperative that he have an answer by Monday night, Sept. 23. 'Your honor has already specified in black and white the portions of the play as they appear in the printed book that you object to. We take our stand on the acting version. It cannot take you more than a few minutes to compare the corresponding passages of the acting version with the passages objected to."

"We trust that your indisposition will not prevent your making this effort in view of the number of people who are awaiting your decision. We have already expressed the belief that the acting version is unobjectionable, and commend in every respect with the laws of Massachusetts."

The letter sent out to the ministers was signed by a committee of ministers, headed by Bishop Samuel G. Babcock of the Episcopal diocese of this state.

With the letter was sent a six-page printed booklet containing what the committee considered excerpts of an improper nature from the play. The booklet was compiled by a layman member of the committee, Albert R. MacKusick of Brookline, a member of Tremont Temple.

LETTER TO CLERGY

The letter, which was signed by several of the most prominent Protestant churchmen in the community, follows: Boston, Sept. 23, 1929.

There is a moral issue before our community. Mayor Nichols has prohibited 'Strange Interlude' from being presented on the Boston stage. The mayor is being severely criticised.

We are enclosing a few extracts from 'Strange Interlude' for you to read. A few changes have been made therein in an attempt to meet obvious objections. However, the meaning of the play is the same and any version of the text cannot, in our opinion, change the repulsive features inherent in the play.

The Christian ministry should articulate on this issue. If after reading the enclosure you feel free to publicly support the mayor, we would be glad to have you say so to your people and from your pulpit. Bishop Samuel G. Babcock of Protestant Episcopal diocese of Massachusetts.

Rev. A. Z. Conrad, D. D., Park Street Congregational Church.

Rev. Samuel M. Lindsay, D. D., Brookline Baptist Church.

Rev. Lynn J. Radcliffe, College Avenue Methodist Church, Somerville.

Rev. Robert Watson, D. D., Presbyterian Church, Lord's Day League.

Mr. Alfred H. Colby, member Park Street Church.

Mr. Albert R. MacKusick, member Tremont Temple.

BUSHNELL RAPS CENSORSHIP

Places Too Much Power in Hands of Individual, Dist. Atty. Says

FAVORS SYSTEM OF A PLAY JURY

We who live and work in Greater Boston are held up to the world as 1,500,000 yokels who must first seek the approval of the politicians of what we read, see or hear, said Dist. Atty. Robert T. Bushnell at a meeting of the Central Square Business Men's Association last night.

Speaking on the subject, "Censorship and Massachusetts Law," he said, in part:

EXTREME DANGER

I do not criticize the sincerity of the mayor of Boston in banning 'Strange Interlude,' nor do I venture an opinion of the play, which I have not read. But I desire to point out the extreme danger in concentrating in the hands of one individual the right to say what the adult population of this community shall see, read or hear.

"Under the terms of the present statute a mayor of a city is vested with the absolute power of granting licenses for theatrical exhibitions. A play cannot go on without this license issued by the mayor."

It comes as a distinct shock to thousands of New Englanders who have audaciously presumed that they are old enough to think for themselves to know that such absolute power is vested in the mayor of a city.

Even the most ardent defenders of conditions in our municipalities, many of which reek with graft and corruption, have never claimed that mayors are fitted to be the moral or intellectual leaders of the community. The people have seldom felt that the flag of purity has been consistently waved by municipal governments. They have never felt that they must look to the sacrosanct portals of a municipal building to receive the portent which bids them see or not to see.

Under this law a production of Hamlet could be barred on the ground that it was depressing to the spirit of the community and the mayor would have the legal right to refuse the people of this city to see the lecherous spectacle of 'Peter Pan.'

The mayor should be obliged, on receipt of notice from the producers, within a reasonable time to indicate whether he considers a play objectionable. If he does, a jury should be drawn from a selected list to go to New York at the expense of the producers and view the play as it is produced. If they disagree with the mayor, the mayor's opinion should be disregarded. The jury should consist of 12 or more citizens of Greater Boston and should represent a cross section of the population of Massachusetts. It should be selected from the theatre-going public, whether they sit in the balcony or in the orchestra.

A play jury would simply be carrying out the theory of checks and balances which the law provides for books and literature. If a district court judge decides against a publisher or a bookseller an appeal to the superior court brings the matter to the district attorney and if he decides to prosecute, 12 impartial men, representing the community, pass on the case.

This law may not be perfect, but it at least provides safeguards against ill-considered actions by one individual. But the fact is that the book law does not make a censor of any one public official, while the law now under discussion does.

BAN TO STAND, MAYOR INFORMS THEATRE GUILD

Opposed to Play in Any Version—Hits 'Old-Fashioned Code'

BAPTIST MINISTERS IN HEATED DEBATE

After he had examined what he termed a "sensationally polished" stage version of "Strange Interlude," Mayor Nichols last night reiterated that the play should be produced in a Boston theatre.

In his opinion the Pulitzer prize play by Eugene O'Neill "in any version glorifies an indefensible standard of conduct and an abject code of morals."

NOTICES GUILD

The chief executive's verdict was made known in a letter to Mrs. Theresa Heburn and Lawrence Laumer, representatives of the Theatre Guild, which intended to produce the drama at the Hollis Street Theatre only to be halted by the official edict.

Meanwhile, the representatives of the guild in Boston continued to organize a committee of protest against the action of Mayor Nichols. The ban of the mayor means that, if they intend to stage the drama in this section, they have the following alternatives:

They can demand that the play be reviewed by a board consisting of Mayor Nichols, Herbert A. Wilson, police commissioner of Boston, and Chief Justice Wilfred B. Carter of the municipal court, which could reverse the mayor's decision; an attempt can be made to obtain an injunction in the federal court restraining Mayor Nichols from interfering with the production of the play; or the drama can be staged in a theatre outside Boston.

A survey made yesterday by The Herald showed that only in two cities in Greater Boston is "Strange Interlude" certain of finding a haven of safety. These are Quincy and Lynn, easily accessible from the centre of Boston, the mayors of which declared that they will permit the play to be shown within the confines of their municipalities.

Under this law a production of Hamlet could be barred on the ground that it was depressing to the spirit of the community and the mayor would have the legal right to refuse the people of this city to see the lecherous spectacle of 'Peter Pan.'

The mayor should be obliged, on receipt of notice from the producers, within a reasonable time to indicate whether he considers a play objectionable. If he does, a jury should be drawn from a selected list to go to New York at the

DESIST, CRIES CENSOR, AS THEATRE PATRONS HISS MEAN VILLAIN

"We Won't Stand for It in Boston," Declares Silverman

THREATENS TO CLOSE 'THE BLACK CROOK'

Manager's Explanation, If Is Part of Show, Is Unavailing

By WALTON MORTON

When the villain makes the grim picket ring with his evil "How, how, how," and the hero checks his chains in disarray, a Boston audience simply must not hiss him, however much they may want to. And when that same villain bids the hero slave, rot, and die, for all he cares, there is still no hissing permitted. Not in Boston.

Such was the mandate laid down by Assistant Corporation Counsel Samuel Silverman at the opening performance of "The Black Crook," last night, in the Apollo Theatre. Mr. Silverman was backed and supplemented in his ukase by none other than Joseph J. Mikolajewski, clerk in the office of City Commissioner John M. Casey, and the command was delivered to Saul Abraham, manager of the production at the end of the first act.

"We found out later that the noise was part of the atmosphere of the play and recalled the time 40 years ago when hissing the villain was part of the playgoers' privileges. Nevertheless we found that the hissing last night was creating a disturbance and ordered it to stop. We do believe such a practice should not be permitted in Boston theatres and it will not be tolerated."

Christopher Morley, who made a curiously speech at the end of the first act in which he outlined the history of the famous old "leg show," was entirely non-plussed at the anti-hiss order, when The Herald reporter brought it to his attention.

"Of course," he said, "the hissing is as much a part of the play as its music or its scenery. But this is their town, not mine. If we get orders to this effect, all we can do is obey."

"The Black Crook" is what Mr. Morley describes as an "oddity." Its plot is along the familiar line of Faust, while its lines are in the stilted language of the middle 19th century. According to Mr. Morley, it is supposed to have the same antique charm as an old music box or a Currier & Ives print. It first appeared in 1866 and was widely touted as the first "leg show," albeit its chorus and principals wear eight or 10 times as much covering as the girls in a current revue. And in keeping with the general favor of the piece, it has always been the habit of the Hoboken audiences to signify their approval or disapproval with shouts, cheers or hisses. But all that was in Hoboken.

beat time to the music with their feet. But all that was in Hoboken.

beat time to the music with their feet. But all that was in Hoboken.

beat time to the music with their feet. But all that was in Hoboken.

beat time to the music with their feet. But all that was in Hoboken.

beat time to the music with their feet. But all that was in Hoboken.

beat time to the music with their feet. But all that was in Hoboken.

beat time to the music with their feet. But all that was in Hoboken.

beat time to the music with their feet. But all that was in Hoboken.

beat time to the music with their feet. But all that was in Hoboken.

beat time to the music with their feet. But all that was in Hoboken.

beat time to the music with their feet. But all that was in Hoboken.

gan. "This is part of the show."

"Never mind," answered Mr. Silverman. "I have an idea that there is a clique which the management has planned here to start all this hissing. There's a city ordinance which forbids any members of an audience from taking part in a production."

"Well," countered the manager, "what if we had a full house of paid admissions and they began to hiss?"

"In that case," answered Mr. Silverman, "the manager must come out on the stage and order the hissing stopped. And if they don't stop, he must order the performance to cease. And if he doesn't do this, we'll take his license away from him."

Mr. Silverman, over the telephone from his home later, said that early in the evening one of the city censors at the Apollo Theatre sent word to Mr. Casey, who was at the Plymouth Theatre, telling him about the outbreak of hissing during "The Black Crook," and of the disturbance created by a group of men who were placed throughout the theatre evidently for that purpose.

"Mr. Casey asked me," continued Mr. Silverman, "to go see the manager of the theatre and to see to it that the disturbance, if any, was stopped. I found out that hissing and jeering came from the groups planted in the audience for that purpose and I then told the manager that it must stop."

"We found out later that the noise was part of the atmosphere of the play and recalled the time 40 years ago when hissing the villain was part of the playgoers' privileges. Nevertheless we found that the hissing last night was creating a disturbance and ordered it to stop. We do believe such a practice should not be permitted in Boston theatres and it will not be tolerated."

Christopher Morley, who made a curiously speech at the end of the first act in which he outlined the history of the famous old "leg show," was entirely non-plussed at the anti-hiss order, when The Herald reporter brought it to his attention.

"Of course," he said, "the hissing is as much a part of the play as its music or its scenery. But this is their town, not mine. If we get orders to this effect, all we can do is obey."

"The Black Crook" is what Mr. Morley describes as an "oddity." Its plot is along the familiar line of Faust, while its lines are in the stilted language of the middle 19th century. According to Mr. Morley, it is supposed to have the same antique charm as an old music box or a Currier & Ives print. It first appeared in 1866 and was widely touted as the first "leg show," albeit its chorus and principals wear eight or 10 times as much covering as the girls in a current revue. And in keeping with the general favor of the piece, it has always been the habit of the Hoboken audiences to signify their approval or disapproval with shouts, cheers or hisses. But all that was in Hoboken.

beat time to the music with their feet. But all that was in Hoboken.

beat time to the music with their feet. But all that was in Hoboken.

beat time to the music with their feet. But all that was in Hoboken.

beat time to the music with their feet. But all that was in Hoboken.

beat time to the music with their feet. But all that was in Hoboken.

beat time to the music with their feet. But all that was in Hoboken.

beat time to the music with their feet. But all that was in Hoboken.

beat time to the music with their feet. But all that was in Hoboken.

beat time to the music with their feet. But all that was in Hoboken.

beat time to the music with their feet. But all that was in Hoboken.

beat time to the music with their feet. But all that was in Hoboken.

'INTERLUDE' FOR QUINCY

Play Banned by Hub to Be Shown Monday

Quincy, the Massachusetts settlement that first hurled open defiance at Boston Puritan "morals," nine years after the landing of the Pilgrims at Plymouth Rock, will again defy Boston convention by staging "Strange Interlude" in its largest theater Monday.

Mayor Thomas J. McGrath, chief executive of the city whose founder was arrested by Miles Standish and sent back to England because he was "a dangerous man in the new country," confirmed the report of the New York Theater Guild. Mayor Malcolm E. Nichols of Boston made the Boston ban final as the mayor of Quincy described as the place "where American independence was born," assured the public that there would be a positive showing.

Under the old "Stone Temple" lie the bones of John Adams and John Quincy Adams, two presidents who lived in Quincy.

John Hancock, signer of the Declaration of Independence, also lived in the Massachusetts city that will see the banned play. The length of the run of the play will depend upon the opinion of the mayor after he sees the play, and of course on "gate receipts."

"I have never seen the play," Mayor McGrath states, "neither have I read it. I cannot pass judgment on it until I see it with an open mind. I shall allow it to be presented in Quincy."

A statement issued to the press by Robert F. Sisk, local representative of the Guild, it was said:

"Now that it has completed arrangements for the presentation of 'Strange Interlude' in Quincy, the Theatre Guild asks the public to suspend judgment on the merits of this play until they have witnessed it."

"The Guild is sorry that it cannot ask the owners of the Hollis St. Theatre to assume the risk of a trial performance and possible loss of its license. If the Guild owned its own theater in Boston, that risk would be assumed and the law tested."

"Under the circumstances, the Guild is forced to ask its subscribers to attend the play in a nearby city, where it may recognize its inalienable right to private judgment."

part of the clergy here will take place, depends on the reaction to publication of the official announcement in the morning."

The Rev. Frank T. Littorin, pastor of the Central Baptist Church of Quincy, was strong in his denunciation of the play, and of the engagement of the Quincy Theatre as its show place.

"I am very strongly opposed to the play," he said, "and I wrote to Mayor McGrath only yesterday to let him know that I did not approve of his action in endorsing it. Now that he has actually made arrangements to have it brought here, I shall do everything in my power to forestall it. The play is highly immoral and unfit to be seen. I shall oppose its presentation here to the very last."

The Rev. William Shaw, pastor of the Atlantic Methodist Episcopal Church, was equally strong in his denunciation of the play, and the engagement of the Quincy Theatre.

Censorship Warranted

"I have written to Mayor McGrath in protest against the play," he stated. "Despite the fact that I have not seen the play, the excerpts I have examined carefully lead me to the belief that if any censorship is warranted, then this play certainly should come under the ban."

The Rev. J. Harrison Thompson, pastor of the First Baptist Church of Quincy, stated flatly that he will go to Mayor McGrath this morning, and personally urge that the latter's permission for the opening of the play be withdrawn.

"I haven't seen the play," he declared on hearing that the Guild planned to start performances in Quincy, "but from what I've heard and read, it is all Mayor Nichols said. The Boston Mayor is right. A play with such a background of immorality cannot be changed to permit of decent performances."

Laymen Rise to Attack

Other Quincy ministers were equally blunt in their denunciation of the play, and announced themselves ready to take the matter up with the Mayor at once, with a view to insuring against its being shown in the city of presidents.

Prominent lay figures in Quincy also rose to the attack last night on learning of the settlement on the Quincy Theatre.

Thompson King, famous philanthropist, and one of the wealthiest citizens of the south shore, was bitter last night in his denunciation of Mayor McGrath.

"'Strange Interlude' is a nasty play," he declared. "I am extremely surprised that Mayor McGrath has given his permission. He has made an awful mistake."

GUILD TO STAGE BANNED PLAY IN QUINCY THEATRE

Mayor McGrath Will Withhold Judgment Till He Sees Drama

BUSINESS MEN GLAD; MINISTERS MAY ACT

Legion Men Assert Ban of Nichols Hurts Fight for Convention

"Strange Interlude," the prize play by Eugene O'Neill, banned in Boston by Mayor Nichols, will be produced in Quincy, one of three cities offered it as a haven of safety. It will open there Monday for a run of three or four weeks. There will be no matinees.

This announcement was made last night by representatives of the Theatre Guild, which intended to stage the five-hour drama at the Hollis Street Theatre. Despite all protest, and a refusal of the acting version of the piece, Mayor Nichols refused to relent in his prohibition, and a theatre outside Boston was sought.

QUINCY CHOSEN

Careful consideration was given various theatres in Greater Boston and yesterday afternoon it was decided to accept the offer of the Quincy Theatre on Hancock street, Quincy.

A survey of Quincy city officials and business men yesterday disclosed that almost all of them were in favor of allowing the play to be put on unopposed. A group of Quincy ministers will meet at once to decide whether they will make active protest or not.

Mayor Thomas J. McGrath of Quincy, when questioned by The Herald last night, indicated that he will reserve judgment on "Strange Interlude" until he has seen the play. There is no censorship law in Quincy, but the mayor can suspend or revoke a theatre license if a play is found objectionable. He declared that he believes that such censorship comes under the head of police work, but intimated that he would take a hand if a controversy arises. Mayor McGrath said:

"Any licensed theatre in Quincy can show a play without interference provided it does not prove objectionable. We have no censorship in Quincy and I will withhold judgment until I am in possession of all the facts. If President Murray Butler of Columbia University has seen fit to award the play the Pulitzer prize, there is no reason why the producers should not have the right to present it here or anywhere else."

It is a fact that there are competent critics whose opinion concerning the play may be taken as a standard. Many of these critics have declared the play to be a masterpiece. On the other hand there are those who declare the play to be objectionable. I hope to see the play next Monday night as it will be presented here. I cannot condemn a play that I have not seen."

LEGION MEN DISTURBED

Although admitting that Quincy business men will profit by the showing of "Strange Interlude" in that city, Mayor McGrath declared that "it is not a question of money, of dollars and cents, but rather an issue of civil liberties."

The Theatre Guild, aware that there would be some opposition by Quincy ministers, several of whom have expressed themselves individually against the presentation in their city, last night sent a letter to each asking that judgment be suspended until the play is produced. They were told by the Guild that there is more at stake than the play itself—namely freedom of the stage, press and pulpit, in the opinion of the Guild.

THE BOSTON HERALD

WEDNESDAY, SEPTEMBER 25, 1929

Mayor McGrath will begin to hear formally from the opposing ministers of his city today when the Rev. J. Harrison Thompson, pastor of the First Baptist Church, Quincy, will call on him and urge that the play be banned.

A new and important angle to the censorship controversy came to light yesterday when a spokesman for an influential group in the American Legion declared that the ban was "exceedingly unfortunate" coming at a "particularly bad time" when the advance guard of the Massachusetts department is in Louisville, Ky., where the national convention will be held, endeavoring to bring the 1930 convention to Boston.

In view of the importance laid on this legion convention, and the fact that many other national conventions are considering Boston in 1930, when the tercentenary of Boston's founding will be celebrated, the country-wide effect of the various bans here may seriously impair Boston's chances of bringing such gatherings here. It was pointed out that the fact that Quincy offered a safe harbor to "Strange Interlude" settled the entire matter apparently for Boston, although comments by its ministerial opponents on the action of Quincy were vigorous. However, it was pointed out that nothing further can be done.

The Rev. Dr. A. Z. Conrad of the Park Street Church said: "I am surprised that Quincy would tolerate such a play, in fact I am surprised that any Massachusetts community would tolerate such an infamous play. I do not contemplate any further action. Any community that wants anything so degrading as 'Strange Interlude' certainly should have it."

The Rev. Dr. Robert Watson, president of the Lord's Day League, said: "I don't think there is anything we should do now that Quincy has accepted the play. Quincy made its own decision, and there is nothing to do. There is nothing I would want to do about it. When we sent the excerpt to ministers of Greater Boston, all we wanted was to get the ministers, leaders of their people, to get the facts so that they could speak intelligently to the people about it."

The Rev. Samuel D. Lindsay of the Brookline Baptist Church said: "There is nothing you can do about it. We wanted the ministers to study the play and express themselves. One cannot predict what action will be taken by the signatories to the letter sent the Greater Boston ministers. I have no idea in mind now. I can't see that we can do anything. I cannot speak for the others, and not for myself on such short notice."

The Herald was unable to communicate with Bishop Samuel G. Babcock, suffragan bishop of the Episcopal diocese of Massachusetts, who headed the list of supporters of Mayor Nichols; Albert R. MacKusick, attorney for Tremont Temple, another signer, or Alfred H. Colby, a member of the Park Street Church, who was out of town.

Businessmen of Quincy would undoubtedly resent opposition for it is estimated that fully $10,000 will be spent each week by "Strange Interlude" players in the Granite City. The Quincy Theatre seats nearly 1400 persons, most of whom would eat during the two-hour intermission in some of the 14 restaurants in the neighborhood of the theatre.

Garage owners and gasoline dealers would also be aligned with the business men, for there will be a large supply of gasoline and oil bought by the players. In addition, Quincy, home of Presidents noted for their strong views of freedom of speech, would receive national recognition of its broad-mindedness, supporters of the play say.

The Theatre Guild in its announcement of its change of plans stated: "Now that it has completed arrangements for the presentation of a competent board to pass on a play. For that reason we should act slowly in this matter. The Guild should be allowed to present the play before it is condemned."

Fred Murphy, manager of the theatre, declined to be interviewed, referring questioners to the Guild representatives in Boston.

J. J. McAnarney, city solicitor of Quincy, explained that the special city charter of Quincy is quite different from that of Boston. He refused to be interviewed but another government official said that the mayor has no powers of censorship except those granted the ordinary citizen. Quincyites may invoke police power by complaining to the police, who can close any show.

LIST OF PROTESTANTS

Prominent Bostonians continued yesterday to be listed among the protesters against the ban. Included among these were Bernard J. Rothwell, Prof. Zephariah Chafetz, Jr., of Harvard, C. W. Dreyfus, Charles H. Jones, Mr. and Mrs. W. Rodman Peabody and George Proctor.

Miss Lester B. Smith	Miss R. L. Webster
Miss Dorothy E. Hill	Mr. and Mrs. Wilder
Mrs. J. O. Tilton	R. Haines
George A. Mirick	Mrs. E. C. Graves
Mrs. M. P. Mann	Burton L. Chadwick
Howard R. Sprague	Mrs. J. Butler Stedley
Arnold S. Butler	Mrs. Sophie Harwood
Maile A. Watson	Henry Hunt Clark
Amey R. Shaw	Jennie R. Wilkinson
Miss Marion Holmes	Grace M. Neagle
M. Leitch	Edith C. Lane
Helene W. Joyce	Edward A. Lincoln
Mrs. Emily W. Gleason	Mr. P. de M. Barry
Mrs. Norman R. Chandler	Mr. Martin W. Brock
Mr. Marie B. Marsh	Leonora Austin
Dora B. Jaber	Miss E. S. Shy
Betty J. Lark	Chen B. Lighth
Genevieve Dellana	Constance Moore
Allen S. Bennett	Miss A. Mason
Flournoy A. Bray	B. A. Logan
Mrs. J. Wallace	Bertine W. Taylor
Miss A. Thompson	Mr. Harold G. Posa
Dorothy Weeks	Mr. and Mrs. John R. French
Mrs. E. H. Bristol	Dorothy F. Harrison
Miss Clara R. Robinson	Joseph Kruger
Stephen Palmer	Mr. and Mrs. Charles
Dr. H. W. Swann	Miss W. H. Weston
Anne C. Rickerson	Mrs. H. B. Carter
Edith O'Brien	Miss R. B. Robinson
Mrs. Wallace B. Donohue	Walter G. Mott
Clara W. Sewell	Ellen B. S. Fisher
Charles H. Jones	Mrs. Arthur Norton
Mr. and Mrs. W. Rodman Peabody	Mr. and Mrs. J. A. Gore
Howland	Bertram R. Little
Mr. and Mrs. Roger	Edna W. Craft
Flournoy A. Bray	Gertrude Mann
George J. Webster	Mrs. George E. Fole
Katharine Wells	Mrs. A. Dismick
Clara L. Madlocke	Flournoy A. Bray
Mrs. H. H. Hooper	Miss C. R. Cannon
Amey Robinson	Miss George Whiting
Mrs. C. A. Porter	Mrs. Leighton Brewer
John B. Paine, Jr.	Henry A. Laughlin
George Gould	H. A. Eaton
Heitor N. Holmes	Sally J. Edesley
Pauline W. Jackson	Mrs. Gorman Rogers
Mr. and Mrs. W. E. Putnam	Mrs. F. W. Guild
	William G. Haseltine
	Louise F. Hays
	Henry Warren
	Mrs. R. O. R. Cook
	Bernard J. Rothwell
	Francis N. Borden

The Boston Post

INTERLUDE TO GO TO QUINCY

Starts Run Next Monday---Mayor Agrees, but Ministers and Others Are Strongly Opposed

LEAVE IT TO PEOPLE, SAYS QUINCY MAYOR

Mayor Thomas J. McGrath of Quincy stated last night that he had received no formal application from members of the Theatre Guild for permission to put on "Strange Interlude" in that city, but that he knew negotiations had been under way for some time, and felt that the "best thing is to have the play, and let the people decide whether or not they want it."

"If the play is all right, the people will patronize it," he declared. "If it's not, they won't tolerate it. I haven't read either the book or the play myself, and don't feel I'm a competent judge as to its qualifications."

Though local clergymen and prominent citizens are up in arms against its presentation, Eugene O'Neill's much-mooted drama of sex, "Strange Interlude," which has been finally banned from Boston appearance, will open on Monday next at the Quincy Theatre, Quincy, with the approval of Mayor Thomas J. McGrath.

A PICTURE HOUSE

Announcement of the decision and permission to show the play in Quincy, was made last night by Robert Sisk, local representative of the Theatre Guild, sponsors of the play. The opening date, Monday, Sept. 30, is the same date on which the piece was originally scheduled to commence performances at the Hollis Street Theatre in Boston.

Coincidentally with the announcement of the play, which is a large moving picture theatre located in Quincy square, coinciding approximately the same number of seats as the Hollis.

Manager Murphy stated that he has posted a bond of $20,000 with the Guild, and that all arrangements for presentation have been completed. The formal announcement of the Theatre Guild as to the opening of the banned piece, with the expressed hope that "the public will suspend judgment on its merits until opportunity has been afforded them to witness it," follows:

Begin at 6 P. M.

"The Theatre Guild will present 'Strange Interlude' at the Quincy Theatre, Quincy, beginning Monday.

Sept. 30. This is the same date upon which it was planned to present the play at the Hollis Street Theatre before Mayor Nichols decided that this could not be. The same company which was scheduled to present the play in Boston will present it in Quincy. This company includes Judith Anderson, Tom Powers, Glen Anders, Richard Harbee, Eva Condon, Ethel Westley and others.

"Although the guild has not definitely decided the point, it is likely that the performances in Quincy will begin at 6 p. m., instead of 5:30, which has been the custom in the other cities where the play has been presented."

Reason for Selecting Quincy

"The reason the Guild selected Quincy, which was one of three cities to offer itself as a haven, was that the Mayor expressed himself as saying that he hoped the theatre management would be able to conclude its negotiations with the city both Lynn and Salem had also made efforts to procure the play."

"Now that it has completed arrangements for the presentation of 'Strange Interlude' in Quincy, the Theatre Guild asks that the public suspend judgment on the merits of this play until they have witnessed it. The Guild is sorry that it cannot ask the owners of the Hollis Street Theatre to assume the risk of a trial performance and possible loss of its license. If the Guild owned its own theatre in Boston that risk would be assumed and the law tested. Under the circumstances the Guild is forced reluctantly to ask its subscribers to attend the play in a nearby city, where it may recognize its inalienable right to private judgment."

Ministers May Take Action

The Guild's announcement, confirmed by the theatre management and Mayor McGrath, has stirred up a tremendous storm of protest among the clergy and prominent citizens of the city of Quincy, home of two of the early Presidents of the United States, and generally considered one of the strongholds of the old Puritan tradition.

The Rev. Hugh C. Lograt, pastor of Hough's Neck Congregational Church, and president of the Quincy Ministers' Association, last night told the Post that he is firmly in back of the stand taken by Mayor Nichols of Boston, that he is "surprised that Mayor McGrath should allow such a play to be presented in Quincy," and that the ministers' association which he heads may take concerted action against presentation of the piece.

"I'm not anxious to give the piece any advertising," he declared, "but I do feel that Mayor Nichols' stand in the matter is the only possible stand. Whether or not group action on the

QUINCY WILL SEE 'STRANGE INTERLUDE'

Guild Abandons Its Fight to Show Play Here

Production Mayor Nichols Banned
Will Open Monday Night

The city of Quincy, self-styled as the place "where the fight for independence began," has become the haven of the Theatre Guild, which fled from the stern dictates of Boston to present "Strange Interlude" by Eugene O'Neill's Pulitzer prize play for 1928, which was banned here nine days ago by a dictum of Mayor Nichols. The play will open next Monday night in the Quincy Theatre, on Hancock st., Quincy.

This became known last night when Robert F. Sisk, local representative of the Theatre Guild, issued a statement which said that the reason Quincy had been selected as the place for producing the play was because Mayor Thomas McGrath of Quincy said that he hoped that Quincy theatre management would be able to conclude its negotiations, which had been going on for some time with the Guild.

The statement goes on to say that the original New York cast will come to Quincy to produce the play. Next Monday, Sept. 30, it had been planned to present "Strange Interlude" at the Hollis Street Theatre before Mayor Nichols banned the play. The New York company includes Judith Anderson, Tom Powers, Glenn Anders, Richard Barbee, Eva Condon, Ethel Westley and others.

Arrangements Completed

The concluding part of the statement declares that the Guild "has completed arrangements for the presentation of 'Strange Interlude' in Quincy. The Theatre Guild asks that the public suspend judgment on the merits of the play until they have witnessed it. The Guild is sorry that it cannot ask the owners of the Hollis Street Theatre to assume the risk of a trial performance and possibly lose its license. If the Guild owned its own theatre in Boston that risk would be assumed and the law tested. Under the circumstances, the Guild is forced reluctantly to ask its subscribers to attend a play in a nearby city, where it may recognize its legal rights to private judgment."

When asked about the decision of the Guild last night, Mayor McGrath of Quincy declared that he would suspend his judgment until he had seen the play. "If I think it is not fit to go on," he said, "it will not be allowed to show beyond Monday night. While the play has been severely criticised by some people who have not even seen it, there also has been some criticism in its favor, like Dr. Nicholas Murray Butler of New York and other prominent clergymen in New York, where the play was produced."

Seats For 1400

The theatre where the play will be produced is one of the largest in the city. It has a capacity of about 1400 persons. The manager of the house is Fred B. Murphy. The Theatre Guild representatives declared last night that the theatre is up-to-date in every way and the acoustic properties are especially good.

This is not the first time Quincy has stepped to the fore. Back in the 1690's, when Thomas Morton became tired of the stringent regulations in Boston, he moved out to Merrymount, as Quincy was then called, and summoned the lovers of life and laughter to join him in the dance around the Maypole.

Early in the history of the colony a number of these settlers of Quincy were considered too liberal in their religious views by those in charge of the established church in Boston and they formed a church of their own which became the First Congregational Church. This still stands in City sq., only a short distance from where "Strange Interlude" will be produced. It was the first church in Massachusetts to be organized for the first time. Then, too, Quincy is famous for being the birthplace and home of two Presidents of the United States and also John Hancock, a signer of the Declaration of Independence. One of the ancestors of the Quinneys was engaged in that little fracas in England back in 1215, when King John and the Barons met at Runnymede, and signed an important document of English liberty, Magna Charta.

Ministers Noncommittal

How Quincy will take to the play is another question, but the Guild is confident that it will be treated hospitably. Ministers in Quincy, when asked about their view of the play, declined to say anything about it, intimating that they would hold a meeting later to take some concerted action, one way or the other.

The action of the Guild in going to Quincy is not surprising. Because of the difference in construction between the Hollis-st and the Quincy Theatre, there will have to be some readjustments about the seating, as the Quincy Theatre has no second balcony. Many of the Guild members will be inconvenienced somewhat by the change in arrangements. The Guild is confident, however, that arrangements can be made with the railroad and other transportation media so that everything will proceed smoothly.

If it is necessary, it was stated at the Guild headquarters last night, the buses will be brought into Park sq. Because of the distance from Boston, it has been suggested that the Guild start the performance at 6 o'clock, instead of 5:30, as has been usual.

PROVIDENCE PLANS ADVISORY CENSORSHIP

PROVIDENCE, Sept. 24 (A. P.)—The Providence Police Commission today took under consideration the appointment of an advisory censorship committee, after a hearing attended by a number of stage lovers. The agitation for such a committee started with the recent banning of Eugene O'Neill's "Strange Interlude," scheduled for production here, but which was banned by Capt. George Cowan, police censor. The committee would confer with the Police Commissioners on the status of any drama banned by the censor, providing the theatre manager appeals from the veto. The committee would have no legal power.

OUR MAIL BAG

A WATCH AND WARD MEMBER

To the Editor of The Herald:

In your issue of today my name appeared somewhat prominently as protesting against the banning of the "Strange Interlude" by Mayor Nichols. Therefore, I would be obliged if you would print the following statement:

On Monday morning I signed the protest card to Mayor Nichols and notified the Theatre Guild to that effect. Later information, notably the letter of Judge Grant in yesterday's Herald, and opportunity to read somewhat copious extracts from the acting version of the play, I felt that my protest had been mistaken.

Early yesterday I called the mayor's office and withdrew the protest and immediately notified Miss Helburn of the Theatre Guild to that effect by special delivery letter, and requested that my notification card of having protested be destroyed.

With due respect to the favorable opinions which have been expressed by many notables regarding this play, I must be guided by my own conviction of its unfitness for public presentation in this city, and I am fully in accord with Judge Grant in applauding the action of his honor the mayor.

BERNARD J. ROTHWELL, Boston, Sept. 25.

ANSWERING JUDGE GRANT

To the Editor of The Herald:

Judge Grant's letter in this morning's Herald is a fine example of an irrelevant point of view so far as art is concerned. Judge Grant cites, seriatim, the horrible phases in the sexual life of the people of "Strange Interlude" and speaks of its psychopathology. A corresponding analysis of the Bible would reveal rape, incest, cruel murder, and things no nice girl ought to know about. Similarly, there is a tremendous amount of psychopathology, sexual as well as other types, in "Hamlet." If I remember rightly, some of the Greek tragedies dealt with incest, so that Shakespeare and Euripides might well be excluded from the Boston stage and a consistent censor ought to exclude the Bible from the Boston book shops.

The irrelevance of Judge Grant's point of view lies in this, that while the matter in art is important, the method of treatment, and what might be called the evolution of the theme by the artist, is of infinitely greater importance.

The story of Fanny Hill dealt with sexual matters, but it dealt with them frankly on the basis of an effort to arouse obscure and erotic impulses in the reader. The Greek tragedians dealt with sexual matters, but they dealt with them as part of the tragic process, as existence as grim realities which are part of the tangle in which human life become enmeshed. "Strange Interlude" deals with sexual matters; abortions, sexual irregularity, etc.; it deals with strange people or at least they seem strange, until one examines the lives of the people around him and his own life and finds that the people are not so strange after all. It deals with them on the plane, not of eroticism and intent to arouse irregular passions and morbid impulses, but as a stark portrayal of what happens to human beings, how torn they are by dissonance, how futile are their efforts to escape the consequences of their acts. It is inconceivable that anyone after seeing "Strange Interlude" will feel impelled to lead and lascivious conduct, on the contrary, if he notices of the play in the spirit in which it is written, he will have undergone what Aristotle, who after all is no mean authority, called catharsis—he will be purged of a mean outlook on life.

I am sure that one ought not to say that "Strange Interlude" was written to make better people. I am not even sure that it is a great play; but I am sure that nobody except those who find obscenity in legs and obstructions will find obscenity in this play.

As for the ministers who have backed up Mayor Nichols, they abundantly confirm my own private opinion, which I do not hesitate to make public to wit: It is a very odd thing that church and state are separate in America. It is a very good thing that the clergy are relatively impotent to influence human conduct. If they had power, we would be thrown into a tyranny compared to which the banning of "Strange Interlude" by the mayor from the stage of Boston would be a mere trifle. ABRAHAM MYERSON, M. D., Boston, Sept. 24.

OUTLINE OF PLAY UNFAIR

To the Editor of The Herald:

This is a reaction to Judge Grant's letter in this morning's issue of The Herald, in which he gives his "skeleton of facts," reasons for upholding Mayor Nichols' banning of "Strange Interlude."

I saw the play in New York last year. It was chance that I saw it at all, for the criticisms I had read of it gave outlines of the story which had given me a false impression that the play was unnecessary and disgusting. An outline of the story gives none of the true worth of the play, in fact, to my mind it distorts the whole thing.

It is a stupendously moving and thought-stimulating study of human actions. The play cannot be said to condone the various things which the censor objects to, nor does it present them as pleasant courses of conduct. It presents many problems to which every individual would respond differently. The impression it left with me was: How utterly futile for one human being to try to meddle with the life of another. Which thought is still with me when I contemplate the professed object of the censor in prohibiting the play and the result on the public of the ban. DOROTHEA K. HARRISON, Boston, Sept. 24.

Boston Transcript

SATURDAY, SEPTEMBER 21, 1929

THE PUBLIC'S FIGHT

To the Editor of the Transcript:

The ever present evil of censorship, as far as Boston is concerned, is again to the fore. Having been interested in the possible revision of our censorship law from the Boston stage and a consistent censor ought to exclude the Bible from the Boston book shops.

For three years we have been working for a revision of our present law which condemns a book on a single sentence or passage with no regard for the general purport of the book as a whole. As often stated, the Bible could be suppressed on this basis, a remark which might be branded as a bromide but which, nevertheless, is true.

Now such a law is preposterous and should be repealed and would be repealed if the general public would take a hand. So far the booksellers, the librarians and a few publishers have carried on the fight. I hope the public will now recognize that the fight is theirs and that the coming session of the State Legislature will be told in no uncertain terms that we have had enough censorship by irresponsible and thoroughly incompetent critics.

A college professor would make a poor policeman and a policeman could hardly make the grade as a professor of literature, and yet the chief of police of Boston has passed on certain books, threatening the bookseller with fines and possible imprisonment for their sale.

The Watch and Ward Society, which is certainly not a literary organization, at times from time to time to place a ban on books. I do not refer to pornographic literature which would be banned under any law so far proposed by the librarians and booksellers, but on any book which does not meet with their approval. They are not competent critics. Cheap literature, novels, weekly and monthly magazines are for sale on the news stands—the American Tragedy is banned. The burlesque shows stay open and "Strange Interlude" is declared unfit for presentation.

Is this all a satisfactory condition of affairs and has not the Boston brand of censorship gone too far?

HERBERT R. BURGESS

"STRANGE INTERLUDE"

To the Editor of the Transcript:

Providence and Boston. There they stand dumb in a tale. The joke of the land! G. Providence, Sept. 19.

Judge Grant Upholds Ban on 'Interlude'

Judge Robert Grant, formerly of the Probate Court, and himself an author of numerous novels, some of which aroused much controversy, today came to the support of Mayor Nichols, who has put a final ban on "Strange Interlude."

Although saying he does not believe in literary censorship, Judge Grant declared that "as a member of the American Academy of Arts and Letters, I think it is time to cry a halt."

Referring to Mayor Nichols' action, he said:

"This challenge by Mayor Nichols to the complacency of the hand of untrammelled but self-advertising young men and women who tell us what to read and why, will show at least that our majority, however bourgeois, still purposes to keep sewers under cover."

Mayor Edward W. Quinn of Cambridge announced that "Strange Interlude" would not be permitted in that city. His decision was taken after reading excerpts from the play.

Judge Grant, member of an old Boston family, is author of nearly 30 books, a number of them dealing with sex, marriage and divorce. Among the better known of his works were "The Chippendales," dealing with Boston families, "The High Priestess," concerning itself with "feminist" marriage, "Unkenned Brand," "The Reflections of a Married Man," "The Opinions of a Philosopher," and "The Convictions of a Grandfather."

"I do not believe in literary censorship," said Judge Grant in part. "A stream will not rise higher than its source nor fall much lower. The right to discuss social problems freely is a safeguard to liberty."

"A play that had run all winter in New York and the gauntlet of London might well have encouraged Mayor Nichols to emulate the example of a saloon keeper who when asked, 'Is Michael Doherty good for a drink?' replied: 'But he had it!'"

"An easy-going world, outside of Boston, had already accepted the play that has caused all this bother."

BOSTON ON ITS OWN

"But our mayor at least has shown himself a man of courage, and as the New York Times hinted in its pleasant article 'By-Products' Boston is entitled to its own opinion even against the world."

"The essential inquiry in every controversy is 'What are the facts?' Not many who are vociferously discussing this question have read the play. I bought and read it months ago, as I do everything O'Neill writes. He is an important literary artist, fearless and dynamic. I admire much of his art and some of its dramatic consequences."

"But I take off my hat to Mayor Nichols for his courageous verdict on 'Strange Interlude,' in the face of that portion of the younger generation intent on crowning all heroines of irregular sex life as Madonnas."

PLOT OF "MUDDINESS"

Judge Grant submitted a skeleton of facts from the play, and asked:

"Can any modifications in the stage version obliterate the basic muddiness of this plot? The great muddiness of the past, from the Greek dramatists to the days of Flaubert, however scornful of current morals, have always sought to depict actual truth. But what does 'Strange Interlude' portray except sexual vagaries spun out to the dimensions of disagreeable surgical operation for the delectation of a too small world?"

"And one thing more. The New York Times pointed out also that there were no longer Puritans in Boston. True again. Either the language of respectability or the maw of the young intelligentsia has absorbed them. The name of our censor is Casey, which suggests the race that has largely supplanted them in Boston. As on who, as both Brahmin and a Unitarian, helped for 30 years to keep the scales of justice even between Puritan and Catholic in this community, I know well the virtue of that race."

"Chief among them are spiritus decency and unwillingness to substitute for the things that are lovely and of good repute, nauseous vagaries masquerading as naturalness."

"TIME TO CRY HALT"

"If, in this instance, Boston makes herself ridiculous by her ban, so much the better. It was Boston who threw the tea chest overboard a century and a half ago."

"This challenge by Mayor Nichols to the complacency of the ban of untrammelled but self-advertising young men and women who tell us what to read and why, will show at least that our majority, however bourgeois, still purposes to keep sewers under cover."

"Were Heywood Brown, Sinclair Upton and Edna Millay St. John throw a mantle of obscurity around these names, to parade down Fifth ave, stark naked in midwinter, just to be cool and comfortable, this would be natural as Adam and Eve."

"One has only to open the current Geographic Magazine to see that the natives of primeval Papi do so still. But if in case son successor of Anthony Comstock should invoke an obscure Victorian law that landed them in jail, Boston would be able to answer: 'Last. Even sex appeal in the name of liberty has its proper reserve. As a member of the American Academy of Arts and Letters, think it is time to cry a halt.'"

Boston Transcript

324 WASHINGTON STREET, BOSTON, MASS.

WEDNESDAY, SEPTEMBER 25, 1929

THE LIBRARIAN

If all the theaters in the city were to shut down on account of the high cost of production—which often seems likely, as any harassed manager will tell you—the Boston public would continue to be instructed and amused by the Boston Public Library, which embarks next week on its thirty-first season of free lectures and concerts. All tastes and temperaments appear to have been considered in planning the programs. If you are a compulsory stay-at-home, there are chances for all sorts of hour-long journeys to "Calvo and Caharo"—at any rate Iceland, China, Palestine, Italy, France, Australia, Canada, Greece (with Miss Alice Lawton, art critic of the Boston Post) and Germany, which latter talk, illustrated with films, is contributed by the Bureau of Commercial Economics in Washington. Beauty spots of our own country may also be explored.

History enthusiasts may find out new facts about John Brown, of Harper's Ferry; the voyages of Columbus; Boston, from village to metropolis; the Bay Colony Circle. There is also to be a whole series of lectures commemorating the three hundredth anniversary, in 1930, of the founding of Boston. The first of these is to be given by Professor Albert Bushnell Hart, who will be followed by other distinguished speakers. Fine arts will be represented by "The Spirit of the New Wing of the Boston Museum"; an interpretation of the religious paintings of George Inness, Jr.; and "An Hour with American Sculptors."

All those people who admit, under cross questioning, that they do not read to improve their social position, to get an increase in salary, or a university degree, will find a gallant champion in John Macy, who is to discuss (with gusto and gusto, you may be sure!) "Reading for Enjoyment." The date is Sunday, April sixth. Put it in your memory book at once.

Mrs. James Frederick Hopkins offers what she calls "Literary Musicals"— tales, folklore and legends gathered abroad. Late in October, Caroline Ticknor will share with us her "Glimpse of Literary London." Boston's reputation for preferring the best in literature is to be un-held by Laura Huxtable Porter and George Francis Pearson, who at different times, will give readings from Shakespeare. And Jessie Eldridge Southwick is to read from "Faust." "William Makepeace Thackeray" is the subject of Dr. Francis Henry Wade this year. Eleanor Brooks Guley lists the delightfully provocative title "The Recovered Wagon in American Fiction." Christmas wouldn't be Christmas in Boston were we to lack a point of contact with the great master of that holiday and holy day: Charles Dickens. So on the Sunday before the feast we may look forward to a talk by the president of the local branch of the Dickens Fellowship, who will tell how the author read his "Christmas Carol" in Boston, one Christmas Eve.

Professor Hersey, of Harvard, is to give a lecture on "Early Glimpses of the American Theater," and Professor Rogers, of Technology, on Jefferson and E. H. Sothern, also "Melodrama: The Palmy Days." Frank Chouteau Brown will talk on "The Theater in New England: Then and Now."

Plays will be presented by several groups, including The Studio Club, the Parker Memorial Players, and The Striving Players. Fannie Barnett Linsky will tell about experiences before the footlights and behind the scenes, and Isabella Taylor is to give a dramatic reading of a modern play.

All sorts of delightful concerts are in prospect. Among these will be the Copley Club Singers and Entertainers; the Lyric Male Quartet, featuring negro spirituals and plantation melodies; the orchestra from Lincoln House; the Wheaton College Glee Club; the Boston Civic Symphony Orchestra; the German Singing Society; and the Waltham Musical Club. The Boston Symphony Orchestra will be represented by members who will furnish the music for Mme. Boile Morey's lecture on Egypt. Excellent recitals by individual artists are also scheduled. Again, through the generosity of Mrs. Elizabeth Sprague Coolidge, music lovers in Boston may hear chamber music concerts by the finest string quartet in the world.

There will be a lecture on adult education, and two on botany. The subject of economics will be handled by William Trufant Foster, an acknowledged authority on the subject. There will even be a talk, by a graphologist, on "The Psychological Analysis of Handwriting." Indeed no subject appears to have been overlooked in this well-planned, interesting lecture program.

"DIVINE RIGHT OF CENSORS"

To the Editor of The Herald:

In the controversy over "Strange Interlude," has an important principle been sufficiently emphasized? It is not merely the opportunity to see the play which is at stake but what is of infinitely greater importance, intellectual freedom and equality: intellectual freedom for educated, cultivated, mature individuals to decide for themselves what they shall hear, see and read; equality of intellect with that of mayor or censor to distinguish, to discriminate, to appraise what is obscene, etc., in drama and literature.

There are many of us who honestly and sincerely do not believe that either mayor or censor has been endowed with better intellect than ours and all the evidence seems to justify this belief. We may not like the play—or the book, as the case might be—perhaps we will not approve it, but we are capable of deciding that for ourselves. If there are parents who do not wish their young people to see the play let them keep their youth at home, or better, instruct them so that they may be able intelligently to distinguish and evaluate the good. Mountain climbers, seamen, locomotive engineers, aviators are not sent out blindfolded; then why blindfold those who are to travel through life?

We no longer concede the divine right of kings; are we going to fall into an equal fallacy, the divine right of censors? Whence comes their divine intelligence which enables them to prescribe and provide our mental food? What will be the future of a country which submits to an intellectual dictatorship? Russia and Italy, please do not laugh at us; give us time to grow a brain. JUDITH GARNER, West Roxbury, Sept. 22.

HITS LEGION EFFORTS

Play Ban Called S setback for National Convention Drive

A new angle to the banning of "Strange Interlude" by Mayor Nichols was revealed yesterday by prominent members of the Massachusetts department of the American Legion, who declared they fear the mayor's action will greatly handicap them in their efforts to have the national convention brought to Boston next year.

"It is exceedingly unfortunate for us," declared a spokesman for the group yesterday, "that Mayor Nichols has taken this particular time to ban 'Strange Interlude' or any other play from Boston. Our advance guard is already in Louisville, Ky., where headquarters have been opened for the Boston-in-1930 movement, although the national convention does not open until next week."

"With Gov. Allen and other officials doing everything possible to bring the American Legion convention to Boston next year, when the 30th anniversary of the landing of the Massachusetts Bay Colony is to be observed, it is a tough break for us to have Mayor Nichols offset their efforts by the Boston the laughing stock of the other cities in the country."

"It is very obvious that Legionnaires from all parts of the United States will feel somewhat uncertain about coming to Boston for a national convention, as a result of what they have read concerning censorship as it is carried out in Boston under the direct instructions of Mayor Nichols. Also, it goes without saying that we will be let in for a lot of razzing and that our task will be made fully twice as difficult."

"The city of Los Angeles, Cal., is making a strong bid for next year's convention, and if the Los Angeles contingent adopts a slogan of no-censorship-of-entertainment, we are going to have a hard time in overcoming the prejudice that will thereby be stirred up against Boston."

"Of course, we have a very strong argument in urging that the convention come to Boston as a part of the tercentenary celebration, but Mayor Nichols certainly has not helped us by banning from the Boston stage a notable play that can be produced anywhere else."

BOSTON IN FERMENT OVER MAYOR'S BAN ON O'NEILL DRAMA

Leaders in All Walks of Life Resent Censorship Order on
"Strange Interlude"

EXECUTIVE IS DELUGED WITH LETTERS OF PROTEST

Theatre Guild May Resort to Injunction or Try Suburban Production

Special Despatch to The World
BOSTON, Sept. 18.—Out of the confusion developed by the action of Mayor Nichols in banning the Boston production of Eugene O'Neill's "Strange Interlude," a concerted action by prominent Bostonians to put an end to a situation which they contend is holding the city up to ridicule, was slowly emerging to-day.

From the number and tone of messages sent to the Mayor, and the offers of assistance brought to the Theatre Guild by organizations and individuals, it was apparent that the apathy previously displayed by local residents, was being dissipated by the latest act of the city censors.

Clergymen, bankers, business men, publishers, literary societies, women's clubs, librarians editors and scores of other men and women aroused to a fighting pitch, sent telegrams or other messages to the Mayor's office to-day, demanding the abandonment of what they believe is a silly censorship.

The Theatre Guild representatives, angered by a statement of the Mayor that the play "presented a disgusting spectacle of immorality and an advocacy of atheism, of domestic infidelity which has no place on a Boston stage," came back with a statement in which they questioned the Mayor's qualifications to pass upon the merits or morals of the play.

The Mayor's opinion of the play was given to the Guild representatives when they conferred with him at the City Hall late to-day in an effort to prevail on him to change his edict.
Their failure in this left them with several alternatives, all of which they indicated might be tried.

They can give a special performance of the play before the Statutory Board here, consisting of the Mayor, Police Commissioner, and Chief Justice of the Municipal Court, in the hope the board might reverse the Mayor's edict;
they can present the play in some suburban city, provided it meets with official approval in whatever city is selected, or they can try for an injunction to prevent the Mayor from stopping the play. Another conference with the Mayor is scheduled for to-morrow.

FIGHT BOSTON BAN ON O'NEILL PLAY

Theatre Guild to Test Law Invoked by Mayor Against
"Strange Interlude."

HAS PROTEST COMMITTEE

Book Version Long on Sale in City
—Providence Also Cancels Booking.

Special to The New York Times.
BOSTON, Sept. 17.—The Theatre
Guild, through two members of its board of managers, today announced that it intended to fight the decision of Mayor Nichols forbidding the performance of Eugene O'Neill's Pulitzer Prize play "Strange Interlude," scheduled to open here on Sept. 30 at the Hollis Street Theatre.

Mayor Nichols, when asked today if he had seen the play, why he banned it and why the book was not banned in this city, where it is on sale at all bookstores, said only, "I have no comment to make."
Mayor Nichols did not visit the City Hall and hence failed to receive a messenger from the Theatre Guild representatives bearing a letter requesting "the courtesy of an interview" that the Guild might state its reasons for producing the play.

Form Committee of Protest.

Miss Theresa Helburn, executive director of the Guild, and Lawrence Langner, a director, announced this afternoon that counsel had been engaged to examine the constitutionality of the law under which the Mayor can prevent the performance of a play without having seen the acting version, and also that friends of the Guild had persuaded that organization to form a citizens' "committee of protest" against the decision of the Mayor.

The order from Mayor Nichols, issued late yesterday and notifying the management of the Hollis Street

Theatre that no performance would be permitted, came as a complete surprise to the producers, who assert they have billed the play in the Hollis, Tremont and Colonial Theatres since last April, have sold $40,000 of seats to 7,000 Boston subscribers of the Guild and now have three waste-baskets of seat orders waiting to be opened.

Statement by Guild.

The Helburn-Langner statement
read, in part:

"We feel that the action of the Mayor in suppressing a play of this importance is essentially undemocratic and arbitrarily disregards the opinion of the thousands of respectable Boston citizens who have subscribed to bring "Strange Interlude" and other Guild plays to Boston.

"We have no direct evidence that the Mayor or any of the censorship committee have seen the play. It is our understanding that they have not and we know that they have not read the acting version of the play, which differs considerably from the book.

"We do not feel that we have any right to submit to this ruling without protest, because we represent an organization which has always stood for the highest in the theatre and this play represents the high-water mark of our production achievement.

"The reputation of the Guild, the importance of the play and its author, and its wide critical and popular acclaim assure the Boston public that this is a sincere work of art and not a piece of meretricious theatricality. We are asking the Mayor to reconsider his decision in view of aroused public opinion and to at least accord to the Guild the courtesy of an immediate conference with its representatives."

Decision Mayor's Alone.

It was stated at the City Hall that Mayor Nichols based his decision on reading the play, that the decision was his and that no organization had voiced opposition to the production.
It was reported that the Mayor regarded the text as salacious and the actions of the principal character such that no public good would be served by permitting the play to go on.

John M. Casey, City Censor, said that more than a year ago overtures were made by Guild representatives to present "Strange Interlude" in Boston and that they were advised that if they did they would run into difficulties.

During Mayor Curley's administration notice was served on the Guild in advance that "Desire Under the Elms" would not be permitted here.

PROVIDENCE, R. I., Sept. 17 (AP).
"Strange Interlude" has been banned in this city by order of Captain George W. Cowan, police amusement censor. It was booked to open here Monday, before its appearance in Boston, but Captain Cowan, after reading excerpts of the script, sent him by the Theatre Board of Control of Philadelphia, ordered the booking cancelled.

THE GUILD AND BOSTON

To judge from the various despatches, the Theatre Guild is still undecided as to what it is going to do about the suppression of "Strange Interlude" by the Mayor of Boston. Since it is primarily an artistic organization, one can understand its hesitancy about engaging in combat over secular matters; nevertheless, if it is considering a fight to the limit, it might remember that it has a perfect case for the purpose. It has a play that has met critical, official and popular approval in a great many cities, a play by the ranking American playwright, and one which obviously was never intended as an excursion into the obscene. It has a financial stake sufficient to relieve it of any suspicion of going to court out of pure cantankerousness. It has an encouraging example in Mr. H. L. Mencken, who faced a similar situation a few years ago and who, by his uncompromising bellicosity, defeated the censors in a spectacular manner, and so trussed them up with injunctions that they were powerless to injure him in the future. And finally it has the money to retain counsel who will conduct the case in a dignified and creditable manner.

It begins to grow tedious, however, that whenever something goes wrong in Boston the brunt of the fighting must be borne by outsiders. When are the intelligent people of Boston going to come out of their tents and begin fighting their own battles? Mention of Mr. Mencken brings to mind the City of Baltimore. In many ways it greatly resembles Boston. It is the seat of several institutions of learning. But religious fanatics are numerous there too, much more numerous than is commonly supposed. And if these were left to their own devices the city would soon sink in the same morass that has swallowed up Boston, as indeed it almost did a few years ago. But are they left to their own devices? They are not. The moment one of them starts something nonsensical the civilized minority lays down a barrage that is deadly in the execution that it works. Not infrequently it is sounded off by Mr. Mencken himself, with the newspapers following him up and the populace giving three cheers. The baiting of fanatics has been brought to such a fine art there that it actually pays; the public at large, while it probably has little interest in the issues themselves, enjoys the show, and as usual takes sides with the combatant who strikes the hardest blows. As a result, Baltimore is the worst city for censors, prohibitionists, open-shoppers and all such people in the whole country, with the possible exception of New York.
Boston could be just as free if it would. But it will never be free if it lies down and lets its Mayor Nichols, its Watch and Ward Societies and its police magistrates ride right over it.

MORE BOSTON PURITY

The latest performance of the Boston censors comes pretty near capping the climax. Under orders from Mayor Nichols, the Hollis Theatre has been notified that "Strange Interlude" will not be allowed to open. Eugene O'Neill's play, awarded the Pulitzer Prize, passed without alteration by the British Lord Chamberlain, given in New York for a year and a half, and presented without objection in numerous cities of the country, is sternly forbidden in the Hub.

By this time we know that almost anything is possible in Boston. It is a large and distinguished collection of books and plays that "Strange Interlude" goes to join. Theodore Dreiser's "An American Tragedy," after selling 60,000 copies in the United States, was held obscene by a Boston judge.
The District Attorney in Boston suppressed Sinclair Lewis's "Elmer Gantry." Upton Sinclair's
"Oil" was pronounced a corrupting and immoral book by a municipal judge, and a clerk who sold a copy was fined heavily. H. G. Wells's "The World of William Clissold," read in all other parts of the English-speaking world without qualms, was for-bidden to Bostonians. Boston police officers stopped the sale of Jim Tully's "Circus Parade." Under threat of police action, Boston booksellers refused to handle Vina Delmar's "Bad Girl." Recently it was stated that a total of about fifty books, many well known, had been interdicted in Boston and could not be bought there. On the list were works by Ernest Hemingway, Feuchtwanger, Keyserling and Carl Van Vechten. We have just seen "All Quiet on the Western Front" bowdlerized through fear of the Boston authorities.

Obviously there is some powerful force behind this silly and dangerous exhibition of Boston tyranny.
When Mayor, District Attorney, Police Chief, judges and other officers all join in this pernicious idiosy, some strong body or element is pulling the strings.
What is this secret influence in Boston?

The Surprises of Censorship

The exclusion of Mr. Eugene O'Neill's five-act masterpiece from the Boston stage appears to have been received among the enlightened sections of the country more in wonder than in indignation.
The tyrannies of Boston's censorship, like those of its weather, have come to be regarded as merely another misfortune of the unhappy people who have to live there, about which the rest of the nation can do very little. Mr. Mencken no longer crusades on Boston Common; intellectual Paul Reveres no longer seek to arouse the citizenry to protest. It would be of no use.

Even so, the interdict on "Strange Interlude" seems curious. "Strange Interlude" was no product of a wicked and cosmopolitan New York. It was the provinces, the hinterlands, the remotest backwoods which kept that somewhat ponderous sermon upon the New York stage for so long. For months any traveler who returned to the great interior without having seen "Strange Interlude" was looked upon as an unregenerate backslider from the higher things. New York sat comfortably at its leg shows and in its speakeasies watching the visitors spend those four or five dreadful hours of biological psychology which had come to be recognized as the price of respectability north of the Harlem and west of the Hudson River.

The mere possibility that "Strange Interlude" might be censored in Philadelphia has wrung from that city the cry that good Americans have been "no whit harmed, but exalted rather" by that work. One had always understood that this was the noble mood which nerved the outer reaches to sit through it. And now Boston has banned it.
Boston's censorship has been in the past as eccentric as it is tyrannous, but one never supposed it could be as eccentric as all that.

BOSTON LAUGHS WRYLY AT JOKE OF CENSORSHIP

Foe of O'Neill Play College
Educated; Career Has Been Political

CODE COVERS ALL DRAMA
FROM HAMLET TO COOCHY

Minister Compelled to Read
Objectionable Stories
to Critics

Special Despatch to The World
BOSTON, Mass., Sept. 21.—Mayor
Malcolm E. Nichols, whose banning of Eugene O'Neill's "Strange Interlude," has made the generally genial Mayor
the target of criticism and ridicule not only outside of Boston but inside. In forty-nine years old and is a Harvard graduate with an A. B. degree. He graduated from Harvard in 1899, after having prepared for college in the high schools of his native city of Portland,
Me.

Following his graduation he entered the law office of Charles H. Innes, recognized as one of Boston's most astute Republican politicians, and in 1909 he passed the bar.

In the mean time his association with
Mr. Innes had engendered the political urge. After taking a baptismal licking
as a Council candidate in 1903 he won out in 1905 and 1906. In the ensuing three years he stepped up to the House
of Representatives, and pursuing his political climb he was in the State
Senate from 1914 to 1919.

In July of 1921 he was appointed
Collector of Internal Revenue. He remained in this office until he began his Mayoralty campaign in 1925. He was one of the few Republicans to win
an election for this office and he has held it for four fairly stormy years.

If Mayor Nichols is qualified to censor the drama it appears that such qualifications must have come from
his having graduated from Harvard,
from his having been a newspaper man,
from his having been a lawyer, from
having held various political offices,
from having been Fuel Administrator
for a time, School Commissioner and Chairman of the Rent and Housing
Commission.

The history of dramatic and literary censorship in Boston is a merry narrative of fancy and foible, punctuated all
the way along by such familiar exclamations as "Boston is being made ridiculous" and "the situation has now become intolerable."

Way back in 1911, when John F.
Fitzgerald was Mayor, he set himself
up as a censor and the result was some good, clean, wholesome fun all around.
As a starter, he banned Walters play,
"The Eastest Way," after he had had a report from two friends on it. The incident was punningly referred to as
"a theatrical gesture," inspired a quat-
rain in the Boston Herald, and an editorial which ended with the original sentence, "the city is being made ridiculous."

Two years later Mayor Fitzgerald was shocked during a presentation of "Get Rich Quick Wallingford" when a Mayor
was portrayed as a grafter. In Boston,
after that, the Mayor on the program
became "a prominent citizen" and the Senator became "a prominent lobbyist."

The next outstanding bit of dramatic censorship in Boston was the result of
a strong opposition by Negro citizens to a showing of the film, "The Birth of a Nation." The result was Gov. Walsh's signature on a bill providing for a group of three censors, comprising the Mayor, the Police Commissioner and
the Justice of the Municipal Court.

Shortly afterward Mayor Curley alone
banned the play "Maternity" and warned away the Belasco play "Marie-Odile."

Mayor Curley's most prominent contribution to the art of the drama was made in 1915 to a group of approximately forty local theatre managers.
It was called "The Moral Code," and
in his silver-tongued voice Mayor
Curley announced that henceforward
there should be on Boston stages no
suggestive jokes or songs "especially parodies," no "muscle," "coochy,"
"apache" or other suggestive dances,
no one-piece costumes which distinctly revealed the figure, as in living statuary groups, no portrayals of moral perverts or dope fiends taking drugs or depicting the effects of excessive drugs
on the system, no mingling of women performers with the audience, except in legerdemain and similar acts.

The Rev. Dr. Raymond A. Calkins of Cambridge, who was later to become the August President of the Watch and Ward Society, laughed fun into
the meeting by presenting a collection of salacious jokes gathered from Boston stages.

"Read it yourself, it's too filthy for me," said Mayor Curley, who snickered audibly while the Rev. Dr. Calkins recited the choice bits.

Barred Magazine

In 1924, Mayor Curley barred from
the stage the expressions, "My God,"
"Dear God," "damn" and "hell."

Meanwhile, the field of literature was not allowed to lie fallow. A periodical harrowing in the form of censorship
was both expected and enjoyed.
Censorship was in the hands of individuals and was a helter-skelter

process until 1924, when the so-called Bookeller's Committee was organized at the suggestion of J. Frank Chase, then head of the Watch and Ward. The committee comprised three book sellers and three members of the society.

During the same year, the Magazine
Committee was organized with ten members. When a magazine offended this committee for three succeeding months, the committee refused to review it further and all future sales
were at the risk of the sales persons.
Two months after its inception the
committee branded an issue of Snappy Stories as "too snappy" and lapsed into slumber.

The cover of the offending number
carried a picture of Adam and Eve.
During the interval between 1924 and the first guns of the "Book War" in 1928 the book sellers' committee functioned quietly and well. Counsellman James A. Watson, however, had previously started an expedition into the fields of pedantic writing and in 1922
had drawn up his own index expurgatorius of a dozen books which, he said, should be barred from use in the schools because they were pro-British.

Eventually the City Council adopted
an order calling on the school committee to bar Prof. Albert Bushnell
Hart's "School History of the United States," that familiar classic of bygone schoolroom days. Burke's speech
on Conciliation, and D. S. Mussey's
"American History."

The same year policemen entered Williams's book store and seized a number of copies of Ben Hecht's "Gar-goyle" and a popular novel called
"Simon Called Peter." Elliot Paul, author of "Indelible," led the intellectuals of Beacon Hill against this high-handed outrage, demanding that the police visit every book store in the city to seize every available copy of the Bible.

The complete and detailed history of the book war of 1927 is buried under such a mass of news clippings and hearsay that history will have to wait for time to clear the mists away. Looking back, one of the first high points
was the banning of an article entitled "Hatrack," which appeared in an issue of the American Mercury. The magazine was promptly banned in Boston, but went big in Cambridge, across
the Charles.

Unfortunately, the publisher of "Hat-rack" was Henry L. Mencken, a popery irreconcilable who did not propose to have Boston tell him what was good taste. He engaged Arthur Garfield Hays as his attorney and the battis was on. The American Mercury,
however, remained barred in Boston.

Scribner's Barred

Next came Sinclair Lewis's "Elmer Gantry," further sale of which in Boston was forbidden by District Attorney William J. Foley, who was spurred on by the book sellers' committee and the Watch and Ward. By his action the District Attorney broke the "Gentlemen's Agreement" with the book sellers which had been effective for twelve years.

Since that time and the recent banning of Scribner's Magazine with Ernest Hemingway's "Farewell to Arms,"
a mounting list of books has been for-bidden on Boston shelves.

Among these are: "The Plastic Age,"
by Percy Marks; "The Hard-Boiled
Virgin," by Frances Newman; "The Rebel Bird," by Diana Patrick; "The Butcher Shop," by Jean Devanny; "The Ancient Hunger," by Edwin Granberry;
"Antenne," by Herbert Postner; "The Marriage Bed," by Ernest Pascal; "The Beadle," by Pauline Smith; "As It Was," by H. T. "Oil," by Upton Sinclair; "An American Tragedy," by
Theodore Dreiser; "Bad Girl," by Vina
World of William Cissold," by H. G.
Wells; and "Candide," by Voltaire.

NEW YORK Herald Tribune

Thursday, September 19, 1929

Theater Guild To Combat Ban On "Interlude"

Citizens' Protest Committee
Will Be Formed in Boston as Opening Is Barred

(Reprinted from yesterday's late editions)
Special to the Herald Tribune

BOSTON, Sept. 17.—The Theatre
Guild, through two members of its
board of managers, announced Tuesday
it intends to fight the decision of Mayor Malcolm E. Nichols forbidding
the performance of Eugene O'Neill's Pulitzer prize play "Strange Interlude,"
which was scheduled to open here September 30 at the Hollis Street Theater.

Mayor Nichols, interviewed this afternoon, simply declared: "I have no comment to make," when asked specifically
if he has seen the play, why he banned
it and why, if the play is to be for-bidden, the book is not prohibited in this city, where it is on sale at all book stores.

Miss Theresa Helburn, executive director and member of the board of managers of the Guild, and Lawrence
Langner, another member of the board,
announced this afternoon that counsel
has been engaged to examine the constitutionality of the law under which the Mayor can prevent the performance of a play without having seen it on the stage. They also said that friends of the Guild have persuaded the organization to form a citizens' committee of protest against the decision of
the Mayor.

Providence Bars "Interlude"

PROVIDENCE, R. I., Sept. 17 (AP).
"Strange Interlude," Eugene O'Neill's play, which won the Pulitzer prize, has been banned in this city by order of Captain W. Cowan, police amusement censor.

It was booked to open here on Monday, before its appearance in Boston,
but Captain Cowan, after reading excerpts of the script, sent to him by the Theatre Board of Control of Philadelphia, ordered the booking canceled.

The World

ESTABLISHED BY JOSEPH PULTZER.

RALPH PULTZER, President, 63 Park Row.
F. B. WHITE, Vice President, 63 Park Row.
J. F. BRENNAN, 2d Vice Pres., 63 Park Row.
E. M. ALEXANDER, 3d Vice Pres., 63 Park Row.
N. H. BOTSFOED, Treasurer, 63 Park Row.
JOSEPH PULTZER, Secretary, 63 Park Row.

Published every day in the year by The Press Publishing Company.
Address all communications to THE WORLD, Pultzer Building, 63 Park Row, New York.

Entered as Second-Class Matter.

WEDNESDAY, SEPTEMBER 18, 1929.

GUILD FIGHTING BAN ON O'NEILL DRAMA

Seeks to Discuss "Strange Interlude" With Boston's Mayor

BOOK VERSION UNCENSORED

Counsel Engaged to Examine
Law's Constitutionality

Special Despatch to The World
BOSTON, Sept. 17.—The Theatre
Guild of New York set out to-day to fight Boston censorship, as exemplified in Mayor Nichols's banning of Eugene
O'Neill's Pulitzer Prize Play, "Strange
Interlude" from presentation here.

Since the book version of the play,
which contains many lines not in the stage version, has not been banned
even from Boston's rigidly policed
book stores, the Guild representatives see no reason why the play should be barred; and after a conference to-day, in which New York was called by telephone, it was decided to organize a citizens' committee of protest and fight to the finish.

Mayor Nichols, interviewed twice
this afternoon, said: "I have no comment to make" when asked why he banned the play. Mayor Nichols did not visit the City Hall at all to-day and failed to receive a messenger from the Theatre Guild representatives.

Miss Theresa Helburn, Executive Director and member of the Board of Managers of the Guild, and Lawrence
Langner, another member of the board,
announced that counsel has been engaged to examine the constitutionality
of the law under which the Mayor can prevent the performance of a play
without having seen the acting version, while the book has been on sale
here for more than a year.

It was stated at City Hall that Mayor Nichols based his decision upon reading the play. It was reported that the Mayor regards the text as salacious.

The Guild representatives called upon Mayor Nichols for at least "the
courtesy of an immediate conference."

The Theatre Guild has some 7,000
members in Boston who have subscribed for tickets, and in addition stacks of unopened orders have been received.

City Censor John Casey denied having any "definite knowledge" until a few days ago that the play was coming to Boston, and said that in banning it he merely carried out Mayor
Nichols's orders.

BOSTON LAUGHS WRYLY AT JOKE OF CENSORSHIP

Foe of O'Neill Play College
Educated; Career Has Been Political

CODE COVERS ALL DRAMA
FROM HAMLET TO COOCHY

Minister Compelled to Read
Objectionable Stories
to Critics

Special Despatch to The World
BOSTON, Mass., Sept. 21.—Mayor
Malcolm E. Nichols, whose banning of Eugene O'Neill's "Strange Interlude,"
has made the generally genial Mayor
the target of criticism and ridicule not only outside of Boston but inside, is forty-nine years old and is a Harvard graduate with an A. B. degree. He graduated from Harvard in 1899, after having prepared for college in the high schools of his native city of Portland,
Me.

Following his graduation he entered
the law office of Charles H. Innes, recognized as one of Boston's most astute Republican politicians, and in 1909 he passed the bar.

In the mean time his association with
Mr. Innes had engendered the political urge. After taking a baptismal licking
as a Council candidate in 1903 he won out in 1905 and 1906. In the ensuing three years he stepped up to the House
of Representatives, and pursuing his political climb he was in the State
Senate from 1914 to 1919.

In July of 1921 he was appointed
Collector of Internal Revenue. He remained in this office until he began his Mayoralty campaign in 1923. He was one of the few Republicans to win
an election for this office and he has held it for four fairly stormy years.

If Mayor Nichols is qualified to censor the drama it appears that such qualifications must have come from
his having graduated from Harvard,
from his having been a newspaper man,
from his having been a lawyer, from
having held various political offices,
from having been Fuel Administrator
for a time, School Commissioner and
Chairman of the Rent and Housing
Commission.

The history of dramatic and literary censorship in Boston is a merry narrative of fancy and foible, punctuated all
the way along by such familiar exclamations as "Boston is being made ridiculous" and "the situation has now
become intolerable."

Way back in 1911, when John F.
Fitzgerald was Mayor, he set himself
up as a censor and the result was some
good, clean, wholesome fun all around.
As a starter, he banned Walters play,
"The Easiest Way," after he had had a report from two friends on it. The incident was punningly referred to as
"a theatrical gesture," inspired a quat-
rain in the Boston Herald, and an editorial which ended with the original sentence, "the city is being made
ridiculous."

Two years later Mayor Fitzgerald was shocked during a presentation of "Get Rich Quick Wallingford" when a Mayor
was portrayed as a grafter. In Boston,
after that, the Mayor on the program
became "a prominent citizen" and the Senator became "a prominent lobbyist."

The next outstanding bit of dramatic censorship in Boston was the result of
a strong opposition by Negro citizens
to a showing of the film, "The Birth of a Nation." The result was Gov. Walsh's signature on a bill providing for a group of three censors, comprising the Mayor, the Police Commissioner and
the Justice of the Municipal Court.

Shortly afterward Mayor Curley alone
banned the play "Maternity" and warned away the Belasco play "Marie-Odile."

Mayor Curley's most prominent contribution to the art of the drama was
made in 1915 to a group of approximately forty local theatre managers.
It was called "The Moral Code," and
in his silver-tongued voice Mayor
Curley announced that henceforward
there should be on Boston stages no
suggestive jokes or songs "especially
parodies," no "muscle," "coochy,"
"apache" or other suggestive dances,
no one-piece costumes which distinctly revealed the figure, as in living
statuary groups, no portrayals of moral perverts or dope fiends taking drugs or
depicting the effects of excessive drugs
on the system, no mingling of women
performers with the audience, except
in legerdemain and similar acts.

The Rev. Dr. Raymond A. Calkins of
Cambridge, who was later to become
the August President of the Watch
and Ward Society, laughed fun into
the meeting by presenting a collection of salacious jokes gathered from Boston
stages.

"Read it yourself, it's too filthy for
me," said Mayor Curley, who snickered
audibly while the Rev. Dr. Calkins recited the choice bits.

Banned Magazine

In 1924, Mayor Curley barred from
the stage the expressions, "My God,"
"Dear God," "damn" and "hell."
Meanwhile, the field of literature was not allowed to lie fallow. A periodical harrowing in the form of censorship
was both expected and enjoyed.
Censorship was in the hands of individuals and was a helter-skelter

process until 1924, when the so-called Booksellers' Committee was organized
at the suggestion of J. Frank Chase, then head of the Watch and Ward. The
committee comprised three book sellers and three members of the society.

During the same year, the Magazine
Committee was organized with ten members. When a magazine offended
this committee for three succeeding
months, the committee refused to review it further and all future sales
were at the risk of the sales persons.
Two months after its inception the
committee branded an issue of Snappy Stories as "too snappy" and lapsed into slumber.

The cover of the offending number
carried a picture of Adam and Eve.
During the interval between 1924 and
the first guns of the "Book War" in 1928 the book sellers' committee functioned quietly and well. Councilman James A. Watson, however, had previously started an expedition into the fields of pedantic writing and in 1922
had drawn up his own index expurgatorius of a dozen books which, he said, should be barred from use in the schools because they were pro-British.
Eventually the City Council adopted
an order calling on the school committee to bar Prof. Albert Bushnell
Hart's "School History of the United States," that familiar classic of bygone schoolroom days. Burke's speech
on Conciliation, and D. S. Mussey's
"American History."

The same year policemen entered Williams's book store and seized a number of copies of Ben Hecht's "Gar-
goyle" and a popular novel called
"Simon Called Peter." Elliot Paul, author of "Indelible," led the intellectuals of Beacon Hill against this high-handed outrage, demanding that the police visit every book store in the city to seize every available copy of the Bible.

The complete and detailed history of the book war of 1927 is buried under such a mass of news clippings and hearsay that history will have to wait
for time to clear the mists away. Looking back, one of the first high points
was the banning of an article entitled "Hatrack," which appeared in an issue of the American Mercury. The magazine was promptly banned in Boston, but went big in Cambridge, across
the Charles.

Unfortunately, the publisher of "Hat-rack" was Henry L. Mencken, a pe-very irreconcilable who did not propose to have Boston tell him what was good taste. He engaged Arthur Garfield Hays as his attorney and the battle was on. The American Mercury,
however, remained barred in Boston.

Scribner's Barred

Next came Sinclair Lewis's "Elmer Gantry," further sale of which in Boston was forbidden by District Attorney
William J. Foley, who was spurred on
by the book sellers' committee and the Watch and Ward. By his action the District Attorney broke the "Gentlemen's Agreement" with the book sellers
which had been effective for twelve
years.

Since that time and the recent banning of Scribner's Magazine with Ernest Hemingway's "Farewell to Arms,"
a mounting list of books has been for-bidden on Boston shelves.

Among these are: "The Plastic Age,"
by Percy Marks; "The Hard-Billed
Virgin," by Frances Newman; "The Rebel Bird," by Diana Patrick; "The Butcher Shop," by Jean Devanny; "The Ancient Hunger," by Edwin Granberry;
"Antennae," by Herbert Footner; "The Marriage Bed," by Ernest Pascal; "The Beard," by Pauline Smith; "As It Was," by H. T.; "Oil," by Upton Sinclair; "An American Tragedy," by
Theodore Dreiser; "Bad Girl," by Vina
Weiss; and "Candide," by Voltaire.

Thursday, September 19, 1929

Theater Guild To Combat Ban On "Interlude"

Citizens' Protest Committee
Will Be Formed in Boston as Opening Is Barred

(Reprinted from yesterday's late editions)
Special to the Herald Tribune

BOSTON, Sept. 17.—The Theatre
Guild, through two members of its
board of managers, announced Tuesday
it intends to fight the decision of Mayor Malcolm E. Nichols forbidding
the performance of Eugene O'Neill's
Pulitzer prize play "Strange Interlude,"
which was scheduled to open here September 20 at the Hollis Street Theater.

Mayor Nichols, interviewed this afternoon, simply declared: "I have no comment to make," when asked specifically
if he has seen the play, why he banned
it and why, if the play is to be for-bidden, the book is not prohibited in this city, where it is on sale at all
book stores.

Miss Theresa Helburn, executive director and member of the board of managers of the Guild, and Lawrence
Langner, another member of the board,
announced this afternoon that counsel
has been engaged to examine the constitutionality of the law under which
the Mayor can prevent the performance
of a play without having seen it on the stage. They also said that friends of the Guild have persuaded the organization to form a citizens' committee of protest against the decision of
the Mayor.

Providence Bars "Interlude"

PROVIDENCE, R. I., Sept. 17 (AP).
"Strange Interlude," Eugene O'Neill's play, which won the Pulitzer prize, has
been banned in this city by order of Captain W. Cowan, police amusement censor.

It was booked to open here on Monday, before its appearance in Boston,
but Captain Cowan, after reading excerpts of the script, sent to him by the Theatre Board of Control of Philadelphia, ordered the booking canceled.

ESTABLISHED BY JOSEPH PULITZER.

RALPH PULITZER, President, 63 Park Row.
F. D. WHITE, Vice President, 63 Park Row.
J. F. BRESNAHAN, 3d Vice Pres., 63 Park Row.
E. M. ALEXANDER, 2d Vice Pres., 63 Park Row.
N. H. ROTSFORD, Treasurer, 63 Park Row.
JOSEPH PULITZER, Secretary, 63 Park Row.

Published every day in the year by The Press Publishing Company.
Address all communications to THE WORLD, Pulitzer Building, 63 Park Row, New York.
Entered as Second-Class Matter.

WEDNESDAY, SEPTEMBER 18, 1929.

GUILD FIGHTING BAN ON O'NEILL DRAMA

Seeks to Discuss "Strange Interlude" With Boston's Mayor

BOOK VERSION UNCENSORED

Counsel Engaged to Examine
Law's Constitutionality

Special Despatch to The World
BOSTON, Sept. 17.—The Theatre
Guild of New York set out to-day to fight Boston censorship, as exemplified
in Mayor Nichols's banning of Eugene
O'Neill's Pulitzer Prize Play, "Strange
Interlude" from presentation here.

Since the book version of the play,
which contains many lines not in the
stage version, has not been banned
even from Boston's rigidly policed
book stores, the Guild representatives see no reason why the play
should be barred; and after a conference to-day, in which New York was called by telephone, it was decided to organize a citizen's committee of
protest and fight to the finish.

Mayor Nichols, interviewed twice
this afternoon, said: "I have no comment to make" when asked why he banned the play. Mayor Nichols did not visit the City Hall at all to-day and failed to receive a messenger from the Theatre Guild representatives.

Miss Theresa Helburn, Executive
Director and member of the Board of Managers of the Guild, and Lawrence
Langner, another member of the board,
announced that counsel has been engaged to examine the constitutionality
of the law under which the Mayor can prevent the performance of a play
without having seen the acting version, while the book has been on sale
here for more than a year.

It was stated at City Hall that Mayor Nichols based his decision upon reading the play. It was reported that the Mayor regards the text as salacious.

The Guild representatives called upon Mayor Nichols for at least "the
courtesy of an immediate conference."
The Theatre Guild has some 7,000
members in Boston who have subscribed for tickets, and in addition stacks of unopened orders have been received.

City Censor John Casey denied having any "definite knowledge" until a
few days ago that the play was coming to Boston, and said that in banning it he merely carried out Mayor
Nichols's orders.

Guild Continues Fight to Present Banned Play

Likely to Be Shown in Cambridge—Various Cities Visited to Test Theatres and Conditions—May Take Case to Courts

Boston theatregoers will have a chance to see Eugene O'Neill's prize-winning play, "Strange Interlude," although Mayor Nichols has prohibited it in the city.

The Theatre Guild, sponsors of the play, will not ignore the thousands of persons who have joined the guild, nor those who have sent in their checks asking for seats for the play.

TWO COURSES OPEN

There are two courses of action open to the organization now that the mayor has read the stage version and said that "in any version it glorifies an indefensible standard of conduct and an abject code of morals."

The first is to fight the mayor's ruling in the courts. The guild may seek a federal injunction against the mayor's ruling on constitutional grounds, or it may appeal to the board of three which makes up the censorship board in the theatre. This board consists of Police Commissioner Wilson and Chief Justice Wilfred Bolster of the municipal court as well as Mayor Nichols.

The second alternative is producing the play in some city near Boston. Several theatres are eager to have the guild bring in its production. Cambridge is considered a strong possibility, the question being whether the acoustic properties are good enough. That will be determined today or tomorrow. It is considered unlikely that with the book part of a Harvard reading course that Cambridge would bar the production.

In addition to Cambridge, many other cities are openly seeking the play. Quincy, Lynn, Salem, Malden and other cities and towns have sent word to the guild that their theatres are good and their government broad-minded.

There are a number of factors which will govern the selection of a theatre outside of Boston—if such a step is taken. The first of these is the theatre itself. The theatre must have ample seating capacity and good acoustic qualities. It must also have a deep stage, modern lighting facilities and proper accommodations for the players.

MUST BE ACCESSIBLE

The theatre must be easily accessible to Boston, both by trolley or train and automobile. There must be good dining rooms near the theatre. All these factors are being studied by representatives of the guild.

The guild representatives drove to nearby cities today examining theatres to see which of them would offer the best facilities. The theatres have to be examined and then the attitude of the city fathers ascertained.

The guild business manager will arrive in Boston tomorrow afternoon. He has been given all facts in connection with the situation, and he will decide what the next step will be. Miss Theresa Helburn and Lawrence Langner, directors of the guild, are also expected back in Boston tomorrow.

They insist that Boston playgoers will see the production.

Judge Robert Grant today came to the defence of the mayor. In his statement Judge Grant says: "I do not believe in literary censorship. A stream will not rise higher than its source, nor fall much lower. The right to discuss social problems freely is a safeguard to liberty. A play that had run all winter in New York and the gauntlet of London might well have encouraged Mayor Nichols to emulate the example of the saloon keeper who when asked 'Is Michael Doherty good for a drink?' replied 'Has he had it?' And already accepted the play that has caused all this bother. But our mayor at least has shown himself a man of courage, and as the New York Times hinted in its pleasant article 'By-Products' yesterday, Boston is entitled to its own opinion even against the world."

"WHAT ARE THE FACTS?"

The essential inquiry in every controversy is "What are the facts?" Not many who are vociferously discussing this question have read the play, bought and read it months ago, as I do everything that O'Neill writes. He is an important literary artist, fearless and dynamic. I admire much of his art and some of its dramatic consequences. But I take off my hat to Mayor Nichols for his courageous verdict on "Strange Interlude." In the face of that portion of the younger generation intent on crowning all heroines of irregular sex life as Madonnas.

I submit to the people of Boston a skeleton of facts, which none can controvert, and inquire what mooted issue do the facts subserve. In my opinion the play is a study in morbid sex psychology. Pelion on Ossa in its grotesque sequence of repugnant and most improbable events.

1—Nina, the heroine, whose lover has been killed in the war, and whose marriage to her before his departure has been obstructed by her father's appeal to the lover's sense of honor, leaves home and gives herself successfully to half a dozen inviolate soldiers.

LOVELESS MARRIAGE

2—Nina decides to marry a man whom she does not love in order to have a child. She becomes pregnant, but is informed by her mother-in-law of a deep strain of insanity in her husband's family to which her husband is the only exception. She consents to an abortion.

3—in order that she may have a child and thus render her husband happy, Nina conspires with a young physician, already an acquaintance, to render her pregnant again, with the result that they fall desperately in love. A child is born, which the husband believes is his, and the drama proceeds like a wounded snake to its lengthy end with uninspiring consequences for every one concerned. Her husband dead, the physician reclaimed by professional ambition, and her son indifferent to her, Nina marries an ancient lover, a timid novelist whom she has accused of seducing himself in his own books.

Can any modifications in the stage version obliterate the basic muddiness of this plot? The great writings of the past from the Greek dramatists to the days of Flaubert, however scornful of current morals, have always sought to depict actual truth. But what does "Strange Interlude" portray except sexual vagaries spiced out to the dimensions of a disgraceful surgical operation for the deletion of a too smart world?

NO LONGER PURITANS

And one thing more. The New York Times pointed out also yesterday that there were no longer Puritans in Boston. True again. Either the languor of respectability or the maw of the young intelligentsia has absorbed them. The name of our censor is Cass, which suggests the race that has largely supplanted them in Boston. As one who both Brahmin and a Unitarian helped for 30 years to keep the scales of justice even between Puritan and Catholic in this community, I know well the virtues of that race. Chief among them are spiritual decency and unwillingness to substitute for the things that are lovely and of good repute nauseous vagaries masquerading as naturalness.

If in this instance Boston makes herself ridiculous by her ban, so much the better. It was Boston who threw the tea chests overboard a century and a half ago. This challenge by Mayor Nichols to the complacency of the band of untrammelled, but self-advertising, young men and women who tell us what to read and why, will show at least that our majority, however bourgeois, still purpose of keep sewers under cover.

Were Brown Heywood, Sinclair Upton and Edna Millay St. John if I throw a mantle of obscurity around their names) to parade down Fifth avenue stark naked in midsummer, just to be cool and comfortable, this would be natural as Adam and Eve. One has only to open the current Geographic Magazine to see that the natives of primeval Papua do so still. But if in case some successor of Anthony Comstock should invoke an obscure Victorian law that landed them in jail, Boston would be able to answer: "At last. Even sex appeal in the name of liberty has its proper reserves." As a member of the American Academy of Arts and Letters, I think it is time to cry a halt.

Boston Daily Globe

THURSDAY, SEPT 26, 1929

MCGRATH TO JUDGE "INTERLUDE" STAGED

Quincy Mayor to Decide at Show If It Can Continue

Report $40,000 Worth of Tickets Sold, Mostly in Boston

QUINCY, Sept. 25.—People who had subscribed for tickets for "Strange Interlude," the play banned in Boston, which is to be produced here Monday night, were given an upsetting this afternoon when some of the local papers announced what seemed like a new attitude of Mayor McGrath toward the entire situation.

Headlines said the Mayor intended to read the book before giving a decision. The Theatre Guild received a decision last night, in consequence of which $40,000 worth of tickets were sold, and members of the guild wondered if the Mayor had reconsidered his position. But it developed that there was no change in the situation.

Actual Play the Test

A copy of the book was given to the Mayor to read, and he read it in order to see how near to the expurgated text of the book the actual play will come Monday night. That is the test by which the Mayor will make his decision.

He was bombarded from all sides today; was condemned and praised for his stand and was offered all kinds of advice meant to be helpful to him. He was reminded that Mayor Nichols saw the show in New York, and that various people in Quincy had voluminous abstracts of the much-discussed passages of the book which they offered the Mayor.

The Mayor, however, said that while all these things might be true, the thing he was interested in was what kind of play would be presented in Quincy Monday night. Continuance of the show in this city will depend on its public performance here, not what might have been shown in New York or offered in Boston, and not what the text of the book might offer as an index.

Will Attend as Police Head

The Mayor said he will observe himself just what the company has to offer; if it is not offensive to public morals it will be allowed to continue, but if it should fall under his ban of censorship, the first performance here will be the last. The Mayor is going to the theatre in his capacity as police head.

Under the amended city charter, the Mayor has nothing to say about granting or revoking theatre licenses. That is the province of the License Board, a body established by a special act of the Legislature six years ago. This board is made up of the city clerk, the police chief and fire chief. There is no censorship, as such, in Quincy but any objections to suggestive shows are made by the License Board and their opinion has always been considered. Fred B. Murphy, manager of the Quincy Theatre, is also manager of two other theatres. He has had nothing to do with the bringing of "Strange Interlude" to Quincy, except that he rented the Quincy theatre to the Theatre Guild. Members of the latter organization have assumed the carrying out of all the details, from the poster publicity to the sale of tickets, most of which have been disposed of in Boston.

Most Clergymen Opposed

Most of the clergymen who spoke today were opposed to the play being brought to Quincy but some thought it best to have a performance before pronouncing judgment. Rev. Frank T. Littorin of the Central Baptist Church wrote a letter to the Mayor asking if Quincy was going to receive the "refuse of Boston." "If the play was too vile for Boston, it is too vile for Quincy," Rev. Mr. Littorin says.

Rev. J. Harrison Thompson of the Wollaston Baptist Church came to City Hall with an equally vigorous protest.

Rev. Edwin L. Noble of the Universalist Church said he intended to see the play before pronouncing judgment. Rev. Eric I. Lindh, secretary of the Suffolk South Association of Congregational Churches, thought it would be better to have a rehearsal performance before condemning the play.

Club Women More Tranquil

The officers of the various women's clubs were even more tranquil about the affair. Mrs. Charles W. Bailey, president of the Quincy Women's Club, said: "Having neither seen nor heard the play I do not feel competent to make any statement about it. However, it would seem that a play chosen by eminent authority for the Pulitzer prize should not be condemned without serious and intelligent consideration."

Mrs. Charles J. Herbert, president of the Quantum Women's Club, said: "I have neither seen the play nor read the book, but if possible, I am going to read the play because I feel that a book that won the Pulitzer prize is worthy of consideration from the rank and file of intelligent people. I do not think the method of censorship is fair. The widespread publicity that has been given to the play will certainly be invaluable to its promoters and will attract many who would never otherwise give it a thought."

Mrs. Herbert J. Gurney of Wollaston, a former president of the Massachusetts State Federation of Women's Clubs said:

"How can I express an opinion when I have neither seen the play nor read the book? I feel that my opinion, therefore, is of no value. The fact that the book was awarded a prize has no bearing on the matter. I would go to see the play if I wanted to, the censorship having no weight with me. I feel that its coming to Quincy has small import. Those who want to see it will go if possible and those who do not wish to will stay away."

Restaurant Men Pleased

Business men look to a very lively awakening of trade, especially men interested in the restaurant business. Mayor McGrath, when questioned about this end of the situation, said that dollars and cents did not enter into the thing at all but freedom of rights did and was a very prominent factor.

Members of the Catholic clergy declined to comment on the coming of the play to Quincy. One pastor said it was outside his province to use the name of his church or his own calling to advertise a play or a theatre where it was to be produced.

B. U. TRUSTEE DISAPPROVES "STRANGE INTERLUDE" TALK

Grayson Stetson of Salem, Boston University trustee, in his annual talk to the girls of the College of Practical Arts and Letters on St. Botolph st. yesterday, gave his opinion on at least one current matter, the present controversy over the decency of the play, "Strange Interlude." The B. U. trustee in no uncertain terms expressed his disapproval of the discussion of the play.

He referred also to the recent "Be a Snob" philosophy of Technology's Prof. Rogers. "What Prof. Rogers really meant," Mr. Stetson told the members of the all-girls school of Boston University, "was that you should have a great measure of respect and dignity. If every girl would reach out and try to live with a person better than she is, the result would be self-evident. Reach up and not downward," he concluded.

Guild Rushes Its Plans for the Quincy Opening

Asks Clergymen to Give Play Hearing — Tickets Out Today

W. P. Munsell, business manager of the Theatre Guild, is in Boston today rushing arrangements for the opening of "Strange Interlude" at the Quincy Theatre, in Quincy, Monday evening. Tickets for the performances will be mailed to Guild subscribers today and tomorrow and mail orders will be received at the Quincy Theatre. Offices in Boston have been opened at 416 Walker, Building, 120 Boylston street. Negotiations are being made for busses and in addition to the regular trains to Quincy there will be a theater special for return to Boston after the performance.

Although final details have not been worked out for the performance, it is likely that the curtain will not rise until 6 P. M. In that case intermission for dinner probably will come about 8.05 and the performance resume at nine with a final curtain at eleven o'clock. The play will not be shortened although the closing hour remains about the same as it would have been in Boston. The saving of time will come by shortening the intermission. For those who motor to Quincy there will be plenty of parking space available. There is room for 1500 cars in the rear of the theater and for others in the vicinity. If additional space is needed, there are fourteen restaurants in the neighborhood of the theater, according to Guild officials. All of these will be prepared to serve the theatergoers.

The theater on Hancock street, near School street, is one of the largest in Quincy. It has a capacity of about 1400. Guild representatives declare the theater is up-to-date in every way and the acoustic properties are especially good. The theater is only about eight minutes from the Quincy square station of the New Haven and only a short distance by electric car and bus from Neponset. There are plenty of good automobile routes into Quincy.

Over the signatures of Walter Prichard Eaton and Robert F. Sisk, the former one of the committee which awarded the Pulitzer prize to the play and the latter a representative of the Guild, a letter was mailed last night to the ministers of Quincy and Wollaston asking them to reserve judgment until they have had a chance to consider the play as it is presented and warning them of an organized move to arouse their opposition.

Blame Excerpts, Not Text

The letter is as follows: "During the agitation in Boston in the past week on 'Strange Interlude' various church bodies and individual clergymen have pronounced judgment on the play in advance of its production. Their reactions were evidently caused by distribution of excerpts from the printed text and not from a consideration even of the book as a whole; while as a matter of fact the stage version not only omits various of these passages to which objection has been taken but also quite naturally has a definite effect of its own arising from the nature of stage presentation. As the play is to be presented in Quincy by the Theatre Guild we ask that final judgment be held in suspension until you have an opportunity to see the play itself and the spirit in which it is received by an audience.

Boston Transcript

WEDNESDAY, SEPT. 25, 1929

"The author of the play, Mr. Eugene O'Neill, is an extremely serious-minded and sober writer, whose purpose is to try to illumine some of the problems of the modern world as he sees them. Supplying cheap excitement is no part of his purpose. We think it only fair and hope you will think so too that he should be listened to with the same seriousness before an opinion is formed. We feel that this goes beyond the mere right of the artist to be heard. It really involves the whole question of free speech and hence at one moment involve the press and pulpit as well as the stage.

"The Theatre Guild is a serious art theater and has always felt that it was playing its part with the pulpit and press trying to clarify the problems of modern life.

"Knowing that an organized attempt is being made to coax clergymen to denounce the play we wish to remonstrate against the distribution of textual matter which has never been a part of the stage version and cannot be fairly judged anyway when torn from its context. We are therefore making this personal appeal to you, as a publicist who can appreciate the necessity for freedom of utterance, not to prejudice in advance the public toward the production but to allow them the opportunity as you would desire it yourself of forming their own opinion."

Approved by Police

Encountering opposition in Minneapolis as the result of the controversy in Boston, the Guild Western company presented "Strange Interlude" in the Metropolitan Theater in that city last night and the result, according to a telegram received by the Guild today, was a clean bill of health from the police. The telegram is as follows:

In first class the Western company of "Strange Interlude" has had with censorship we have emerged victorious. Minneapolis police who attended opening last night at Metropolitan Theater had only gave "Interlude" clean bill of health but joined with all local critics in hailing the production as an artistic, social and dramatic triumph. Have in air mail series of front-page stories and some of the best reviews play has received anywhere.

W. W. WALTER, Manager Western Company, "Strange Interlude."

Question of Liberty

Opposition from ministers already has been voiced despite a request in the Guild announcement on the selection of Quincy that judgment be suspended until the play has been seen. Several Quincy clergymen announced that they would call on Mayor McGrath today to protest against his permitting the play to be performed. Other ministers were non-committal.

There is no censorship law in Quincy, but the mayor can suspend or revoke a theater license if a play is found objectionable. Mayor McGrath declared that he believes that such censorship comes under the head of police work, but intimated that he would take a hand if a controversy arises. He said:

"Any licensed theater in Quincy can show a play without interference provided it does not prove objectionable. We have no censorship in Quincy and I will withhold judgment until I am in possession of all the facts. If President Murray Butler of Columbia University has seen fit to award the play the Pulitzer prize, there is no reason why the producers should not have the right to present it here or anywhere else.

It is a fact that there are competent critics whose opinion concerning the play may be taken as a standard. Many of these critics have declared the play to be a masterpiece. On the other hand there are those who declare the play to be objectionable. I hope to see the play next Monday night as it will be presented here. I cannot condemn a play that I have not seen.

Although admitting that Quincy business men will profit by the showing of "Strange Interlude" in that city, Mayor McGrath declared that "it is not a question of money, of dollars and cents, but rather an issue of civil liberties."

Same Company to Appear

Formal announcement by the Guild on the selection of Quincy stated that the same company which was scheduled to present the play to Boston will present it in Quincy. This company includes Judith Anderson, Tom Powers, Glenn Anders, Richard Barboe, Eva Condon, Ethel Westley and others.

"The reason the Guild selected Quincy, which was one of three cities to offer it, as a haven, was that Mayor McGrath said that he hoped the local theater management would be able to conclude its negotiations with the Guild," says the announcement.

"Now that it has completed arrangements for the presentation of 'Strange Interlude' in Quincy, the Theatre Guild asks that the public suspend judgment on the merits of the play until they have witnessed it. The Guild is sorry that it cannot ask the owners of the Hollis Street Theater to assume the risk of a trial performance and possible loss of its license. If the Guild owned its own theater in Boston that risk would be assumed and the law tested. Under the circumstances the Guild is forced reluctantly to ask its subscribers to attend the play in a nearby city, where it may recognize its inalienable rights to private judgment."

First Night Decides

Mayor McGrath today received three protests on permitting the play to go on. These came from Rev. William Shaw of the Atlantic Methodist Episcopal Church, Rev. Frank T. Littorin of the Central Baptist Church, and Rev. J. Harrison Thompson of the Wollaston Baptist Church, who telephoned to the mayor. The burden of their complaint was that the play was immoral, obscene and of such a character that it should not be permitted to be acted in any city. During the morning, however, the mayor received a large number of calls from citizens approving his decision to allow the play a fair hearing.

The mayor reiterated that in his opinion a great deal depends upon the first night production of the play. "If it is all that those who criticize it adversely say it is," he said, "then it cannot be permitted to continue in Quincy."

The Quincy Ministers' Association will meet at 10 A. M. tomorrow in the Quincy Y. M. C. A. with Rev. Hugh C. Leggat, president presiding. As criticism is expected at this session, the Guild requested the privilege of having Mr. Eaton speak in defense of the play. Mr. Leggat said this could not be assured as the meeting is open only to ministers but told the Guild that he would report to the men that Mr. Eaton was at their service and the session could decide whether to have him address the gathering.

FEW QUINCY COMMENTS ON "STRANGE INTERLUDE"

Mostly Out-of-Town Audience For Opening Show—Ministers to Decide on Stand Tomorrow

QUINCY, Sept. 25.—The fierce light of publicity that beats upon thrones and municipalities with equal intensity, was focused on this city last night and today, but, as far as public comments seemed to indicate, it produced no reflex action.

Mayor McGrath, who granted permission for a performance of the much-advertised play, "Strange Interlude," is still keeping his "open mind" as regards the matter. The phrase "open mind," is one used by the Mayor himself. He said to a Globe reporter last night:

"I have not read the play. I have not seen it; neither have I heard from anybody who has seen or has read it. Therefore, I can say I have an open mind. The only way to find out if the play is objectionable is to see it produced on the stage. That will be done Monday night. At the Quincy Theatre. A continuance of the play beyond Monday night is up to the play itself. If I think, after seeing the play, that it is prejudicial to the morals of the community, a further performance will be barred."

Ministers Silent

The Globe reporter talked with a number of the ministers of the city last night. All refused to discuss the matter in advance of a meeting of the Quincy Ministers' Association tomorrow, which will be held in the Y. M. C. A. Building at 10 o'clock. The Theatre Guild has asked to let Walter Fritchard Eaton appear to present the side of the guild. So far no permission has been given. Rev. Hugh C. Leggett, pastor of the People's Union Congregational Church of Houghs Neck, is president of the association. He said he had not the power to admit Mr. Eaton, but suggested the latter be present to see what action the association will take.

A few ministers who talked to the Globe reporter, but declined to be interviewed over their own names, said they were inclined to take the same view as Mayor McGrath. They said they knew nothing about the play, but a few had read excerpts, and had been told these excerpts had been deleted from the spoken version on the stage, so they thought it best to see what the play actually contained as presented on the Quincy stage before offering any comment.

Restaurant Men Happy

The ordinary citizen on the streets this morning did not know anything of the issues involved and declined to comment. Business men seemed to think it was a good thing from the advertising standpoint and proprietors of restaurants felt there will be "big business resulting from the play coming to the city, because of the long wait after the adjournment of the first part of the play. As almost all the people who are expected at the first performance Monday night are due from outside the city, it is natural to believe that supper will appeal to them after the close of the first part of the play, and the restaurant owners are going to be ready to welcome this indicated influx.

There isn't much of a chance that anybody in Quincy will be able to see the first performance. It was said at the theatre last night that the house was practically sold out to persons from outside the city, and this was expected to continue if the play was allowed to run after Monday night.

High Prices for Seats

Prices for seats in the theatre have taken a jump. Orchestra seats will be sold at $4.50 and the lowest-priced seat will be $1.10. Quincy people have not been used to paying any such prices for seats in local theatres, and it is doubtful if the house were thrown open to Quincy audiences at the new prices, that there would be any appreciable attendance of local residents. The orders for seats at the coming opening performance are coming by telephone, mostly from Boston.

The lack of interest on the part of the people of Quincy, or the liberality on their part to allow the play produced, where it was refused a performance in other places, may be expressed by the old-time local boast, that Quincy has always been the home of freedom of thought. Three hundred years ago, John Wheelwright, Anne Hutchinson and William Coddington, when banished from Puritanical Boston, fled to Quincy for refuge. Rev. Mr. Wheelwright became pastor of the First Parish Church in Quincy sq. which was referred to contemptuously by Puritan Boston as "Wheelwright's Chapel of Ease." In later years, when nobody could be found to defend the British soldiers involved in the Boston Massacre, John Adams, afterward President of the United States, offered his services as legal counsel, saying that nobody, under the new Government should be deprived of his chance to be defended before a court of law. His course cost him many friends at the time, but he stuck to his principles. The same independence of thought and action is seen by some to be still filtering through the people of present-day Quincy. On the other hand there were evidences last night and this morning in certain quarters of making political capital out of the affair, and it would not be surprising if these echoes were heard during the next Mayorality campaign.

Mayor's Power Questioned

Another question raised today was the right of Mayor McGrath to be the "whole say" in the matter. The subject of regulating such things has been thought to belong to the province of the License Board, composed of the city clerk, the chief of police and the chief of the Fire Department, and as police head, may have certain powers in connection with the present situation. That was the thought left with the reporters by City Solicitor McAnarney after a talk with them. At any rate, the Mayor has taken the matter as a personal issue, and will either see the play through or will stop it, if he thinks it ought to be stopped.

"STRANGE INTERLUDE" OK'D IN MINNEAPOLIS

"Strange Interlude," Eugene O'Neill's play which was banned in Boston, won its first fight with censorship in the West, according to a telegram received here today by Robert Sisk, managing executive of the Theatre Guild. The telegram announced that the Minneapolis police, who evidently act as a board of censors there, gave the play a clean bill of health and pronounced it a "great artistic, social and dramatic success."

Mr. Sisk said this morning that because of Mayor Nichols' action in banning the play in Boston and his denunciation of it, there was some agitation against it in Minneapolis and suggestions were made that police officials should see the play. Thereupon W. W. Warner, manager of the Western company of "Strange Interlude," invited the officials to attend the opening performance at the Metropolitan Theatre. They did so, but not only found no reason for barring it, but heartily endorsed it.

The telegram to the Guild officials in Boston follows: "In first clash the Western company of 'Strange Interlude' have had with censorship we have emerged a more victorious. Minneapolis police officials who attended the opening last night at Metropolitan Theatre not only gave 'Interlude' clean bill of health, but joined with all local critics in hailing the caste and production as a great artistic, social and dramatic success."

"Some of the best reviews play received anywhere were gotten here. Regards and good luck."

Mr. Sisk added that he felt that the action of Minneapolis was the right and proper one, allowing the play to be produced and then passing on it from actual first-hand knowledge. If the Minneapolis officials had found the play objectionable, he pointed out, they could have banned any further performance.

MacKusick Faces Probe for Mailing 'Obscene Matter'

Tremont Temple Counsel Attacked by Pastor for Pamphlet

POSTAL INSPECTORS AWAIT COMPLAINT

Albert R. MacKusick of 292 Tappan street, Brookline, counsel for Tremont Temple and the principal organizer of the churchmen's opposition to the presentation of "Strange Interlude" in Boston, became, last night, the target for sharp criticism, as well as the object of comment by postal inspectors on the subject of the sending of obscene matter through the mails.

From the pen of the Rev. Dr. Hubert C. Herring, nationally known Congregationalist, came caustic criticism of the pamphlet, containing excerpts from "Strange Interlude," which MacKusick has admitted he has circulated among ministers and churchmen of Boston and yesterday among the ministers of Quincy.

Chief Postoffice Inspector Park D. Colvin, declaring his belief that it is a violation of federal law to send anything through the mails which may be construed as coming within the meaning of the statute barring the mailing of obscene matter, asserted that the receipt of a formal complaint from any person who has received a pamphlet, regarded as containing obscene matter, would result in an immediate investigation, and if the evidence warranted, criminal prosecution.

"The intention of the sender of such a pamphlet as has been described might be wholly laudable in the minds of some persons, but the act of sending it through the mails might, upon investigation, be found to be in violation of federal law."

Colvin explained that investigation of a complaint would be followed by the submission of the facts to the United States district attorney.

Dr. Herring's statement, written after the receipt of a copy of the pamphlet which MacKusick declared to The Herald, last night, he had circulated, read:

I have received a circular letter signed by several Boston clergymen, suggesting that we have a moral issue thrust upon us in the case of the banning of "Strange Interlude." It is intimated that the Christian ministry should be articulate. I agree.

Enclosed with the circular is a pamphlet of six pages of excerpts from the play. The compiler has a nose for filth. He has gone through the play and gathered it all up. It is filth—but without the setting. The pamphlet is as unclean as the play as are similar collections of dirt from the Bible. Neither prove anything.

"Strange Interlude" is an honest and brilliant piece of work. If it is so, realistic, compelling. You may prove or disprove. But if we are to be allowed to have only plays and books which are pleasant, we shall have to settle down to an indeterminate sentence of Longfellow, Harold Bell Wright and Eddie Guest.

The censor is a person of uncertain value. Boston is suffering over-much at his hands. By all means, let us be articulate.

ALBERT R. MACKUSICK

MacKusick gave The Herald copies of the circular letter which he had mailed to all Quincy ministers, a copy of the communication to The Herald, printed in "Our Mail Bag," Tuesday, from Judge Robert H. Grant, and a copy of a circular letter issued Sept. 21, in which the recipients were asked to read the pamphlet containing excerpts from "Strange Interlude." Their approval of the decision of Mayor Nichols was invited from their pulpits last Sunday.

Today MacKusick intends to attend the meeting of Quincy ministers. He was uncertain last night whether he would be allowed to speak but expressed such an intention if the ministers favored hearing him.

MacKUSICK SURPRISED

Mr. MacKusick at his home last night expressed surprise at Dr. Herring's statement in criticism of the pamphlet of excerpts from the "Strange Interlude." He said:

"I know there have always been those who are prone to criticize certain passages in the Bible, but I am very much surprised a minister should do so. You could take certain parts of the Bible, I suppose, that would not give the impression of the whole."

Regarding the issue and I am glad I was able to gather from the play as much as I did as quickly as I did. I believe the question of censoring books is a serious one and quite distinct from censoring a play to go on the stage or the movies, especially this kind of a play."

Regarding the statement of the postoffice inspector, he declared there was no intent of breaking the law in sending the pamphlet through the mails.

MacKusick Would See Banned Play in Chicago

Albert R. MacKusick, organizer of the opposition to the presentation of "Strange Interlude" in Boston, intends to see the play in Chicago. He made such a statement to The Herald last night after he had expressed doubt of witnessing the initial performance in Quincy Monday night.

"Do you intend to organize opposition to the play in Chicago?" MacKusick was asked.

"I've got to go there on business and I think I will see the play there," was his answer.

PLAY JURY WILL PASS ON O'NEILL DRAMA IN QUINCY

M'GRATH PLANS TO APPOINT 25 CITIZEN CENSORS

Mayor, Unable to Attend
Opening, Will Leave
Verdict to Them

TO APPEAR BEFORE MINISTERS TODAY

Majority Willing to Defer Judgment Until After Performance

Mayor Thomas J. McGrath of Quincy will have a play-jury decide whether "Strange Interlude" is a proper theatrical production for presentation in that city or whether it should be barred after the initial performance Monday evening.

In adopting the play-jury method of censoring stage performances, Mayor McGrath has selected the system which has been in vogue in New York city in recent years.

TO SELECT JURY OF 25

It is his intention to select a jury of 25 representative men and women of Quincy to convict or absolve "Strange Interlude" of being a demoralizing theatrical production. Whether he will reveal the names of the play-jury or whether they will be sworn to secrecy had not been determined last night, but the New York idea had made such an impression on the mayor that he told The Herald that he undoubtedly would adopt it.

He will not, unless he cancels an engagement of long standing, be able to witness the entire performance Monday, and whatever finding he reaches at the termination of the play, will be dependent, to a material degree, on the judgment of the jury.

Mayor McGrath's vigorous declarations of an open mind, entirely free from prejudice, do not indicate that he has already tentatively decided that "Strange Interlude" will not be offered to Theatre Guild subscribers over a period of three or four weeks but there was accumulating evidence in Quincy last night that the strength of the protests, which have already been lodged, and the possibilities of adverse political reaction, have dampened the enthusiasm which was voiced when representatives of the Theatre Guild announced their acceptance of the opportunity to present "Strange Interlude" in the Quincy Theatre.

In spite of specific denials by Mayor McGrath that he regretted having taken hasty action, the rumor was current in Quincy that "Strange Interlude" would still be homeless if what was tantamount to an official invitation to utilize Quincy as a haven had not been made prior to the final decision of Mayor Nichols that the play could not be presented in Boston.

In confirmation of the belief that Mayor McGrath anticipates that it will be necessary for him to tell the Theatre Guild that one performance of "Strange Interlude" will constitute the Quincy run, he said to The Herald last night:

"I hope that Mr. Murphy of the Quincy Theatre has not made anything more than tentative plans with the Theatre Guild for the use of his theatre. I intend to confer with him tomorrow and to ascertain just what arrangements he has entered into. I will regret it, if there has been any contract covering what might be construed as a long period."

"Are you to make the decision Monday night, without any suggestive influence from other sources entering into your determination of the fate of 'Strange Interlude'?" Mayor McGrath was asked.

"Understand," he answered, "I am unalterably opposed to censorship in any form, but if 'Strange Interlude' is as they say it is going to be, that will give an entirely different complexion to the play. I don't know. My mind is open. It will remain open."

"I intend to ask a jury of 25 men and women of Quincy, to listen to the entire performance Monday night, and to vote at its conclusion, whether other performances should be permitted. I can say that unless I change my mind, I will carry that plan into execution. My decision will, of course, be guided by their verdict. I have an engagement of long standing at 6:30 o'clock, Monday, I understand this performance will begin at 8. I do not anticipate that I can listen to all of it. But the jury which I shall select will do that for me."

Asked how the protests which he had already received compared with the messages of approval of his stand, the mayor replied that it was a toss-up.

"I've been invited to attend the meeting of the Quincy Ministers' Association tomorrow morning. I shall attend. Whether I shall have anything to say depends solely upon whether I receive an invitation and also whether I shall consider it advisable for me to talk. Up to now there have been four ministers who have sent letters of protest to me and one more has personally told me that he was opposed to allowing even a single performance of the play."

"I aim to be and I shall be fair with everybody."

Quincy, generally, is entirely apathetic about "Strange Interlude." The business men, composed principally of storekeepers along Hancock street and 14 restaurant owners, are enthusiastically in favor of allowing the play to occupy the Quincy Theatre as long as patronage warrants.

MERCHANTS IN FAVOR

Their interest is centered entirely in the share, to which they are looking forward with happy anticipation of the $3000 which they predict will be spent in Quincy every night by out of town residents who will be attracted by "Strange Interlude."

A canvass by a Herald reporter yesterday of 16 merchants along Hancock street showed them to be unanimous in favor of "Strange Interlude" for a week, a month or a year.

There was no similar unanimity voiced by 28 men and women who were asked to express an opinion on the controversy. Fourteen declared that they had no interest in "Strange Interlude" or Mayor McGrath's decision; seven recorded themselves in favor of allowing the play to be presented and five declared their opposition. Two refused to bother themselves by thinking about it.

In accord with the disinterestedness of half of the pedestrians who were polled was the statement of a theatrical manager to The Herald: "Quincy is a 50-cent town," he declared. "The people will not pay more than that for a show. When you ask them to give up $4.40 for 'Strange Interlude' or any other attraction, you'll ask in vain. I'll bet that if this show stays in Quincy a month, there won't be 5 per cent. of the people of the city attend the performances."

"No wonder the business men want Mayor McGrath to allow a play to be shown here which has been presented without objection elsewhere. Business has not been satisfactory in Quincy since the Fore River shipyards curtailed construction work. This 'Strange Interlude' figures to put into circulation here $3000 every night. It means money to Quincy. It will come principally from outsiders. Why not let the business men who need the money have a chance?"

NONE HAS SEEN PLAY

The objectors have neglected to take into consideration the financial conditions of the Hancock street business men. Their protests to Mayor McGrath have been based on the identical grounds that were chosen by men and women who filed similar protests with Mayor Nichols in Boston.

Not one of those who has written to or talked with Mayor McGrath has witnessed a performance of the play. Very few have read the book but the demand for the three available copies in the Quincy public library shows that the controversy has started a run on the book.

Today's meeting of the ministers may provoke discussion of the wisdom of deferring action until it can be based on knowledge rather than on conjecture and rumor. Eleven of 16 ministers who were asked to be wise men, declared their inability to judge "Strange Interlude" and most of them asserted that it would be advisable as well as fair to withhold comment until after the performance Monday night. The five others vigorously denounced the play but confessed that they were guided by excerpts mailed to them.

Receipt of letters from two ministers of Episcopal churches in which they expressed their opposition to censorship as well as their approval of his action was announced by Mayor McGrath last night. The clergymen are the Rev. Howard T. Barlow of Christ Church, Quincy, and the Rev. Leslie T. Pennington of All Souls' Church, Braintree.

Like the majority of Quincy clergymen, prominent clubwomen, asked to comment upon "Strange Interlude," refused to do so because of lack of knowledge of either the book or the script.

Mrs. Herbert J. Gurney, past president of the Massachusetts Federation of Women's Clubs, "I cannot express an opinion when I have neither read the book nor seen the play. I would see the play if I wanted to, but I feel that coming to Quincy is of small importance."

Mrs. C. K. Herbert, president of the Squantum Women's Club, "I have never seen the play, but if possible, I will. The widespread discussion arising from its banishment from Boston has served the producers with the best kind of publicity."

Mrs. Charles W. Barley, president of the Quincy Women's Club, "I have never seen nor heard of the play until the discussion started about its presentation in Boston. I feel that a play so well recommended by critics should be shown in Quincy."

QUINCY MINISTERS DO NOT WANT O'NEILL PLAY

BUSINESS MEN ARE IN FAVOR

Mayor McGrath Says "Strange Interlude" Cannot Remain if All Criticism of Drama Proves to Be True.

Quincy ministers are opposed to the showing in their city of Eugene O'Neill's prize-winning play, "Strange Interlude," which was banned in Boston.

Business men and others are in favor of the play, which will open Monday in the Quincy Theatre. It is scheduled to continue for three weeks or a month.

MAY NOT REMAIN

The mayor, however, said today: "If the play is all that those who criticize it say it is, it cannot be permitted to continue in Quincy."

He refused to amplify that statement, saying that the people would decide that matter after they had had a chance to see the play.

The ministers who protested today were the Rev. William Shaw, Methodist-Episcopal; the Rev. F. T. Littorin, and the Rev. J. H. Thompson, Baptists. The mayor also said that "many more" citizens had expressed themselves as being in favor of allowing the production in Quincy. Many business men are in favor of the production. The merchants board is on record as favoring it. The ministers, however, are decidedly not in favor of it. Many of them based their opinion on the excerpts from the book. These excerpts were mailed to them. The Theatre Guild, sponsors for the production declare that most of the excerpts sent out are not in the stage version of the Pulitzer prize production. A body of representative ministers will meet tomorrow morning at 10 o'clock in the Y. M. C. A. The meeting will be held under the auspices of the Quincy Ministerial Association, and all the clergymen of the city have been invited to attend.

The guild has asked the ministers to extend the courtesy of the meeting to Walter Prichard Eaton, author, playwright and dramatic critic. The Rev. Hugh Leggat, president of the association, today told the Traveler that the meeting was not called for definite action, but rather "to discuss the pros and cons" of the situation.

MAYOR THOMAS J. McGRATH

He also said that newspaper men would not be allowed at the session. Asked if Eaton would be allowed to speak at the meeting, he said the meeting itself would decide that question. He explained that no member of the organization could invite any one, but that the meeting could take whatever action it desired to take.

It is also expected that resolutions of protest will be presented at the ministers' meeting tomorrow.

Several of the ministers said that they had not read either the book nor the stage script of the play, and hence had no chance to base an opinion of the

GUILD WRITES TO CLERGY

Guild officials wrote to the Quincy ministers today asking that they withhold judgment on the play. The letter said that an "organized effort was being made to coax the ministers into a denunciation of the play," and that the effort was based on "textual matter which was not taken from the play version, but from the published book." The letter, which was signed by Walter Prichard Eaton and Robert Sisk, said the censorship struck at the right of free speech from the pulpit and in the press, as well as from the stage. Quincy ministers today commented on the situation. Their respective statements follow:

THE REV. J. HARRISON THOMPSON, Baptist: "I have read the excerpts from the book, and I have talked with two people who have seen the play. These people tell me that if a policeman on the streets heard a person using some of the language used in this play that he would arrest them on the spot. I am in favor with the action taken by Mayor Nichols. I told Mayor McGrath that I disapproved of the play."

SHOULD BE BANNED

THE REV. WILLIAM NICHOL, Presbyterian: "It should be banned. It is not fit for our community in any way to be presented. I have read extracts of the play and from them I think that it is not in harmony with our modern standards of civilization. I am going to protest against its appearance in Quincy. I will try to get to the meeting tomorrow to see if we cannot have an united protest against its appearance here."

THE REV. FRANK T. LITTORIN, Baptist: "So far I have done everything I can to enter a protest against its appearance. Undoubtedly it is one of the filthiest plots ever presented on the stage for some time. I have read neither the book nor the play, but I have read a synopsis of the plot and Judge Robert Grant's summary of it that appeared yesterday in The Herald and the Traveler. The language doesn't matter, that can be changed, but the plot's the thing. I have already made a protest to Mayor McGrath and written protests to both local papers."

THE REV. HUGH C. LEGGAT, Congregationalist: "I have nothing to say just now, but may have later on. I have not read the book, nor the play, only extracts from the latter."

THE REV. ERIC I. LINDH, Congregationalist: "I have neither read the book nor seen the play, but I have read some abstracts. From those abstracts it seems to be a play that ought not to be presented. The topics are not suitable for public discussion."

THE REV. ROSEMOND M. MACDONALD, Congregationalist: "I have no comment to make and have made no decision about a protest. I have not read the book nor the play."

HAS OPEN MIND

THE REV. EDWIN L. NOBLE, Universalist: "I haven't any attitude toward it at present, because all I have read is the newspaper accounts. I don't know anything about the play, but if it is given in Quincy I may have some comment to make afterward."

"Indecency in a play is just as indecent as indecency anywhere else, yet I have been rather shaky in approaching such matters, as I don't want to do anything that will advertise such plays. I am opposed to anything that is off-color on the stage. I don't think they are necessary. We can do without them, yet there are some who appear to want them, and there are plays that make these appeals purposely."

"Regarding the 'Strange Interlude,' I don't know that this is done here, as I don't know anything about it."

THE REV. WILLIAM E. SHAW, Methodist: "I approve the action of Mayor Nichols of Boston in banning this play. If we are to have any censorship at all, then I certainly believe that 'Strange Interlude' comes under the ban. I have previously read the excerpts of the book and a week ago I wrote to our mayor, McGrath, that I was in favor of Mayor Nichols's action."

THE REV. DAVID C. REID, Congregationalist: "I have not read the book. From what I have heard about it, however, I should say that it is not proper."

"MUST PROTECT CHILDREN"
THE REV. THOMAS R. TURNER, Presbyterian: "If this play is anything like the excerpts from the book that I have read then it certainly is rotten—it's from the gutter. We have got to protect our children."

THE REV. VAINO V. SUNDERLIN, Congregationalist: "From what I have heard of the play I am decidedly against it. I have not read the book myself, however."

THE REV. FREDERICK E. BUCK, Episcopal: "I have no comment to make. I have not read it."

THE REV. SAMUEL G. DUNHAM, Unitarian: "I will preach upon it Sunday. I have no comment to make at this time."

THE REV. WILLIAM A. GROVE, Universalist: "If the excerpts which were mailed to me are in the play, I don't know about it. I have no comment to make at this time."

THE REV. ISAAC HIGGINBOTHAM, Baptist: "I have not read the book or the play. I do not believe in talking about something I don't know about. I have no comment to make at this time."

THE REV. JAMES H. SANKEY, Presbyterian: "I don't know anything about it. I have not read the book nor the play, and I would join in no protest unless I had."

THE REV. VICTOR V. SAWYER, Methodist: "I am non-committal right now. I have not seen the play. I am not sure that I would join a protest at the present time. I'd want to know more about it than I do now."

WILL RUN SPECIAL TRAIN
Meantime, while Quincy opinion was divided, the guild was considering several factors. One was transportation to the theatre. A special train, to be known as the "Interlude Special," is being arranged, and extra cars will be run on the regular trains which leave Boston between 4:30 and 5 o'clock.

The guild is now considering the advisability of starting the play at 5:30 or even 6 o'clock and cutting the intermission period to make up the lost time. The usual lunch interval was an hour and 45 minutes. This may be reduced in Quincy.

There is no censorship law in Quincy. The power to revoke a theatre license comes under the authority of a license board composed of Chief of Police Ernest H. Bishop; Fire Chief Alfred L. Meade and City Clerk Emory L. Crane.

CONFIDENCE IN MAYOR

In the absence of Harry N. Kerr, president of the Quincy Chamber of Commerce, Vice-President William M. Edmonston today said: "We appreciate the efforts of Murphy (manager of the Quincy Theatre) to put our city on the map. We also appreciate the stand of our mayor. I have absolute faith in the mayor and that after he has seen the play anything he says about it will be the right thing." Asked what the attitude of the Quincy business men was toward the prospective increase in business which the play would bring to the city, Vice-President Edmonston said: "We have so many different people in the chamber of commerce that there will be different opinions. If Mayor Nichols had let it go by, nobody would have bothered much, but since he has censored it he has doubled the price of the tickets."

The first echo of the Boston situation thundered forth last night in Minneapolis where a special company produced "Strange Interlude." The following telegram was received by guild officials here from W. W. Warner, company manager.

"In first clash the special company of 'Strange Interlude' has had with censorship, we have emerged 100 per cent. victorious. Minneapolis police officials who attended the opening last night not only gave the play a clean bill of health, but joined all local critics in hailing Theatre Guild cast and production one of the greatest artistic, social and dramatic triumphs in the city's history."

WOMEN FAVOR PLAY

A number of Quincy clubwomen are in favor of the play appearing in their city.

Mrs. Charles W. Bailey, president of the Quincy Women's Club, said: "The play should not be condemned without serious and intelligent consideration."

Mrs. Charles J. Herbert, president of the Squantum Women's Club, said: "The censorship being shown by numerous persons opposed to the play is not quite fair, as most of them haven't seen it. Personally, I am going to see it."

Mrs. Herbert J. Gurney, past president of the Massachusetts State Federation of Women's Clubs, believes that the play should not be censored. "Those who want to go to see it can do so, and those who don't can stay away."

Tickets for the opening of "Strange Interlude" at the Quincy Theatre Monday evening will be mailed to guild subscribers today and tomorrow, according to W. P. Munsell, business manager of the guild. Mail orders will be received at the Quincy Theatre box office, Boston offices for the guild have been opened at room 416, Walker building, Boylston street.

Ticket prices for the Quincy engagement follow: Orchestra seats, $4.40, $3 and $2.50. Balcony seats are $2 and $1.50.

The Once Over

By H. I. PHILLIPS

BOOKLEGGING
IN OLD
BOSTON

Boston's Literary Paul Revere

("Strange Interlude" barred by Boston Mayor.—News item.)

LISTEN, my children, and you shall hear
Of the midnight ride of Paul Revere—
Of a modern Revere who was ultra pure
(And so was his excellent horse, I'm sure).
He said to his friend, "If Eugene O'Neill
By land or sea should arrive tonight
Have a lantern aloft, for I seem to feel
That to let him enter would not be right—
One, if a book, and two, if a play,
And I on the opposite shore will stay
Ready to ride and spread the alarm
To every Middlesex village and farm
To see that the public is kept from harm."
Then he said "Good night, and watch out too,
For Carl van Vetchten and all that crew."

★ ★ ★
Meanwhile his friend, through alley and street,
Wanders and watches, all eyes and ears,
Till in the silence around he hears
The Theatre Guild's at the city door,
The bang of trunks and the tramp of feet
And the news confirming his gravest fear—
"Strange Interlude coming . . . and maybe more!"

★ ★ ★
Then he climbed to the tower of the Old North Church
By the wooden stairs, with stealthy tread,
To the belfry chamber overhead
And felt, of a sudden, the belfry lurch
For 'twas all jammed up with censors who Were all determined to signal, too.

★ ★ ★
Meanwhile a-reading "Red Riding Hood"
Aloud to his horse, which was sweet and good,
On the opposite shore stood Paul Revere,
Now he patted his horse's side
Now gazed, at the landscape far and near;
Then addressing his mount he said "Old Bean,
You've your faults, I know, but your mind is clean";
But mostly he watched with eager search
The belfry tower of Old North Church,
And lo! as he looks at the belfry's heights
His startled eyes see a flock of lights!

★ ★ ★
It was twelve by the village clock
When he crossed the bridge into Medford town;
He gave the villagers a shock
And brought them bounding out with zeal
By crying: "Arise! Eugene O'Neill Is coming! Get your rifles down!"

★ ★ ★
It was one by the village clock
When he galloped into Lexington,
"Get up!" he cried with accent rude,
"Or you'll all get 'Strange Interlude.'"

★ ★ ★
It was two by the village clock
When he came to the bridge down Concord way;
"Get up!" he yelled, "or by Plymouth Rock You'll be getting a book by Hemingway!"
You know the rest. Through the press you've heard
Of the battle for censorship absurd;
How the censors barred each book, each show
That wasn't as white as the driven snow,
(Copyright, 1929)

McGrath May Yet Forbid O'Neill Play in Quincy

Delays Last Word Till Today

With Quincy ministers raising a storm of protest, with "Strange Interlude" billed to open in that city next Monday night and with hundreds attempting to get seats at the Quincy theater, Mayor Thomas J. McGrath announced that he "might not" permit the show to go on after reading the published version and attending a minister's meeting today.

On the other hand, the Mayor declared, "There is no censorship in Quincy and I will withhold judgment until I have all the facts."

"The play was awarded the Pulitzer prize and I can see no reason why it should not be shown," he said. "I cannot condemn a play that I have not seen. I will attend the ministers' meeting tomorrow morning and if the show opens, I will attend it, if my official duties permit. I have sent for the published and acting versions of the play which I intend to read before its opening."

All day long hundreds tried to get tickets for the O'Neill drama at the Quincy Theater, and other hundreds telephoned City Hall, protesting or applauding the Quincy showing of "Strange Interlude."

"Is our city to receive refuse from Boston?" demanded the Rev. Frank T. Litorin of Central Baptist Church.

"If 'Strange Interlude' is too vile for Boston, it is also too vile for Quincy. I have written my opinion to Mayor McGrath. More people should arise to defend our youth, our homes and ourselves against this vile philosophy."

On the other hand, Rev. Eric I. Lindah, head of Bethany Congregational church and secretary of the Suffolk South Association, comprising 36 churches and 16,000 parishioners, declared, "The Guild should present the play before it is condemned. Censorship is a two-edged sword. I have neither seen the play nor read the book."

"If the show is one-tenth as bad as the excerpts sent to us to read, it is a crime to put such a show on the stage," said Dr. Howard K. Barton of Christ Church.

Meanwhile Rev. Hugh C. Leggat, president of the Quincy Ministers' association has called a special ministers meeting at the Quincy Y. M. C. A. today to consider what shall be done about "Strange Interlude."

Mrs. Charles W. Bailey, president of the Quincy Women's Club said, "I don't believe the play should be condemned without consideration," and several ministers held the same views.

Other clergies who entered protests were Rev. J. Harrison Thompson, Rev. William Nichol, Rev. William E. Shaw and Rev. Thomas Turner.

PRACTICALLY SOLD OUT

But if the clergies were presenting a somewhat divided front upon the drama that has stirred up a tempest in New England, the Quincy populace were storming the theatre to get tickets. They found none on sale until Thursday, and the Guild announced that the house is already practically sold out.

Already, the Quincy Theater, which holds nearly 2000 has been sealed at prices from $4.40 to a few seats at a dollar.

The play will open at 5:30 and continue until 7 when there will be an intermission and then "Strange Interlude" will continue until 11, when special trains will be run back to Boston.

Quincy Clergy Protest Showing O'Neill Play

Viewpoint Rests with Individual, Declares Quincy Business Man

John J. Shaughnessy, secretary of the Quincy Merchants' Association, today issued this statement in regard to the production of "Strange Interlude" in that city:

"I have discussed the play with several persons who have witnessed 'Strange Interlude,' including E. Joseph Luce, executive chairman of the Quincy Merchants' Association. Their remarks would lead me to believe that the reaction to the performance is entirely dependent upon the individual."

"Following the line of reasoning used by Mayor Nichols, it is morally wrong to permit certain types of individuals to visit sections of the Boston Public Library, where are not only books whose substance might be considered too true to life by some to be printed, but painting and statuary that can be viewed with either the appreciation of the artistic or through the eyes of those whose instant reaction is the appeal to the immoral."

"Therefore, the decision whether or not 'Strange Interlude' offends public decency should rest with the individual. There is no law compelling the people to attend the performance and no power that can prevent their finding out what it is all about. Far better to produce it. It cannot be as bad as exaggerated reports will make it if it is not produced in this section. Warped minds can as well satisfy their appetites for immorality by discussing and spreading their version of 'Strange Interlude' and do far more harm than all the performances given."

Play-Writing Pastor Praises "Interlude"

The Rev. Verne Jay, Methodist, acting pastor at the First Church (Congregational) at Squantum, and author of the prize play, "S. S. Incorporated," which was rewritten by Frances Jewett and produced for five weeks at the Repertory Theatre last year, stated that he would not join in any protest against "The Strange Interlude." "I feel quite the other way about it," he said. "I have read the play, as much of my work is in that line, and I believe I feel a little different about it than most ministers do. I feel that it is a work of art, and must not be considered from extracts."

September 26, 1929

The Boston Post

JURY OF 50 TO PASS ON INTERLUDE

it was learned last night.

BALLOT AFTER PLAY

Following the performance, the citizens will cast a vote and, if this plan goes through, the Mayor will abide by their decision as to whether or not "Strange Interlude" will continue to be played in Quincy.

The Mayor stated last night that it was unfair for him to pass judgement on a play he has not seen in the acting version. As he believed that a large number of citizens seemed to be opposed to a one man point of view in the matter, he thought that a representative citizens' committee might solve the problem in fairness to all concerned.

Suggest Secret Ballot

On the citizens' committee will be men and women well versed in passing critical judgement of works of art. The Mayor will attempt to assemble an unprejudiced group. They will make up their mind after seeing the play. Some suggest a secret ballot as the best means of getting a fair-minded reaction.

All day long delegations in favor of "Strange Interlude" called on Mayor McGrath at his home urging him to give his consent to the play being shown in Quincy. Among the callers was the Rev. Howard T. Bartow, rector of the Episcopal Church of Quincy and the Rev. Leslie Pennington of the Unitarian Church of Braintree.

Quincy Mayor Plans to Abide by Verdict After Play

Mayor McGrath of Quincy is considering a plan of choosing 50 prominent citizens of his city, selected from various professions and occupations to act as a citizens' jury for Eugene O'Neill's Pulitzer prize play "Strange Interlude" which will be shown on Monday night at the Quincy Theatre.

INTERLUDE IN QUINCY FOR MONTH

Theatre Guild Expects to Gross $80,000
on Run

MAYOR THOMAS J. McGRATH
Of Quincy, snapped yesterday leaving
City Hall.

As a result of the meeting of the Quincy ministers yesterday, at which they failed to ban "Strange Interlude" from their city, the Theatre Guild announced that plans were in effect to make the Monday night premiere of the play in the nature of a Metropolitan opening.

SPECIAL TRAINS AND BUSES

Mayor McGrath, with his sister and a party of prominent Quincy citizens, will be in attendance. Definite plans for the play-jury have not been announced. The local organization of the Theatre Guild stated that it was perfectly agreeable to them if the Mayor of Quincy would make the decision, himself, as they believed him capable of judging the play on its merits.

Special trains will carry the audience back from Quincy following the performance. The bus line is running special buses, also from Park square, to care for those who do not wish to go by train or motor. The Guild organization are issuing tickets for a four weeks' run, but, according to Walter Pritchard Eaton, representing the Guild interests in Boston, it may be necessary to extend the engagement another two weeks, to meet the demand for tickets. The Quincy Theatre, where the play will be given, has a smaller seating capacity than the Hollis Street Theatre, where it was originally booked.

Will Begin at 5:30

The Quincy Theatre has a seating capacity of 135 seats, of which 712 are orchestra seats. The entire orchestra seats for $4.00. It is estimated that the Guild will do a business of $20,000 a week at the Quincy Theatre with the gross receipts for a four weeks' engagement averaging over $50,000. This is something less by several thousand dollars of the business they would have done at the Hollis Street Theatre, selling out every night. The play will start at 5:30. Audiences travelling over the New Haven railroad will have the South Station at 5 o'clock train, reaching Quincy about 11 minutes before the rise of the curtain at 5:30.

Some 11 restaurants of Quincy are supplying special suppers for the "Strange Interlude" audiences during the intermission between 7:45 and 9 o'clock. The entire city, judging from reports, was much keyed up with enthusiasm over the prospect of a Broadway success playing in their city.

Box Office Open

Tickets went on sale at the Quincy Theatre yesterday afternoon at 2 o'clock, but none were available for the opening night. Boston ticket holders reported that the heaviest call was for seats for the Quincy engagement of the play. They stated that calls came from all of the outlying sections of Greater Boston, such as Wellesley, Malden, Melrose, Belmont, Milton, and the Newtons.

Albert R. MacKusick, counsel for Tremont Temple and principal organizer of the Boston churchmen opposed to the play, was very disappointed, so he announced, when he learned that his plea had not availed the Quincy ministers. He was not allowed in during the two hour session of the ministers' yesterday morning.

After the two hour discussion, the Rev. Rosmond McDonald, secretary of the association gave out the following statement:

"In view of the fact that our municipal authorities have granted permission for a presentation of 'Strange Interlude' in our city on Monday night next, the Quincy Ministerial Association feels it to be inadvisable to take action until after the presentation."

HARVARD MEN LAUD BOSTON BANNED PLAY

Protest Against Barring
"Strange Interlude"

Commend Quincy Production to Theatre-Going Public

The Harvard undergraduate body is rising in indignation over the recent action of Mayor Nichols of Boston in banning the production of Eugene O'Neill's Pulitzer prize-winning play, "Strange Interlude," on a Boston stage. The protest of the student body will take the form of a petition signed by indignant members of the faculty as well as students. This petition will have a double intent in that it will protest against the action of Mayor Nichols and commend the production of the play in Quincy to the theatre-going public.

Besides this general protest the Harvard Liberal Club will hold an open discussion on the same topic. This meeting will be presided over by Walter Pritchard Eaton, '00, writer, one of the organizers of the citizen's committee of protest.

The petition that will be presented to Harvard students and faculty is: "Strange Interlude" has been awarded the Pulitzer prize by a distinguished jury, and as it has been universally acclaimed as a play of literary and dramatic significance, we, the undersigned, believe that it is of cultural importance, and that it should not be denied the opportunity of seeing it. Therefore, we protest against the banning of "Strange Interlude" in Boston, and we unreservedly endorse its production in Quincy."

Boston Transcript

324 WASHINGTON STREET, BOSTON, MASS.

(Entered at the Post Office, Boston, Mass., as Second Class Mail Matter)

THURSDAY, SEPTEMBER 26, 1929

Quincy Clergy Will Withhold Judgment

Plan No Comment on "Strange Interlude" Until After Presentation

Hold 2-Hour Session

Mayor McGrath Not to Make Known Names of Jury of Citizens

Quincy's clergymen will not pronounce judgment on Eugene O'Neill's Pulitzer prize play, "Strange Interlude," until after its presentation on Monday night in the Quincy Theatre.

This announcement was made this noon at the close of a two-hour session of the Ministers' Association of the city, held behind locked doors in the Y. M. C. A. building. Mayor McGrath was present as was Rev. Samuel M. Lindsay, pastor of the Brookline Baptist Church, who arrived at 10:30 o'clock, half an hour after the meeting began, and who was granted admission. Rev. Hugh C. Leggat, pastor of the Hough's Neck Congregational Church, presided.

Although none of the more than a score of clergymen who attended would discuss what occurred, it was evident that the meeting was conducted quietly. In contrast to the somewhat lively debates which characterized similar sessions in Boston.

Rev. Rosmond M. McDonald, secretary of the association, issued the following statement:

"It appears that this fresh slaughter has at last aroused the people from their good-natured lethargy and the 'Strange Interlude' case will not pass unprotected. A cheer for the one-time Athens of America. The high school girls and boys—I was one not so very long ago and I can state that I shudder at what would corrupt most of them—who would have doubtless flocked in droves to the theatre are saved. His honor has proved himself a true public guardian!

I deplore the fact that the trend of the public guardian is toward a vigilant care of public morals and character rather than toward any seemingly sincere desire to protect public lives from the bullets of gangsters. Censorship of any sort is distasteful. No intelligent person, however, protests against the closing of dens of vice. But who shall judge books and plays? May not the judge be corrupted or is he immune? Political censorship is even worse than the ordinary type. It reeks of the contamination of politics. 'Lulu Belle' was banned. Why? New York said it. What harm did it do? Rothstein was not murdered by a man influenced by 'Lulu Belle' or 'Strange Interlude.'"

There are indubitably charming and intelligent people in Boston, but one cannot blame the world for seriously doubting it. This last affair is the straw which broke the camel's back—and a disgusting straw at that. Alternately one is indignant and amused especially when one considers the heroic participants in the latest "American tragedy."

"Strange Interlude" mess is no more appalling than a thousand other examples of censorship. To terminate instruction in the art of reading, thereby eliminating future entanglements and making it less difficult for potential censors who will have a hard time to learn to read at all, candidates in the coming majority campaign.

I also suggest a heaven-made board of censors selected for their intelligence, sagacity and humor only—Herbert Hoover, Owen D. Young, H. L. Mencken, Oswald G. Villard, W. R. Rogers and the Four Marx Brothers. Melrose. ALONA W. FRIEND.

Mayor McGrath has made no request to the Quincy Ministers' Association to ban the play.

Quincy ministers, at a meeting held in Y. M. C. A. headquarters today, refused to ask that Eugene O'Neill's "Strange Interlude" be banned from that city.

The play is to be presented at the Quincy Theatre on Monday night, and it was understood after the meeting that several of those present will attend the performance on that night.

MacKusick BARRED
There were 25 members of the Quincy Ministerial Association at the meeting. The Rev. Samuel A. Lindsay, a Baptist minister from Brookline, was present on invitation.

Considerable mystery shrouded the meeting. It was held behind locked doors. Even Albert R. MacKusick, counsel for Tremont Temple and principal organizer of the churchmen's opposition to the play, was not permitted to enter the room.

statement: "In view of the fact that our municipal authorities have granted permission for the presentation of 'Strange Interlude' in our city on Monday evening next, the Quincy Ministers' Association feels it to be inadvisable to take any action until after that presentation."

Mayor McGrath stated that he has not yet chosen the play jurors, who will number twenty or twenty-five and who will report to him. He said further that he will not make known the names as to do so might result in the refusal of some of the men and women to serve because of the attendant publicity. Moreover, no juror will know the names of the others who are serving. The ministers plan to have a delegation of their own present at the performance and they, too, decline to divulge the names of those who will represent their organization.

Albert R. MacKusick of Brookline, who was instrumental in creating agitation against the play among Greater Boston clergymen, was present this morning but was not admitted to the meeting. He declared that he was not there for the purpose of addressing the gathering, but had merely stopped off on his way to Duxbury and New Bedford. Later, he stated that he was present in order to learn first-hand any remarks that might be made concerning a possible probe of his actions in the matter.

Mr. MacKusick appeared somewhat worried as to the outcome of a movement to hold him responsible for sending alleged obscene matter through the mails in connection with his dissemination of excerpts from the book. He admits that he mailed copies of the pamphlet to clergymen in and near Boston and that yesterday he sent copies by registered mail to twenty-six ministers in Quincy. Mr. MacKusick stated that if legal steps were taken in the matter he would have to defend himself.

Today Park D. Colvin, chief postoffice inspector, issued this statement: "They have no evidence that a violation has been made. No complaints have been made and no investigation is under way. No action will be taken until direct evidence is produced to prove that such a violation has been made."

It was stated today at the Quincy Theatre that no telephone orders are being taken there for seats for Monday night's performance. As members of the Theatre Guild have first call on the seating capacity, the house is practically sold out.

There are 712 floor seats, which are priced at $4.40 each. The remainder of the seating capacity of 135 is cared for in the balcony, where seats will be priced at from $1 to $3.

The theatre is adjacent to several restaurants, so that patrons may dine during the intermission and there is ample parking space near it for automobiles. One nearby lot having room for 150 cars.

Traveler
September 26, 1929

was banned. Why? New York said it. What harm did it do? Rothstein was not murdered by a man influenced by 'Lulu Belle' or 'Strange Interlude.'"

There are indubitably charming and intelligent people in Boston, but one cannot blame the world for seriously doubting it. This last affair is the straw which broke the camel's back—and a disgusting straw at that. Alternately one is indignant and amused especially when one considers the heroic participants in the latest "American tragedy."

"Strange Interlude" mess is no more appalling than a thousand other examples of censorship. To terminate instruction in the art of reading, thereby eliminating future entanglements and making it less difficult for potential censors who will have a hard time to learn to read at all, candidates in the coming majority campaign.

I also suggest a heaven-made board of censors selected for their intelligence, sagacity and humor only—Herbert Hoover, Owen D. Young, H. L. Mencken, Oswald G. Villard, W. R. Rogers and the Four Marx Brothers. Melrose. ALONA W. FRIEND.

Mayor McGrath has made no request to the Quincy Ministers' Association to ban the play.

Quincy ministers, at a meeting held in Y. M. C. A. headquarters today, refused to ask that Eugene O'Neill's "Strange Interlude" be banned from that city.

The play is to be presented at the Quincy Theatre on Monday night, and it was understood after the meeting that several of those present will attend the performance on that night.

MacKusick BARRED
There were 25 members of the Quincy Ministerial Association at the meeting. The Rev. Samuel A. Lindsay, a Baptist minister from Brookline, was present on invitation.

Considerable mystery shrouded the meeting. It was held behind locked doors. Even Albert R. MacKusick, counsel for Tremont Temple and principal organizer of the churchmen's opposition to the play, was not permitted to enter the room.

Today Park D. Colvin, chief postoffice inspector, issued this statement: "They have no evidence that a violation has been made. No complaints have been made and no investigation is under way. No action will be taken until direct evidence is produced to prove that such a violation has been made."

QUINCY CLERGY FAIL TO VOTE BAN ON PLAY

Several Plan to See
"Strange Interlude"
Monday Night

Quincy ministers, at a meeting held in Y. M. C. A. headquarters today, refused to ask that Eugene O'Neill's "Strange Interlude" be banned from that city.

The play is to be presented at the Quincy Theatre on Monday night, and it was understood after the meeting that several of those present will attend the performance on that night.

MacKusick BARRED
There were 25 members of the Quincy Ministerial Association at the meeting. The Rev. Samuel A. Lindsay, a Baptist minister from Brookline, was present on invitation.

Considerable mystery shrouded the meeting. It was held behind locked doors. Even Albert R. MacKusick, counsel for Tremont Temple and principal organizer of the churchmen's opposition to the play, was not permitted to enter the room.

Today Park D. Colvin, chief postoffice inspector, issued this statement: "They have no evidence that a violation has been made. No complaints have been made and no investigation is under way. No action will be taken until direct evidence is produced to prove that such a violation has been made."

It was stated today at the Quincy Theatre that no telephone orders are being taken there for seats for Monday night's performance. As members of the Theatre Guild have first call on the seating capacity, the house is practically sold out.

There are 712 floor seats, which are priced at $4.40 each. The remainder of the seating capacity of 135 is cared for in the balcony, where seats will be priced at from $1 to $3.

The theatre is adjacent to several restaurants, so that patrons may dine during the intermission and there is ample parking space near it for automobiles. One nearby lot having room for 150 cars.

Traveler
September 26, 1929

was banned. Why? New York said it. What harm did it do? Rothstein was not murdered by a man influenced by 'Lulu Belle' or 'Strange Interlude.'"

There are indubitably charming and intelligent people in Boston, but one cannot blame the world for seriously doubting it. This last affair is the straw which broke the camel's back—and a disgusting straw at that. Alternately one is indignant and amused especially when one considers the heroic participants in the latest "American tragedy."

"Strange Interlude" mess is no more appalling than a thousand other examples of censorship. To terminate instruction in the art of reading, thereby eliminating future entanglements and making it less difficult for potential censors who will have a hard time to learn to read at all, candidates in the coming majority campaign.

I also suggest a heaven-made board of censors selected for their intelligence, sagacity and humor only—Herbert Hoover, Owen D. Young, H. L. Mencken, Oswald G. Villard, W. R. Rogers and the Four Marx Brothers. Melrose. ALONA W. FRIEND.

Mayor McGrath has made no request to the Quincy Ministers' Association to ban the play.

Quincy ministers, at a meeting held in Y. M. C. A. headquarters today, refused to ask that Eugene O'Neill's "Strange Interlude" be banned from that city.

The play is to be presented at the Quincy Theatre on Monday night, and it was understood after the meeting that several of those present will attend the performance on that night.

MacKusick BARRED
There were 25 members of the Quincy Ministerial Association at the meeting. The Rev. Samuel A. Lindsay, a Baptist minister from Brookline, was present on invitation.

Considerable mystery shrouded the meeting. It was held behind locked doors. Even Albert R. MacKusick, counsel for Tremont Temple and principal organizer of the churchmen's opposition to the play, was not permitted to enter the room.

GOOD PARKING SPACE

Tickets went on sale at 2 o'clock today at the Quincy Theatre. The play will start at 5:30 and from 7:30 to 9 there will be an intermission. The play will be over at 11 P. M. There is ample parking space in the rear of the theatre for 1500 automobiles.

The Quincy Theatre has 1385 seats, of which 712 are in the orchestra. There is only one balcony. The new prices announced today are, entire orchestra, $4.40; balcony from $1 to $3. The $1 seats were provided to give all who desire to see the play a chance.

No seats are available for the opening night. There are many restaurants, some new, within a short distance of the theatre. Plans have been made to handle the crowd by providing special diners.

The play is scheduled to run for three or even four weeks in Quincy. Many ministers have already gone on record as opposed to the play, while others have urged that the play be allowed in the Granite City. Mayor McGrath is not expected to attend the performance of "Strange Interlude" unless he breaks an engagement made some time ago.

In spite of specific denials by the Mayor that he regretted having taken hasty action in permitting that presentation of the play, it was rumored in Quincy that "Strange Interlude" would still be home-sick if what was tantamount to an official invitation to utilize Quincy as a haven had not been made prior to the decision of Mayor Nichols that the play could not be presented in Boston.

CLERGY OPEN-MINDED

The action of the ministers of the city in refusing to be stampeded by the action of Boston ministers and the sending of excerpts of the play by MacKusick, indicates they are open-minded on the subject and wish to see for themselves whether the play is objectionable. The action of Mayor McGrath in keeping the personnel of his jury that will view the play, secret except to himself and each individual member also indicates that "Strange Interlude" will be judged impartially.

McGrath said, "I aim to be and I shall be fair with everybody."

Although residents of Quincy are generally apathetic about the play, a canvass of the business men along Hancock street showed them to be unanimously in favor of "Strange Interlude" for a week, a month, or a year.

It is said that the objectors to the showing of the play neglected to take into consideration the financial condition of the Hancock street business men.

OPPOSE CENSORSHIP

Mayor McGrath received letters from two Episcopal clergymen expressing opposition to censorship and their approval of his action. Mrs. Herbert J. Gurney, past president of the Massachusetts Federation of Women's Clubs, would not express an opinion because she had not read the book nor seen the play. She also said she would see the play if she wanted to, but thought it was a matter of small importance to Quincy.

Mrs. C. K. Herbert, president of the Squantum Women's Club, said she had never seen the play but will if it is possible. Mrs. Charles W. Barley, president of the Quincy Women's Club, said that she feels that a play so well recommended by critics should be shown in Quincy.

Traveler
September 26, 1929

was banned. Why? New York said it. What harm did it do? Rothstein was not murdered by a man influenced by 'Lulu Belle' or 'Strange Interlude.'"

There are indubitably charming and intelligent people in Boston, but one cannot blame the world for seriously doubting it. This last affair is the straw which broke the camel's back—and a disgusting straw at that. Alternately one is indignant and amused especially when one considers the heroic participants in the latest "American tragedy."

"Strange Interlude" mess is no more appalling than a thousand other examples of censorship. To terminate instruction in the art of reading, thereby eliminating future entanglements and making it less difficult for potential censors who will have a hard time to learn to read at all, candidates in the coming majority campaign.

I also suggest a heaven-made board of censors selected for their intelligence, sagacity and humor only—Herbert Hoover, Owen D. Young, H. L. Mencken, Oswald G. Villard, W. R. Rogers and the Four Marx Brothers. Melrose. ALONA W. FRIEND.

Mayor McGrath has made no request to the Quincy Ministers' Association to ban the play.

Quincy ministers, at a meeting held in Y. M. C. A. headquarters today, refused to ask that Eugene O'Neill's "Strange Interlude" be banned from that city.

The play is to be presented at the Quincy Theatre on Monday night, and it was understood after the meeting that several of those present will attend the performance on that night.

MacKusick BARRED
There were 25 members of the Quincy Ministerial Association at the meeting. The Rev. Samuel A. Lindsay, a Baptist minister from Brookline, was present on invitation.

Prosecution Looms for Foes of O'Neill Play

MacKusick of Tremont Temple Played for Mailing Obscene Matter

ALBERT R. MACKUSICK

Postal authorities today awaited complaints on the subject of sending obscene matter through the mails, as a result of the circulation of a pamphlet containing excerpts from "Strange Interlude," by Albert R. MacKusick, counsel for Tremont Temple and principal organizer of the churchmen's opposition to the play.

AWAITS COMPLAINT

The pamphlet was circulated among ministers and churchmen of Boston and Quincy. Postoffice Inspector Park D. Colvin declared that an investigation would be made upon receipt of a formal complaint from any one who has received a pamphlet, regarded as containing obscene matter. Criminal prosecution would follow if the evidence warranted, he added.

MacKusick was the target for sharp criticism. The Rev. Dr. Hubert C. Herring, nationally known Congregationalist, criticized the pamphlet harshly, saying it was unfair to the play.

Inspector Colvin declared that he believed it is a violation of federal law to send anything through the mails which may be construed as coming within the meaning of the statute barring the mailing of obscene matter.

"The intention of the sender of such a pamphlet as has been described might be wholly laudable in the minds of some persons, but the act of sending it through the mails might, upon investigation, be found to be in violation of federal law."

Colvin explained that investigation of a complaint would be followed by the submission of the facts to the United States district attorney.

Dr. Herring's statement, written after the receipt of a copy of the pamphlet which MacKusick declared to The Herald, last night, he had circulated, read:

I have received a circular letter signed by several Boston clergymen, suggesting that we have a moral issue thrust upon us in the case of the banning of "Strange Interlude." It is intimated that the Christian ministry should be articulate. I agree.

Enclosed with the circular is a pamphlet of six pages of excerpts from the play. The compiler has a nose for filth. He has gone through the play and gathered it all up. It is filth—but without the setting. The pamphlet is as unfair to the play as are similar collections of dirt from the Bible. Neither prove anything.

"Strange Interlude" is an honest and brilliant piece of work. If it is somber, harsh, cruel—it is also life, realistic, compelling. You may or may not like it. You may approve or disapprove. But if we are to be allowed to have only plays and books which are pleasant, we shall have to settle down to an indeterminate sentence of Longfellow, Harold Bell Wright and Eddie Guest.

Regarding the pamphlet, we had to raise the issue and I am glad I was able to gather from the play as much as I did as quickly as I did. I believe the question of censoring books is a serious one and quite distinct from censoring a play to go on the stage or the movies, especially this kind of a play.

Regarding the statement of the post-office inspector, he declared there was no intent of breaking the law in sending the pamphlet through the mails.

Traveler
September 26, 1929

was banned. Why? New York said it. What harm did it do? Rothstein was not murdered by a man influenced by 'Lulu Belle' or 'Strange Interlude.'"

There are indubitably charming and intelligent people in Boston, but one cannot blame the world for seriously doubting it. This last affair is the straw which broke the camel's back—and a disgusting straw at that. Alternately one is indignant and amused especially when one considers the heroic participants in the latest "American tragedy."

"Strange Interlude" mess is no more appalling than a thousand other examples of censorship. To terminate instruction in the art of reading, thereby eliminating future entanglements and making it less difficult for potential censors who will have a hard time to learn to read at all, candidates in the coming majority campaign.

I also suggest a heaven-made board of censors selected for their intelligence, sagacity and humor only—Herbert Hoover, Owen D. Young, H. L. Mencken, Oswald G. Villard, W. R. Rogers and the Four Marx Brothers. Melrose. ALONA W. FRIEND.

Mayor McGrath has made no request to the Quincy Ministers' Association to ban the play.

COMMITTEE TO DECIDE ON "STRANGE INTERLUDE"

Quincy Mayor Delegates Censorship to Representative Group—Pastors Suspend Judgment

QUINCY, Sept. 26.—Mayor McGrath intends to create a committee of 25 men and women citizens, leaders in professional, business and civic fields, to sit in judgment upon "Strange Interlude" at the play's first presentation here Monday night, he announced this afternoon. The Mayor was even then sending out letters of solicitation for service upon this committee.

The Mayor attended the Ministers' Association meeting at Y. M. C. A. Building and in a brief address told the pastors he was personally opposed to the policy of having a Mayor, or any one or two men in the community, act as censor.

The Mayor reminded the churchmen of the guarantee of the Declaration of Independence and the Bill of Rights; said that if any censoring is to be done it ought to be performed by thoroughly representative groups, and then made known his intention of creating a reviewing committee of citizens.

Mayor McGrath implied that he himself may not attend the play at all. He has already read many of the passages objected to in the book version of O'Neill's work, and said he would not care to hear these lines spoken from the stage unless his presence is considered necessary.

The names of the men and women on the committee will not be made public, to protect them from publicity, and no member will know who else is on it. The report of the committee's finding will be made Tuesday morning.

Pastors Suspend Judgment

After two hours' discussion of "Strange Interlude" and the attitude they should adopt toward it, members of the Quincy Ministerial Association today voted to suspend judgment on the play until after its presentation here.

None of the ministers would discuss the meeting's proceedings, but one called it "a very good meeting." Secretary Rosmond M. McDonald of the association issued, at noon, the following statement:

"In view of the fact that our municipal authorities have granted permission for a presentation of 'Strange Interlude' in our city on next Monday evening, the Quincy Ministerial Association feels it to be inadvisable to take any action until after that presentation."

The association will be represented at Monday's performance by an official delegation, it was stated after a meeting.

A letter was received from Albert R. MacKusick of Boston, a member of the special committee of six which examined into the play when it was first proposed to show it in Boston. The letter was addressed to Rev. William Shaw, pastor of the Atlantic M. E. Church, who had asked for a report of the special committee. Mr. MacKusick wrote:

"I am quite aware that there are a few municipalities in this State holding higher standards than the people of Quincy. I am calling your attention to the position of Judge Grant as stated in the Boston papers of Sept. 24. This letter represents very fully the attitude of many people who are opposed to the presentation of salacious and indecent movies and other plays."

"I am very sure that when the whole 'Strange Interlude' becomes known, there will be many people in Quincy and other self-respecting municipalities who will not allow themselves to be misled by the Theatre Guild or any other group."

Mr. MacKusick was at the Y. M. C. A. and made a futile attempt to get into the meeting. Walter Prichard Eaton, representative of the Theatre Guild, who was expected, did not appear.

"STRANGE INTERLUDE" JURY STAYS AT 25

Quincy Mayor Eager For Public Sentiment to Justify Its Feelings Monday

QUINCY, Sept. 27.—Denial was made at City Hall today that the Mayor intended to increase the citizens' jury from 25 to 50 to view the play, "Strange Interlude," when it is played Monday night at the Quincy Theatre. A published statement to that effect had been given considerable publicity, but at the Mayor's office it was said it was not true. The Mayor's secretary said it had been hard enough to secure 25 tickets for the "jury," and it was considered impossible to try to get 50.

So many statements have been published as coming from him as to what he intends to do, that Mayor McGrath thought it time today to issue an official statement on the matter.

The Mayor said that he wanted to get an impression that he would not attend the opening performance of "Strange Interlude" by stating that he will attend the whole presentation.

Some days before the present matter arose arrangements were made to attend the reception to Paul Fyler at the Y. M. C. A., but in view of the widespread interest in the play scheduled for Monday night, the Mayor deems it necessary to see the performance from beginning to end.

In the matter of a play jury the Mayor has been forced to modify his plans somewhat because of the would not disapprove of much that he would feel justified in appealing to the law to suppress, and the suppression of which by the arbitrary action of some official he would regard as inadvisable. This was the point to which my letter was confined. I stated that I regarded the Mayor's act of censorship as "unfair in method and unwelcome in fact," and that I believed the suppression of the play in this way would not tend to help the cause of morality. I am still of that opinion, though, on the other hand, I am by no means sure that the play help the cause of morality in any way.

My point is simply that there are circumstances under which censorship does more harm than good, and I believe that all the circumstances associated with this situation made it a case in point.

As my advocacy of prohibition is so well known it may be asked why I am well known to support drastic interference with personal liberty in that respect while in general I stand so much for general liberty of thought and speech. Without arguing the matter at any length, may I say that there is no inconsistency. From my point of view the liquor traffic and the habits associated with it have constituted one of the greatest sources of interference with personal liberty in history. My support of prohibition has been largely upon the ground that the legalized sale of intoxicating liquor made the State a partner in a traffic which was responsible for serious evil effects upon the life, liberty and happiness of a great many of our citizens. It is my strong conviction that taking into account every man, woman and child in the community, prohibition tends toward the creation of larger personal liberty than is found where the liquor traffic is legal. I have contended, also, that the issue of prohibition will ultimately be settled upon the basis of the question whether in the long run it makes for more liberty or less.

It is my contention that what we need today is more careful study in theory and practice of the ground and nature of all legislation or censorship that drastically interferes with liberty of thought and action. I am convinced, moreover, that there are many fields where the law should be resorted to with great reluctance and in which the chief corrective and constructive forces are to be found in public and critical opinion given full freedom and opportunity for expression.

WILLIAM E. GILROY

Boston Transcript

224 WASHINGTON STREET, BOSTON, MASS.

(Entered at the Post Office, Boston, Mass., as Second Class Mail Matter)

FRIDAY, SEPTEMBER 27, 1929

A VISITING CLERGYMAN SUPPORTS MAYOR NICHOLS

To the Editor of the Transcript:

I have been a summer visitor in Massachusetts, and as my stay nears its end I am an interested witness of the debate occasioned by the refusal of Mayor Nichols to allow the presentation of O'Neill's play, "Strange Interlude," on the Boston stage.

Irrespective of the merits or demerits of Boston's method of censoring plays, it seems to me that in this instance the ban is sane and justly made. With a sincere attempt to be judicial, I have read the play, and I cannot see one valid reason for its presentation on the boards of the theatre before a miscellaneous audience. Unquestionably, it has literary power, but the author prostitutes his genius to the use of base material and appeals to the reader through the slime of disloyalty, promiscuity, adultery and abortion, and so far from suggesting that it mends the moral standards which its characters violate, it leaves the reader wondering whether it does not put a premium upon the sordid and the lawless.

If it be said that the play is justified as a vivid reflection of life, the answer is that there are realities of life that may be properly studied in the dissecting room but are not for public parade. I am glad that Boston's mayor has the courage to defend that best in the Puritan strain.

HARRY P. DAWSON, Pastor of the Plymouth Congregational Church, Minneapolis, Minn. Bovey, Sept. 26.

FROM THE EDITOR OF THE CONGREGATIONALIST

To the Editor of the Transcript:

As it has been brought to my attention that my protest against Mayor Nichols's action banning the performance in Boston of "The Strange Interlude," has been misrepresented as an endorsement of the play, may I point out that in the letter published in your columns I was particularly careful to indicate that I was

Mayor Did Right

People's Editor:

My father, the Rev. Frank H. Kason, now deceased, preached the Christian gospel according to his light, in New England for more than 45 years.

Saturday's mail brought a special delivery letter addressed to him. Upon opening it I found an appeal to ministers to support the banning of the play "The Strange Interlude."

I believe my father would have upheld the action of Hon. Malcolm E. Nichols, mayor of Boston, in banning the play. To this belief I add my personal views as a layman.

It is unwise and unfair to judge a book or a play without having read it or seen it acted. However, the appeal to the ministers was accompanied by a number of printed extracts from the play. Doubtless the extracts chosen were among those most objected to, and they are certainly rather vulgar.

To know the facts of sex and its relation to life is most desirable, but to cheapen life to a parade of sex is despicable! The extracts present nothing that is not known by intelligent people and tend to lower what is one of life's beautiful expressions.

Every student of history knows that all past civilizations have fallen when sensuality submerged what should be normal manhood and womanhood! Whither are we headed?

Surely there is a line somewhere beyond which it is neither good taste, judgment nor wisdom to cross. Have we not reached that line?

More power to our mayor, Hon. Malcolm E. Nichols, for banning this play, and I believe there are a great number of clear-thinking people who are in accord with his action.

Mattapan. C. L. KASSON.

Of What Use Leaders?

People's Editor:

In reference to Mayor Nichols banning the much talked of play, may I ask what are leaders elected for?

It seems that the minute any one in a high official position does anything one way or the other he is immediately "put on the spot" and panned for it.

During the war we had captains, especially the marine corps, and what they said went. Authority had to be respected.

That's what they were for and the same applies to mayors or others in like position.

one trouble with a lot of people nowadays is they don't like to have other people say what they should do or not do.

LEVERETT W. BARNES.

Wollaston.

His Mind Changed

People's Editor:

I wonder if there are any other persons who have reacted as I have to the banning of "Strange Interlude."

I have had a desire to see this play for over a year. As I couldn't go to New York to see it there, I waited and hoped it would be given in Boston. When the ticket sale was announced here, I immediately sent for seats. And now I don't want to see the play.

This complete reversal of my desire strikes me as somewhat strange. Originally I wanted to see the play because it was written by Eugene O'Neill, acknowledged America's greatest modern playwright, because the story had been awarded the Pulitzer literary prize, because it was enjoying a long run in New York, which I assumed meant that the play had some merit, and because of the novel arrangement of the play time.

In my opinion, "Strange Interlude" seemed to be a worthwhile drama coming from the pen of a famous author.

I don't consider myself a prude or a Puritan. I have read many of the books banned in Boston—read them before they were banned—and I haven't been shocked nor have my morals been impaired. I don't remember reading a single book after it had been banned. I think I am something of a realist and for that reason I am not very easily shocked.

Those opposing performance of "Strange Interlude" turn the spotlight of publicity on the so-called "dirt" they claim is incorporated in the lines of the play. When I select a book to read or a stage-play to see I want to appreciate the merits of either book or play as a whole. If I find "dirt," all well and good. Perhaps it is needed to carry the idea behind the story. But if I am told there is some "shady stuff" I am unconsciously on the alert for such passages and this attitude spoils everything for me.

Just so with "Strange Interlude." Boston censors have banned it. I am not going to see it because the censors have smeared so much mud on it that it would be virtually impossible for me to fully appreciate the real worth of the drama. Perhaps later on, but not now. HENRY CLEIGH. Boston.

Boston Traveler
September 27, 1929

HARVARD MEN ASKED TO FIGHT BAN UPON PLAY

Petition Denouncing Stand of Nichols Circulated

With every seat for the opening performance of "Strange Interlude" at the Quincy Theatre Monday evening sold to eager theatre-goers, new life was injected into the discussion concerning the merits of the Pulitzer prize play today by students at Harvard College.

A petition protesting banning of the play in Boston will be sent throughout the student body and to members of the faculty asking all to denounce their attitude.

The Harvard Liberal Club stepped into the picture with the announcement that tonight a meeting would be held at the Walter Prichard Eaton, class of 1900, as principal speaker. The meeting will be open and those attending will be asked to express their opinion.

ASSAULTS NICHOLS

Indorsement of the city government in Quincy in allowing the banning of the play, the condemnation of Mayor Nichols of Boston in banning the play from the Hollis theatre are objects of the organizers of the movement at Harvard.

The petition follows: "Strange Interlude" has been awarded the Pulitzer prize by a distinguished jury. By this award it has achieved a place for itself in the field of literature and dramatics. We, the undersigned, believe that it is of cultural importance and that we should not be denied the opportunity of seeing it. Therefore we protest the banning of the play in Boston and indorse its presentation in Quincy.

Even as the petition made its first appearance the sale of tickets for the first week ceased. The advertising produced by the discussion proved a shower of gold to the Theatre Guild.

OPENING A SELL-OUT

No seats can be procured for the opening. They have been all allotted for some time. The Quincy Theatre seats about 250 fewer persons than the Hollis. The opening night at the Hollis was a sell-out, and many who had seats arranged for the opening night at the Hollis, and who expected to go to the opening in Quincy, were disappointed.

The theatre in Quincy is easily accessible. The Old Colony boulevard runs into the city, and the theatre is on the main street. In the rear of the theatre is parking space for 1000 or more automobiles. This is provided without charge to patrons.

The train service to Quincy will be augmented on Monday. Extra trains and extra cars on the regular trains will be provided. The trains will leave South station at 4:05, 4:18, 4:25, 4:35, 4:42 and 5:02. The show starts at 5:30. A special train will leave the Quincy station at 11:30 for Boston. This will give the audience ample time to go from the theatre to the depot.

Buses will leave Park square daily during the run of the play. They will leave the Union Motor Terminal at 3 Providence street, Park square, at 4:30 and go direct to the theatre. Many reservations have already been made. Extra buses will be put on if needed. The subway trains to Ashmont will have extra cars for those who want to go by trolley. At the Ashmont station there will be regular buses to convey patrons to Quincy.

The action of the Quincy ministers in voting to withhold judgment until after the opening enabled the guild officials to open. The ministers had a spirited session. Some were for passing a resolution asking the mayor to ban the production, while others counselled a little delay, pointing out that if they were fully informed about the play they could act with more effect.

Albert R. MacKusick, counsel for Tremont Temple, took it upon himself to dash down to Quincy and give out his pamphlet containing excerpts from the book. He attempted to follow the same procedure he adopted Monday, when the Baptist ministers met at Tremont Temple.

The Quincy ministers refused to allow him to attend the meeting, and he was forced to sit on the steps of the Y. M. C. A. where the meeting was held and attempt to convert newspaper men to his way of thinking. The latter ignored him as far as possible. MacKusick stands in danger of post-office action. He mailed some excerpts from the book through the mail. Action against MacKusick may be taken tomorrow.

Ushers and other theatre attendants are being given special instructions in the handling of the patrons. All patrons must keep their seat stubs until they have returned from intermission. Full information regarding the best eating places will be given out in the form of a flyer.

PILOT COMMENTS

The Pilot, official Catholic paper of this diocese, which had kept aloof from the entire discussion, today printed the following editorial, headed "Strange Interlude":

The tempest stirred up over the banning of the "Strange Interlude" has subsided for the moment. From the welter of conflicting opinions in the discussion, evoked certain convictions stand out clear and distinct in the public mind. In the first place, the whole affair was so strongly reminiscent of the banning of certain books in Boston some months ago that it misled some people into rushing precipitately into print with criticisms that held the fair name of our city up to derision and obloquy.

Such criticism in both cases were unwarranted. To protect public morals from corruption by the stage and screen is not being hidebound, puritanical or fanatical. The banning of books and plays that are notorious in indecent and that menace the morals of the community in that they glorify indefensible standards of conduct, far from casting ridicule on a community, rather raise it still higher in the estimation of right-minded and right-thinking people.

Another conclusion is that gradually forming in the public mind is that literary and dramatic critics, the self-styled intelligentsia and what one of our contemporaries calls the "whole world of informed opinion," may be competent judges of art, but they are not always safe guides in morality. This explains why a work may have won the Pulitzer prize and yet be unfit for presentation before the public.

In this connection it is surprising to note that the dramatic critic of one of our leading Catholic weeklies, reviewing the "Strange Interlude" some months ago in New York, instead of praising it, did not immediately disapprove of it. As far as the Catholics of Boston are concerned, they are plainly disgusted with it and commend the fearless stand of the municipal authorities in the face of such bitter opposition in forbidding its performance.

The Rev. Raymond A. Chapman, vicar of St. Stephen's Episcopal Church on Shawmut avenue, takes exception to the manner in which censorship is conducted in Boston.

"IN WRONG HANDS"

"Censorship of plays in Boston seem to me to be in the wrong hands," he stated today. "Neither the mayor nor the group of Boston clergymen supporting him are in the least competent to censor plays. A censorship group should consist of persons of proved moral worth who are at the same time conversant with the theatre and with dramatic art—its problems and its proper values."

"The merit of a drama is in its truth to life and in its art, not in whether it is either more or less sexual than the Old Testament. Facts of life are facts, and they are clean if they are handled chaste and vulgarly."

IS CLEAN PLAY

"'Strange Interlude' deals with certain sexual facts of life, but it seems to me to deal with them cleanly, and the play is therefore a clean play. No one who has not studied the drama and known the problems of the stage can determine whether a play has merit, either a dramatic or moral, or not, and neither the mayor nor any of the clergymen and laymen sending out this pamphlet, filled with detached lines not in the acting version of the play, is a competent censor."

THE BOSTON HERALD

SATURDAY, SEPTEMBER 28, 1929

"NO FAITH IN FELLOW-MAN"

To the Editor of The Herald:

The little faith of Boston's official and self-appointed censors is a sign of men afraid. These people do not sense their own depravity. They have no confidence in the integrity of their fellow-men, no faith in his nobility, no trust in his judgment. They feel in their hearts that a profane word, a realistic transcript of life or a radical idea are enough to bring down the walls of their Jericho.

If this is so, and if those of us are wrong who hold that man's proved capacity for self-improvement is a warrent of his steady power of discrimination, then it is time to assign a mentor to every citizen, ban everything that threatens the status quo, and confess ourselves the crown of creation, with further suggestions of improvement unnecessary and impertinent.

But before we take this step toward which we are tending let us reflect that no great literature or drama, no liberating idea, no valiant leadership, ever blossomed in a dictatorship of this sort. If Boston is so near the brink of moral and political degeneracy and incompetence that the performance of "Strange Interlude" is enough to push her into the pit, then better the push and let a new and virile breed of men arise where culture has burned itself out.

Wm. Wallace Rose.

Town, Sept. 26.

Minneapolis Approves Play Banned in Boston

"Most Unusual Show, but One That Requires No Suppression," Reports Police Censor of Western City—Teaches Lesson of Retribution

The official report of Police Censor David C. Broderick of Minneapolis on "Strange Interlude," which opened there this week, was received today in Boston.

UNUSUAL PLAY

The censor found the show was unusual in many ways, but one which did not require censorship. His report follows:

"When I went to see 'Strange Interlude' yesterday as an official police censor for the city, I expected, on account of the suppression of the production in Boston, to see something which might be pretty close to the line, and might, in the interests of public decency, require considerable cutting in spots. I expected some of the audience had a good deal of the same anticipation. But instead I saw just good show, a most unusual show in many ways, but not one which in my opinion required censorship or suppression.

"As a matter of fact, the Boston critics directed their comment at the book and not the play. The mayor and official censor of Boston never viewed the stage production.

"I have never read the book and, therefore, do not know, of course, how wide a difference there is between the text and the drama, and therefore I cannot criticize Boston officials for any action they took on the book.

SOME PROFANITY

"But as for the play, I can see nothing wrong with it. There is some profanity, of course. There was that in 'What Price Glory.' You hear that on the street.

"There is discussion of sex and of insanity. Handled by a second rate company, with these themes overemphasized, the stage production might be dangerous, but in the hands of competent players the realism is not offensive.

"It is a long play, gripping in its intensity. The story works itself to a climax gradually but powerfully. In following the emotion of the mounting drama one forgets the sometimes off-color words which are the vehicles of that drama.

LESSON OF RETRIBUTION

"To my mind the one overwhelming lesson in the play was retribution. In the action of the characters, in their continual soliloquy, one cannot escape the lesson that retribution must overtake the evil doer; that the fruit of sin is repentance.

"So absolutely is the entire action of the play centered on this theme that its spoken asides of the players, the thoughts, even the nastiest ones, in the soliloquy, are all directed to the audience to hear. This method adds a touch of humor to situations on the verge of morbid and gives the audience a perfect understanding of each role.

"There is frankness in the Strange Interlude, a frank discussion of the plight of an unmarried mother.

DEGREE OF MADNESS

"They consider justifications for a wife's infidelity to her husband. And they picture step by step the development of insanity. A degree of madness is the Strange Interlude.

"To some censors these things might constitute a frankness gone beyond the limits of a public exhibition's sphere. But take them woven together as they are in a play, presented by competent actors, and the result is not the memory of any single salacious episode, but the presentation of an intense moral lesson.

"Strange Interlude' is a play which I would not only pass unhesitatingly, but would commend as well as an interesting evening's entertainment, and I have so reported my impressions to Mayor W. F. Kuusela."

Boston Transcript

324 WASHINGTON STREET, BOSTON, MASS.

SATURDAY, SEPTEMBER 28, 1929

MIGHTIER THAN MOST SERMONS

To the Editor of the Transcript:

Like the Bible and Shakespeare, "Strange Interlude" must be judged not by excerpts but as a whole. I read Mr. MacKusick's six pages of extracts and was disgusted with the coarseness of language, but I have just read the whole book and was tremendously moved with the conviction that it does not pay to sin. Nina, who feared neither God nor man, and acted accordingly, did indeed find pleasure for a time in her wild ways, but then long drawn out and unutterable misery. To those of our youth who pay scant attention to the moral law, as such, practically none to the authority to their elders or the Bible, and not much to God, what a gripping lesson to see in this vivid story that you cannot sin and get away with it, that the pleasure that is begotten of just lasts for a brief span only, and then forever turns to misery and mud. Such a tale, ending as it does, is mightier to mold a cynical, venturesome youth—or older man—than ninety-nine sermons out of a hundred. He has looked into a mirror of one part of real life and seen that neither by hook nor by crook can he escape the eternal law that man reaps what he sows, and that the yielding to lust and deceit means inescapable agony. Of the four chief characters the only pure one, Sam, is the only one who lives with joy and content throughout his life. To me the moral of the book was, Be good and you'll be happy; sin and be damned here and now. GEORGE L. PARR, Boston, Sept. 27.

A CLERGYMAN ON CENSORSHIP

To the Editor of the Transcript:

Censorship of plays in Boston seems to me to be in the wrong hands. Neither the mayor nor the group of Boston clergymen supporting him are in the least competent to censor plays. A censorship group should consist of persons of proved moral worth who are at the same time conversant with the theater and with dramatic art—its problems and its proper values. The merit of a drama is in its truth to life and in its art, not in whether it is either more or less sexual than the Old Testament. Facts of life are facts, and they are clean if they are handled cleanly and dirty if they are handled cheaply and vulgarly. "Strange Interlude" deals with certain of the sexual facts of life, but it seems to me to deal with them cleanly, and the play is therefore a clean play. No one who has not studied the drama and known the problems of the stage can determine whether a play has merit, either artistic or moral, or not, and neither the mayor nor any of the clergymen and laymen sending out this pamphlet, filled with detached lines not in the acting version of the play, is a competent censor.

ST. STEPHEN'S, SHAWMUT AVENUE, BOSTON, Sept. 27.

BOSTON CENSORSHIP SCORED BY NEILSON

Raps "Immaturity" of Residents In Address Before Social Work Conference at Marblehead

Social Dispatch to the Globe

MARBLEHEAD, Sept. 27.—Censorship, as administered in Boston, was raked over the hot coals of sarcasm by Pres William Allen Neilson of Smith College tonight in a speech at the Town Hall before the Massachusetts Conference of Social Work. Dr. Neilson asserted that judging a book or play manuscript by certain passages taken out of its text is unscholarly, unjust and dishonest.

"I feel most emphatically that the first principle of scholarship in judging a passage is to determine first if the rest of the text does not affect the passage," declared Dr. Neilson.

He ridiculed the personnel of the Postoffice Department, the Customs Service and the Police Department, for thinking they were qualified to judge such classics as "Candida" and the "Birds of Aristophanes," which a short time ago were the objects of suppression.

Question of Adults

"On this matter of censorship of books and plays, it must first be decided whether we are dealing with children or adults," said Dr. Neilson. "Because this is not clearly determined by some people, much confusion results. In dealing with adults we must grant that the saving of a man's soul is his own affair. This cannot be denied. I don't know or any system of theology that contradicts."

"Now, when people say such and such a book offends them, it is merely their own esthetic opinion. What of it? Obviously the question of what is offensive bears no relation to what I should prohibit others. That is, as long as the book that offends me is not read aloud in my presence.

"Then comes the question—how much is one forced to hear or see, which should be suppressed, no matter how important it may be to culture? In dealing with this we recall the customary objection is that the thing is diseased, pathologically speaking."

"This customary complaint is no argument against any work of art if the disease—pathologically speaking—is not distorted or abnormally shown in the work of art."

Protection for Children

"But things that thrust themselves upon one are different. I have every right to be protected against them. In this class are billboard advertisements, posters on buildings, book covers in drug shops, magazine covers on newsstands, and others, such as the use of Bible texts on signboards."

"Children, of course, must be protected until they grow old enough to know what risks they are taking. It is true, I suppose, that the vast population of Boston is immature; that is, it is not mature enough to know what risks it is taking in reading such a book and seeing such a play. It is true, I suppose, that a vast number in Boston never grow up to be mature.

"Yet if you keep away from every body in Boston all you should prohibit for the immature, then the intellectual life of the city will be starved."

"As for children, it might be well to have some regulations to guard adolescents from books, pictures, plays, and moving pictures."

"As for enforcing these regulations for minors, it will be difficult and persuasion will be found far better than force. Tell a live American boy he must not read a certain book, and he won't rest until he has. It would be far better to appeal to his sense of decency."

Women Achieving Power

Women are learning to get by power: what they were brought up to get only on pitying on the sympathy of men. Dr. Abraham Myerson, professor of neurology at Tufts College, said yesterday afternoon to the 700 women and the smattering of men attending the social work conference.

From the cradle they are praised for being pretty and attractive, he said, while a boy in the same family is induced to be intelligent and attain power.

Dr. Myerson's topic was "The Changing Mentality of Woman," and his observation is that women were brought up to please men, and men were pleased to have one-half of the population of the world noncompetitive. With changing conditions, and women who will speak their own mind and be as clever as improved opportunity allows, the mentality of woman is changing, he said.

No Difference in Mind

It is not a matter of reverting to the masculine, he believes, there need be no more difference between a man's mind than a woman's if the bringing up of a girl baby and that of a boy is similar.

Prof. Thomas N. Carver of Harvard University addressed the throng from a standpoint of economics, when the session adjourned to Talbot Hall—the largest hall in Marblehead—because the number of persons attending the conference was quite unexpected.

Poverty he claimed is caused by unemployment and unemployment is caused either because there are too few jobs, or too many unemployable persons.

The general topic of the sessions is "The Art of Living Together." Cheney C. Jones of the Home for Little Wanderers presided in the morning. Mrs. Eva W. White, president of the Women's Educational and Industrial Union, presided in the afternoon. There were round tables following each general session. The meetings continue tomorrow with Herbert C. Parsons, commissioner of probation as president.

VARIOUS SORTS OF SINS

To the Editor of The Herald:

No doubt the ban on "Strange Interlude" has accorded undeserved fame and free advertising to a play that in no way deserves it, except perhaps as a masterpiece of boredom.

But—did our men of God violate the law? If the excerpts the ministers' committee sent to their cohorts were really indecent they violated the postal regulation which prohibits the sending of objectionable matter through the mail. And if the quotations from the play were not obscene, the committee signed against charity in inferring that they were. But since these reverend gentlemen have not signed against the 1883 amendment—pardon me, amendment, perhaps the sin doesn't count.

ALBERT SCHMIDT, Dorchester, Sept. 26.

THE INTRIGUING INTERLUDE

To the Editor of The Herald:

Some one has said that individuals who attend performances that have been questioned classically under three headings: Intellectuals—Who understand the play; Ignorant—Who see and hear—but understand not.

Inquisitive—Who are there to see and hear what it is like—not that they give a darn. ALFRED DAVENPORT, Boston, Sept. 26.

PRaises JUDGE GRANT'S LETTER

To the Editor of The Herald:

After all the torrent of denunciation and scorn which has been heaped on Boston and its mayor on account of "Strange Interlude," it is a relief to read the clear minded sanity of Judge Grant in his letter of the 24th. It is the first time that there has appeared any statement of the kind of material which makes the play so objectionable in the eyes of the people.

It is not a matter of reverting to the masculine, he believes, there need be no more difference between a man's mind than a woman's if the bringing up of a girl baby and that of a boy is similar.

Prof. Thomas N. Carver of Harvard University addressed the throng from a standpoint of economics, when the session adjourned to Talbot Hall—the largest hall in Marblehead—because the number of persons attending the conference was quite unexpected.

Poverty he claimed is caused by unemployment and unemployment is caused either because there are too few jobs, or too many unemployable persons.

The general topic of the sessions is "The Art of Living Together." Cheney C. Jones of the Home for Little Wanderers presided in the morning. Mrs. Eva W. White, president of the Women's Educational and Industrial Union, presided in the afternoon. There were round tables following each general session. The meetings continue tomorrow with Herbert C. Parsons, commissioner of probation as president.

When the play was first produced in New York city I read the book, hoping that Boston would soon be honored with this production. Since the recent controversy I have reread the book. To me it is a revelation of human nature, serious and keen, and I do not feel that I have been degraded one particle by reading this play. My hope is that the Guild may find a way to produce this drama in Boston or the nearby vicinity.

I am to see Judith Anderson make Nina Leeds come to life.

ANNE URSULA MCCARTHY, Boston, Sept. 24.

A PESSIMISTIC VIEW

To the Editor of The Herald:

The trouble with Judge Grant is that he comes from a day when it was no handicap in literature to be a gentleman or gentlewoman. Besides, being a lawyer, he discerns a difference between the right of free speech and the indecent exposure of an abnormal mind. I'm not sure that it makes any great difference whether the indecency is salacious or merely nauseating.

Both as a spectator and as a reader of plays I have had some acquaintance with the record of the Theatre Guild from the days of the "Great Song" to the present, and the fact that this organization is the play's proponent is to me no greater guarantee than the receipt of a Pulitzer prize, and we all know how entirely that distinction has become discredited. Even the deep indignation of the eminent but dogmatic (and perhaps like all of us who practice his profession) self-sufficient Mr. W. P. Eaton falls just a little short of the mark.

THE BOSTON HERALD

SUNDAY, SEPTEMBER 29, 1929

IN DEFENCE OF O'NEILL

To the Editor of The Herald:

As a parish minister I regret the impression made by some of the more vocal clergymen in Greater Boston concerning the much discussed "Strange Interlude." They surely have a right to exert their moral influence as they see fit. But when that influence is exerted toward usurping the rights of a lot of intelligent, decent folk in the community to see a play which is considered of high dramatic merit—well, one cannot help but agreeing with Dr. Myerson that it is a good thing church and state are separate. Furthermore, a soberly intended dramatic production has as much right of artistic freedom as a sermon does of prophetic freedom.

For O'Neill is a serious dramatist, as deeply in earnest about his work as any of us, and I believe incapable of writing a salacious play. To be sure you may select salaciously sounding passages, as you could from Shakespeare, or Sophocles, or the Bible. And also his concentration is upon some of the more sombre human depths, but, you know, they are there, and proper as dramatic material.

His great contribution is the honest study of certain phases of human nature, with an earnest realism, and an almost fierce desire to see human beings, and to illuminate certain human motives in a beautiful, moving dramatic form. His plays are tragic, perhaps even terrible, but not immoral. To see them is purging but not demoralizing. Great writing never depresses; it always elevates. If its subject matter is honest. And as I remember "The Strange Interlude" reading it some time ago, its influence would move one to play rather than emulation on the one hand or condemnation on the other.

I have seen other O'Neill plays, and they were outstanding experiences. Who can forget "Emperor Jones," with its disintegration of a grandiose soul in fear; or "Beyond the Horizon," with its human midwifing; or "Desire Under the Elms," with its resistless march of a Greek tragedy; or "The Great God Brown," with its personalities masked and unmasked? Such a course of O'Neill plays, including "Strange Interlude," would add immensely to the sum total of human understanding in the community, if generally attended. And human understanding is the basis of morality. HAROLD L. STRATTON, Minister, Pilgrim Congregational Church, Worcester, Sept. 25.

Back in the '60s a dear old lady from Massachusetts went to visit her son and family in New York. She had been brought up to think of theatre cards and dancing as the unholy trinity, hence her son, on mischief bent, proposed that he, with his wife, and three children in their teens, should take "mother" to the theatre, and to make the case as bad as possible, they took her to see "The Black Crook." They had seats well to the front, but it was understood that when she could stand it no longer and should rise to leave, they all would leave with her.

Interhooks they sat through one act, and then through another. Still she remained in her seat. At the close she was still there. As they rose to leave, their curiosity could no longer be restrained. "Well, mother, what did you think of it?" "Why, it was all very pretty, but—wouldn't you think these girls would take cold?" SARA R. SKERRY, Boston, Sept. 26.

"UTILITY OF LOCAL CENSORSHIP"

To the Editor of The Herald:

In the discussion of censorship there are two points which I believe have either been stressed not at all or insufficiently: the ultimate utility of local censorship and the importance of subjective moral development.

Because of its results local censorship represents, in my opinion, a perverted ethical concept. It is a well recognized fact that the publicity arising from such censorship serves as free advertising and stimulates a wider reading or patronage than would otherwise have been the case. We withhold a book from 1000 Bostonians and by that very act secure 10,000 additional readers elsewhere. There is no social gain in that. From the censor's point of view he saves a few local souls while subjecting many others outside the sacred precincts to licentious influences.

Granting, for the moment, that such influences exist, there is a net social loss. If the immediate results are good, the ultimate results are bad. I cannot subscribe to the state of mind which says in effect: "This candy is bad for my child; I will give it to my neighbor's children." If censorship is to be effective at all, it must be at least national in scope.

The only type of morality that will endure and eventually succeed is subjective morality—arising from the inner consciousness of the individual and resulting from the sum of his educational and environmental influences. To my mind it is a greater social triumph for one individual to throw down a book or leave a theatre in disgust than forcibly to keep 1000 individuals from reading a bad book or seeing a bad play from which they might have derived illicit pleasure. We cannot legislate goodness nor can taboos inculcate the ability to distinguish between good and bad. When as individuals we have learned this distinction, there will be no need of censorship. Until such time there will be bad literature and whether we have local censorship or not.

Social, like economic problems are best solved by starting at the bottom instead of at the top. In the case of literature the bottom is the individual and the means is education in its broadest sense.

STUART HUCKINS, Wellesley Hills, Sept. 24.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE HERALD:

As a parish minister I regret the impression made by some of the more vocal clergymen in Greater Boston concerning the much discussed "Strange Interlude." They surely have a right to exert their moral influence as they see fit. But when that influence is exerted toward usurping the rights of a lot of intelligent, decent folk in the community to see a play which is considered of high dramatic merit—well, one cannot help but agreeing with Dr. Myerson that it is a good thing church and state are separate. Furthermore, a soberly intended dramatic production has as much right of artistic freedom as a sermon does of prophetic freedom.

For O'Neill is a serious dramatist, as deeply in earnest about his work as any of us, and I believe incapable of writing a salacious play. To be sure you may select salaciously sounding passages, as you could from Shakespeare, or Sophocles, or the Bible. And also his concentration is upon some of the more sombre human depths, but, you know, they are there, and proper as dramatic material.

His great contribution is the honest study of certain phases of human nature, with an earnest realism, and an almost fierce desire to see human beings, and to illuminate certain human motives in a beautiful, moving dramatic form. His plays are tragic, perhaps even terrible, but not immoral. To see them is purging but not demoralizing. Great writing never depresses; it always elevates. If its subject matter is honest. And as I remember "The Strange Interlude" reading it some time ago, its influence would move one to play rather than emulation on the one hand or condemnation on the other.

I have seen other O'Neill plays, and they were outstanding experiences. Who can forget "Emperor Jones," with its disintegration of a grandiose soul in fear; or "Beyond the Horizon," with its human midwifing; or "Desire Under the Elms," with its resistless march of a Greek tragedy; or "The Great God Brown," with its personalities masked and unmasked? Such a course of O'Neill plays, including "Strange Interlude," would add immensely to the sum total of human understanding in the community, if generally attended. And human understanding is the basis of morality. HAROLD L. STRATTON, Minister, Pilgrim Congregational Church, Worcester, Sept. 25.

SARCASTIC

To the Editor of The Herald:

Although I am a member of the Theatre Guild, I feel that the criticisms of Mayor Nichols are not justified. May I, through your columns, express my eternal gratitude to the mayor for his act in banning the play? Had he not done so I would have innocently attended it and would have come away with my purity stained and my soul besmirched.

How indebted we ought to be to his honor, the mayor, particularly since so many of our intellectual leaders have been deceived for so long into thinking it was a great work of art. It took our noble mayor to tear off the insidious mask and expose its sinister reality for all to see. Eugene O'Neill couldn't fool him. No siree. After all, what can Nicholas Murray Butler, Walter Pritchard Eaton, Dean Pound et al. know about morals? Were any of them ever a mayor of Boston? Of course not! That settles that.

This argument about other cities not banning the play is tommy-rot. What kind of mayors can they have? Can anything more discreditable be said of them than that they apparently mind their own business? What kind of morals can their constituents have when the mayors don't do any banning?

My heart goes out to Mayor Nichols. Think of the responsibility of a million souls. Picture his sleepless nights because of the wicked influence of the modern drama on the community, or waking up in a sweat from the dream of a scene in which references were made to sex. And when he tries to protect his flock from a play like "Strange Interlude" all the appreciation he gets is a storm of protest, even from churchmen.

Those who accuse the mayor of interfering with our liberties are absurd. On the contrary, he has been extremely liberal. Didn't he allow the representatives of the Theatre Guild to speak over the radio? S. D. WEISSMAN, Boston, Sept. 23.

CIVIL LIBERTIES UNION TO FIGHT CENSORING HERE

Organizes Effort to Overthrow System of Premature Banning

CATHOLIC PAPER SUPPORTS MAYOR

Sell-Out Reported for First Week of Run of O'Neill Play

The American Civil Liberties Union entered the Boston censorship fight yesterday when Roger N. Baldwin, director of the organization, arrived here and organized a local committee to oppose "advance censorship of plays, books and public meetings."

This, together with an editorial in the Pilot, official Catholic paper of the diocese, supporting the stand of Mayor Nichols on "Strange Interlude," and the apparent assurance that the much-mooted play will enjoy an uninterrupted run in Quincy, was the outstanding development in the censorship situation yesterday.

REACTION EVIDENT

The reaction to the banning of the play in Boston was evidenced throughout the state yesterday when overtures were made to Theatre Guild officials to effect showings of the play in other cities. Worcester and Springfield and several other sizable cities in the central and western parts of the state are seeking a production of the play when it concludes its Quincy run.

The Civil Liberties Union offered its support to the Theatre Guild immediately after "Strange Interlude" was banned here, but officials of the Guild were determined to stand on their own case. Yesterday, Baldwin arrived and called a meeting of local members, out of which came the first step in an organized effort to overthrow the present system of censorship.

Baldwin, in announcing the campaign, part of which is to be a public mass meeting, said:

"The ban on 'Strange Interlude' is only one instance in the long series of suppressions which make Boston the hub of censorship in the United States. We are confident that the great majority of the citizens of Boston are opposed to advance censorship of plays, books and meetings, and would be glad to substitute for it the decision of judges and juries. That is the method of control elsewhere, and it works."

I am here to aid our Boston members at their request in facing this difficult situation and in bringing to bear the resources of our national body in getting the job started. Advance censorship in Boston by administrative officers is too ridiculous and too dangerous to last. Organized effort to get the right legal remedies alone can abolish it.

To Fight Censorship

MRS. WILLIAM Z. RIPLEY
Member of Civil Liberties Union.

LONG RUN INDICATED

John S. Codman presided as chairman of the meeting, which was attended by 30 members, including Mrs. William Z. Ripley, wife of the noted transportation expert of Harvard University; Prof. Samuel Eliot Morison of Harvard, the Rev. Smith W. Dexter, Prof. Arthur M. Schlesinger, Miss Catherine Huntington, Mrs. Gertrude L. Winslow and William Tausig.

Although officials of the Guild have not received absolute assurance that "Strange Interlude" will be unmolested in Quincy, indications are that when the play opens Monday night it will be a run of considerable length, starting a run of considerable length.

Every seat for the performances in the first week has been sold and applicants from Providence, Manchester, N. H., and Concord, N. H., tried to get tickets yesterday.

MCGRATH TO BE PRESENT

Mayor Thomas J. McGrath announced yesterday that he had cancelled a long standing engagement in order to witness the entire performance. With him will be about 20 members of a citizens' play-jury, who will report their opinions of the moral aspects of the play.

The mayor, in selecting members of the play-jury, learned that the interest in the production is widespread in Quincy. Every person he asked to serve, either man or woman, was not only willing, but eager to participate. It is possible, however, that the number of jurors will be limited to 10, because of the scarcity of seating facilities, the mayor stating that he did not want to take too many seats with the result that many citizens who otherwise would see the play might be prevented from so doing.

The theatre box office, handling hundreds of "call for" reservations, received a surprise when a man representing himself as secretary to Mayor Nichols telephoned for seats. Whether or not the tickets were for the use of the mayor could not be learned. Mayor McGrath said that he has been deluged with requests for tickets, but he was not disposed to interfere with the business of the theatre.

PAINE SUPPORTS PLAY

Support for the play was given yesterday by the Rev. George L. Paine, secretary of the Greater Boston Federation of Churches.

Censorship Opponent

JOHN S. CODMAN
Chairman of meeting of Civil Liberties Union.

eration of Churches, who, in a letter, said that he had been disgusted with excerpts, but as a whole, "the tale is mightier than 99 sermons out of a 100."

"Like the Bible and Shakespeare, 'Strange Interlude' must be judged not by excerpts, but as a whole," Mr. Paine said. "I read Mr. MacKusick's six pages of extracts and was disgusted with the consciousness of language, but I have just doubly moved with the conviction that it does not pay to sin. To those of our youth who pay scant attention to the authority of their elders or the Bible, and not much to God, what a gripping lesson to see in this vivid story that you cannot sin and get away with it."

"To me, the moral of the book is: Be good and you'll be happy; sin and be damned here and now. To make the penalty of sin so frightful is no mean sermon."

A petition protesting the stand of Mayor Nichols and endorsing the presentation of the play in Quincy will be circulated among students and faculty members at Harvard by the Harvard Liberal Club.

Indorsement of the city government in Quincy in allowing the play to be presented and the condemnation of Mayor Nichols of Boston in banning the play from the Hollis theatre are objects of the organizers of the movement at Harvard.

HARVARD PETITION

The petition follows: "Strange Interlude" has been awarded the Pulitzer prize by a distinguished jury. By this award it has acclaimed a place for itself in the field of literature and drama. We, the undersigned, believe that it is of cultural importance and that we should not be denied the opportunity of seeing it. Therefore we protest the banning of the play in Boston and indorse its presentation in Quincy.

Even as the petition made its first appearance the sale of tickets for the first week ceased. The advertising produced by the discussion proved a shower of gold to the Theatre Guild.

OPENING A SELL-OUT

No seats can be procured for the opening. They have been all allotted for some time. The Quincy Theatre has about 250 fewer persons than the Hollis. The opening night at the Hollis was a sell-out, and many who had seats arranged for the opening night at the Hollis, and who expected to go to the opening in Quincy, were disappointed.

The theatre in Quincy is easily accessible. The Old Colony boulevard runs into the city, and the theatre is on the main street. In the rear of the theatre is parking space for 100 or more automobiles. This is provided without charge to patrons.

The train service to Quincy will be augmented on Monday. Extra trains and extra cars on the regular trains will be provided. The trains will leave South station at 4:05, 4:18, 4:25, 4:35, 4:42 and 5:02. The show starts at 5:30. A special train will leave the Quincy station at 11:30 for Boston. This will give the audience ample time to go from the theatre to the depot.

Buses will leave Park square daily during the run of the play. They will leave the Union Motor Terminal at 3:30 Providence street, Park square, at 4:30 and go direct to the theatre. Many reservations have already been made. Extra buses will be put on if needed.

The subway trains to Ashmont will have extra cars for those who want to go by trolley. At the Ashmont station there will be regular buses to convey patrons to Quincy.

Ushers and other theatre attendants are being given special instructions in the handling of the patrons. All patrons must keep their seats until they have returned from intermission. Full information regarding the best eating places will be given out in the form of a flyer.

PILOT COMMENTS

The Pilot, official Catholic paper of this diocese, which had kept aloof from the entire discussion, yesterday printed the following editorial, headed "Strange Interlude":

The tempest stirred up over the banning of the 'Strange Interlude' has subsided for the moment. From the welter of conflicting opinions that the discussion evoked certain convictions stand out clear and distinct in the public mind. In the first place, the whole affair was so strongly reminiscent of the banning of certain books in Boston some months ago that it misled some people into rushing precipitately into print with criticisms that held the fair name of our city up to derision and obloquy.

Such criticisms in both cases were unwarranted. To protect public morals from corruption by the stage and screen is not being hidebound, puritanical or fanatical. The banning of books and plays that are not only indecent and that menace the morals of the community in that they glorify indecently the standards of conduct, far from casting ridicule on a community, rather raise it still higher in the estimation of right-minded and right-thinking people.

Another conviction that is gradually forming in the public mind is that that literary and dramatic critics, the self-styled intelligentsia, and what one of our contemporaries calls the "whole world of informed opinion," may be competent judges of art, but they are not always guides in morality. This explains why a work may have won the Pulitzer prize and yet be unfit for presentation before the public.

In this connection it is surprising to note that the dramatic critic of one of our leading Catholic weeklies, reviewing the 'Strange Interlude' some months ago in New York, instead of praising it, did not immediately disapprove of it. As far as the Catholics of Boston are concerned, they are plainly disgusted with it and commend the fearless stand of the municipal authorities in forbidding its performance.

The Rev. Raymond A. Chapman, vicar of St. Stephen's Episcopal Church on Shawmut avenue, takes exception to the manner in which censorship is conducted in Boston.

"IN WRONG HANDS"

"Censorship of plays in Boston seems to me to be in the wrong hands," he stated today. "Neither the mayor nor the group of Boston clergymen supporting him are in the least competent to censor plays. A censorship group should consist of persons of proved moral worth who are at the same time conversant with the theatre and with dramatic art—its problems and its proper values."

"The merit of a drama is in its truth to life and in its art, not in whether it is either more or less sexual than the Old Testament. Facts of life are facts, and the years clear if they are handled cleanly, and dirty if they are handled cheaply and vulgarly."

"Strange Interlude" deals with certain sexual facts of life, but it seems to me to deal with them cleanly, and the play is therefore a clean play. No one who has not studied the drama and known the problems of the stage can determine whether a play has merit, either artistic or moral, or not, and neither the mayor nor any of the clergymen and laymen sending out this pamphlet, filled with detached lines not in the acting version of the play, is a competent censor."

NO SEATS TO BE HAD FOR "PLAY JURY"

Mayor McGrath to Pass Upon "Interlude" Alone

The "play jury" which was to have judged the fitness of "Strange Interlude" on the occasion of its first performance at the Quincy Theatre, Quincy, on next Monday, will probably consist only of Mayor Thomas J. McGrath, it now appears.

NO SEATS FOR THEM

That probability became an apparent fact last night, when Mayor McGrath stated that he has so far found it impossible to secure seats for any of his projected jurors, due to the fact that the entire performance was sold out to subscribers of the Guild some time ago.

The Mayor had planned to select a group of anonymous Quincy residents, whose identity would be known only to himself, to attend the first performance, and then report privately to him as to what they thought of the play, and whether or not it should be allowed to continue to play in Quincy.

Leaves One-Man Jury

He had planned to select 25 men and 25 women for the task. But last night he declared that so far it has been impossible to secure a single ticket to see them.

"The Guild had sold out their opening performance many weeks ago," he explained last night. "The fact that the Quincy Theatre is smaller than the Hollis means that they will have to disappoint some of these people even. Consequently it is practically impossible to get additional seats, and unless there are some who are willing to surrender their seats for the purpose, I am afraid that the jury will be myself alone."

Is Final Authority

"It has been my intention from the first to constitute myself as the final authority in the matter, but I have been anxious, at the same time, to get the reactions of Quincy residents to the piece as early as possible.

"It looks now as though this will be impossible on the opening night, unless some of the citizens here happen to be Guild subscribers. Whether or not there are any such I do not know. Despite the possibility that Mayor McGrath, as jury, may still see fit to bar the play from performance after the opening night, the sale of tickets for the piece continued to increase tremendously yesterday."

Sell Out for Three Weeks

It is now impossible to buy seats for the opening of the performance. In addition, it is practically impossible to buy seats at any price for any performance for three weeks after that.

So heavy has the sale been, and so heavy the correspondence that the Guild has received, and is receiving daily, that it became necessary yesterday for the theatre people to open an office in the Walker building, on Boylston street, with a staff of five girls.

The Pilot comments on the situation editorially as follows:

"The tempest stirred up over the banning of the 'Strange Interlude' has subsided for the moment. From the welter of conflicting opinions that the discussion evoked certain convictions stand out clear and distinct in the public mind. In the first place the whole affair was so strongly reminiscent of the banning of certain books in Boston some months ago, that it misled some people into rushing precipitately into print with criticisms that held the fair name of our city up to derision and obloquy."

"Such criticisms in both cases were unwarranted. To protect public morals from corruption by the stage and screen is not being hidebound, puritanical or fanatical. The banning of books and plays that are not only indecent and that menace the morals of the community in that they glorify indecently the standards of conduct, far from casting ridicule on a community, rather raises it still higher in the estimation of right-minded and right-thinking people."

"Another conviction that is gradually forming in the public mind is that literary and dramatic critics, the self-styled intelligentsia, and what one of our contemporaries calls the 'whole world of informed opinion,' may be competent judges of art, but they are not always safe guides in morality. This explains why a work may have won the Pulitzer prize and yet be unfit for presentation before the public."

"In this connection it is surprising to note that the dramatic critic of one of our leading Catholic weeklies reviewing the 'Strange Interlude' some months ago in New York, instead of praising it, did not immediately disapprove of it. As far as the Catholics of Boston are concerned, they are plainly disgusted with it and commend the fearless stand of the municipal authorities in forbidding its performance."

BEYOND THE ALPS LIES QUINCY!

By NICHOLAS YOUNG

YOU may now take your "Strange Interlude" in Quincy—15 minutes from the South Station. In many ways it is fitting that this "moral monstrosity of the drama" (Mayor Nichols) should find a safe haven in the South Shore town. For Quincy, it may be remembered by those who read their country's history, has been the breeding place of the nation's most advanced thinkers—men of culture and independent thought.

THE quaint and lovely city might have been as commonplace as Revere or Chelsea except for the men it raised.

Nicholas Young
Mayor McGrath any benefit of doubt which might oppress the public servant who gives tender regard to the voting capacity of his community. Make no mistake about it—they all are oppressed.

PROBABLY the best endorsement that might graciously be bestowed upon the spoken drama of Greater Boston would be a whole-hearted, honest response to the Theater Guild's plea for a square deal. The city of Quincy, it seems, has turned its resources over to the Pariahs and the sinners. That, at least, gives the underdog a chance. This was hardly possible under the Nichols-Innes-Goulston management of public morals in the big town.

Gloriously Fair

JUDITH ANDERSON
IN "STRANGE INTERLUDE"
Miss Anderson will be seen on Monday at the Quincy theatre.

NEILSON RAPS CENSORSHIP

MARLBOROUGH, Sept. 27 (AP)—President William Allen Neilson of Smith College told the Massachusetts conference on social work here tonight that hundreds of books are being written in America today with the hope that they will be suppressed in Boston.

Addressing one of the second day's sessions on the subject of "Censorship," President Neilson said that the banning of books in the State capital assured good sales in New York city and the rest of the country. Continuing, he declared that such action by municipal authorities was ineffective. "Suppressed books are read in Boston," he said. "We can't surround the city with the national guard nor search all the people coming in."

All such laws which permit the removal from sale of books because of the judgment of paragraphs or sections taken out of the context were denounced. "The practice is unjust and unscholarly," the Smith College president explained. "Such a passage might have been an entirely different meaning than the author intended to convey."

Boston
Post
Sept. 29, 29

NO ACTION ON INSULT BY ACTOR

Bennett's "To Hell With Boston," Is Not Slander

Richard Bennett, the star of "Jarnegan," which closed its run at the Wilbur Theatre Saturday night with Bennett "putting back" all the lines ordered deleted by the city censor and shouting "to hell with the Governor, the Mayor and the police," apparently succeeded in "getting away with it."

NOTHING CAN BE DONE

For there is nothing that can be done to him in the matter, according to Samuel Silverman, assistant corporation counsel who has acted for Mayor Nichols in censoring Boston shows from time to time.

Unless Bennett, in his temperamental outburst, slandered somebody, there seems to be no redress, he said, and whenever Bennett chooses to come here again in another play, provided the play is all right, there is nothing in the law which can prevent his appearance before another Boston audience.

Got Out Right Away

Mayor Nichols, still confined to his Hingham summer home with laryngitis, was apprised of the actor's vigorous outburst, and sent back word that he had "no comment."

John M. Casey, chief play censor of the city, was out of town yesterday, and in his absence, Mr. Silverman was appealed to on the subject.

"I know of nothing to prevent Bennett's appearing in Boston theatres again," he said. "Legally I do not know of anything that can be done to him for his action. He took the midnight train to New York after his outburst, and is out of our jurisdiction now anyhow."

A Bennett Stunt

"As for his coming here again, I don't know anything to stop him. If he slandered anybody, he could be sued, but I haven't heard of his having done so. Saying, 'to hell with the Governor, the Mayor and the police' is not slander. And he can't be put in jail for it."

"I suppose you can say that he 'got away with it' if you like. It is a sort of Bennett stunt, anyway, isn't it?"

Likes a Row of Some Sort

Richard Bennett has been known for years as a "temperamental" star who liked nothing better than a row of some kind with somebody. He was expelled from the Theatre Guild for breaking his contract, in an unannounced trip to Montreal through which he missed two nights of a play in which he played a leading role in New York.

Some years ago he had a run in with the then Mayor Curley over a show he insisted on putting on, despite censorship and legal proceedings, at the Court Theatre, and vowed he'd play the piece whether the Mayor liked it or not.

Divorced From Second Wife

Even in his domestic life, Bennett has had trouble. He recently married for the third time. His second romance went on the divorce rocks, after a preliminary separation.

"Jarnegan," with Bennett, opens in Brooklyn, N. Y., tonight. No action by his managers has been taken, so far as Edwin Fuller, general manager of the Boston interests of the Shuberts, knows, and probably none will be taken.

May Harm "Interlude"

"What can you do?" asked Fuller yesterday. "He pulled this thing at the last minute, and took the midnight to New York."

"I don't think he did the 'Strange Interlude' any good, though. His remarks are apt to be taken by people as showing actors not the kind of folks to warrant a whole lot of confidence."

Part of Bennett's outburst Saturday night was a curtain speech in which he urged people to see the "Strange Interlude," the production of the Theatre Guild, which opens tonight in the Quincy Theatre, where the Mayor of that city is to act as censor at its opening performance.

Traveler
September 28, 1929

FOOTLIGHTS

"Strange Interlude" to Hold Forth at Quincy Theatre on Monday Evening;
"Courage" Begins Boston Engagement at the Wilbur.

By KATHARINE LYONS

The well-trumpeted O'Neill play, "Strange Interlude," will hold its New England premiere at the Quincy Theatre, Quincy, Mass., on Monday evening, as already announced in the advertising and news columns of Boston papers these past few days.

The life of the play which prompted a prolonged controversy between Boston censors and the New York Theatre Guild will then depend upon the jurors named by the Quincy mayor who will decide upon the merits and demerits of the play as a fit entertainment for the visiting public.

"Courage," a comedy-drama, starring Janet Beecher, is the only other new attraction on our visiting list for Monday. This play will open at the Wilbur.

Interest in O'Neill's Play at High Pitch

The banning of "Strange Interlude" from a Boston stage and the consequent publicity accorded it the past fortnight will undoubtedly send thousands of playgoers to Quincy in the next few weeks if the play runs the course of time mapped out for it by its sponsors, the New York Theatre Guild.

The unusual opening hour of 5:30, which is necessary to present the nine acts in one evening will eliminate all matinees, but six performances will be given weekly for the next four weeks unless the jurors selected decree otherwise after Monday evening.

At the end of the four weeks the Guild will then take up the rest of its originally planned engagement at the Hollis Street Theatre offering four other plays. The list includes two of Bernard Shaw's plays, "Pygmalion" and "Major Barbara"; "Wings Over Europe" and "Meteor."

New York Cast to Appear in Quincy

Judith Anderson, who followed Lynn Fontanne in the celebrated role of Nina Leeds in New York and others of the original cast, will enact the characters in "Strange Interlude," which has been hailed as "the greatest of all the O'Neill plays."

As a chronicler of events in the theatre I might also add that "Strange Interlude" has been proclaimed by those, supposedly in the know, as a "great and beautiful and enthralling play, noble in its poetic expression and profound in its search and reflection of life."

Its theme has been well exploited in the daily news columns of late. Briefly, it portrays a woman's pilgrimage through life from girlhood to old age and lays bare the secrets of her soul and body. In a whirlwind of misplaced loves, hatreds and desires centering about the strange heroine the great melodrama of life in which human lives conflict with each other is frankly enacted.

An innovating feature of the play is the "asides" which bespeak the private thoughts of the characters apart from the conventional dialogue.

Others in the cast beside Miss Anderson are Tom Powers, Glenn Anders, Maurice McRae, Richard Barbee, Eva Condon, Ethel Westley and J. K. Burns. The play will open at 5:30 every evening with a dinner intermission from 8 to 9 when the play will resume.

"Courage" on Monday evening. This play comes to Boston after a long run in New York, with Janet Beecher as its shining star.

Miss Beecher plays the role of a young mother who suddenly meets the problem of supporting seven children on what is left of her husband's small fortune at the time of his death. Being a woman of no practical ability she soon finds herself at her wit's end in assuming the role of provider. The hostility of a wealthy spinster New England aunt of the children, who tries to wean her offsprings from her add to the complications. How she solves her problems forms the basis of the play and unfolds an interesting story.

The cast includes Junior Blake, who plays the role of the youngest son and who incidentally takes an active part in the play; Gene Gowing, Helen Strickland, Robert Conness, Paul Jones and others.

The locale of the play is New England. The prologue takes place in the studio of a Boston photographer and the rest of the story takes place in Cambridge.

Tom Barry is the author and Lew Cantor is the producer.

BOSTON TRAVELER.

SATURDAY, SEPTEMBER 28

THEATRE GUILD DECLINES HELP

Will Fight Its Own Fight in Presenting the Play
Nichols Banned

Despite the arrival of an advance guard of the American Civil Liberties Union, the Theatre Guild will continue to stand pat on the issue of "Strange Interlude," Eugene O'Neill's prize-winning play which opens Monday night in the Quincy Theatre.

NO OUTSIDE INFLUENCE

The guild has steadily refused to allow any other issue than its play to influence any decisions. When Mayor Nichols refused to allow the play to appear in Boston a number of offers were telegraphed to the guild. These came from various organizations all over the country.

The guild at that time steadfastly refused to allow anyone to fight its own battle, refused all offers of aid and fought out its own fight, succeeding in getting the Quincy Theatre for its play.

It is not at all probable that the Theatre Guild will allow Roger N. Baldwin, director of the Liberties Union, to make any issue on "Strange Interlude." Baldwin arrived yesterday with the avowed intention of ridding Boston of its censorship problem. He expects to find legal means of doing so.

He called a meeting of local members of the league, at which John S. Codman presided. Prof. Samuel Eliot Morison of Harvard, the Rev. Smith W. Dexter, Prof. Arthur Schlesinger, Miss Catherine Huntington, Mrs. Gertrude L. Winslow and William Taussig and about 25 others attended.

PLANS MOVE AHEAD

Meantime, the guild went on with its plans in Quincy, while considering offers from Worcester and Springfield people who want them to bring the play to those cities.

Tickets for the second week of the play went on public sale today. The first week is now practically a sell-out, and the demand for tickets shows that the play will have to run at least four weeks to satisfy the present demands.

Orders have been received for tickets from all over New England. Demands came in from Providence, Concord and Portsmouth, while even from Portland, 100 miles away, came applications for tickets.

Mayor Thomas McGrath will see the entire play Monday night. This was a surprise to many, for he had previously announced that he would see but part of it. With him will be a large number of his "censor committee."

Traveler
September 28, 1929

THE QUINCY QUARRY

By Sav

The Theatre Guild of New York announces the engagement of

STRANGE INTERLUDE

Eugene O'Neill's Pulitzer Prize Play

NEXT MONDAY, Sept. 30

at 5:30 sharp

QUINCY THEATRE QUINCY, MASS.

The performance will begin at 5:30 sharp, continue until 7:30, at which time there will be a dinner intermission, the play resuming at nine o'clock. There are but six performances weekly, no matinees, and the engagement is limited.

Unable to present the play in Boston, the Guild sought a suitable playhouse and found it in the Quincy Theatre. It is modern, intimate and well suited to the presentation of the play.

The cast is that which played in New York for more than a year:

JUDITH ANDERSON	TOM POWERS
GLENN ANDERS	RICHARD BARBEE
EVA CONDON	ETHEL WESTLEY
J. J. BURNS	MAURICE McRAE

and others

Mail Orders Sent to the Theatre Will Be Filled in Order of Receipt.

Prices: $4.40, $3, $2.50, $2.00, $1.50, $1.

Tickets now on sale: Quincy Theatre, Filene's, Jordan's and Gilchrist's.

The Guild's Boston Office Is Located in the Walker Building, 120 Boylston St., Room 416.

Trains leave South Station for Quincy at: 4:05, 4:18, 4:25, 4:36, 4:42, 5:02 P. M. Extra Train leaves Quincy Station at 11:30 P. M. for Boston.

Gray Line Buses will run special excursion daily from Park Square. Coaches leave Union Motor Terminal at 3 Providence St., Park Square at 4:30 daily. It is suggested reservations be made in advance—Back Bay 2480—Fare $1.00 round trip with stop over privileges.

Park St. subway to Ashmont where buses will take you to Quincy.

Excellent roads lead into Quincy from Boston and environs. Adjacent to theatre is parking space for 1500 cars. Fourteen restaurants are in the immediate vicinity.

HOW TO GET THERE

Boston

MONDAY, SEPTEMBER 30, 1929.

QUINCY IS READY FOR "INTERLUDE"

Curtain Rises at 5:30—Players Fear Trouble But Mayor Reassures Them—House Sold

STRANGE INTERLUDE CAST LEAVES FOR QUINCY. Left to right are Richard Barbee, Judith Anderson, the star; Eva Condon and Glenn Anders, leading man, waiting at their hotel for automobiles to carry them to the Quincy Theatre, shortly after their arrival in Boston.

The curtain on Quincy's premier performance of "The Strange Interlude," banned in Boston, will rise this afternoon at the Quincy Theatre, promptly at 5:30. Every seat in the house has been sold in advance.

Of course, a huge throng of the curious, people who have no chance to enter the theatre, is expected, but no disorder is anticipated, and the first sign of such will be promptly repressed.

10 **

Police Are Ready to Guard Show at Quincy

Continued From First Page

Rumors to the effect that a group of opponents of the play were planning to take possession of certain balcony seats and create a general disturbance, with catcalls and the hurling of ancient eggs at the actors, were quickly dispelled last night by Ernest Bishop, chief of police of Quincy.

He stated that disturbers would have no opportunity to buy seats in the balcony. For the past week, he said, they have been in possession of the Theatre Guild subscribers and supporters. "We expect a very representative audience of prominent Bostonians at the Quincy Theatre tonight at the opening of the O'Neill play," declared the chief. "Because the seats have been over-subscribed by Bostonians, there will be few if any Quincy people in the audience on the opening. These people are coming to Quincy in the hope that they would get a glimpse of the cast."

However, despite assurances of the chief of police and Mayor McGrath, the rumors reached the ears of the cast yesterday on their arrival in Boston. A representative of the Guild explained that the cast was "frightened." Judith Anderson, who plays the role of the ill-fated "Nina," was pale and disturbed as she left her hotel yesterday in the company of Glenn Anders, Richard Barbee and Eva Condon. Miss Anderson huddled into the back seat of the limousine between her leading man, Glenn Anders, and Barbee.

Cast Is Disturbed

Miss Anderson stated that the edict of the Mayor of Boston, prohibiting the presentation of the play at the Hollis Street Theatre, was a new experience for her.

When asked how she liked the idea of playing in Quincy, she smiled faintly and said, "Why, I suppose it will be quite thrilling." She was palpably nervous and refused to comment further. Mr. Anders claimed that he was in no mood for interviews and announced that he was "quite upset."

The general feeling of the cast was that they will feel better after the opening. The local Guild organization and a body of representative Quincy citizens gave them every assurance that they will be received with enthusiasm tonight.

A dress rehearsal was held at the Quincy Theatre in the afternoon and today the cast will arrive early to be in readiness for the 5:30 rise of the curtain. The cast includes Judith Anderson, Glenn Anders, Eva Condon, J. J. Burns, Tom Powers, Richard Barbee, Ethel Westley and Maurice McRae.

The Guild has arranged with the Mayor of Quincy that ample protection will be afforded the cast and audience in guarding them from the curious. It is estimated that a crowd of several thousand will collect around the theatre to watch the proceedings. All day yesterday people gathered outside the Quincy Theatre in the hope that they would get a glimpse of the cast.

Ministers Condemn Play

Several ministers in Greater Boston took a last-minute fling at the play from their pulpits yesterday morning. The Rev. William L. Sledge, pastor of the Copley Methodist Episcopal Church, assailed Eugene O'Neill, the author, as a man bent on undermining the standards of decency, integrity, loyalty, and purity which Christian men and women had died to maintain. He classed O'Neill with H. L. Menck, en, Sinclair Lewis, and Theodore Dreiser as propagandists of the "new morality" which, under the guise of art, was sapping at the foundations of the home, purity of womanhood and the loyalty of friends.

Eugene O'Neill was devoid of clean thoughts when he wrote "Strange Interlude," according to the Rev. Robert Watson, secretary of the Lord's Day League and president of the National Reform Bureau yesterday. When he spoke before the Student Club of Boston University in the chapel of the First Baptist Church. He said "In 'Strange Interlude,' nothing can be found but filth."

The Rev. Robert W. Jones, pastor of the Parker Memorial, Bulfinch place, Church, however, went on record as opposed to censorship.

Harvard Men Approve

Some 600 Harvard professors and students sent a delegation to present to Mayor McGrath their endorsement of the production of "Strange Interlude" in Quincy last night.

Mayor McGrath received the delegation and announced that he was much impressed with "the united support of the Harvard professors and students" and stated that he hoped they would all be able to attend the production of the play in Quincy.

Of the long list of petitioners, only John Livingston Loves, professor of English in Harvard, insisted at the last minute that his name be stricken from the list because, on further consideration, he declared, he objected to the wording of the petition, which said the play was of "cultural importance." He said that if it could be made plain that he did not object to the play, he would allow his name to be used, but he preferred to protest the banning of the play in some other manner.

The names included Ralph Barton Perry, head of the philosophy department; Zachariah Chafee, Jr., of the Law School; A. M. Schlesinger, professor of history; A. N. Holcombe, professor of government; Leo Weiner, professor of Slavic languages; Archibald Davidson, professor of music; Andre Morize, professor of French literature; W. E. Hocking, professor of philosophy, and L. O. Cummings, professor of education.

Boston Transcript

SATURDAY, SEPTEMBER 28, 1929

Quincy Mayor Awaits Play Jury Tickets

Theater Management Hard Put to Recall Seats for Censors for "Strange Interlude"

"Strange Interlude" ran upon another snag this morning when Mayor Thomas J. McGrath of Quincy stated that he had not yet received an answer to his written request for tickets for his "play jury" for the Monday opening of Boston's banned play. At the same hour Manager Fred Murphy of the Quincy Theatre was making valiant efforts to pull back tickets from an oversold house, not only for the citizens who are to pass on the play, but for the nine members of the City Council, who, he was advised today, should have the courtesy of seats at the performance.

Mayor McGrath was not worried over the situation. He pointed out that the basis of presentation was on his suggestion of a vote of representative citizens and that while he was surprised this had not had the immediate attention of the theater management, he believed the difficulty would be settled before noon. "There could be no mistake, he said, by the theater management, concerning his request for "jury" tickets, and that it remained for the management to provide the twenty seats which were requested.

At one o'clock, Mayor McGrath was still "waiting" for tickets. At the same time he expressed his certainty that tickets would be forthcoming for Monday's performance. "There will be representatives of Quincy present," he said, adding that the tickets he expects to receive will be distributed by him to persons of his own selection, so that he may have the benefit of their judgment to supplement his own views. He is to attend the performance, he said.

Taking the play ban in Boston as its basis for inaugurating a campaign against "advance censorship of plays, books and public meetings," the American Civil Liberties Union, whose offer of co-operation in the play controversy was declined by Guild officials a week ago, came upon the local scene yesterday.

The arrival of Roger N. Baldwin, director of the Union, Mr. Baldwin met local members of the Union at a meeting presided over by John S. Codman and attended by thirty members, including Mrs. William Z. Ripley, wife of Professor Ripley, transportation expert of Harvard University; Professor Samuel Eliot Morison of Harvard, Rev. Smith W. Dexter, Professor Arthur M. Schlesinger, Miss Catherine Huntington, Mrs. Gertrude L. Winslow and William Tausig.

In advance of a luncheon conference at Hotel Essex this afternoon with Mr. Codman and Gardner Jackson, Mr. Baldwin said that application has been made for a mass meeting to consider "advance censorship" as it applies here to the theater, books, speaking on Boston Common and meetings in public halls. Speakers at this proposed meeting are to be announced later. Mr. Baldwin said also that tentative plans of the Civil Liberties Union contemplate the organization of four committees to prepare material on censorship in each of the fields outlined. It is proposed also to send delegates to the various mayoral candidates—Curley, Mansfield and Conkley—to ask them what is their position on "advance censorship" and also whether they stand for municipal censorship or favor letting the law in such cases take its normal course in the courts.

Professor Zachariah Chafee, Jr., of Harvard Law School, Mr. Baldwin said, has prepared or has in preparation a pamphlet soon to be issued concerning the legal status of censorship in Boston and Massachusetts. This pamphlet, he said, is to carry the endorsement of fifty to seventy-five names of prominent citizens. Mr. Baldwin, in announcing plans for this campaign, said:

"The ban on 'Strange Interlude' is only one instance in the long series of suppressions which make Boston the hub of censorship in the United States. We are confident that the great majority of the citizens of Boston are opposed to advance censorship of plays, books and meetings, and would be glad to substitute for it the decision of judges and juries. That is the method of control elsewhere, and it works."

"I am here to add our Boston members at their request in tackling this difficult situation and in bringing to bear the resources of our national body in getting the job started. Advance censorship in Boston by administrative officers is too ridiculous and too dangerous to last. Organized effort to get the right legal remedies alone can abolish it."

Censorship Scored by President Neilson

Intimating that the attitude of Boston officials on censorship was "for children and not adults," President William Allen Neilson of Smith College scored the present system in an address last night before seven hundred persons attending the twenty-sixth annual convention of the Massachusetts Conference for Social Workers at Marblehead.

"We can't surround Boston with the National Guard nor search all the people coming in," said President Neilson. "Suppressed books will be read in Boston. On this matter of censorship it must first be decided whether we are dealing with children or adults. Because this is not clearly determined by some people, confusion results. In dealing with adults we must grant that the saving of a man's soul is his own affair."

"Children, of course, must be protected until they grow old enough to know what risks they are taking. It is true, I suppose, that the vast population of Boston is immature; that is, it is not mature enough to know what risks it is taking in reading such a book and seeing such a play. It is true, I suppose, that a vast number in Boston never grow up to be mature."

"Yet if you keep away from everybody in Boston all you should prohibit from the immature, then the intellectual life of the city will be starved."

"As for children, it might be well to have some regulation to guard adolescents from books, pictures, plays and moving pictures. As for enforcing these regulations for minors, it will be difficult, and persuasion will be found far better than force. Tell a live American boy he must not read a certain book, and he won't read it until he has. It would be far better to appeal to his sense of decency."

"Absolute liberty is impossible. Liberties clash and the art of government is to decide what liberties should be subordinated to others. The question of liberty regarding books, plays and motion pictures is one that should be dealt with differently from the way we now employ."

"When people give their opinion regarding a play, picture or book, they are expressing their own esthetic reaction and this they have no right to do. There are many books and plays I do not care for, but it never occurred to me that they should be banned unless they are read right next to my ear."

Criticism of a play by analyzing objectionable parts alone was also attacked by the Smith College president, who declared the thing to do was to cultivate public taste but not through the erratic removal of everything that is pathological.

Professor Thomas Nixon Carver of Harvard declared that the problem of poverty is the problem of unemployment which in turn he traced to a variety of causes.

"One reason may be a too high birth rate among wage earners," he said. "If you can raise the standard of living you can reduce the birth rate. Possibly it may be traced to a lack of business talent. This dearth may be due to a low birth rate in the intellectual field or it may be the result of a snobbish tradition that business is not a reputable occupation."

TIRADE FROM STAGE CAUSES LITTLE STIR

City Officials Disparage Richard Bennett's Attack

Actor Closes "Jarnegan" Run Here With Unexpurgated Performance

"Bennett's ravings are not my concern," said Samuel Silverman of the city Law Department yesterday when he was asked for some comment on the emphatic remarks uttered Saturday night by Richard Bennett, star of "Jarnegan," who stepped out of his part on the Wilbur stage to speak his mind about censors and to criticize the Governor, the Mayor and the Boston police.

Said Mr. Silverman: "Why ask me? Why not ask Casey? Knowing Bennett as I do, I expected nothing else. He has always been a firecracker. It's up to the Mayor or the police. I couldn't do anything unless the Mayor should ask me for an opinion."

"What would you give as your opinion if asked?" "I don't know what I would tell the Mayor. But I'm not interested."

Others Cannot Be Reached Mayor Malcolm E. Nichols was at his Summer home at Crow Point, but because of illness, could not talk on the telephone.

Telephonic queries at the home of Police Commissioner Herbert A. Wilson elicited only the suggestion that the inquirer try him at his office on Monday. Supt. of Police Michael J. Crowley could not be reached.

City Censor John M. Casey was said to be out of town. He would be back Monday, it was stated at his home. Mayor Ralph S. Bauer of Lynn, who put a ban on stockpiling legs on girls Saturday, was one of Mr. Bennett's targets. Mr. Bennett didn't think much of Mr. Bauer's efforts towards better morals, he intimated in his speech to the theatre patrons.

Mr. Bauer hadn't read the morning papers. When the incident was sketched for him, he asked: "Who is Bennett? He can't be very much good, if that's the way he thinks. I wouldn't pay any attention to him."

Record
September 30, 1929

O'NEILL GAVE 2 YEARS' TIME TO "INTERLUDE"

Eugene O'Neill spent more than two years writing "Strange Interlude," the play which will have its Greater Boston premiere to-night at the Quincy Theatre in the Granite City. Only six of the nine acts were done when the Theater Guild acquired the work. It took eight weeks of rehearsal to get it ready for the stage after O'Neill and the Guild stage director, Philip Moeller, had labored over the script.

Finally, on January 30, 1928, "Strange Interlude" was brought out in New York at the John Golden Theatre, with Lynn Fontanne as Nina, the girl pining for love and motherhood. Glenn Anders appeared as Dr. Darrell, Tom Powers as Marsden and Earle Larimore as Sam Evans, all three of these characters being the men whom Nina loved at some time in her volcanic career.

Last spring Judith Anderson succeeded to the role of Nina and she will be the heroine in this Quincy production. Powers and Anders are still playing their original roles. Richard Barbee is taking Earle Larimore's place in the role of the booby Evans whom Nina married and later hated.

Gov Allen Will Not Reply

Gov Frank G. Allen, among those directed by Mr. Bennett to "go to hell," was reported to be in the White Mountains. Those near to him intimated that the Governor would pay no attention to Mr. Bennett.

Edward W. Fuller, manager of the Shubert Theaters in Boston, said that Mr. Bennett left town on the midnight train for New York, without stopping to see whether his targets had followed directions. He plays "Jarnegan" in Brooklyn next week.

"Bennett had accepted the alterations in his own play very gracefully," said Mr. Fuller. "The banning of 'Strange Interlude,' however, seemed to prey on his mind. He had been making curtain speeches at almost every performance, and saying just what he thought. This was just a temperamental outburst, I think. Nobody else in the theatre knew what he was going to say, and it came as a surprise to me. It was all his own idea."

It became known yesterday that Mr. Bennett had been making similar speeches throughout the stay of the play in Boston. Those familiar with theatrical affairs said that "Jarnegan" had not been playing to full houses. It was considered by many that the play, by Jim Tully, was somewhat too extreme in its delineation of the vices of Hollywood.

It was somewhat censored before it was allowed to appear in Boston. Saturday night, however, was the last night of its stay here and Mr. Bennett put all the deleted words and expressions back into it. The audience, according to those in the theatre, cheered the actor's defiance of the censors. A few persons walked out on the speech, it was said.

Mr. Bennett is generally considered one of the best American actors. He is 58 years of age and has been on the stage for 40 years. It has always been one of his habits to speak his mind openly. Many stories are told of his custom of stepping out of character, on occasion, to berate an audience or to give a lecture on anything which happened to be in his mind. Once, it is said, he threw his wig into the audience.

He has little use for the talkies, as opposed to the legitimate drama, although his three daughters, Joan, Constance and Barbara Bennett, are bright stars in Hollywood.

He has appeared in disputes with the authorities before. Some years ago he came here with the play, "Damaged Goods," and became involved in a controversy with the censor. He has appeared in plays in Boston four times in the past 16 years, rather less often than the ordinary actor of his caliber.

Eugene O'Neill

MONDAY MORNING, SEPTEMBER 30, 1929—TWENTY-SIX PAGES

A black and white photograph of a wedding party of six people standing outdoors. From left to right: an elderly woman in a dark dress, a young woman in a light dress with a corsage, a man in a dark suit, a young woman in a white dress, a man in a light suit, and a man in a dark suit. A car wheel is visible on the right.

Actors who will present Eugene O'Neill's nine-act drama at Quincey Theatre tonight. Left to right and the characters they play: Eva Condon (Mrs. Ames Evans); Ethel Westley (Madeline Arnold); Glenn Anders (Edmund Darrell); Judith Anderson (Nina Leeds, the heroine); Tom Powers (Charles Marsden); Richard Barber (Sam Evans); and John J. Burns (Gordon Evans).

Fierc Denunciations of Play Delivered from Boston Pulpits, While Several Ministers Speak Out in Defence

While the cast of "Strange" includes ardent advocates of the lude" tolled through a rehearsal at the Quincy Theatre that began at 3:30 in the afternoon and lasted until early this morning, clergymen of Greater Boston yesterday renounced from the pulpit. The Rev. John J. Conboy, who attended the attempt to stage the celebrated drama in this locality.

Flery denunciations were made by the Rev. William L. Stidger of the Cambridge Methodist Church, the Rev. John Watson of the First Presbyterian Church, and the Rev. A. Z. Conrad of the Park Street Congregational Church.

HARVARD PETITION

A strong plea that "life should be faced without sentimentalism and without a veil," was made by Dr. Allen C. Diefenbach of the Newton Center Unitarian Church. Defending the play, he said that Eugene O'Neill "was not a wild genius who would never stand preeminent in the English-speaking world."

No others approach these men," he said. "The only other reason that I can offer is that we live in a more complex world than the simple reason that no other dramatists so deeply into the hidden corners and springs of our modern life as he does, nor set forth their discoveries in such consummate literary and theatrical style."

Officially a Harvard document, the play was presented at Quincy, the rehearsal of the full production was accompanied by more mystery and mystery than an initiation ceremony of the Alpha Beta Gamma fraternity at Sigma Chi College.

Members of the troupe had been in the audience for the first time.

(Continued on Page Two)

Anderson exhibited no signs of embarrassment. Far from appearing as a bundle of nerves, or anything like that, Anderson emerged with a bright smile and a neat gag.

TAKING NO CHANCES
was wearing a rather long white and she first remarked that she better turn it up a foot or two for rance sake.
t no," she decided. "It will look this way if Mayor Nichols hap- o see it."

front of the Quincy Theatre was up tightly, and the stage door larded by what looked to be half of all Quincy's unemployed.
A guard being captained by a those upper half was clad in a coat and who was sporting a pair of breeches with red stripes on the sides. Whether he was the manager, a cavalry major or the house designer was a matter of conjecture.

Rev. Robert C. McCall, president of the Christian church, informed The Herald yesterday that a name had been erroneously inserted in a list of those who protested against Mayor Nichols's ruling against

3. WATSON'S VIEW

Rev. Dr. Robert Watson of the Presbyterian Church and general secretary of the Lord's Day League of England, the speaker before the "Club," an undenominational association sponsored by the First Church, Clarendon street and 125th avenue, made reference to "Interlude" in his remarks to the young people, of whom he had a considerable gathering. On this sub-able people, of whom he had a gathering. On this subject he said:

"I believe in free speech and within the last two weeks have complimented Carr personally on setting free speakers on the Common who were illegally arrested for speaking without permit. I also wrote a letter to the Mayor of one of our papers complimenting him on the fact that he commended Carr for his action. It is better to have an antagonist to the Common, even when antagonistic to the

"The most astounding thing about it," said the Rev. Dr. A. Z. Conrad, addressing his Sunday evening congregation at the Park Street Church last night, "is not the evil in 'Strange Interlude' but that professors and ministers should go to see this thing and uphold it."

His remarks were made in answer to a question that was addressed to him on the subject of the banned play. The question was: "Does not evil such as 'Strange Interlude' advocates tend to

To this he replied that the evil undoubtedly did tend to destroy itself, but people became disheartened with it, but that might be it did a great deal of harm. Regarding "anything so utterly filthy as that is," he said those who do not wish to see their fellow-men go to the dogs should speak out and do it.

The Rev. Dr. William L. Siders, preaching at the Copley Methodist Church yesterday, said that "I am opposed to censorship on principle, especially as it is done in Boston." Continuing, he said: "I believe the censorship in Boston is ridiculous. It makes us a mockery."

even the august mayor of Boston—could decide for the cosmopolitan population of a great American city what plays it shall or shall not see. However, I want to say this: That if ever

He said that the "new morality" of Eugene O'Neill, Sinclair Lewis, Theodore Dreiser and H. L. Mencken, under the "guise of clever art—if not great art—is undermining the standards of decency, integrity, home loyalties, and monogamy."

monogamy." Dr. Stulder admits, however, that he reads the works of those authors and asserts that "it stimulates me—I need it."

* CENSORSHIP DANGER

Rev. Henry W. Foote Finds Moral Standards Changing

The Rev. Henry Wilder Foote, in his sermon at the First M. E. church, of Belmont yesterday, pointed out the dangers of censorship, particularly as it has been conducted in Boston, concluding his remarks with the statement that "a moral standard enforced by arbitrary authority is valuable and necessary where men are living on the lower levels of thought and feeling."

So far as the present situation in Boston is concerned there is good ground for belief that matters have not been handled wisely. Both plays and their authors have been suppressed by methods which have been unduly high-handed, and sometimes of doubtful legality. We are given to understand, for example, that any one may enter a library and take a book, even if it contains but a single objectionable passage, and that on such complaint the district attorney may sue the owner, and that they will be sure to get an injunction or fine if they sell the book. That is a pernicious exercise of police or arbitrary power. It is said that some 125 books have been forbidden sale in Boston in the last few years by this method, including not a few by well-known authors.

The result of the present system has been to bring Boston into wide disrepute. The city which was once regarded as the foremost centre of intellectual and moral life in America is fast becoming an object of ridicule.

If a play like "Strange Interlude" exhibits a breakdown of traditional moral standards it is not the cause of the result. The result is the breakdown. The play is in not so much an advocacy of a "new morality" as a proof that new moral standards do actually exist and are a considerable part of the community. It is because the old standards of life have lost their validity for multitudes of men and women today that we have so many horrible plays, plays that are less adequately, illustrating that fact and trying to show how men and women behave under such circumstances.

Many Faculty Members Join in Protesting Censorship

Many of the most widely known members of the Harvard University faculty have signed a petition protesting the ban placed on "Strange Interlude" in Boston and indorsing its production in Quincy. John Livingston Lowes, professor of English, signed the petition and later withdrew his name. He declared he wished to make his protest in some other manner, as he did not agree with the petitioners that the

W. C. Berkard, Jr.	W. D. Templeton
F. M. Lockett	Franklin H. Sent
R. A. Binkley	W. H. Smith
R. Ralph Barton	Paul W. Gates
W. H. Claessner	W. H. Smith
T. D. Davidson	W. H. MacNeehan
A. Sedillo	W. H. Smith
F. W. Frick	J. W. Wymann, Jr.
George A. Birchhoff	William C. Reiman
George A. Birchhoff	W. H. Baker, Jr.
W. H. Brown	W. H. Brown
J. F. Frederick	F. S. Baubier
Andre Morize	E. H. Garcia
W. H. Sarton	F. H. Pendleton
John D. Hager	H. H. Herring
W. H. Hammes	W. H. Wagoner
D. W. Blair	E. H. Bickel
W. H. Mason	W. H. Wagoner
Edward Ballantine	Allen Evans
Maxon Hammond	S. Evans Stone
W. H. Chabre, Jr.	W. H. Wagoner
J. A. Ryan	Eldon R. James
W. H. Warner	W. H. Wagoner
W. A. McLaughlin	Bernard DeLuino
W. H. Wagoner	W. H. Wagoner

[illegible]

Quincy theatre, which will be scene of [illegible][illegible]

nine-act drama at Quincy Theatre tonight. Left to right and the characters (Howard); Glenn Audley (Edmund Darcell); Judith Anderson (Anna Leeds, the heroine); Richard Barbee (Sam Evans); and John J. Burns (Gordon Evans).

'Strange Interlude' Opens Tonight; Cast Rehearses

Fiery Denunciations of Play Delivered from Boston Pulpits, While Several Ministers Speak Out in Defence

By WALTER MORTON

While the cast of "Strange Interlude" toiled through a rehearsal at the Quincy Theatre that began at three in the afternoon and lasted until early this morning, clergymen of Greater Boston yesterday repewed from the pulpits the controversy which has attended the attempt to stage the celebrated drama in this locality.

Fiery denunciations were made by the Rev. William L. Stidger of the Central Methodist Church, the Rev. Ernest Watson of the First Presbyterian Church, and the Rev. A. Z. Oswald of the Park Street Congregational Church.

HARVARD PETITION

A strong plea that "life should be faced without sentimentality and without a veil," was made by Dr. Albert C. Dieffenbach of the Newton Street Unitarian Church. Defending the play, he said that Eugene O'Neill "was not a writer behind bars."

No others approach these men for the simple reason that no other ministers so deeply into the hidden recesses and springs of our modern life as he did, nor set forth their discoveries in such consummate literary and dramatic here to be held an advocate of the play, though depicted in his play "than a realist in cancer advocates that a deadly disease."

Yesterday afternoon a petition signed by more than 600 Harvard professors, students and graduate students, was presented to Mayor McGrath, in which they consent to the play's opening in Quincy was "unreservedly indorsed," and Roger Nichols's exclusion of the play from Boston was condemned. Fifty Quincy members signed the petition earlier, although sponsored only by persons connected with the university, was not officially a Harvard document.

At Quincy, the rehearsal of the full cast of the play was accompanied by the mystery and mystery than an initiation ceremony of the Alpha Beta Gamma Fraternity at Swarth College.

Members of the troupe had been inhis play: Eva Gordon (Mrs. ...); Tom Powers (Charles Mars ...).

(Continued on Page Two)

to his disappointment, however Anderson exhibited no signs of nerves, or from appearing as a ... of nerves, on any other ... Anderson emerged with a bright and a neat gag.

TAKING NO CHANCES

was wearing a rather long white and she first remarked that she ... it up a foot or two for ... dance sake.

"No," she decided. "It will look this way if Mayor Nichols happens to ... it."

front of the Quincy Theatre was ... up tightly, and the stage door ... yarded by what looked to be at ... all of all Quincy's unemployed, ... those upper half was clad in a ... coat and who was sporting a pair ... of breeches with red stripes on the ... who was the manager, a ... cavalry major or the house des ... was a matter of conjecture.

Rev. Robert P. Anderson, man ... of the Christian Endeavor ... in ... a name had been erroneously ... in a list of those who protested ... Mayor Nichols's ruling against ... the Interlude."

J. WATSON'S VIEW

his "Strange Interlude" Nothing ... ing but Sewer

Rev. Dr. Robert Watson of the ... resbyterian Church and general ... of the Lord's Day League of ... the ... Club, an undenominational ... tion sponsored by the First ... church, Glarendon street and ... "Strange Interlude" in his ... young people, of whom he had a ... erable gathering. On this sub ... believe in free speech and within ... ast two weeks have complimented ... personally on setting free ... arrested, the Common who were ... mit. I also wrote a letter to the ... of one of our papers compliment ate the stage and co-operate with this character are presented, dealing only with life, and that the filthiest, then we can only say good-by to the stage as a place for moral uplift."

"The most astounding thing about H." said the Rev. Dr. A. Z. Conrad, addressing his Sunday evening congregation, "is not the Park Street Church last night," "is not the 'Strange Interlude,' but that professors and ministers should go to see this thing and uphold it."

His remarks were made in answer to a question that was addressed to him on the subject of the banned play. The question was, "Does not evil such as 'Strange Interlude' advocate a tend to destroy itself if allowed to run its course?"

To this he replied that the evil undoubtedly did tend to destroy itself, as people became disgusted with it, but that meanwhile it did a great deal of harm. Regarding "anything so utterly evil as this," he said, those who do not wish to see their children go to the docks should speak out against it.

The Rev. Dr. William L. Stidger preaching at the City Temple Church yesterday, said, "If I am opposed to censorship on principle, especially as it is done in Boston." Con-cededly he said, "I believe the censorship in Boston is ridiculous. It makes us a mockery in the eyes of the nation.
It does seem stupid that a single man—could decide the august matter of Boston population of a great American city."
He plays it shall or shall not be. However, I want to say this: That, if ever there shall be a censorship on a drama, that on "Strange Interlude" more justly than any that Boston has ever applied."

He said that the new morality" of Eugene O'Neill, Sinclair Lewis, Theodore Dreiser and H. M. Menckens, the "guise of clever art—if not great art—is undermining the standards of democratic integrity, home loyalties, and monogamy."

Dr. Stidger admits, however, that he reads the works of those authors and admits that "it stimulates me—I need it."

CENSORSHIP DANGER

Rev. Henry W. Foote Finds Moral

moral standards it is not the cause but the result of that breakdown. The play is not so much an advocacy of a "new morality" as a proof that new moral standards do actually exist for a considerable part of the community. It is because the old standards of life have lost their validity for multitudes of men and women today that we have so many books and plays, more or less adequately, illustrating that fact and trying to show how men and women behave under such circumstances.

PROF. LOWES LATER WITHDRAWS NAME

The following are members
Who signed:	W. D. Templeton
C. C. Packard, Jr.	W. D. Templeton
E. H. Hickins	M. R. Rogers
Ralph B. Mack Perry	Paul W. Gates
W. H. Schlessinger	A. M. Moss
C. E. Wright	F. W. MacFarlane
A. J. Corbitt	W. H. Brown
T. D. Vaughan	J. W. Newman, Jr.
E. G. Nichols	William C. Keimling
C. H. Chace	W. H. Baker, Jr.
W. H. Crombie	H. Brown
C. J. Friedrick	Paul H. Bauer
André Morize	E. S. Robinson
W. H. H. Morris	E. S. Robinson
John D. Black	E. Pendleton Harrison
A. O. Mims	Frederick W. Werner
Leo Weiser	W. H. Buckle
W. H. Mason	W. E. Sedgewick
Edward C. Ballantine	W. H. Sedgewick
W. H. Mason	S. Irvine Stone
W. H. Mason	W. H. Stone
J. J. Ryan	Eldon R. James
Landrum	Dr. E. J. Williams
W. H. Laughlin	Dr. E. J. Williams
W. H. Brinkman	W. O. Matthews

WHERE 'STRANGE INTERLUDE' WILL BE STAGED TONIGHT

which will be scene of opening of Eugene O'Neill's play.

Quincy restaurant keeper preparing to attract intermission diners.

Alfred Kuller, 28	Thomas H. P.	I have not heard any serious ques-
Violet Houghton	William H. P.	tion of Mr. O'Neill's earnestness.
John Wiggins	William H. P.	and solemnity itself in his griv-
J. Cassidy	William H. P.	ing realities. To accuse him of trait-
W. M. P.	W. M. P.	orship would be the silliest way
A. Robertson	W. M. P.	of attacking a morose mind. He no mor-
G. S. Pennington	A. D. L.	ally in Sirange Inter-
Ted Robinson	A. D. L.	views a cancer specialist advocate
Hamilton Gray	M. F. L.

Dr. Dieffenbach Makes Out-spoken
Bless from Pulpit

"The fundamental reason for the lack of liberal mind—not lax, but liberal mind—are for 'Strange Interside' that they trust the sincerity of the playwright and recognize his extraordinary faithfulness to life.

"With Bernard Shaw, Eugene O'Neill stands preeminent in the English drama. No others approach these men for the simple reason that no others penetrate so deeply into the hidden motives and springs of our modern life as they do, nor set forth their discoveries in such consummate literary and theatrical

I have not heard any serious question of Mr. O'Neill's earnestness. He is an earnest man, true in his own realities. To accuse him of fraud would be the silliest way of attacking his mind. He no more indulges in the kind of self-justification and self-adultery in Struggle than I would. I am a cancer specialist advocate and I read disease.

I am told that he is an honest man but that some things he is dissecting out and not of his own. I reply that we ought to be given enough to face life with dignity and without a veil. Defense continued with the statement that the problems of the character in Struggle "are the problems of 'common mankind.'"

There are evil-minded persons," he said, "and those whose intelligence is very low, who will go to any lengths to their harm. I can only say that I have never known any of the causes of social life. We are not the world for the abnormal."

We take special care for the abnormal in our department and for the feeble-minded," he said.

Unkindly, but I am weary of the feeble-minded, he said, "and I am weary of the feeble-minded."

He then turned up for a

(Continued from Page One)

TEMPERAMENT ALLEGED

Miss Anderson, it appeared, was so temperamental that the mere sight of a reporter would seriously jeopardize the opening night. Again, if any one of the cast were to be interviewed it was explained that he would probably become so excited that he would go straight up in the air and never come down, miss his cues, forget his lines and gum the show generally. And, above all, the reporter's informant went on, one could never tell what an actor would say, even if he was a professional actor.

Whereupon the reporter, who has projected nothing more startling than demanding of Miss Anderson what she thought of the flapper and the skyline and how she liked Quincy, was obliged to stifle his entirely professional curiosity and survey the temperamental Miss Anderson from a safe distance when the cast lined up for a photograph.

Much to his disappointment, however, Miss Anderson exhibited no signs of temperament. Far from appearing as a bundle of nerves, or anything like that, Miss Anderson emerged with a bright smile and a neat gag.

"But no," she decided. "It will look better this way if Mayor Nichols happens to see me."

The front of the Quincey Theatre was locked up tightly, and the stage door was guarded by what looked to be at least half of all Quincey's unemployed, this rear guard being captained by a man whose upper half was clad in a dinner coat and who was sporting a pair of blue breeches with red stripes on the legs. Whether he was the manager, a French cavalry major or the house detective, he was a fine specimen of a

The Rev. Robert P. Anderson, managing editor of the Christian Endeavor World, informed The Herald yesterday that his name had been erroneously included in a list of those who protested against Mayor Nichols's ruling against "Strange Interlude."

Declares "Strange Interlude" Nothing but Sorrow

The Rev. Dr. Robert Watson of the First Presbyterian Church and general secretary of the Lord's Day League of New England, the speaker before the Students' Club, an undenominational organization sponsored by the First Baptist Church, Clarendon street and Commonwealth avenue, made reference to "Strange Interlude" in his remarks to the young people of whom he had a considerable gathering. On this

"I believe in free speech and without the last two weeks have complimented Judge Carr personally on setting free the speakers on the Common who were recently arrested for speaking without a permit. I also wrote a letter to the editor of one of our papers complimenting him on the fact that he commended Judge Carr for his action. It is better for men, even when antagonistic to the

When we think of a book, however, which has no idealism in it, and depicts the heroes and heroines as depressed in thought, affection and purpose, in dealing with another matter, and when such a book is portrayed on the stage and held up before youth as a picture of life, there is need for discrimination and elimination.

"The difficulty with 'Strange Interlude' is that whether you take the book copy or the stage copy, it is impossible to present anything but filth. You may cut a sewer into sections, but it is still a sewer and the more you cut, the greater the stench.

There are many unclean things in the Bible. They are there because there are unclean things in life, but they are always presented as a warning, and in contrast to the things that are 'lovely and of good report.'

'A great effort is being made just now by the Federal Council of Churches to elevate the stage and co-operate with it—but if plays of this character are to be presented, dealing only with one side of life, and that the filthiest, then

"The most astounding thing about it," said the Rev. Dr. A. Z. Conrad, addressing his Sunday evening congregation at the Park Street Church last night, "is not the evil in 'Strange Interlude,' but that professors and ministers should go to see this thing and uphold it."

His remarks were made in answer to a question that was addressed to him on the subject of the banned play. The question was: "Does not evil such as 'Strange Interlude' advocates tend to destroy itself if allowed to run its course?"

To this he replied that the evil undoubtedly did tend to destroy itself, as people became disgusted with it, but that meanwhile it did a great deal of harm. Regarding "anything so utterly filthy as that is," he said, those who do not wish to see their fellow-men go to the dogs should speak out against it.

The Rev. Dr. William L. Steeger.

preaching at the Copley Methodist Church yesterday, said that "I am opposed to censorship on principle, especially as it is done in Boston." Continuing, he said: "I believe the censorship in Boston is ridiculous. It makes us a mockery in the eyes of the nation. It does seem stupid that the

He said that a single man— even the august mayor of Boston— could decide for the cosmopolitan population of a great American city what plays it shall or shall not see. However, I want to say this: That if ever there should be a censorship on a drama, that on "Strange Interlude" is more justified than any that Boston has ever applied."

'CENSORSHIP DANGER

Rev. Henry W. Foote Finds Moral Standards Changing

The Rev. Henry Wilder Foote, in his sermon at the First Methodist Church,

Boston Sunday Post

SUNDAY MORNING, SEPTEMBER 29, 1929

That Man O'Neill, Interlude Author, Was Bounced From College and Didn't Get Started Until He Came to Harvard After Sickness Had Knocked Him Out

What sort of man is—and was—Eugene O'Neill, the Provincetown playwright, whose "Strange Interlude" is just now arousing such controversy in this vicinity?

Here is a critical character study by a man who has known him over a period of years.

He first met O'Neill in a saloon arguing with a bunch of enraged gangsters.

He traces the changes in O'Neill's bizarre life from the days when the former Harvard dramatist went treasure-digging in Central America, sailing as a common seaman on South American barks, down to the later years when he came under the spell of "highbrows" such as Mencken and Nathan.

Whether you favor or condemn the "Strange Interlude," you will be interested in this pen-picture of O'Neill.

By Maxwell Bodenheim

Oddly enough Eugene O'Neill was born in New York city in a house

but a few blocks removed from the narrow stable and wagon-shelter which was afterwards to be remodeled into a little theatre known as the Provincetown Players—the place where his first one-act plays were encouraged and produced.

People who have lived in New York for many decades may still remember his father, a great New England favorite, James O'Neill, for the elder O'Neill was a famous actor some 40 years ago, particularly celebrated for his portrayal of the tragic nobleman in that old-time thriller, "The Count of Monte Cristo."

The sons of actors often become bricklayers or professors of anthropology in their after-lives, since their noses are prematurely rubbed against all of the seamy and sordid back-stage life of the theatre, and Eugene O'Neill, during the first 25 years of his existence, tried hard to escape from an inherited urge which he was finally unable to repress.

His early life seems to have been an impulsive, indecisive, and recalcitrant confusion—a conflict of wild blood against undefined longings for self-expression. He was expelled from Princeton University while still under 20, on the strength of a minor, rough-neck escapade; and after acting a small role in a play of his father's he threw it over and went to Honduras, on a gold-seeking expedition.

When he returned, some six months later, he started on his erratic excursions to sea, as a common sailor on Norwegian and South American barks. These trips were sandwiched in between further small parts in his father's plays and futile tries at office-jobs, the bewildered melee continuing until he was 25.

Then he became stricken with tuberculosis—a mingled boon and curse in his case—and entered a sanitarium near New London, Connecticut. At this point a natural revolution rose within him. Men whose rebellious but hazy longings have enticed them into a hurricane of small, shallow adventures and brief, prosaic labors, and two-listed reputations of thought, are not apt to find themselves until some sudden catastrophe places them alone upon their backs and veritably forces them to peer into their minds and hearts.

Trapped in a Hospital

Trapped upon a bed in the sanitarium, Eugene O'Neill began to reflect on the active fullness of his past life, and to long for a more intangible release. When he was discharged from the sanitarium, he joined Professor George Baker's 47 Wookshop at Harvard and began to experiment with the writing of one-act plays.

Professor Baker's Workshop may not have accelerated American drama to any noticeable extent—but it did teach him some of the rudiments and technical details attached to the art of play-writing.

The one-act play of his first to be produced, "Bound East For Cardiff" was put on by the Provincetown Players at their wharf-theatre in Provincetown. This happened in 1915, and it was followed by a deluge of one-act plays from his hands, most of which were destroyed after their publication. Like most beginning writers, O'Neill was largely lacking in self-perspective and discrimination, and he poured himself out in the hot conviction that his slightest word or idea of his was of permanent importance.

Eugene O'Neill, author of much discussed play, "Strange Interlude."

Fire-Cracker Quarrels

I remember firecracker-quarrels between O'Neill and George Cram Cook, Sean Glaspiell, and Ida Rauh, who controlled the Provincetown Players at that time (1915 to 1920), with O'Neill threatening to withdraw his plays because the actors, or the suggested revisions, failed to suit him.

Gradually, however, his ability at writing concentrated, viciously clutching, and uniquely veracious drama emerged in one-act plays such as "He, in the Zone" (afterwards produced by the Washington Square Players), "Moon of the Caribbees," and "The Long Voyage Home."

The people in these latter plays were all sailors and crudely speaking underdogs, by whose side O'Neill had once sweated, with curses and laughter traded. His genius at devising dramatic situation and dialogue seized upon these people and interpreted their half-buried, inarticulate hates and loves and despairs.

Wrote About Thieves and Rowdies

His first long play, "Beyond the Horizon," was produced on Broadway in 1920 by John D. Williams, after many of his one-act plays had appeared in the old Smart Set, then edited by H. L. Mencken and George Jean Nathan, who were among O'Neill's first and heartiest supporters.

This play was followed by "The Straw" and "Gold," two important three-act plays which failed both materially and artistically, and then came "The Emperor Jones," "Anna Christie," and "The Hairy Ape," the three plays in which his dramatic fire spread into a sustained and original climax.

Up to this time, O'Neill had been himself and had delineated for the most part people whom he knew through personal observation and contact—lower-world characters, rowdies, prostitutes, thieves, vagabonds, adventurers—but now he began to depart from these characters and to write, in plays after "Anna Christie," of New England farmers, and neuroathletic artists, and culture-venered negroes, and shadowy, romance-turbured heroes of past legend and history (people to whom he was not innately responsive).

Fell Under "Highbrow" Spell

Unconsciously—the creator is never aware of such transitions—he fell under the influence of his critical "highbrow" admirers, men such as George Jean Nathan, H. L. Mencken, Kenneth Macgowan, and Stark Young, and became convinced that he was a deeply poetic and sentimental peerer into the myths and quests of past men, and an airy satirist of manners and moths.

He deserted the crude underdogs and submerged gropers, whose souls he had pierced and lighted with an accuracy near to genius, and entered a figurative drawing room thronged with the lights and modulations of a more precious world. The alteration has been both mournful and inadequate.

Met in "Hell's Hole"

When I first met O'Neill, 13 years ago, he was seated in the backroom of a Greenwich Village saloon known as "Hell's Hole." He was talking to a couple of gangsters—Hudson Dusters—the subject of a friend of his, "Scotty," who had dealings with the gangsters in a furniture deal, and he managed to smother their rage and induce them to forego their intended vengeance.

He did this with a curious mixture of restrained intensity, mild contempt and blunt camaraderie which showed that he shared the spirit of these roughnecks and yet failed to share it. His spirit was made up of almost equal parts of deeply articulate proletarian and aristocrat, and he both blended to an undistinguishable whole.

In using the noun "proletarian," I do not mean to indicate that he was in any way a social-radical. The underdog in one of his plays is a trapped, snarling, futile being, with recalcitrant feelings that lead only to fears, and profanities, and heavy toll, and the swishing of fists against his companions, and with barely enough mind to realize—in his most depressed moments—his own insignificant and enslaved condition.

From "The Heaving Mud of Life"

In his first plays, O'Neill wrenched human beings from the heaving mud of life but did not give them sermons, and voluble "aspirations" toward "freedom."

Their dialogues were more restrained and cogent under his direction than they would have been in actual saloons, dives, ships, and jungles, but they were usually, in faithful and innate detail, expressions of the characters themselves, as far as any creator could make them so and still retain the unobtrusive aversions and dislikes that formed his individuality.

In the rear room of "Hell's Hole," with its cheap prints of race horses and chronos of unadorned women, its round, spotty tables, and the instrument of brassy agonies that played tunes of the day when you dropped a nickel into it, O'Neill would often utter his opinions on life.

His sallowly brown face, with its small, black moustache, long nose, and black eyes crammed with humorous contempt, would seem to grow metallic beneath his words.

One of his favorite assertions then was that the under-world and the creative upper-world would have to unite before the earth could become a safe and unhampered place for intelligent people—an aristocracy of swift brown and equally quick mind ruling over the more sluggish, hypocritical, and unimaginative men and women in all walks of life.

Again, he would often vent the conviction that poetry lurks in all of the objects of life, from the most common to the most ethereal, except that in the most common ones it is buried with a desperate skill and is much more difficult to unearth—a broad and delicate subtlety that often glitters out between the more roughly realistic lines in his one-act plays, and in "Anna Christie" and "The Hairy Ape."

His Old Humor Gone

Of course, 13 years can turn topsyturvy the surfaces and even the purposes of a man, and the present Eugene O'Neill has become the hero of a more polished and restricted environment—parlors and upper-studies, and suave clubs—although he is for the most part a hard-working hermit in his Provincetown and Connecticut retreats.

His face has become soberly abstracted, and his tall, lean body has a just perceptible droop, and a flicking of gray mixes with his black hair, and his thick lips are more tightly glued, as though in an effort at conscious restraint. Much of his old spontaneous humor, and swaggering and cheery "What-fo's," have departed, and the former boisterous renegade-creator has become a reserved and polite-mannered gentleman, with a distant look in his eyes.

THE BOSTON HERALD

MONDAY, SEPTEMBER 30, 1929

AT QUINCY TONIGHT

It will take a pretty rugged intellect to judge "Strange Interlude" on its merits as a drama, for the atmosphere in which the Guild will give the performances at Quincy is hardly conducive to sober appraisal. Most persons have already prejudged the play. They have not read it carefully. They have not discussed it with somebody who has seen it on the stage. They have taken the sayso of persons who themselves have not been qualified to express a sound opinion. In justifiable indignation at Mayor Nichols's banning, many have already determined that it is a masterpiece. And many have foolishly condemned it because they believe in no longer a play to Boston.

"Strange Interlude" is no longer a play to Boston. Like a football game or an early morning eclipse of the sun, it has become a spectacle. Everybody now wants to see it. Probably the Guild welcomes, in a way, the recent publicity, but certainly the Guild did not need it, did not seek it, and did not resort to any ballyhoo methods to keep it alive. The 7000 subscribers in the vicinity of Boston had already assured the Guild a successful season long before Mayor Nichols issued his first ill-advised instructions.

The Theatre Guild is a purely dramatic organization. Its object is not to break down or to test censorship laws, whether they are wisely or foolishly administered, but to present in the best possible way the finest plays available. Since the beginning of the unfortunate controversy, the Guild representatives have conducted themselves in an exemplary manner. They have wisely refused to become part of an organized movement to make "Strange Interlude" a text for anybody else. They have spoken for themselves and have had but one purpose, to present to Boston a play which the foremost critics of the world have pronounced one of the most significant dramas of the time.

In finding a dignified means for presenting near Boston the Pulitzer prize play of a man whose works have been acclaimed in New York, London, Paris, Berlin, Vienna and many other great cities, the Guild has rendered a great service to Boston and the drama.

OUR CENSORSHIP LAWS

To the Editor of The Herald:

In your issue of Sept. 28, Mr. Roger N. Baldwin, a director of the American Civil Liberties Union, is quoted as opposed to advance censorship of plays, books and meetings, and as believing that the great majority of Boston citizens would be glad to substitute for it the decision of judges and juries.

Evidently Mr. Baldwin is unacquainted with our Massachusetts laws on these matters. As to books, Massachusetts has no censorship statute and no statutory censor of books. Judges and juries are the only ones to decide on books. There is no person in the length and breadth of Massachusetts who can forbid the selling of a book. Will Mr. Baldwin point out what he thinks constitutes book censorship under Massachusetts law? If a book is sold and a complaint is made that it violates the statute against selling obscene books, the seller can be summoned to court and be tried by a judge, and a jury. If he wants one, just as any other defendant charged with a criminal offence.

As to theatres, we have a technical censorship in respect to Sunday theatrical shows, which must be previewed by the commissioner of public safety, and for a fee, under regulations which he promulgates under statutory authority. That is real censorship and is directed against the performance rather than the theatre. We have what amounts to censorship of theatres under the statutes requiring them to be licensed by the mayors of cities and the selectmen of towns. Authority is given to these public officials to revoke or suspend the licenses "at their pleasure." A special act of the Legislature (Chap. 348 of the special acts of 1915) affects Boston. This act constitutes the mayor and police commissioner of Boston and the chief justice of the municipal court of the city of Boston, as the license revoking or suspending authority, by majority vote, "at their pleasure."

Our supreme judicial court has upheld the constitutionality of these laws. In Commonwealth vs. McGann, 213 Mass. 213, Mr. Justice Loring, delivering the opinion, said: "There can be no question of the constitutionality of the statute, so construed. Some theatrical performances are beneficial and some are injurious to public morals. It is within the police power to forbid the latter and to secure the former by requiring all theatres to be licensed by public officials who are authorized to revoke and suspend the license 'at their pleasure.' And the justice explained that the words 'at their pleasure' in the statute, mean 'the exercise of a wise discretion, hav-

The Herald

SEPTEMBER 30, 1929

Harvard Professors Protest Customs Literature Censorship

Protesting against the proposed custom house censorship of political literature, Prof. Frank W. Taussig of Harvard, former chairman of the United States tariff commission, and 10 of his fellow professors at the college yesterday sent a letter to Senator Walsh at Washington opposing the provision in the pending tariff bill.

The letter was signed by Prof. Taussig who is of the economics department and the following professors and their departments: Edwin F. Gay, economic history; Zchariah Chafee, Jr., law; Edward A. Whitney, literature; Ernest A. Hooton, anthropology; Arthur N. Holcombe, government; A. M. Schlesinger, history; Ralph Barton Perry, philosophy; Charles Fairman, government and Karl W. Bigelow, social ethics.

It read as follows: Dear Senator Walsh—We, the undersigned, are strongly opposed to the provision in the pending tariff bill, section 305, paragraph (a), relating to the importation of immoral articles, which would extend further the application of the present law. For the reasons stated below we object particularly to the proposed amendment authorizing customs officials to exclude books and other publications which, in their opinion, advocate treason, insurrection, etc., in the same manner as obscene and other indecent publications.

Experience has shown that customs inspectors and appraisers of merchandise are ill-equipped to pass judgment upon the character of such publications. We have had one very unsatisfactory episode here this year, when a book used by the French department was excluded by the customs officials and the publisher paid many similar episodes. If the censorship at the customs houses is extended to political writings, few, if any, books which are of interest to us fall clearly within the provision of the proposed amendment to section 305, but there are many valuable books which, we fear, may be excluded by untrained officials inspired by honestly patriotic but unintelligent zeal, if this provision is enacted into law.

We believe that a political censorship of kind by administrative officials at the customs houses is unsound in principle and likely to prove oppressive in practice. We urge you to do what you can to bring about the elimination of this proposed measure from the tariff bill.

Why Judge Grant Takes Off Hat to Nichols and Comes Right Out in Favor of Censorship

Magistrate Gives Reasons for Belief "Strange Interlude" Should Be Barred
---Admits He Is a Brahmin and Is Proud of It

An especially drawn portrait of Judge Robert Grant by Savelle, Boston artist.

By Charles P. Haven

Perhaps not the least of the surprises connected with Mayor Nichols' banning of "Strange Interlude" came the other day when Judge Robert Grant, himself an author of high literary attainments, a member of the American Academy of Arts and Letters, wrote a letter upholding the Mayor's position and, at least in this case, putting himself on record as being in favor of literary censorship by the civil authorities.

Censorship of any kind is as a rule as repugnant to the literary artist, as is a crimson flag to a hero. Among all the major workers in beautiful letters in America, the only one who champions the idea of censorship whom one can call to mind is George Jean Nathan. And George is so perverse and contrary by nature—and maybe by policy—that one suspects his extraordinary stand on the question may arise from sheer perversity.

A Conservative Man

Judge Grant is a man of extremely conservative habit and bearing. His legal training and experience has made him careful of what he says for publication. For a quarter of a century he was Judge of the Probate Court and during the same period he wrote and had published some 30 books. He combines the lawyer with the literary artist in an unusual personality.

His letter speaks for itself. Judge Grant told me and explained his position clearly enough. He would augment his statement to this extent: That he took his stand upholding the Mayor for the same reason that City Censor John Casey believes personally as well as officially in censorship. That reason is that due, perhaps to the trend of the times, the people who wish to sell theatrical entertainment would offer nothing but a choice of smut on the Boston stages if there weren't a strict censorship.

Time to Check Moderns

Judge Grant said that he wasn't at all sure that this isn't an accurate diagnosis of the times. If this so-called modern generation wishes to cram its low ideals and its glorification of sex appeal down the throats of the elders, it is about time they were checked, he put it.

"Strange Interlude" is nothing more than a discussion of morbid sex psychology and is unfit for presentation, he

His position, he told me, was carefully thought out and written as he would some years ago have written a coldly logical opinion when he was on the bench. He said in part:

An easy-going world, outside of Boston, had already accepted the play "Strange Interlude" that has caused all this bother. But our Mayor at least has shown himself a man of courage and as the New York Times hinted in its pleasant article "By-Products," Boston is entitled to its own opinion even against the world.

"The essential inquiry in every controversy is 'What are the facts?' Not many who are vociferously discussing this question have read the play.

"I bought and read it months ago, as I do everything that O'Neill writes. He is an important literary artist, fearless and dynamic. I admire much of his art and some of its dramatic consequences. But I take off my hat to Mayor Nichols for his courageous verdict on 'Strange Interlude' in the face of that portion of the younger generation intent on crowning all heroines of irregular sex life as Madonnas.

"What does 'Strange Interlude' portray except sexual vagaries spun out to the dimensions of a disagreeable surgical operation for the delectation of a too smart world?

"The New York Times pointed out that there were no longer Puritans in Boston. True again. Either the language of respectability or the maw of the young intelligentsia has absorbed them. The name of our censor is Casey, which suggests the race that has largely supplanted them in Boston.

"As one who both Brahmin and a Puritan helped for 20 years to keep the scales of justice even between Puritan and Catholic in this community, I know well the virtues of that race. Chief among them are spiritual decency and unwillingness to substitute for the things that are lovely and of good repute nauseous vagaries masquerading as naturalness.

"If in this instance Boston makes herself ridiculous by her ban, so much the better. It was Boston who threw the tea chests overboard a century and a half ago.

"This challenge by Mayor Nichols to the complacency of the band of untrammelled but self-advertising young men and women who tell us what to read and why, will show at least that our majority, however bourgeois, still purpose to keep sewers under cover.

"Were Brown Heywood, Sinclair, Upson and Edna Millay St. John (I throw a mantle of obscurity around these names) to parade down Fifth Avenue stark naked in midsummer, just to be cool and comfortable, this would be natural as Adam and Eve.

"One has only to open the current Geographic magazine to see that the natives of primeval Papua do so still. But if in case some successor of Anthony Comstock should invoke an obscure Victorian law that landed them in jail, Boston would be able to answer 'At last, even sex appeal in the name of many who are vociferously discussing this question have read the play.

"I think. He is somewhat surprised that Eugene O'Neill, whom he regards as an artist, should write such a play. He said that he believes O'Neill was brought to do so in order to please the so-called intelligentsia among whom he moves, his play being a justification of their 'modern' point of view concerning sex relationships among the unmarried.

In his letter Judge Grant classifies himself as a Brahmin. I asked him just what goes to make up a Brahmin, he being the only confessed one in captivity. The question amused the Judge. He replied that perhaps the Brahmin could be described as being one of those Bostonians who have not lost the ideals of an older day.

Ask the Accusers

"But you had better ask those who first accused me of being a Brahmin," he said. "You know in the Sacco-Vanzetti case, President Lowell and I were continuously called Brahmins. Yes, you ask those who called me a Brahmin to tell you just what a Brahmin is.

Of "Strange Interlude" Judge Grant said that some of his friends had told him that the play (although it runs an unconscionably long time, nearly twice as long as the ordinary play), should be allowed presentation because it holds the attention. But, he said, this is no good reason for its presentation on the stage. "It may hold the attention, but it holds it in a morbid way. Not all things that hold one's attention are fit for presentation on the stage."

On Judge Grant's desk are a pile of letters from persons who endorse his stand backing up the Mayor. These people are not unthinking prudes, he said. They are people who are seriously interested in the art of the drama. So, apparently, Judge Grant. One sees in the opinion of Judge Grant. One sees in the man a determination to range himself, and, as far as he is able, his associates, against the alleged trend toward morbidity, lowered standards, license, as distinguished from liberty, and the exploitation of these things in the theatre.

It is some years now since Judge Grant retired from the bench of the Commonwealth. He still conducts his law practice in State street and is very much interested in social and artistic trends.

He is a man of medium height, virile and active as he approaches four score years. One senses that as long as Judge Grant is around, those who would pollute the arts, those who would weaken the moral code, those who would substitute modern license for old-time probity and high social standards have an opponent to face who will contest their advance at every step.

Here follows some of the most striking statements in Judge Grant's letter:

"I feel that I stand in an intelligent position to discuss this whole question," said Dr. Stidger, "because I lived through the inception of 'Elmer Gantry,' its writing and its publication. I know the spirit of this group from the inside. I know what they are after.

"I feel that I stand in an intelligent position to discuss this whole question," said Dr. Stidger, "because I lived through the inception of 'Elmer Gantry,' its writing and its publication. I know the spirit of this group from the inside. I know what they are after.

TRAVELER, MONDAY, SEPTEMBER 30, 1929

Congratulates Mayor

People's Editor:

The play named "Strange Interlude" has been banned in Boston. Mayor Nichols is to be congratulated on his firm stand on this matter. Boston always had the reputation of being strict in regards to plays of a loose character.

"Strange Interlude" is not a fit play to be seen in Boston nor any other city.

It is a play that would lead the young man and the young woman on the downward path to the gutter. What Boston needs is plays that are decent, inspiring and uplifting and above all, bring the morals of womanhood to a higher standard where they belong.

FREDERICK J. SULLIVAN.
South Boston.

SEPTEMBER 30.

DR STIDGER RAPS O'NEILL AND LEWIS

Minister Asserts Writers Lack High Ideals

Believes These Men Aim to Found New Moral Code

Addressing the morning congregation in Copley Methodist Episcopal Church yesterday on the subject: "Strange Interlude, Elmer Gantry and What Is Back of It All?" Rev Dr William L. Stidger declared that censorship as it functions in Boston is ridiculous and a mockery in the eyes of the Nation, but that if ever there should be a censorship on a drama, that on "Strange Interlude" is more justified than any that Boston has ever applied.

Dr Stidger had previously announced he believed that the whole Menckens, Lewis and O'Neill episode of modern literature and thinking has back of it the objective of establishing a new moral code in American life.

It was Dr Stidger who suggested to Sinclair Lewis that he write a real preacher book. Lewis spent several weeks in the Stidger home in Kansas City before writing "Elmer Gantry," and during those days freely discussed the ideas of the so-called "new morality" of a small group of New York playwrights and novelists.

Dr Stidger believes that the church's voice ought to be heard now most emphatically on this question, since the matter has been definitely interjected into preachers' meetings and public discussions.

"I feel that I stand in an intelligent position to discuss this whole question," said Dr Stidger, "because I lived through the inception of 'Elmer Gantry,' its writing and its publication. I know the spirit of this group from the inside. I know what they are after.

New Morality

"Let us have this matter out definitely once and for all, now, since the question is raised in Boston," Dr Stidger said in part:

"Defenders of 'Strange Interlude' tell us that Eugene O'Neill is to create a new morality in American life. More New York writers than O'Neill are attempting to do the same thing. Sinclair Lewis is expected to do it, and H. L. Menckens, and Theodore Dreiser. 'I do not bear any ancient fundamental grudge against any one of these men. I think that I appreciate their art as well as any person who loves great moving drama and fiction.

I have read everything these men write. It stimulates me. I need it. I have read 'An American Tragedy' and all of O'Neill's plays.

"I am opposed to censorship on principle, especially as it is done in Boston. I believe the censorship in Boston to be ridiculous. It makes us a mockery in the eyes of the nation. 'It does seem stupid that a single man—even the august Mayor of Boston—could decide for the cosmopolitan population of a great American city what plays it shall or shall not see. However, I want to say this, that if ever there should be censorship on a drama, that on 'Strange Interlude' is more justified than any that Boston has ever applied.

"O'Neill's friends say that he is to establish a new morality in American life. They cite this play as an illustration of the trend of that morality. Even a casual glance at the play will show any one just what this so-called 'new morality' would be if what O'Neill glorifies and interprets in this drama were to be accepted as the new morality.

"That 'new morality' would have as its first tenet the renunciation of our old Christian standard of the purity of woman. A second it would do away with the loyalty of one friend to another and it would allow a man to go into his friend's home and betray that home.

Sees Home Menaced

"If the things for which this book stands, the ideals that it sets forth in the name of art were to become the standards of our next generation, it would tear down government, home, love of wife for husband, parents for children; it would abolish the monogamous civilization which civilization has for centuries been building up.

"If America wants to accept these O'Neill, Lewis, Dreiser, and Menckens standards, that is all right. But let America know what it is all about. Under the guise of clever art—if not great art—these men are undermining the standards of decency, integrity, home loyalties, and monogamy.

"If America wants to know whether these ideas and ideals actually work—let America ask some of these same authors whether they have made successes of their homes, and of their human relationships. Let America ask them whether they have learned to adjust themselves socially and domestically. These new moral codes do not work.

"These same men are always challenging the church and the ministry; and they do not hesitate to challenge everything the ministry and the church does; its ideas, its ideals. I ask the O'Neills and the Lewises whether these standards which they set forth in their published works will actually stand the tests of life.

"Men like O'Neill, Lewis, and Menckens talk about delving down into life. Not a single one of these men has ever lived a single great word on the industrial or social problems of life. Not a single one of them know or has known the poverty of starvation. Not a single one of them knows anything about the struggle for existence. They have only scratched the surface of life."

American

September 29, 1929

QUINCY MAYOR TO SEE 'INTERLUDE'

The sale in Greater Boston of "Strange Interlude," Eugene O'Neill's much debated play, which opens in Quincy Monday night, will rest in the hands of a jury of three, it was announced yesterday from the office of Mayor Thomas H. McGrath.

The jurors will be the mayor himself and two members of the license commission, Chief of Police Ernest L. Bishop and City Clerk Ralph J. Crane. The third member of the commission, Fire Chief Arthur, is too ill to attend.

The plan comes as a sequel to the idea of the mayor to have a board of 25 representative citizens pass judgment on the play. This idea was given up when the city government found itself unable to get the necessary seats.

It was also announced the head of the ministers' association would be invited to witness the play.

MONDAY, SEPT 30, 1929

MINISTERS DEFER ACTION ON PLAY

To Hear Report Oct 7 on "Strange Interlude"

Action on "Strange Interlude" was postponed this morning until Oct 7, by the Methodist Ministers' Association, at its weekly meeting in Wesleyan Hall. The committee appointed at last week's meeting to review the play and recommend the proper attitude for the ministers was unable to meet this morning, but adjournment was necessary at 12 noon promptly to permit a number of the clergymen to go to Gloucester to attend the funeral of Rev Joseph Steffans, a member of the association who died suddenly last week.

This early adjournment, it was feared, would not allow proper time for the discussion of "Strange Interlude," and it was anticipated that many would have something to say on the subject. The matter was therefore held on the table until the following meeting, to be held on Monday, Oct 7. The speaker this morning was Rev William R. Leslie of St Mark's M. E. Church in Brookline, who described his recent travels through Japan, Korea and China, with the "lights and shadows" of each country.

Rev Everett C. Herriek, president of Newton Theological Institute, speaking before the Baptist ministers of Greater Boston at their meeting in Chipman Hall, Tremont Temple, declared that "the ministry has lost leadership." He went on with severe criticism of the low standards which are permitted to exist in the ministry today, and urged upon the ministers their responsibility to keep the standards high.

"The weakness of the church," he said, "is illustrated in Maine, where I was born and reared. There are 250 churches there without pastors. There is a lack of preparation and character for leadership. The ministry has lost leadership. Vast areas throughout the country have no religious service. They are real mission fields which appeal for men of God of heroic and sacrificing.

"People of the present day are growing in intelligence but losing faith. The churches are largely in the ministers' hands, and the ministers must make ministers as teachers make teachers. We should require more preparation for ordination. Nothing is more important to the church than a powerful ministry."

"INTERLUDE" ON TRIAL AT QUINCY TONIGHT

Plans Ready For Performance of Boston-Banned Play—"Jury" of 20 to Attend

QUINCY, Sept 30—A small army of stage hands worked a good part of yesterday and last night getting the stage at the Quincy Theatre ready for the opening performance tonight of "Strange Interlude." Electricians went all over the house inspecting lights and pronounced the house ready for the first performance. The scenery arrived Saturday and was put in place yesterday.

Members of the cast visited the theatre yesterday afternoon and inspected the stage, the acoustic properties of the house and the dressing rooms back stage. These members are making their headquarters at the Hotel Bellevue, Boston, during the Quincy run. Heavy traffic conditions were expected this afternoon and evening, and Chief of Police Bishop has detailed 11 foot men and two motorcycle officers to handle the situation in the vicinity of the theatre. These officers will be in charge of Sergeants David L. Farrell and Henry F. Riley.

Despite the fact that it was stated a few days ago that Mayor McGrath would have to forego the service of a citizens' jury, because he could not get a sufficient number of tickets, the Mayor was busy at 11 o'clock sending out tickets to men and women he had selected as members of the "jury." It was said at his office that 20 tickets had been secured, and it is presumed that the jury will be made up of that many men and women. It is known to be reasonably sure that there are several clergymen who have consented to serve. It was also inferred from conversations carried on in the Mayor's office that the presidents of several Public Libraries.

When the book was first purchased there was little demand for it, and there was no waiting list. Now, however, there is a waiting list of more than 40 patrons, and reservations are coming in in increased numbers daily, trustees report.

women's clubs will also be members of the "jury."

AMESBURY READERS SEEK "STRANGE INTERLUDE"

AMESBURY, Sept 30—Action of Boston officials in banning Eugene O'Neill's "Strange Interlude" has resulted in a pressing demand for the book at the

Find Interlude 'Not Guilty'

Quincy to Let Play Continue

After a scene of spontaneous enthusiasm that has never had an equal in the city of Quincy, the Boston-banned "Strange Interlude" was given the official sanction of Mayor Thomas J. McGrath in one of the most successful "first nights" in the history of the theater.

Unable to make an official finding for his "play jury," composed of clergymen, city councilors and substantial men, Mayor McGrath gave it as his opinion that the reaction of his jury was most favorable. The play will be allowed to run.

As the final curtain fell on the last act, a scene that will be long remembered by those who attended, broke forth in the theater.

Seventeen times were the players called before the curtain with the standing crowd stamping and shouting.

The audience, mostly composed of Boston's "first families," patrons of the New York Theater Guild, who had tickets to the opening of the play in Boston, scheduled at the Hollis Theater, were enthusiastic.

"I just loved it," Mrs. Mary Allen Crane, daughter of Gov. Frank G. Allen said. "I think it was a beautiful production."

MAYOR IN PRAISE

As soon as Mayor McGrath came into the open lobby after the surge of the audience from the theater he gave his "personal reaction" to the play.

"I was never so deeply moved by any performance," the bachelor chief executive said. "It is truly a wonderful work of art."

"One of the ministers, who attended the performance, told me that it was worth 100 sermons."

"I would never prevent anyone from going to see that play."

"I cannot understand why Boston banned it," he concluded. With a party of reporters, representing the press of the country, Mayor McGrath went across the street to a "press headquarters," established for the purpose, and issued his "formal statement," which was to be considered "official."

"The first time that I learned 'Strange Interlude' was proposed to be played in this town, I appointed a committee to compose a play jury. Every member of this jury was present tonight."

"I met many members of this jury in the lobby of the theater and talked with them as they came out. I also had a chance to talk with Mr. Crane, chairman of the Quincy board of license commissioners."

GLAD TO OFFER HAVEN

"I am going to await the reaction of all these jury members but I think that it is the consensus of

Innes in O. K.

"I DO not understand why Mayor Nichols banned 'Strange Interlude.' If I was mayor I would never have banned it."

Thus spoke Charles H. Innes, close personal friend of Mayor Nichols, coming out of the performance of "Strange Interlude" at the Quincy Theater.

"I do not want to engage in any controversy with Mayor Nichols, however," he added with a smile.

Our opinion here in Quincy tonight after witnessing this play that Quincy has furnished the opportunity for the presentation of one of the finest plays ever produced on the American stage.

"The ovation certainly indicated what the audience thought of the play and of the whole cast, particularly of Judith Anderson, and I am quite certain that the whole country will respond as did Quincy tonight in a long and indeed a prolonged sermon that has never been equaled on any stage."

"We are glad of an opportunity in Quincy to offer a haven for this play as it has now been demonstrated that the play is absolutely a premiere in its field."

GIVES ENDORSEMENT

"While no official decision will be made until I have received the letters from the members of the play committee, I can assure you there will be no interruption in the engagement."

"I have said I have talked with many of the play jury, a number of whom are members of the clergy. There were six clergymen, members of the play jury. I talked with three of them after the play tonight, and there was not one adverse report," he concluded.

The man in Quincy in whom resides the legal power to order any performance that does not meet the popular approval closed, forthwith, Emory L. Crane, chairman of the Board of License Commissioners, was not less enthusiastic than his chief executive.

"I am perfectly free to say that I can see no reason for stopping the play," he stated. "I, personally, endorse and greatly appreciate the opportunity of having seen it."

O'NEILL PLAY TONED DOWN IN STAGE VERSION

By E. F. HARKINS

"Strange Interlude," the Eugene O'Neill play that found at least temporary refuge in Quincy after being barred from Boston, is totally different from any other play to be found in American stage annals.

It is also, by the way, the first

Judith Anderson

play to be officially condemned in the Puritan capital and yet presented right outside the city gates so that the public might have an opportunity to judge for itself.

It is not a play for Puritans or pruders or those addicted to lollypop drama. In frankness of expression there has been nothing to match it on the English-speaking stage since the wide-open Elizabethan days. This frankness comes from characters actually and literally speaking their minds. They say one thing to each other and then, very often, they say quite a different thing as to themselves or to the audience. These are the "asides," an old stage device revived by O'Neill and used more extensively and pointedly in "Strange Interlude" than ever before, so far as American drama goes.

FRANKNESS ONLY ORAL
It is no play for children or for old-fashioned folk who are pleased with clowns and with girls who take off most of their clothes. The frankness of "Strange Interlude" is oral, not physical. There is only one passionate embrace in the whole play. But O'Neill does not sugarcoat his words. That is why some people do not like him. And the heroine in "Strange Interlude" is no Pollyanna. That is another reason for the barking against this curious and unique opus.

Besides all this, "Strange Interlude" is a play in nine acts. Without a doubt this has made the public curious to see it. It is one of those ideal diary events. "Went to see 'Strange Interlude,' a most unusual play, which starts at 5:30 in the afternoon and continues on till 11, with an hour's intermission for dinner. Never saw anything like it before."

Yes, if anyone has the time, a nine-act play is a curiosity not to be missed. Mr. O'Neill is showman as well as dramatist. He was brought up in the theater.

STRONG TALK FOR ALL
But the strong language is also a factor in the big box office success "Strange Interlude" has been making ever since it opened in New York a year ago last January, and so is the strange, sensational plot. In his obviously deliberate purpose to steer clear of all stage conventionalities O'Neill has gone to the other extreme. He is an artist who abhors the "clean play" slogan. Yet in bluntness of speech he has done none too artistic or plausible a job. He would have all his characters talk much the same—even the timid college professor and the queer esthetic man who hangs around the heroine and waits for her to surrender to him.

TAMER ON STAGE
The Theater Guild company taking part in this historic Greater Boston premiere at the Quincy Theater includes Judith Anderson, Glenn Anders, Richard Barbee, Maurice McRae, Tom Powers, Eva Condon, J. J. Burns and Ethel Westley. The performance will be reviewed in detail later.

All that need be said for the present is that the stage version is much milder in speech than the version on sale in the book stores. It is a very much expurgated "Strange Interlude" that the Guild presented at this Quincy premiere. The performance was admirable on the whole, with Glenn Anders, in the Darrell role, doing the best work of all.

TWO LECTURES ON

EUGENE O'NEILL'S PLAY

"STRANGE INTERLUDE"

(Banned in Boston)

HARRY W. L. DANA

will discuss the play on

TWO TUESDAY EVENINGS

October 8 and 15, 1929

at 8 o'clock

NEW INTERNATIONAL HALL

42 Wenonah St., Roxbury

Take Warren St. car from Dudley St. terminal.
Get off at Waumbek Street

Subscription for each Lecture — 35c

Auspices: WORKMENS EDUCATIONAL INSTITUTE OF ROXBURY

THE BOSTON HERALD

TUESDAY, OCTOBER 1, 1929

"A DEEPLY-MOVING PLAY"

To the Editor of The Herald:

The action of Mayor Nichols and the approval of many Boston ministers and others in banning "Strange Interlude" from the city is most absurd and misdirected. Read, this play easily gives a wrong impression. It seems profane, sordid and salacious. This was my own first reaction—and I have some slight knowledge of the drama, for it is my business. When I saw the play, I was held steadily and moved deeply for four hours by the depth of its tragedy, the beauty of its lines, the study of characters, and the excellence of the acting. The performance of Tom Powers stood out particularly as almost beyond anything I have ever seen.

Does this play advocate the things for which it is condemned? Hardly. But if it does, how much better to lead the public into seeing the play than to drive an even larger public into buying the vastly inferior book!

It seems to me that O'Neill is trying to probe the meaning of certain conditions that exist today—marital infidelity, for instance. Let us be given a chance to find out the why of these things. Let us not be denied the opportunity of seeing a beautiful, deeply-moving play acted in splendid fashion.

T. CARLTON UPHAM.
Fitchburg, Sept. 29.

Boston Transcript

224 WASHINGTON STREET, BOSTON, MASS.

MONDAY, SEPTEMBER 30, 1929

WHO THE JUDGES?

To the Editor of the Transcript:

It was good—not to say wise—of the Quincy ministers to reserve judgment on the "Strange Interlude" until they had seen it. We appreciate their eagerness to uphold morality and listen with interest to anything they have to say concerning it. One wonders, however, just how they would justify this self-appointed right to decide for the general public, which they assume in "reserving judgment." There may be other ideas as to what will harm the morals of an audience, and those ideas have as much right to be held—and heard—as theirs. The council of ministers should not be allowed to arrogate to itself or receive an importance out of proportion to the number of citizens that it represents. Let the pastors direct their flocks if they will, but leave alone those who deny their leadership, for there are fully as many out of the churches as in them.

DWIGHT L. CHAPMAN
Somerville, Sept. 27.

PURE FREUDIANISM

To the Editor of the Transcript:

The American Civil Liberties Union has kindly offered to take a hand in the "Strange Interlude" fight, its object being to make it impossible to forbid any play being shown in Boston, no matter how degenerate. It is of interest that it is also occupied in defending a group of Communists in Chicago who were arrested for agitating for the overthrow of our Government.

One point about "Strange Interlude" which has not been brought out is that the Theater Guild itself in its own magazine, interprets the play as pure Freudianism.

R. J. A. Berry, in an article in Current History for September says: "It is only natural that those who themselves are not overly burdened with brains should accept the pseudo-science of psychoanalysis." He attacks the modern psychology which deals with Freudianism, as being a false science based on a lack of knowledge of the human brain about which it professes to know so much. He says, "This is just another instance of the nonsense which today passes for mind, and it is unreasonable for the blind to pose as leaders of the blind."

Perhaps our "Intelligentsia" who prides themselves on being so very clever because they appreciate this marvellous play, are not so intelligent after all.

SARAH DODGE
Boston, Sept. 29.

IN SARCASM

To the Editor of the Transcript:

Now that it is decided that Quincy is to have the opportunity of seeing "Strange Interlude" I want to urge that the audience be enlarged by the girls from the Quincy High School. If the play had been given in Boston the Vincent Club girls were to be present to distribute programs. It seems to me very undemocratic to give only to girls of wealth and fashion the broadening experience of seeing this charming representation of a heroine so modern and progressive that she practices abortion, adultery, and promiscuity with complacency. The daughters of the proletariat should be allowed to share such a great opportunity, especially as it seems likely that they may have difficulty in securing copies to read, since it is maintained that the text is too indecent to be sent through the mails. By all means admit the school girls.

BRELAH MORSE
Boston, Sept. 28

O'NEILL PLAY ON TRIAL BEFORE JURY TONIGHT

FATE OF PRIZE DRAMA RESTS ON QUINCY VERDICT

"Strange Interlude," Barred in Boston by Mayor Nichols, Will Make Bid for Acquittal in City of Presidents — Jury to Make Report to Mayor McGrath During Intermission and Then Return to See Play Through—Early Decision Expected

With the largest jury ever assembled to pass on a criminal case, "Strange Interlude," Eugene O'Neill's prize-winning play, goes on trial for its life tonight in the Quincy Theatre.

The play, indicted, arraigned and condemned in Boston by His Honor Mayor Malcolm Nichols was sentenced by his honor to exile.

COURT OPENS AT 5:30
Tonight at 5:30 court will be called. The trial will start with His Honor, Mayor Thomas McGrath of Quincy, presiding. The charge is "tending manifestly to corrupt the morals of youth." The trial tonight is an appeal from the Nichols decision.

Admission to the courtroom in the Quincy Theatre, will be by ticket only. His Honor, Mayor McGrath, has promised to announce his verdict as soon as the evidence has been completed.

The "best evidence rule" will prevail, for Judge McGrath has refused to accept opinion evidence concerning the production, and will allow the play to speak for itself.

Court will be called promptly at 5:30 o'clock. There will be no official "Hear ye, hear ye," but the curtain will go up and the trial will start when the first words of the much-mooted play are spoken from the stage. From a strictly legal viewpoint, there will be a precedent set tonight, for his honor will hear opinions from the jurors during the intermission. The intermission to allow the jurors to eat will begin at 7:30 o'clock and continue until 9 o'clock, when the jurors will once more resume their study of the case. During that time the jurors will privately inform the judge as to their ruling, and he will then make his formal finding. It is believed that he will hold the play "not guilty."

ACTORS DRILLED
The cast of characters received their words of advice yesterday from their counsel. He coached them carefully on the stage of the theatre, and instructed them as to what to do and what to say in order that the play might make the right impression on the jury tonight. It was a dress rehearsal for the trial. Discussion concerning the famous trial was rampant. Throngs will attempt to get into the courtroom tonight, but there are no seats available. No standing will be allowed in the courtroom. So much has been said about the play that the jury is considered fortunate to be able to see it. Ministers have disagreed about it. Harvard professors, doctors, lawyers and laymen have all expressed their views, but so far there has been no clear-cut decision. The Boston decision was made without a hearing. More than 600 Harvard professors, instructors and students signed a petition approving unreservedly the decision of Mayor McGrath in according the play a fair trial. He received the petition today, and noted that 50 members of the Harvard faculty had signed it.

The stage setting of the trial is elaborate. Full trappings arrived yesterday. Today all entrances to the courtroom were carefully guarded. Special deputies and other court officers will be on duty long before the time scheduled for the trial to start.

No special precaution will be taken to protect the jury against outside influence, for the reverse effect is desired by Judge McGrath. He wants them to reflect public opinion.

The cast of those who will strive to free "Strange Interlude" from the stigma attached to it by the Nichols decision includes players who performed in New York, before any criminal charge was brought against the play. Judith Anderson heads the cast, which includes but seven players. These seven will perform nine acts. The others in the cast are Eva Condon, Ethel Westley, Glenn Anders, Tom Powers, Richard Barbee and John J. Burns.

Mayor McGrath received 150 letters and telegrams today, commending him for his attitude and for his determination to give the play a fair trial. The letters express confidence that his verdict will necessarily be one of not guilty.

He received one anonymous communication saying that he had jeopardized his entire political future by allowing the play to be presented.

He has been given 31 seats for tonight's performance. Of these he has retained four for his personal use, given seven to the council and distributed the remainder among representative Quincy citizens, including six ministers who represent all creeds.

They Appear in "Strange Interlude" Tonight

Actors who will present Eugene O'Neill's nine-act drama at Quincy Theatre tonight. Left to right and the characters they play: Eva Condon (Mrs. Ames Evans); Ethel Westley (Madeline Arnold); Glenn Anders (Edmund Darrell); Judith Anderson (Nina Leeds, the heroine); Tom Powers (Charles Marston); Richard Barbee (Sam Evans), and John J. Burns (Gordon Evans).

Quincy theatre, which will be scene of opening of Eugene O'Neill's play.

NOTABLES ARRIVING FOR "STRANGE INTERLUDE" OPENING

Group in front of Quincy Theatre. Left to right: L. C. Prior, proprietor of Brunswick and Lenox hotels; Mrs. M. E. Prior, Mr. and Mrs. Spencer Hill, Mr. and Mrs. Frank Sawyer, Charles H. Innes and Mrs. Innes, and Edmund Carson.

Mayor McGrath of Quincy about to assume role of play judge. Former Mayor and Mrs. Patch of Gloucester and Congressman A. Platt Andrews.

CLEAN BILL CERTAIN FOR O'NEILL DRAMA; NOTABLES APPLAUD

M'GRATH FINDS NO OBJECTIONS TO 'INTERLUDE'

'One of Finest Plays,' Is Mayor's Verdict on Leaving Theatre

MANY OF JURYMEN ALSO VOICE PRAISE

Fashionable Throng Invades Granite City for Opening Night

At the close of the presentation of "Strange Interlude," Boston banned play, in Quincy last night, while issuing no official verdict. Mayor Thomas J. McGrath, who sat through the entire performance, expressed his personal approval of the Pulitzer prize drama by Eugene O'Neill in no uncertain terms.

He further told of talking with many members of the play jury he had appointed after the performance, and then expressed the belief that there would be no interruption of the play's engagement in Quincy.

17 CURTAIN CALLS

Charles H. Innes, accredited as one of Mayor Nichols's closest advisers, was also sat through the performance, was quoted as saying after the presentation that were he mayor of Boston he would permit its presentation here.

The entire audience, all of whom stayed to the very end, by applause and cheers expressed their approval. There were 17 curtain calls at the end of the last act, before they were satisfied to allow the performers to retire from the stage.

Before the expression of enthusiasm had ceased, members of the audience besieged Mayor McGrath, sitting in the second row. In turn they shook his hand, thanked him for allowing the presentation of the play in Quincy and expressed his or her approval of "Strange Interlude."

The mayor was surrounded by newspapermen, who enticed him away from the admiring throng and took him across the street to press headquarters. Mayor McGrath issued the following statement:

MAYOR'S STATEMENT
The first time that I learned that "Strange Interlude" was proposed to be played in this city, I appointed a committee as a play jury. All of the members were present tonight. I met many of them and talked with them as they came out after the performance. I also had an opportunity to talk with Mr. Crane, chairman of the board of license commissioners.

I am going to wait for the reaction of all the committee. I think it is the consensus of our opinion here in Quincy tonight, after witnessing this play, that Quincy has provided the opportunity for the presentation of one of the finest plays ever produced on the American stage.

The ovation certainly told what the people thought of the play and I am quite certain that the whole country will respond as did Quincy tonight to a long, prolonged sermon.

We are glad of an opportunity to offer a haven to this play in Quincy. While no official verdict will be made until later, I hardly believe that there will be any interruption of the engagement.

Only a fraction of the audience was made up of Quincy citizens, the main part being composed of Theatre Guild subscribers from Boston. These were liberal in their applause when Walter Prichard Eaton of the Pulitzer prize jury, in a speech before the start of the play, expressed the gratitude of the Theatre Guild for the opportunity to show the play.

Of the Quincy people present, 18 were chosen by the mayor to comprise a jury to pass on the morality of the play. This number included representatives of citizens, ministers and city councilmen. Among the ministers were the Rev. Eric Lindh of the Bethany Congregational Church, and the Rev. Edwin Noble of the First Universalist Church. Councilmen present included Edward A. Sandberg, W. P. Hughes, Ralph Prout, W. G. Young and Angelo Bizzozero.

The feelings of these members of the jury could not be learned during the progress of the play, but Mayor McGrath's attitude was foreshadowed when he stated during the intermission that he saw nothing objectionable in the play. Quite the opposite, he found it "very interesting."

"Do you see anything objectionable so far?" He was asked.

"Lord, no," he replied, "I think it is very interesting so far."

It was a big night for Quincy. In addition to the spectacle furnished the residents by the events preceding the opening, it was a large item in the proceeds of the food merchants. During the intermission, from 7:30 until 9 o'clock, every restaurant in the downtown section was crowded, and some had waiting lines. Parking spaces saw more elaborate machines than ever before.

CROWD COMES BY MOTOR

The crowd came by motor car, although there were extra trains and buses from Boston. An extra train leaving the South Station with only seven passengers, but the automobile traffic was heavy for a half hour before the start of the play.

In an address to the audience prior to the presentation of the play, Walter Prichard Eaton first expressed the gratitude of the Theatre Guild to the city of Quincy, especially to the "minded mayor," then declared the Guild did not relish as advertising the show publicity which has descended upon O'Neill's play.

"The reason is simple," he continued. "The six men and women who compose the Theatre Guild have sacrificed for 10 years to make a true art theatre in America. The function was not only in New York but in other cities as well. They had only one end in view, to make the best and most significant play they could find, in the best possible manner. They have never considered their interests except as necessary to make the event. When they first proposed 'Strange Interlude' it was with the conviction that it could not run more than seven weeks. They produced it because they considered it an extremely important modern play, by one of the world's foremost dramatists."

CURIOSITY APPARENT
Although Quincy took the play in stride, there was an undercurrent of curiosity clearly felt throughout the downtown section. Long before the first arrival reached the theatre, the groups and individuals near the street corners near the playhouse, looking at the dull street scene, were not just been committed.

A group of 15 policemen under Capt. Daniel H. Doran, spread along the street, and kept people moving away from the low-hung marquees and the street, radio horns blared and a warning sign indicating that the police was the scene of big things.

Advertising automobiles sped up the down Hancock street in front of the theatre, with signs calling attention to the excellence of their wares. The tempting food emporium saw a large throng to the crowd by means of a machine with a loud speaker strapped to its guard of the machine.

SPECULATOR LOSER

A few yards away, a speculator sidled up to a man offering choice seats at $35 a seat. Before the play had started, it was a matter of fact that the speculator was a loser.

Most curious among the spectators were the police. They were asked that a cluster of men and women across from the theatre were appropriated for grandstand seats. While the police stood by, the first of the playgoers to arrive were Congressman A. Platt Andrews, and Mr. and Mrs. Lenox

They posed for photographers, and had scarcely entered when the police, in twos and threes approached newspapermen to ask the identity of "the celebrities."

Walter Prichard Eaton, dramatic critic and member of the Pulitzer prize jury which awarded a prize to "Strange Interlude" was an early arrival. So also were Theresa Helburn and Lee Simonson of the Theatre Guild. Although the Guild had made the brave gesture of selling tickets weeks in advance, the officials were nervous in anticipation of the verdict of Mayor McGrath. The last of the playgoers were even more nervous than on the night the play opened in New York, and the officials spent some time in calming the ruffled nerves of Judith Anderson, who plays the lead.

MAYOR ARRIVES

Passing automobiles slowed up as the crowd near the theatre grew, and many motorists manifested curiosity. One, a burly, toll-spotted ice truck driver, slowed up to inquire of a police officer, "What the hell's going on here?" As darkness approached, the booming of flashlights attracted a crowd of idlers, who gasped as important-looking playgoers stepped from their high-priced automobiles. When Mayor McGrath arrived on foot, accompanied by his sister, Miss Theresa McGrath, the crowd edged closer, although police ordered every one to keep moving.

The mayor said that there were 18 men on his jury, including six ministers. He declined to give out the names of those comprising the jury, but said that "if the play is offensive to me, it will probably be offensive to them."

Quincy was affluted today with the report that the mayor had received a cable from Eugene O'Neill congratulating him on his stand, but the mayor stated emphatically that this was not so. He did appear gratified, however, that the liberal attitude taken by his office was being favorably received in many sections of the state and the country.

INNES ON HAND

A late arrival, whose presence caused much speculation, was Charles Innes, well-known Bostonian, once characterized "as the night mayor of Boston."

Mr. Innes was accompanied by L. C. Prior, proprietor of the Hotel Lenox. Innes was accorded the tribute of a battery of flashlights and the clicking cameras, the frequent mention of his name in connection with the banning of the play in Boston having served to whet the interest of the playgoing public. Others whose presence brought out some interest were: Prof. Harry Dana of Cambridge, Mrs. Frederick Jacques Whiting of Sudbury, Prof. James Hardy Roper, Prof. Eldin James of the Harvard law school, George Dutton, Alden Macintosh, Mr. and Mrs. Frank Choubeau Brown and Mr. and Mrs. Frank Sawyer.

The Rev. Eric Lindh of the Bethany Congregational Church, Quincy, and the Rev. Edwin Noble of the First Universalist Church, both of whom were said to be members of the play jury, were recognized by the crowd, as was City Clerk Emory L. Crane of Quincy. The latter, who is also chairman of the Quincy licensing board, was the subject of much interest and speculation.

"Among those present," as seen by cartoonist at Quincy premiere of "Strange Interlude."

INTERLUDE GIVEN O. K.

Mayor McGrath at Conclusion of Performance Calls It Beautiful Play—Big Audience Reserves Hearty Applause Till Final Curtain

NOTABLES AT "INTERLUDE" OPENING
On left of photo are L. C. Prior and his mother, Mrs. M. E. Prior, and in center are Mr. and Mrs. Charles H. Innes. The photo was snapped shortly after the opening of the doors at the Quincy Theatre last night.

Performers Given Big Ovation—Official Verdict Today

PREMIERE ATTENDED BY NOTABLE THrong

No Disturbance Mars Rendition—All in Fine Humor

"It is a beautiful play, worth a hundred sermons," said Mayor Thomas J. McGrath of Quincy last night, following the presentation at the Quincy Theatre of "Strange Interlude." "I have a handkerchief in my pocket now that is wet with tears. I see no reason why the play should not go on."

BY GRACE DAVIDSON
"Strange Interlude" won the approval of the Mayor of Quincy and Emery L. Crane of the Licensing Board last night, after the first New England presentation of the Eugene O'Neill Pulitzer prize play banned by the Mayor of Boston.

For 10 long minutes the audience cheered, applauded, thumped on the floor and shouted bravos after sitting through nine acts of the play in what appeared as a quiet, nonchalant mood. The cast somewhat timidly responded with not less than 15 curtain calls, and when Judith Anderson, the ill-fated Nina of the much discussed play, took a lone curtain call the audience burst into a show of enthusiasm characterizing a Symphony Hall gathering at a high point of a great Symphony programme.

OFFICIAL VERDICT TODAY
The final official decision will be made some time today when Mayor McGrath has received the verdicts from the various members of his advisory jury and the full consensus of opinion from those

Interlude Is Approved by Mayor of Quincy

QUINCY MAYOR AT "INTERLUDE" OPENING
Mayor McGrath is shown at the entrance to the Quincy Theatre last night.

Continued From First Page

who might have the power to stop the play. But, with the O. K. from the Mayor and the chairman of the licensing board who stated that "they could see no reason why the play should not go on," no doubt rested in the minds of the Theatre Guild that the play would not enjoy a long run in Quincy. "I want more than one handkerchief, it was worth a hundred sermons," said the Mayor. "It was a wonderful play with a great message beautifully and sincerely acted."

The Mayor gave his statement to the press immediately after the performance. It was evident that he was moved by the tremendous ovation following the final curtain. Friends, supporters, and among them Henry Wadsworth Longfellow, stopped him on the way out to reassure him that "Bostonians were only too happy to journey to liberal Quincy, where they could see the best in the art of the drama."

As he attempted to edge his way out of the theatre, chairman of the licensing board, Emery L. Crane, visibly excited, jostled his way to the side of the Mayor and said, "Well, it is all right for it to go on. I have never sat through such a remarkably moving play pointing to such a fine ideal."

Then, Mayor McGrath finally reached the press headquarters across the street from the theatre where he made his formal statement to the press in which he termed the play "an achievement in the advance of American drama."

Reporters queried him with questions if he saw a line or word that he would call "salacious."

No Appeal to Young People
His answer was that every line belonged in the context of the play and he did say he did not think the sombre note of what he called a tragedy would appeal to young people.

The Mayor pointed out that the great ovation of the audience was enough evidence of the demand for the play by a representative audience. The audience came through the doors smiling and more talkative as they piled into the cars, busses and trains.

The news reached the east and theatre Guild officials that the play had met with the Mayor's approval and only the official announcement was to be waited.

Eating House Ads
Quincy took on a metropolitan appearance last night with the arrival of a distinctly Boston audience, an array of automobiles clogging the main street.

a few social registerites were noted, but for the most part, it was a mature audience, grey hair and bald or partly bald heads predominating. The college element and younger set seemed to take possession of the balcony, leaving the orchestra for a gathering of quiet orderly adults, a few ministers, college professors, judicial-looking professional men and women and a goodly number of business men with their wives. This orchestra turn out was practically the regular Theatre Guild

Congressman Andrew In Quincy Audience

Noted among well-known persons in the audience at Quincy were Mrs. William A. Gaston of Boston, Mr. and Mrs. Charles H. Innes of Boston, Lermon C. Prior of Boston, Congressman A. Platt Andrew of Gloucester, Professor Harry Dana of Cambridge, Mrs. Frederick Jacques Whiting of Sudbury, Mrs. Daniel Haviland of Hudson, Mr. and Mrs. Frank Sawyer of Boston, Mr. and Mrs. Frank Chouteau Brown of Boston, Professor James Hardy Roper of Cambridge, Professor Eldin James of Cambridge, George Dutton of Boston, Alden Macintosh of Boston and Judge John W. McNerny of Quincy. With Mayor McGrath was his sister, Miss Theresa McGrath.

stir. The Mayor expressed decided surprise when he looked about and saw Hancock street, the main street of Quincy, choked with slow moving vehicles, the metropolitan nature of the audience and the gaping onlookers. He was paled with questions from the reporters which included not only Quincy and Boston scribes, but two or three New York representatives.

Too Early for Evening Clothes

He announced that his decision would be given at the end of the performance and said that he was pleased with the representative nature of the audience. Few of the people came in evening clothes, although it was an audience that would do the fish tails and décolletage at a performance beginning at the regular time of 8:30 where they wouldn't be breaking a breach of etiquette by appearing before six in dinner clothes.

Five Ministers Present

Yet, the sprinkling of two dozen or so which did arrive in evening clothes lent a splash of color and grandeur to what was otherwise a non-descriptly dressed crowd, bundled in warm coats as a challenge to the damp drizzly weather which characterized the opening. However, those who did come in evening clothes received a specially enthusiastic welcome from the photographers who urged upon in vain to stand and pose.

Five ministers were among those in the audience and they included the Rev. Eric Lindh of the Bethany Congregational Church and the Rev. Edwin L. Noble of the First Universalist Church, both members of the "play jury," though Mayor McGrath refused to di-excitement audience of 1400 persons listened intently to the opening performance of Eugene O'Neill's "Strange Interlude," here, tonight. No wild enthusiasm was noted in favor of the play, and not an egg-onion-cabbage or the tiniest particle of ancient fruit, or more recent cat-calls, was forthcoming against it.

NO TROUBLE

There was no disturbance inside or outside, before or during the show and the piece was played to an orderly conclusion. A mixed audience it was that witnessed the play. Surely it was not a "society" affair and just as surely it was not a big night for flappers. Also, men were not present in overpowering numbers.

In All Sorts of Dress

The audience came in a variety of dress, ranging from evening gowns and opera cloaks, to afternoon wear and even a sports costume or two. Elderly

Innes Would Allow the Play If Mayor of Boston

Charles H. Innes, personal friend of Mayor Nichols of Boston, after witnessing the "Strange Interlude" with Mrs. Innes and denying that he in any way represented the Mayor at the show, declared it his personal opinion that "if I were Mayor of Boston I'd allow this play to go on."

Indies of a dowagerish air and manner were on hand aplenty, and the younger women of the "intelligentsia" recognized at so-called radical turn-outs, from Sacco-Vanzetti meetings, textile strike exhortation gatherings, Sunday forums, and free public lectures, all but equalled them in numbers.

The rank and file of regular playgoers were well represented, but with the difference that the men were not so many tonight, for some reason or other.

The audience arrived by train, street car and automobile, taking almost a full hour to fill the house before the moment for the curtain for the first act at 8:30 p. m. There was a buzz of conversation all over the house by 20 minutes to play-time.

At 8:35, when nothing had happened, and the curtain was five minutes overdue, general applause broke out, sweeping from pit to balcony in a wave of enthusiasm of a gonted sort. The organ responded with a short overture and then Walter Pritchard Eaton stepped forth and the footlights went on, and the night's adventure was on with a short introduction, thanking the Mayor of Quincy and deploring the fact that the Theatre Guild had to feel itself banished from Boston for trying to bring out a "work of art," by Mr. O'Neill.

A second burst of applause came when Mr. Eaton finished, and then everybody settled down to take in the show that had been discussed so long and so furiously.

A Matter of Fact Audience

When the curtain rose, not a sound could be heard. And the quiet in the audience remained just like that throughout. It was an intently listening audience tonight. But it was a matter-of-fact one. Very few discussed the play itself before it began, and during the hour or more intermission the business of trying to get something to eat occupied so much time and energy in the overtaxed restaurants and luncheons that little or nothing was said of the play.

There were no crowds, except for a thousand or so youngsters and young folk, who collected in the street to watch the audience come out at intermission time. They lined Hancock street for blocks in two directions, standing and looking and saying not a word.

All on Good Behavior

There was no rowdiness and, even in the throng who stood around to watch the "intermissions," there was no refreshing excitement.

Many of those who came by automobile, crammed themselves into the restaurants and luncheons and "dog carts" all over town, striving in the heat of good humor to get something to eat. They stood five deep in the popular luncheons, reaching under and back of the counter to grab trays and generally assisting, when they could, the counter-man.

Complain of Low Voices

There didn't seem to be any time tonight to discuss the play. Once or twice somebody in the theatre would ask "Why don't they speak louder? I can hardly hear what they say."

Or someone would ask, "what do you think of it?" And then go about talking of something else without waiting for an answer.

The general conversation seemed to be about just those things which the regular run of folks talk of all the time—the last week-end house party, the domestic difficulties of the family, and this and that which had no bearing at all on the play.

Many Curtain Calls

At the conclusion of the play, the audience showed its first burst of enthusiasm, applauding and applauding until many curtain calls satisfied it. Even this demonstration of admiration, however, including the whole house, orchestra and balcony, continued while men and women kept standing and putting on the topcoats and, moved to and up the aisles and out.

Call It Wonderful Play

There was general expression of appreciation of the play, and not a voice was heard in argument against it. Nearly everybody declared it a wonderful play and a wonderful performance, and considerable surprise was expressed that there seemed so little to find offensive in the entire presentation, even if one were hunting for it.

All left the theatre in the same orderly, matter of fact manner in which they had entered it, and nothing appeared to have unduly excited or ruffled them.

MAYOR ENTHUSES

"Beautiful Play. Great Moral Sermon." Approving Verdict of Quincy Executive—Willing to Let Play Continue But Will Await Jury's Verdict

BY ELLIOT NORTON

Mayor Thomas J. McGrath of Quincy, accompanied by his sister, Miss Teresa McGrath, arrived at the theatre 10 minutes before the curtain was scheduled to rise, and from that time till he finally announced his approval of the

Five of Six Clergymen Present to See Play

Five of the six clergymen selected by Mayor McGrath to witness the "Strange Interlude" were quickly recognized as they entered the theatre. They were the Rev. Eric J. Lindh of the Bethany Congregational Church, the Rev. Howard Key Bartow of Christ Episcopal Church, the Rev. Edwin L. Noble of the First Universalist Church, the Rev. Rosamond McDonald of the Atlantic Methodist Church and the Rev. Hugh Leggat of the People's Union Church, also president of the Quincy Ministers' Union.

play at the finish, was the centre of all eyes off-stage.

The Mayor, internally clad in black, and with a hooked pipe dangling from between his teeth, met the newspaper delegation at the door, consented to pose for pictures and to discuss his activities in bringing the play to Quincy. He stated that, although he was not then certain, he felt that his own opinion would coincide with the opinion of his jury of 26 prominent citizens for whom he had finally secured seats, and who sat through the show presumably without knowing one another's identity.

Asked who the members of the play jury were, Mayor McGrath refused to declare other than to state that "six of them are clergymen of this city." Five of these clergymen were identified in the audience.

The Mayor sat through the second row centre, with Miss McGrath. In adjacent seats were Charles H. Innes of Boston, Congressman A. Platt Andrew and members of the Quincy Council, some of whom were unofficially reported to be members of the play jury.

The Mayor watched the piece with great attention, and with little concealed emotion. He afterwards stated that he completely wetted his pocket handkerchief in applying it to his eyes.

Mayor Applauds Vigorously

At the intermission, the Mayor, with his sister, walked up Hancock street to a modest lunch room where newspapermen and women, and other guests of the Theatre Guild had their supper. This time he refused to discuss the play.

On his return to the theatre he sat quietly through the rest of the show, after announcing that he would give his final verdict at the conclusion of the subscribers who attended the offerings of this organization last season when they played at the Hollis Street Theatre.

THE "INTERLUDE" OBSERVERS
City Councillors of Quincy shown at opening of play last night. Left to right, W. P. Hayes, Ralph H. Proctor, Welcome C. Young, Edward J. Sandberg and Angelo Biziozero.

A Nervous Audience

However, it was a nervous audience. Despite their seeming unconcern, it was difficult to suppress up the old nonchalance. Flashlights of the news photographers and an array of policemen met them at the entrance of the theatre. A crowd of onlookers, sometimes 100 strong and again dwindling down to a couple of hundred edged the entrance of the theatre in the spirit of a wedding throng, watching for "here comes the bride."

Charles H. Innes and his wife caused the first big ripple of excitement when they stepped out of their limousine to the explosion of a huge flashlight. Mr. and Mrs. Innes appeared a little nonplussed and amused. Reporters rushed up to the friend of Mayor Nichols who banded the much discussed play from Boston and asked, "Mr. Innes, are you representing the Mayor of Boston at this auspicious occasion for the city of Quincy?"

Quite Unofficial

"No," said Mr. Innes, "my wife and I are Guild subscribers and we have just come to see the play for no other purpose. It is quite unofficial."

For a moment, he shied away from the flares of the flashlight and then graciously consented to pose with Mrs. Innes in the midst of the crowds entering the theatre.

Mayor McGrath and his sister, Miss Teresa McGrath created the biggest vulgar their names. The Mayor made it very definite at the outset of the performance that he was using no hidden methods of play. Jurors, he would merely consult with these anonymous advisers of his some time during the intermission.

Curtain Late in Rising

Because of the general undercurrent of excitement the curtain did not rise exactly at 8:30, according to the well-organized plans of the Theatre Guild. Automobiles for the most part carried the audience to Quincy and as not all could boast of chauffeurs it took a little time to park the cars in the open spaces of the free parking lot behind the theatre. Many, however, came by train and not a few by busses.

The curtain rose at something like 8:41, revealing the lone figure of Walter Pritchard Eaton on the stage about to make a plea for the success of "Strange Interlude" in Quincy. He spent some minutes expressing the Guild's gratitude to the city of Quincy, to the Mayor, who he termed "fair minded," and to the Guild supporters.

Talk of Other Things

"Interlude" Audience Orderly and Inclined to Be Elderly—More Interested in Food Than Art—Actors' Voices Do Not Carry

BY JACK HARDING

A matter-of-fact and free-from-

Little or No Action

As an evening's entertainment, it is prove pleasant or otherwise, according to the viewpoint of the spectator. It is composed entirely of dialogue, with little or no action and the introduction of what are technically known as "asides," intending to express

POLICE DETAIL AT THEATRE AMPLE

The police detail for the opening of "Strange Interlude" was more than ample to meet requirements. Captain Daniel H. Doran was in charge on the spot, with Sergeants David Farrell and Henry F. Riley, three uniformed officers inside the theatre and 10 outside including 12 especially assigned to augment the Quincy traffic squad in directing the stream of automobiles going and coming.

O'Neill Play Grates on Ear at Times, But Gets Idea Over

BY EDWARD HAROLD CROSBY
 "Strange Interlude" is a play which probably has created more strenuous and widespread discussion than any other drama in recent years. Its daring theme and text, which is startlingly frank, together, with the fact that it has been awarded the highest praise from erudite people

ity | ral
the ess top hal ent
gue
to was
to en uch

the
to
was m-ny
the lon
onstic

ell
ing
It
th lon
as
the

"Strange Interlude" Seen.
Heard and Approved in A Tranquil Evening

To approach the playhouse was to be caught into the meshes of the New York numerisms. To right and to left of the entrance, groups of bystanders surveyed the arriving audience, as in New York for example, the socially non-descript vectors of the press of their better-to-ward a premiere. Mr. Noel Coward, Mr. Noel Coward. Across the street lounged more cloaksters; two in front of them were posted two police motor-cycles ready for emergency. Whether less or more readily than in New York, the doors had been made ready, no one could say. The array of reporters and photographers was nearly countless. They seemed to have no other occupation than an elegant idleness from which no eye could find a strand of distraction at the theater-entrance the hand-bills of a restaurant, could beguile them. At the intermission, the departure and the return of the audience assembled, the very theater, from mouth to ear quips upon the street and distraction. In some instances worthy of the sidewalks of New York. At the moment of departure, the enraptured photographers stirred themselves to flash their treasures of light and distraction from a tinkle and photographed from the roofs across the way, would have looked precisely the same.

A black and white photograph of four people (three men and one woman) seated around a small table in a studio setting. The man on the left is in a dark suit, the woman in the center wears a patterned dress, the man on the right wears a suit and tie, and the man on the far right is in a light-colored sweater. They are all looking towards the camera.

The Crowning Scene—Act VI—of O'Neill's Play, "Strange Interlude"
Darrell (Mr. Anders); Nina (Miss Anderson); Marsden (Mr. Powers); Evans (Mr. Barber)

Examine an such and such, and you will find a certain "strange Interlude," as stage-people call it. O'Neill's play searches out the dark corners of human minds, the secret passions of human hearts; but such exploration is not the custom and the prerogative of the masterful imaginative playwrights. O'Neill's personages are fated by air and circumstance to do as they please of themselves. He submits them to no orthodox code of morals, no prescribed assumptions, no established authorities. He would be it with, his right. In his own plain fashion, he speaks in the face of the words of this present day. It is Caesar's right to deny him and it an ingratitude speech. Will out it must—and in the quick flashbacks of the theater. No, the so-called moral objection to "Strange Interlude" is an objection to the imagined courses of imaginary characters. It is urged by such as find those courses repellent or at odds with their own preconceptions, ideas, decisions, passions dictating them. All of which is to say that a censorship ordained reasonably enough as a protection of the innocent against pornography, obscenity, immorality, would not be sustained plied against books and plays by those who mistrust them. Or else degenerates into mere hysterical shrieking. Against such a censorship whoever regards freedom will insistently fight. No doubt the results will vary in intelligent community taste.

To hold these opinions is not to hall "Strange Interlude" as a masterpiece. Far from it. Rather, the play is an ambitious experiment with which Mr. O'Neill has variously succeeded, variously fallen short. On the technical side he has widened the scope and increased the readability of the present stage. Since he himself and the players of the Theater Guild have persuaded audiences to spend five hours and a half before a given play, less intervals for changes of setting and for a hasty change of the lives of his personages. Since those personages speak not only to others, but in revelation of their subconscious and that husband's mother to that husband's wife—sounds with the tragic note. Nina's winning of Darrell to be the father of her child is the first step in her ecstasy over motherhood is lyric; her pride in it vibrates anew to the heroic key. Though the final acts decline, through them tragic ironies play fully; while the final scene gains the power of a tragedy of the pathetic beauty. Throughout the play, it is O'Neill the poet and O'Neill the stage-innovator, who are flexing naturalistic drama to new range, content and purpose.

Yet always with slips along the way and always with dependence upon the players. Even the stage-version does not everywhere curb Mr. O'Neill's habit of repetition; while the printed version is too ready to repeat the same thing three or four times, giving dry his psychological moments. The new-found mawkishness of "aside" and soliloquy is sometimes clumsy and lingering. In his zeal for the emotional effect of his characters, O'Neill tortures them and sets them to torturing each other—with relentless Freudian insistence. He must seem his Eighth Act with sudden death, his Ninth with a confession of his character's sin, lead the audience slack attention. He can dull words as well as wing them; be humorless and tasteless both; overdo, inflate; take shelter in a pseudoscience or a mysticism. Between scenes and stances and shudders his mind and hand do not always discriminate.

from self-content to self-content under the gilt and tinsel of successful commonness; Miss Anderson sensual, neurotic, hard-surfaced as Nina, seething beneath her willier hair pasted down by wax; ecstasies and raptures sitting, her gathering stress and released climax—were the audible, the visible proof. Hardly less in their episodic scenes Miss Condon as the mother divided between the torturing and the sympathetic, the motherly present, Mr. McKee as the Leeds to whom books and his academic world are more real than his self-scourged daughter, Mr. Burns as the son who brings happiness to the joyless father, Nina taking away all the honest harshness of youth. And once the play is established all these players may regain a most desirable clearness of speech. Surely it was lacking in this first performance. The second night they were significantly un-daring "Strange Interlude" with doubts and fears; lavishing the more upon it every pains and every wisdom of production; through eighteen months finding out what would work best, and up and down the West conveying the play, last making it ready for the few remaining "major cities." Then in Boston encountering, for the first time, the children of the city, the young men, the clergy, the nifties, in and out of print, of hysteria and sensation. The wonder is that The Guild did not quit the scene in a decent self-respect, impatient of such humiliations. They could have done so. Instead, it quietly persisted until it had won a hospitable suburban stage; then held its tongue, with a just aloofness awaited the issue. So far as the saving rescue of the play from the public life of Boston, may give decision, the fate of "Strange Interlude" was decided last evening. The Mayor of Quincy, however to the credit of an open, intelligent, honest, fair-minded citizenry, has declined to place the stool sits the Boston censorship, none more making the city the common laughing-stock. Until that censorship is restricted, there can be neither reason nor peace in the regulation of the theater; no fair game, no fair play, no fair prize it and those that submit to it. Yet, by all precedent, nine hundred and ninety-nine of us will go cheerfully on — to the

On Boston Boards

Reasons Enough

FOR better or for worse, the town has heard much of late about the motives of the Theater Guild in the production of "Strange Interlude" both in New York and in other cities—mainly from persons who could have no possible knowledge of them. They happen to be set forth in a letter to the Board of Managers of the Guild written by one of the members, Mr. Lawrence Langner, when circumstances compelled his absence from the meeting, in April, 1927, at which Mr. O'Neill's play was to be finally considered. Here it is in print for the first time:

We now have an opportunity of making a connection with Eugene O'Neill, who is considered throughout the world as the greatest dramatist America has ever produced. Let us lay aside all personal feelings and admit that a man whose plays are being given in London, Paris, Berlin, Prague, Vienna and Moscow is unique among American dramatists, and that by doing his plays we not only honor him but we honor ourselves.

In "Strange Interlude" we have probably the bravest and most far-reaching dramatic experiment which has been seen in the theater since the days of Ibsen. O'Neill's genius was never more clearly shown than in this play. O'Neill has already stated that it needs cutting and is repetitive in parts. The fact remains that it is essentially dramatic, and if the drama is ever to progress as rapidly as the novel has progressed, it will be essential to adopt the new technique which O'Neill, with his astounding genius, has shown in the "Strange Interlude." To my mind, this play marks an epoch in the theater. There can be no possible doubt as to its tremendous importance. It is as important in relation to the drama of the future as "A Doll's House" was in relation to the theater before it. If I have shown some vision in the past regarding the direction of the theater, believe me when I say that this is the next step forward in playwriting; the poetry of the unconscious to offset the stark realism of the conscious; the science of the new psychology and the mysticism of God the Father. This play contains in it more deep knowledge of the dark corners of the human mind than anything that has ever been written before. It proclaims O'Neill the great dramatic genius of the age. As an important experiment it knocks "Back to Methuselah" into a cocked hat.

The Guild lost nothing in artistic prestige by its courage in producing "Back to Methuselah." It did lose the sum of $25,000 because of the extremely expensive production. With the "Strange Interlude" the Guild should not lose anything like this, because owing to the small scenic expense and the use of a unit set, the production expense can probably be carried without financial loss by the Theater Guild membership. None of O'Neill's plays is as perfectly written as this play; if the Guild did it, none would be better produced. If we fail to do this great experiment, if we lack the courage and the vision, then we should forever hang our heads in shame, for we will have lost one of the greatest opportunities in our history. Indeed, the theater being what it is today, it almost devolves upon the Guild to produce this play, as the only surviving art theater in America, for the demise of the other art theaters such as the Neighborhood Playhouse, places upon us the solemn responsibility of being the first to recognize the work of genius and to dare to experiment, even if it be accompanied by financial loss, if that experiment be in the direction of greatness. One thing we can never lose by such a course—our prestige and our self-respect. Such impulses exist, but he who has 'em will please try to control enthusiasm. People, if I've been so frank, I don't know what Hoboken calls the perit, which is just this: Remember, girls and boys, hilarity is different from mere noise.

Acidulous

Who are the inhabitants of Boston? Where do they buy their books? Do they come to New York to see their plays? These queries arise as a result of the recent banning of Eugene O'Neill's "Strange Interlude" from performance in a Boston theater. It is unnecessary to repeat what has been said before about the play's quality, about the playwright's eminence, about the respectability of the producing company—the Theater Guild of New York—or about the fact that the play received the Pulitzer prize in 1925 as the most outstanding drama of the year. "Strange Interlude" thus suffers in Boston the fate of Theodore Dreiser's "An American Tragedy," Sinclair Lewis's "Elmer Gantry," and H. G. Wells's "The World of William Clissold." Boston now has the distinction of having put on its index expurgatorius four of the best known living writers in English. One might, of course, take the time to make up a list of twenty-five of the most distinguished writers of the entire world, living or dead, with the almost complete assurance that all of them would receive the disapproval of Boston's puritans. But it would not be worth the trouble. As long as books banned by the authorities can be bought surreptitiously in Boston—as they are bought—and as long as the people of Boston do not care enough about their reputation for good judgment and sanity to protest against the actions of their censors, whoever they may be, and demand that these same books be sold openly as they are sold in any civilized place, Boston, we offer, deserves just about what it gets in the way of literature. [The Nation (New York)]

The periodic outbursts of the censorship disease in Boston must appeal to the imaginations of people interested in the irrational aspects of human behavior. In the same fashion that a beautiful and extraordinary case of, say, erysipelas would fascinate a body of medical men, Mayor Nichols has now found that Eugene O'Neill's "Strange Interlude" "has no place on a Boston stage." The mayor read the printed version of the play. The Theater Guild points out that the passages which shocked him are not included in the acting version. But we suspect that had the Theater Guild announced that the play would be given in pantomime, it would have been suppressed just the same. Mayor Nichols was obviously gunning for it. We wonder why? Mr. Nichols is a graduate of Harvard University, a former newspaper man, a member of the Church of New Jerusalem, a Mason and an Elk. These facts do not seem to throw much light on the matter; but the fact that Mr. Nichols is, has been, and presumably intends to be a politician operating in Boston, is in itself illuminating. When a politician goes out of his way to take a firm moral stand, it is a safe bet that he does not intend to lose anything by it. And a Boston mayor who goes out of his way to condemn O'Neill's "Strange Interlude" is, obviously, boosting his stock with two important elements—that is to say, the Watch and Ward people and part of the church population. . . . Mayor Nichols, in declaring that one of the most important plays of the leading American dramatist has no place on a Boston stage, seems strangely to have judged Boston with considerable accuracy. The Theater Guild is putting up a fight. But the verdict as to whether His Honor is wrong or right rests nowhere but with the people of Boston. [The New Republic]

THE WAY OUT

To the Editor of the Transcript:

A community which has unrestricted legislative power over a particular subject ought to be satisfied with the laws that it makes upon that subject. Under the first amendment to the Federal Constitution, the freedom of speech and press are left with the States, which may control either or both by such legislation as may seem fitting and proper; and the Massachusetts constitution declares: "The liberty of the press is essential to the security of freedom in a State; it ought not, therefore, to be restrained in this Commonwealth."

Under such a broad field for legislation as this, someone ought to know whether or not "Strange Interlude" is proper for enactment on the stage. Rome had her Cato, "the Censor," on whose mind no outside literary influence ever prevailed; and if Boston has her Nichols, "the Censor," on whose mind no outside influence can prevail, then it is for the legislative department to find the remedy.

Censorship has been the most useful in supporting the doctrine of the divine right of kings to rule, and both have declined in about the same proportion that the right of the people to govern themselves has advanced.

Paul says: "Let every soul be subject to the higher powers. For there is no power but God: the powers that be are ordained of God." Whosoever resisteth the power resisteth the ordinance of God; and they that resist shall receive to themselves damnation."

And this doctrine of the distinguished evangelist became a sort of a political platform for the nations which believed in the divine right of kings to rule. But John Locke had different conceptions as to the source of government, showing, most clearly, that kings ruled by consent of the governed, and nothing more, a doctrine that found its way into the Declaration of Independence and the Federal Constitution, thus securing to Americans the right to govern themselves, through their own chosen rulers, with the right of impeachment when necessary.

But the struggle for constitutional liberty in England was more difficult. There were times when the publication of parliamentary debates was prohibited under penalties, a rule which was followed in the colonies to some extent. Paine could not return to his native land without being prosecuted for writing the "Age of Reason." Elliot's book in defense of immorality, popular fiction, and California's book criticizing Cotton Mather, were publicly burned in Cambridge, Mass., in colonial times.

Lord Erskine's greatest forensic effort was made to save the life of a shoemaker under indictment for conspiracy to put the king to death, because he was secretary of an organization to promote parliamentary reform. Lord Mansfield would allow nothing to the discretion of juries in prosecutions for libel upon the Government, once getting the famous verdict: "Guilty of printing and publishing only." And Judge Chase of the United States Supreme Court was impeached for following the ruling of Mansfield in a prosecution under the Sedition Law, the enactment of which caused the destruction of the political party of Washington and Hamilton, and others of former days.

Lord Bacon said: "The punishing of writs enhances their authority, and a forbidden writing is thought to be a certain spark of truth that flies up in the faces of them that seek to tread it out."

The same communities do not always see the same things, or similar things, in the same light. "Way Down East" was always popular in Boston, but not so in London; while "Strange Interlude" is said to be popular in London, but not so in Boston.

How would the character Nina, as described by Judge Grant, in "Strange Interlude," compare with the character Agnes in Oliver Twist, if this great work of Dickens should be dramatized?

E. W. PHILLBRICK
Week's Mills, Me., Sept. 30.

IN BRIEF

To the Editor of the Transcript:

Now that "Strange Interlude" says through brave Quincy—"Veni, vidi, vici," it shows how many "Honi soit qui mal y pense" cusses there are in Boss Town.

ALFRED DAVENPORT
Boston, Oct. 2.

OUR MAIL BAG

FROM AN EMINENT NEUROLOGIST

To the Editor of The Herald:

I have seen "Strange Interlude" and here are some of the reflections which the play called forth:

First of all, the censor or censors fell into the prevalent error that sexual equals erotic. To people who are still fettered by childhood notions, sex is something to be whispered about, except perhaps to that repository of all the strange things of life, the doctor. But sexual may equal biological, as it does to the scientist; it may equal tragic, as it does to all the great dramatists; it may equal the comic, as it does to farceur and travelling salesman; it may be a source of illness, as it seems to the psychoanalyst. The erotic phases of it are insignificant compared to its biologic, tragic, comic, catastrophic phases. Apparently, sex must be drained of its endowments and toned and whittled down into sentimentality before it becomes acceptable to our rulers.

In "Strange Interlude," the sexual phase is mainly tragic, though it comes perilously near the comic at times. (As when Nina sits knitting or sewing with the three men who love her in a kind of inverted harem.) That any one can find lewdness in a play in which sexual irregularity brings tragic disorganization of character (the downfall of the lover, Darrell), in which illicit love causes a boy to hate his real father, and finally impels the son to strike him in the face with a blow that shocks an audience into frozen horror—that any one can find anything erotic in a play replete with such incidents shows that such a one is like the schoolmistress' clock which struck 13 "not to tell the time of day but because there's something wrong with its insides." It takes an obsessive puerility to pick out the erotic phases of "Strange Interlude," and if any one had forbidden desires before he witnessed the play, he could get no comfort or sanction for his passion from O'Neill's masterpiece.

The second set of impressions which the play left me with concern the famous observation of William James that we tend to pick out of the stream of life just those few things which interest us. The censor is mainly interested in the sexual, so he sees the play as erotic, obscene or what not. But one could easily say that as important a theme is the spirit of renunciation which runs through the drama, in the refusal of Darrell to claim his love and his child because that would hurt his friend, Sam; in the continuous self-sacrifice of good old Charlie; in the fettered Nina herself who will not go with the man she loves because she is mother both to her son and her deceived husband. And running through the play is the protective father spirit of the rather ridiculous Professor which becomes transmuted like a mantle to the rather ridiculous Charlie. How about the fierce mother spirit of the elder Mrs. Evans, who shields her son from the knowledge of the impending disaster of his insane heredity and imposes on her daughter-in-law a necessity to protect the husband she despises and to deceive him, a deception which restores him to self-confidence and by its imputed virility brings him power and wealth?

This play says clearly that a scientist like Darrell cannot have two mistresses, science and another man's wife, and its most poignant and tragic scenes concern themselves with the breakdown of his personality through his divided life, while his regeneration comes when passion disappears and the great mistress Science calls to her lover. Perhaps "Strange Interlude" is best interpreted as a struggle between the starkly male lover, Darrell, and the non-sexual father lover, Charlie. Passion finally meets defeat, and the Nina who has yielded her all to its heat turns at last to the place of an understanding and protective love. The pattern of the sexual in this fascinating play is thus interwoven with the rich and varied patterns of life itself.

Since I am not a professional critic of the drama, I can not say with any authority whether or not "Strange Interlude" is a great play. I fall back, shamelessly, on the good old cry of the amateur, "I know what I like." There are places which offend my own egoism, as when the main dramatic personae are depicted as having rheumatism of the back and an ungainly gait in the late 40s and the early 50s. I think the psychoanalytic touches of the first few scenes, as for example, the father complex of the Professor and Nina, and the mother complex of Charlie are a bit naive. Now and then the extraordinarily effective asides become unreal, and the frozen actors look perilously like wax figures. The ending, with the caricatured Charlie and the chastened Nina, settling down, made me squirm a bit and mither "a sappy ending." But all in all, I revelled in the play; the nine acts (or nine innings as a graceless nephew expressed it) never once lost their grip on me, and the insight of the playwright into our hidden but conscious selves made me realize that our deepest understanding of our fellow-men may come from the stage.

I paraphrase a tragic sentence of one of the characters when I say that I hope that the banning of this brilliant play from the Boston stage as well as the tyrannical banning of fine books from the shops of our city will some day be a Strange Interlude between the historic and renowned Boston of the past and a gracious, tolerant and civilized future. ABRAHAM MYERSON.

Boston, Oct. 7.

terpreted as a struggle between the starkly male lover, Darrell, and the non-sexual father lover, Charlie. Passion finally meets defeat, and the Nina who has yielded her all to its heat turns at last to the place of an understanding and protective love. The pattern of the sexual in this fascinating play is thus interwoven with the rich and varied patterns of life itself.

Since I am not a professional critic of the drama, I can not say with any authority whether or not "Strange Interlude" is a great play. I fall back, shamelessly, on the good old cry of the amateur, "I know what I like." There are places which offend my own egoism, as when the main dramatic personae are depicted as having rheumatism of the back and an ungainly gait in the late 40s and the early 50s. I think the psychoanalytic touches of the first few scenes, as for example, the father complex of the Professor and Nina, and the mother complex of Charlie are a bit naive. Now and then the extraordinarily effective asides become unreal, and the frozen actors look perilously like wax figures. The ending, with the caricatured Charlie and the chastened Nina, settling down, made me squirm a bit and mither "a sappy ending." But all in all, I revelled in the play; the nine acts (or nine innings as a graceless nephew expressed it) never once lost their grip on me, and the insight of the playwright into our hidden but conscious selves made me realize that our deepest understanding of our fellow-men may come from the stage.

I paraphrase a tragic sentence of one of the characters when I say that I hope that the banning of this brilliant play from the Boston stage as well as the tyrannical banning of fine books from the shops of our city will some day be a Strange Interlude between the historic and renowned Boston of the past and a gracious, tolerant and civilized future. ABRAHAM MYERSON.

Boston, Oct. 7.

A MEETING TO PROTEST CENSORSHIP

Speakers:
PROF. TECHAMIAH CHAFFEE, Jr., of the Harvard Law School.
DR. ABRAHAM MYERSON of the Tufts Medical School.
JOSEPH LEE, president of the Massachusetts Guild League.
MAYOR THOMAS J. MCGRATH of Quincy.
E. A. WEEKS, Jr., of the Atlantic Monthly Club.
JOHN S. CROGAN of the Civil Liberties Committee of Mass., Chairman.

FORD HALL
ASHBURTON PLACE
TOMORROW NIGHT, WEDNESDAY, OCT. 9
at 8 P. M.
ADMISSION FREE
Anglers of the Civil Liberties Committee of Massachusetts

MINISTERS RAP BAN ON O'NEILL'S PLAY

Universalist Body Oppose the Present Censorship

The Boston Universalist Ministers' Association at a meeting in the Church of the Redemption, this city, yesterday went on record as opposed to the kind of book and play censorship imposed in Boston and pledging its efforts to help in an effort to change the state laws dealing with censorship and to "place there a law which shall deal with the content of a book and not with isolated passages."

After discussing the attitude of certain ministers towards the producing of Eugene O'Neill's play, "Strange Interlude," in this city, the ministers adopted a resolution recording themselves as against "books, motion pictures, plays and magazines indecent in purpose, against the type of censorship imposed upon this community both with and without warrant of law, and especially against the banning of 'Strange Interlude' without examination of the text."

Continuing, the resolution set forth that they pledged themselves to support publishers, playwrights and producers who try to elevate the standards of faith and morals.

The Rev. Dr. Clarence R. Skinner of Tufts College and minister of the Community Church of Boston, spoke on "The Evil of Censorship."

"When a censor," he said, "prohibits the sale of a book or the production of a play which has been brought to his attention as containing passages that are obscene, he is not doing his duty, because the law says that such books or plays, as the case may be, must not be circulated. The real responsibility for the state of affairs lies with us for allowing that law to exist."

"To banish a great piece of art, such as 'Strange Interlude' undoubtedly is, and then allow some of the things that go on unprotected in some of our vaudeville and movie houses is a perversion of the law. It is also illegal, and you can protest against it such. We should insist that this censorship committee be made large enough to be representative. It is time for men to dare to be free of this unwise and illegal censorship of books, plays and free speech."

THE BOSTON HERALD

WEDNESDAY, OCTOBER 9, 1929

WATCH, WARD PASSES "STRANGE INTERLUDE"

Not Actionable Under Law, Says Official

Sales of the "Strange Interlude" book will not be interfered with by the New England Watch and Ward Society, it was learned last night. The reading committee of the society, composed of the Rev. Raymond Calkins of Cambridge, president of the society; Dr. David D. Scannell, formerly chairman of the Boston school committee, and Francis Choteau Brown, architect, have reported that the book is "not actionable under the law."

The Rev. Calkins told The Herald last night that the action of the society was in no way a reflection on the judgment of Mayor Nichols. "We only act when we feel that, in our opinion, a book is actionable under the law, and we found that 'Strange Interlude' is not," he said.

Boston Transcript

224 WASHINGTON STREET, BOSTON, MASS.

TUESDAY, OCTOBER 8, 1929

OUR CHANGED CITY

To the Editor of the Transcript:

About twenty-five years ago, late at night, I was coming into the very small town of Ozark, Alabama. A street fair had jammed the town with people. But when I registered, the hotel man gave a glance at my name and residence, and said: "From Boston, the Hub of the Universe; you'll sleep in my house tonight." I accepted his hospitality and occupied one of the best beds on that trip through the South.

Boston was not the "Hub of the Universe" to that man because of its geographical location, or its wealth. It had thus intruded itself in his mind as well as in the collective mind of the country because it had a progressive history as well as a record of achievement on the side of human and intellectual freedom and progress.

I need not tell you that there is a different opinion now even in Ozark, Alabama. Though we still have more universities, more libraries and more evening college classes than any other city of equal size, yet we are painted in such false colors by men who represent an entirely different attitude, that we are now the laughing stock of the country.

We have censorship of books and plays. We are told what to see and what to read. Our Art Museum has hardly a modern picture in it, in spite of the fact, as shown by the September Arts Magazine, that more people are buying modern pictures in this country than ever before.

And were it not for the fearless and able leadership of our Symphony Orchestra by a man as independent as Mr. Koussevitzky, our Brahmins would not permit a new piece of music to be played unless it was an imitation of one of the old compositions.

All this comes about through a lack of leadership and co-operation amongst our intelligent people. Those who are ultra-conservative are united in church organizations and in political organizations. They continually agitate for what they want and against what they do not want. Even if they are a minority they make noise enough to appear to be a majority.

When it comes to sex they believe in "putting the lid on." Like ostriches, they think they can dodge the issue by hiding their heads in the sand. Those who believe that this kind of an attitude to sex is perilous and that the best way to handle the matter is by a frank discussion, are not less moral than their conservative opponents. It is but a difference in viewpoint. The young people of today know more about sex, but are no more promiscuous than were their parents.

Those who believe in the modern idea of the way to handle the sex question do not ask the conservatives to see plays that are in opposition to their viewpoint. They only ask that they themselves be not prevented from seeing them. They do not quarrel with the old-fashioned ideas, all they ask is that the city be not made ridiculous by numberless and foolish "Thou shalt nots." Because Boston in the past has a record of intellectual progress, freedom of press and platform, we progressives insist that it remain so. In that at least we are conservative.

The Guild membership can be the nucleus of an organization for the purpose of protecting the fair name of our city, and to further its ideals.

S. H. WALDSTEIN

Boston, Oct. 4.

BOSTON EVENING TRANSCRIPT.

TUESDAY, OCTOBER 8, 1929

Assails Censorship at Ad Club Luncheon

"Censorship at its best is the worst thing we can have and we should not let politics enter into art," said Paul Meyer, publisher of the Theater Magazine, who was the guest speaker at the weekly luncheon of the Advertising Club of Boston today.

Speaking of present day conditions in the theater, Mr. Meyer said that they are killing the goose that lays the golden eggs. Although there has been for the past four years an epidemic of obscene plays, he said, he does not believe that the public wants this sort of entertainment. So far as the actors themselves are concerned, he said, they do not like to appear in roles that picture the sordid side of life.

The "talkies" he declared to be the most important factor in the revival of the American theater, which he said is "coming back with a vengeance." The speaker referred to the stage as the greatest display window in the world, and explained that nowhere else could there be obtained so many ideas as to dress, furniture, decorations, and so forth.

He said that more control should be exercised by American parents in regard to the plays that their children attend. Touching on the Boston situation regarding "Strange Interlude" he said that New York was genuinely shocked when it learned that O'Neill's play had been banned here.

"It was the work of a genius," he said, "and it won the Pulitzer prize. I don't think the judges were such fools, so somebody must be wrong."

The speaker paid a tribute to the Theater Guild and reverting again to the mistakes made by managers said: "Business is business, art is art, and never the twain shall meet. The American theater awaits a ones to lead it out of the wilderness. I would like to make a strong plea for someone to endow a conservatory of the drama, so that we might be assured of sufficient good plays and sufficient artists to present them. Give the public what it wants. Be fair and square. Treat the theatergoers as they should be treated and then the stage, the movies and the talkies will help one another for the benefit of mankind."

There were present at the head table a number of theatrical people including Judith Anderson, Tom Powers, Richard Barbee and Glenn Anders of the "Strange Interlude" company; Grant Tinker, Janet Beecher, Sophie Tucker, Mrs. Tom Powers, Vernon Gray and Clarence Griffin. President Louis D. Gibbs was in charge of the meeting and Travers D. Carman introduced Mr. Meyer, who in turn presented the theatrical folk to the audience.

THE BOSTON HERALD

THURSDAY, OCTOBER 10, 1929

TWO BANNINGS

Won't some metaphysician with a fine legal mind, or some lawyer with a metaphysical background please try to explain the recent course of banning in Boston?

Scribner's Magazine of May contained the first instalment of Ernest Hemingway's "A Farewell to Arms." Nobody seems to have objected. When the June number appeared, the police suppressed it on complaint of somebody whose identity has not been made known. The Watch and Ward Society suppressed the July, August, September and October numbers of the magazine. The story appeared in book form on Sept. 27. The Herald reviewed it last Saturday. Neither the police nor the Watch and Ward Society has moved to suppress the volume. That is commendable inaction, but why, if the book itself is unobjectionable to our two censorship agencies, did they suppress five out of the six instalments?

The Watch and Ward Society announced yesterday in The Herald that the unexpurgated book version of "Strange Interlude" is unobjectionable. The expurgated stage version was banned in Boston by the Mayor. Just where are we at?

CENSORSHIP

To the Editor of The Herald:

In the reply, published in your issue of Oct. 6 current, of Director Roger N. Baldwin of the American Civil Liberties Union to my communication printed in your issue of Sept. 30, Mr. Baldwin says that the remedies for the present censorship in Boston rest with the Legislature; that as regards books, under the present law only one passage of a book has to be held to be obscene to condemn it wholly.

The opponents of what they call "book censorship" do not understand, I fear, what the real gist of the decisions of our courts is. The statute says nothing about passages, and I suggest that Mr. Baldwin and his lawyer friends, who he says support him, read the statute carefully. It is section 28 of chapter 272 of the general laws. What the statute prohibits is the sale of a book "containing obscene, indecent or impure language or manifestly tending to corrupt the morals of youth." Can Mr. Baldwin or his friends point out a case in Massachusetts of a conviction on a single passage of a book, unless the passage has been determined to contain such obscene, indecent or impure language as to render the book unmarketable? And, by the way, if the insertion in a book by its author of only one passage may make the book unmarketable under the present law, why would it not be a simple thing to delete the one obscene passage, just as we take a rotten apple out of a barrel so as not to render the whole barrel unmarketable?

Now let us see what the judge said to the jury in Commonwealth v. Buckley, 200 Mass. at 350: "You are to determine from the language used, and from such other parts as are necessary to explain that language, whether it is obscene and impure, and whether it manifestly tends to the corruption of youth."

It is my belief that under the statute no complaint or indictment would leave out those words, "manifestly tending to corrupt the morals of youth." Yet that is what the Library Club, Inc., wants to have done in the case of books. And it is my belief that no Legislature in the immediate future will do any such thing. The committee on legal affairs of the current Legislature refused to take out those important words. They refused also to weaken the statute by letting the bookseller go scot free if he didn't know that the book contained obscene language. How many retailers of milk or vinegar or eggs could be convicted if they were entitled to acquittal upon convincing the court that they sold these articles in good faith, believing them to be up to the legal standard and upon a warranty from the wholesaler that they were legal?

SAMUEL W. MENDUM.

Oct. 8, 1929.

THE BOSTON HERALD, THURSDAY, OCTOBER 10, 1929

BOSTON CENSOR PLAN DENOUNCED

Civil Liberties Union in Bitter Attack—Call It a "Menace"

PSYCHIATRIST TELLS OF CENSORSHIP MIND

A scathing denunciation of censors and censorship in all forms was made last night at Ford Hall where a battery of speakers under the leadership of the state committee of civil liberties union outlined their plans for arousing public opinion against the "menace" and to devise a way of overcoming the restrictions imposed by the system of censoring plays and books.

Leading the attack were Prof. Zechariah Chaffee, Jr., of the Harvard law school, and Dr. Abraham Myerson, noted psychiatrist of Tufts medical school. John S. Codman, chairman of the committee, presided. Other speakers were Joseph Lee, president of the Massachusetts Civic League; Dr. Clarence Skinner of Tufts College, and Edward A. Weeks, Jr., of the Atlantic Monthly.

Mr. Myerson analyzed from a psychiatrist's point of view, the mind of the public censor and dealt frankly with the place sex has in modern life and manners and its influence on the censor. He said:

DESCRIBES PLAY

"Sex has all the color and pattern of human life. In the banned-in-Boston play 'Strange Interlude' we have representation, degradation, comedy, eugenic and biologic phases of sex. I see hereditarily insensitively every day in my work and it is tragedy."

"The censor, who is often a specialist in smut, sees only the sensual side of what he observes. If he were to carry his theory into practice without partially, every burlesque show would be banned because of the sensuality which is its stock in trade. Almost three-fourths of the plays that come to Boston in a season are sensual. If there is objection to things which arouse obscene and erotic thoughts then 'Strange Interlude' would never have been interfered with."

"There is a new attitude toward sex and those who are in power are objecting to it. Morals change as life changes and stagnation sets in where morals do not change. Our present censorship is uncivilized, childish and shows a reaction to a taboo which dates back to the childhood of the century. 'Savages' taboo sex and enter into sexual relations only with many restrictions. There is more censorship where the type of mind is low such as the savage and less censorship where the higher mind exists."

ONE OF LONG SERIES

Prof. Chaffee outlined the lesson taught by the suppression of "Strange Interlude." He said that the ban was one of a long series of suppressions which began with the Red raids of 1920 and continued until Cantor was jailed for a year for "an intemperate expression of opinion about an ex-Governor which injured nobody." He said: "I am glad that the latest intolerance of Mayor Nichols has aroused every newspaper and multitudes of respectable citizens."

"Do not be satisfied with a protest against this one attack on one drama. Consider the whole opposition of government to many other types of discussion of important public questions in Boston, which have rendered this city a by-word among liberal thinkers throughout the country. Once the centre of liberty and literature, it has become the home-port of the censorship."

He outlined schemes for judging plays and books advocating the jury system as the best under the circumstances. Mr. Codman read a resolution adopted by the Boston Association of Ministers, composed of Unitarians at a meeting yesterday as follows:

"While supporting a high standard of dramatic art, we deprecate the unwarranted interference with liberty lately evident in the city of Boston."

UNITARIAN MINISTERS CRITICIZE CENSORSHIP

Criticism of censorship in this city, including the banning of the play, "Strange Interlude," was made in a resolution adopted unanimously at a meeting of the Boston Association of Ministers and made public last night. It read as follows:

"While supporting high standards of dramatic art, we deprecate the unwarrantable interference with liberty lately evidenced in the city of Boston. The association is composed of Unitarian ministers and is the oldest ministerial organization in Boston."

BOSTON EVENING TRANSCRIPT.

WEDNESDAY, OCTOBER 9, 1929

THE LIBRARIAN

We Bostonians may hold our heads as high as ever, for our public library has for years made use of the best and most modern methods of publicity. Street-car advertising has been used; book-quizzes have circulated about; the branches have had the most engaging window displays; talks have been given over the radio. In fact every agency has been used with the possible exceptions of sky-writing and a paid publicity representative. Are there any such? The Librarian would be glad to hear from a practising library promotion manager.

SEEING THE PLAY

To the Editor of The Herald:

I have noticed that many of the critics of "Strange Interlude" confess from the start that they haven't read the play and do not intend to see it acted. This, by the way, seemed to be the attitude of that ministers' meeting, where 20 met to protest, according to reports, but finally decided to "suspend judgment." I have felt this attitude must be a wrong one, but I did not realize how wrong until I saw the play for myself. May I say that if I had gone to laugh, I would have returned to pray. It was the most serious sermon I think I have ever listened to. I have been steeped in Shakespeare and Shaw for 30 years, and the Bible all my life; but I feel sure that I have never been moved more deeply by any story or play dealing with the very well-springs of human thought and action than I was by this one.

How any one could come away from such a play without a profounder sense of life's responsibilities, and a more chaste respect for motherhood and the aspiring struggling heart of mankind, I do not see. It has been called the greatest American play. It is more than that. Its appeal is universal. Its theme could well be Motherhood—but no less Fatherhood—spelled with capitals. But more specifically it is the old, old story of the gospel: "Purification through suffering."

Every boy and girl should see this play. This was the comment of my wife (bless her heart) on leaving the theatre, to which I responded, "Yes, and every minister of the gospel—and Mayor Nichols—again."

Dr. WILLIAM W. HARVEY.

Boston, Oct. 8.

REWARDS AND PENALTIES

To the Editor of The Herald:

I want to express my hearty agreement with the views of Dr. Diefenbach on the subject of "Strange Interlude."

THE BOSTON HERALD

FRIDAY, OCTOBER 11, 1929

"STRANGE INTERLUDE"

To the Editor of The Herald: You printed recently some excellent observations by Dr. Abraham Myerson on "Strange Interlude," written after he had made the pilgrimage to Quincy which so many people of Massachusetts are daily enjoying. May another pilgrim have a word?

A question has probably lurked in the minds of many who have read outlines of the play, but have not seen a performance. Some persons in this category may, like Judge Grant, have decided that any play dealing with such material must necessarily be abhorrent, and that there is simply no need to be said. Others may be willing to believe that a dramatist sufficiently gifted could strain the possibilities of human relationship to the utmost, leave an impression of tragedy rather than abhorrence. But can either party avoid asking, in all simplicity and honesty, why make use of such material? Why expect the general, sensible mind to participate in such situations? Why employ the imagination in devising a career for a woman which involves her in promiscuity, confronts her with a mother-in-law who, in the most harrowing circumstances, tells her that she must not bear the child she knows herself to be carrying?

The question is perfectly relevant when one considers only an outline of the play. The answer is to be discerned by attending a performance. Then it is plain that only by plunging his inhuman coils of relationship and deceit as O'Neill has invented can the possibilities of the dramatist's imagination, brooding on human life and destiny, be displayed to the full in works of art.

Suppose we were to consider parts of "King Lear" in outline only. The bastard son of the Duke of Gloucester betrays his father, who has befriended the demented Lear, into the hands of those who hate the old King, maddened by the cruelty of his daughters, Regan and Goneril, together with the Duke of Cornwall, tear Gloucester's eyes out as a punishment for his kindness. (The scene is, I believe, usually omitted, but was included in a performance at Stratford not many years ago.) The blinded old man, intending to throw himself over a cliff, is met by his faithful and legitimate son, who has been driven into hiding by the plots of his bastard brother and is disguised as a madman.

Surely, the reader of such an outline might say, imagination can go no further. It has reached the limit of the preposterous in this debauch of cruelty and this fantastic entanglement of deceit. But Shakespeare found it necessary to devise these scenes in order to display to the full what his imagination could accomplish when he brooded on human life and character. No less preposterous is the outline of "Strange Interlude," but in it O'Neill has given new and impressive examples of what the shaping imagination can do when it reflects to the full on human affairs. Those who go to see "Strange Interlude" will understand why the material he has chosen was necessary to him, and why, like "King Lear" in vastly greater degree, it leaves a memory which is a possession of value with those who attend the play. They will perceive how it is that just as Shakespeare could exhibit on the stage all that is cruel and malign in men and women, with only benefit to his audience, so O'Neill can exhibit qualities which, taken in outline only, suggest the foul and debauched, while in the minds of his audience he is arousing a deepened and freshly illumined contemplation of the possibilities of life. THEODORE MORRISON.

Boston, Oct. 9.

THE BOSTON HERALD

SUNDAY, OCTOBER 13, 1929

While it is evident why the play should be condemned by the morally imbecile, that one versed in ethical philosophy, as any minister of the gospel must be, should join the ranks of the denouncers seems to me extraordinary. Yet among those denouncers are certain eminent Boston clergymen.

Every one knows that from the Bible down to the present day, writers of fiction have dealt with the moral issues and conflicts that make up the drama of human life, just as the physician deals with the problems of the human body. To say that because the playwright portrays immorality he is encouraging immorality is, as Dr. Diefenbach pointed out, like saying that the cancer specialist causes cancer.

"Strange Interlude" should commend itself especially to the clergy because it is not only an honest and penetrating analysis of a vital and baffling problem, but because it shows the sorry plight of those who, even from high motives, have transgressed the moral law. It also shows the increasing importance in modern life of the ethical experimenter and pioneer through whom progress along these lines must come.

The only persons in the play who achieve anything approaching happiness are the worthy and respectable Sam, the upright Gordon, and the long-suffering and celibate Marsden; while the two transgressors, Nina and Darrell, suffer from the conviction that all is as dust and ashes. The conventionally righteous are rewarded, and the conventionally wicked are punished. What could better point a moral or adorn a tale?

MARGARET LEE WOODBURY.

Hingham Centre, Oct. 5.

EXCURSUS TEXTS

To the Editor of The Herald:

Mr. Mendum says it is unfair to say that the law allows a book to be declared obscene on the strength of a single passage, because the law does not mention passages but simply speaks of a book "containing" obscene language, so that no book can be condemned on a single passage unless that passage contains obscene language. The distinction reminds me of the letter of the day before, in which a lady explained that the D. A. R. did not have any blacklist, it merely protected its members against hearing undesirable speakers.

However that may be, it is a matter of common report that a single text of the Bible, taken out of its context and written in the original Hebrew on a postal card without note or comment, was once held to be obscene by a United States court in Kansas. So it would suit Mr. Mendum that the circulation of the Bible should hereafter be confined to the expurgated edition. Furthermore, in all that I have read in English, French, Italian, Latin, Greek, Arabic and other languages, I have met nothing more disgustingly obscene than some matter in Shakespeare; so we must omit the unexpurgated Shakespeare, too. Again, there is nobody more constantly and ribaldly obscene than Aristophanes, and he has the dangerous gift (at least in the original Greek) of making obscenity really amusing, while most writers in all languages merely drop into stupidity when they drop into smut; therefore, of course, Aristophanes must go, since the courts hold that obscenity does not have to be in English in order to be prohibited; but you cannot make a really thorough study of the New Testament without having at hand a full set of the Greek classics, including a complete Aristophanes, so that by comparison of their use of words you may determine the meaning of the Greek words more precisely, fully, and authentically than can be done by merely consulting a dictionary. Therefore, if the law is enforced to suit Mr. Mendum, anybody who wants to understand the New Testament as accurately as possible will have to go out of Massachusetts. STEVEN T. BYINGTON.

Ballard Vale, Oct. 10.

FIRST SECTION LIBRARY

Residents Protest Limited Quarters and Urge Immediate Enlargement of Single Room

NEED MORE ROOM

First Section Residents Criticize Lack of Accommodation in Branch Library

Letters of protest, which almost daily find their way into the Argus-Advocate office, calling attention to the inadequate quarters of the Jeffries point branch library and reading room, caused a representative of this paper to visit the premises on Webster St. one day this week for the purpose of judging for himself the situation. Upon arriving, he was surprised to find that the letters were not exaggerated, but rather described conditions in fairly conservative manner. It takes little time, and absolutely no figuring to satisfy one's self that the quarters in question are entirely too small for even the simpler demands. On the afternoon of the reporter's visit to the library, five children dropped in at practically the same time, after school, and actually crowded the reading room. This is one of the reasons why an enlargement is urgently requested by the people who patronize the library. At the present time, the rooms are totally inadequate for the demand placed upon them, and the situation is really serious enough to warrant immediate attention. Recently an official survey has been made, but no results are forthcoming. Meanwhile, the demand for immediate enlargement increases every day. The library has been in existence now eight years, and is serving an admirable purpose. In view of the fact that an appropriation has been made by the city council, and that there is contiguous property available, it seems as if the work of enlargement might be promptly inaugurated. The residents of Jeffries point and the First Section are entitled to a library that will properly accommodate and meet their needs. If not, Councilman Donovan should give the matter his immediate attention, to the end that the enlargement be made as soon as possible.

The need for an enlargement of the present First Section branch library and reading room on Webster St. opposite Belmont Sq. should long since have been cared for. The inadequacy of the single room now occupied is apparent at a glance, and it is no reflection on the faithful attendants of the First Section branch, to say that it is not accomplishing its best work. With larger quarters this could be done, and to the satisfaction of the people, and especially the children it caters to. During its eight years of existence the First Section branch has served a good purpose, and with the passage of time this range of human benefit has widened to a remarkable extent which can be materially increased by suitable accommodation. This deficiency, fortunately, can easily be provided for by simply adding to the present size of the branch.

THE BOSTON HERALD

TUESDAY, OCTOBER 15, 1929

CENSORED

To the Editor of The Herald:
Oct. 11th I went into our branch library of the Boston Public Library, secured the October Scribner's, and settled myself down for enjoyment of a literary nature. Yet what pleasure undisturbed and undisturbed is there, in this world? For as I turned the pages of this dignified and honorable magazine, I found some vandals had cut out from page 370 to 389. Asking one of the librarians if this had been done by some outlaw, I was told that the reason for the mutilation came from headquarters orders of the Boston Public Library.
So this is Boston: the land of the bean and the cod.
Where the books are cut up by the censors.
And the censors only stopped by the clod.
May they not rest in peace.
CARLYLE SUMMERBELL.
Roslindale, Oct. 11.

Boston Transcript

324 WASHINGTON STREET, BOSTON, MASS.

MONDAY, SEPTEMBER 30, 1929

SMASHING OLD VALUES

To the Editor of the Transcript:

After all the widespread discussion of the "Strange Interlude" incident in Boston, someone has at last hit the bull's-eye! Dr. William Stidger states that in his opinion the movement of which such plays are a part "has back of it the objective of establishing a new moral code of American life." There is no lack of confirmation of this in the writings of our Communists themselves. Michael Gold, Communist editor of the Communist magazine The New Masses of which O'Neill is contributing editor, says in that periodical: "We are volunteers helping to create a new table of values—smashers of the old values." There you have it. Many of those who are enemies of our Government and our civilization, confirm this, believing rightly enough, that to make us a nation of degenerates would be for them a long step toward victory, as they could then mold the proletariat according to their desires. They believe, too, that the theater is the greatest propaganda agency in existence. Who can question that through degrading plays, movies and books, the standards of the American people have been lowered in recent years to a degree almost unbelievable?

The "smashers of old values" have tremendous cause to congratulate themselves on their huge success, even in supposedly conservative Boston. When our best newspapers devote many columns to contempt and ridicule of the mayor and all who share his standards of decency, when long lists of people who undoubtedly consider themselves respectable appear in the papers "demanding" that the play be given, when the Vincent girls are announced as assisting at the play, in which the heroine's interest consists in her practice of promiscuity and abortion, certainly American standards are pretty well smashed! Booth Tarkington says: "A pretended work of art which stimulates the animal part of a spectator is dirt." Boston, Sept. 28. LOIS CARSON

A DRAMATIC TEST

To the Editor of the Transcript:

In an unenlightened town of Eastern Europe a play was prohibited on account of its being said to be "immoral." It is unfortunate that this method of procedure cannot be accepted in the rest of the world. It would contribute to the mental welfare of both the public and the censors. NICOLAS SLONIMSKY
Jamaica Plain, Sept. 28.

THE BOSTON HERALD, MONDAY, OCTOBER 21, 1929

DANCES, DRAMA, SEX

To the Editor of The Herald:

The college dailies and weeklies are reporting during October "The First dance of the season." The dance is a stimulant to the social life of the college student. If the fraternity is giving a dance, one must plan to attend and look around for a partner. It may be out of the question to invite the "girl friend" or the "boy friend" from home, in which case it means the beginning of new friendships.

How casually and sometimes how light-heartedly these new friendships begin! A sailor has his girl in every port, and a college student has a girl in every college within reach.

In "The Cock-Eyed World," all that one has to recall the names and addresses of girl friends is a book of names and addresses. The telephone is handy; call some one up for the dance. It never was quite so easy to begin a new "affair."

"The Cock-Eyed World," with a girl in the bath tub answering a telephone call for a "date" and saying that she has nothing on, is uncensored by politicians, priests or ministers. It is just a harmless amusing picture of typical youth having "dates" and forgetting all about them, I suppose.

A drama is written which begins in a college town. A romantic girl, the daughter of a professor, meets a college athlete. The professor looks upon it as just one of those "college affairs" easily begun and easily ended. There are other affairs easily begun in the life of this girl. It might have been an amusing comedy if the author believed not the end, it is the beginning for mind and memory, moulding future years. EGBERT W. A. JENKINSON.
Methuen, Oct. 18.

animal. The human being has within the mind pages upon which are written indelibly these casual beginnings. They do not cease with the dance. They end only when the dance of life is ended.

There is no comedy for Eugene O'Neill in sex life. There is none of the comedy of "The Cock-Eyed World" in "Strange Interlude." It is an honest story of sex life, thundering home the truth that from the highest experience of romantic love to the lowest experience of prostitution the experience of the moment is the beginning not the end.

It is not the province of the mayor of Boston to be particularly concerned for the college students in and around Boston. But it is the concern of the churches and the ministers. We believe in teaching the ancient commandments as binding in the world of today. Some ministers try to get at the problem by railing again dancing, movies, theatres and unchaperoned parties. Some have condemned "Strange Interlude" as obscene. What real help is being given to the thousands of college students who during this month of October are beginning at the social functions of the colleges new friendships between those of the opposite sex? What can be said that will help?

It can be said "What you do during these months and years will remain with you all your life. The consequences of casual contacts are incalculable." That may mean something, or it may mean nothing.

Are parents content with these platitudes? Instead of condemning "Strange Interlude" would it not be a more wholesome attitude toward sex life if ministers should recommend to the parents of college students to take the time to read and to discuss with their young people this terrific drama? Which is the right attitude toward sex experience, the comedy of "The Cock-Eyed World" or the tragic consequences of "A Strange Interlude"?

Who will deny that what is true for each character of the drama is inescapably true for every human being: the sex experience of the moment is not the end, it is the beginning for mind and memory, moulding future years. EGBERT W. A. JENKINSON.
Methuen, Oct. 18.

Boston Daily Globe

THURSDAY, DEC 19, 1929

AUTHOR PROPOSES CIVIL SERVICE FOR CENSORS

A bill providing that "any person acting as censor of either books, plays, pictures, music or dancing for the Commonwealth, or any county, city or town, shall first pass a Civil Service examination," was filed with the clerk of the Massachusetts Senate yesterday by Senator Henry Parkman for Elliot H. Paul, an author. Proposed legislation affecting censorship of books and plays designed "to protect public morals without jeopardizing education or amusement," is contained in Mr. Paul's petition, which "the standard Binet Intelligence test for mentality of 18 years, general information and language test similar to those required for employees of the Boston Public Library."

THE BOSTON HERALD, FRIDAY, NOVEMBER 1, 1929

FROM PROF. HALL

To the Editor of The Herald:

Can anything new, on either side, be said concerning such a book or play as "Strange Interlude"? Possibly not, but I do not remember that any of the numerous correspondents who have discussed this topic in your columns have uttered exactly the sentiment which has prevented me from caring to read the book or see the play. Many people whose taste and morals it would be presumptuous in me to criticize have read or seen this drama, and have felt themselves justified—some have professed to be edified by the experience. It has been pointed out, over and over again, that the Bible and Shakespeare's plays contain frank stories of sexual misconduct. "Sentimentality" concerning sexual affairs has been denounced, and G. B. Shaw has been praised for his very successful efforts to abolish this state of feeling from the consciousness of the present generation of theatre-goers.

All of this argument for "liberality," for "freedom," leaves me unpersuaded, so far as I am personally concerned, not because I am especially puritanical in my reading. I have read many things far more erotic than "Strange Interlude" appears to be, but because I believe the general effect of such work as this is depressing in its tendency to foster a low and hopeless view of human life and possibilities.

I have read Flaubert's famous story, Madame Bovary, which may well have given O'Neill the motif for "Strange Interlude." One book of that sort is enough for a lifetime. In Madame Bovary, Flaubert takes a set of utterly commonplace people, the central ones being a pretty, selfish, empty-headed wife, her insignificant husband, and her artist paramour, and tells, with much literary grace and delicacy, the wretched story of their relations. In one sense this story is a tragedy, but it is a tragedy without any ennobling moral stimulus. The Bovary family is ruined, to be sure, but such people, the reader feels, were hardly worth saving anyway. The artist goes on unscathed to whatever new adventures may be in store for him. The vice of such a book, the curse of it, lies in its utter lack of any idealism except that of literary expression. The reader despises every character in it.

Let those who, in their efforts to justify such a drama as "Strange Interlude" venture to couple the name of O'Neill with that of Shakespeare, quote from any play of this modern writer a single noble line or name a single noble character. It seems to me that the astounding prevalence of the sex motive, in its grosser forms, in the novels and plays of today is not evidence of intellectual vigor and moral courage on the part of present-day writers, but rather an indication of weakened faith and lowered aspiration for the future of mankind. Is there not a certain insidious danger in the habit of dwelling unnecessarily, even in what we choose to think a purely philosophical frame of mind, on the manifestations of this elemental and ineradicable passion?

EDWIN H. HALL,
Cambridge, Oct. 28.

CONFLICT OF TESTIMONY

To the Editor of The Herald:

I note that you play up on the front page the statement of Mrs. Ernest Ludlow, who sailed for England after a five weeks' visit in New England and Canada, that "prohibition is simply a farce in America."

Is not the truth more apt to be presented in statements from Mrs. Margot Asquith and Lady Astor?

On Mrs. Asquith's last visit to America she criticised similarly conditions under prohibition, but later wrote to Dr. C. W. Saleeby as follows:

It perhaps is unwise for me to write at all upon prohibition, as during my stay I only saw "particular kinds of people in the great cosmopolitan cities of the United States who did not represent more than a small stratum of that great community." This is quite true. I understand since I wrote that I have been wrong and that though there has been a great deal of drink concealed and consumed in the United States, it is infinitely less than before prohibition.

Lady Astor said she had heard "it said that the rich in America could get drinks, while the poor could not, but declared that she had not, during her visit to America, seen such a condition herself. She said social workers had told her that the Salvation Army, social societies and churches now had a greatly reduced task as a result of the dry laws."

"When I balance the result, offset the uplifting of the poor and struggling and the salvation which prohibition has brought to many wives and children against the alleged degradation of some of the rich—well, I have no doubt the net result for the country has been good," she continued. "The general sentiment seems to be that it is the rich and not the poor who really get the worst of it. Prohibition in the United States has been a big contribution to the spiritual regeneration of the world." DELCEVARE KING.
Quincy, Oct. 22.

EUGENE O'NEILL

O'Neill is the only American playwright to win the Pulitzer award three times. "Strange Interlude," "Beyond the Horizon" and "Anna Christie" were the winning plays.

STRANGE INTERLUDE

An EXTRAORDINARY PLAY
By EUGENE O'NEILL

"A venture magnificent, and a milestone to cleave the skyline of the future." —GILBERT GABRIEL, N. Y. Sun
"The most important event in the present era of the American Theatre." —DUDLEY NICHOLS, N. Y. World

"In his nine-act masterpiece Eugene O'Neill has thrown all stage traditions to the four winds and cast the hard and fast conventions upon the theatric scrapheap. He has achieved a fourth dimensional drama and in it he strips his characters naked. He shows the mechanism of the human soul under a microscope of verbal power and beauty. There never was a play precisely like this one; never a play so devastating to the emotions nor one so filled to overflowing with such forthright integrity of thoughts, honesty of action and searing irony. It has left the factitious Broadway mind in a state of floundering bewilderment; the sophisticates can find no wise cracks that can quite make the play ridiculous. . . . 'Strange Interlude' is a magnificent adventure into the guarded, secret recesses of the mind; it is a dramatic structure that scrapes life with its towering reality." —Theatre Magazine

"Acutely interesting throughout, powerfully spellbinding and a tense and breathless tragedy." —WALTER WINCHELL, N. Y. Graphic

"To give the drama 'a greater flexibility' has been the effort of Eugene O'Neill ever since he wrote 'Beyond the Horizon'."

serious enough to warrant immediate attention. Recently an official survey has been made, but no results are forthcoming. Meanwhile, the demand for immediate enlargement increases every day. The library has been in existence now eight years, and is serving an admirable purpose. In view of the fact that an appropriation has been made by the city council, and that there is contiguous property available, it seems as if the work of enlargement might be promptly inaugurated. The residents of Jeffries point and the First Section are entitled to a library that will properly accommodate and meet their needs. If not, Councilman Donovan should give the matter his immediate attention, to the end that the enlargement be made as soon as possible.

The need for an enlargement of the present First Section branch library and reading room on Webster St. opposite Belmont Sq., should long since have been cared for. The inadequacy of the single room now occupied is apparent at a glance, and it is no reflection on the faithful attendants of the First Section branch, to say that it is not accomplishing its best work. With larger quarters this could be done, and to the satisfaction of the people, and especially the children it caters to. During its eight years of existence the First Section branch has served a good purpose, and with the passage of time this range of human benefit has widened to a remarkable extent which can be materially increased by suitable accommodation. This deficiency, fortunately, can easily be provided for by simply adding to the present size of the branch.

THE BOSTON HERALD TUESDAY, OCTOBER 15, 1929

CENSORED

To the Editor of The Herald:
Oct. 11th I went into our branch library of the Boston Public Library, secured the October Scribner's, and settled myself down for enjoyment of a literary nature. Yet what pleasure unsullied and undisturbed is there, in this world of ours? For as I turned the pages of this dignified and honorable magazine, I found some vandal had cut out from page 370 to 389. Asking one of the librarians if this had been done by some outlaw, I was told that the reason for the mutilation came from headquarters orders of the Boston Public Library.
So this is Boston: the land of the bean and the cod.
Where the books are cut up by the censors.
And the censors only stopped by the clock.
May they not rest in peace.
CARLYLE SUMMERBELL.
Roslindale, Oct. 11.

Boston Transcript

324 WASHINGTON STREET, BOSTON, MASS.

MONDAY, SEPTEMBER 30, 1929

SMASHING OLD VALUES

To the Editor of the Transcript:

After all the widespread discussion of the "Strange Interlude" incident in Boston, someone has at last hit the bull's-eye. Dr. William Stidger states that in his opinion the movement of which such plays are a part "has back of it the objective of establishing a new moral code of American life." There is no lack of confirmation of this in the writings of our Communists themselves. Michael Gold, Communist editor of the Communist magazine, "The New Masses," which O'Neill is contributing to, says in that periodical: "We are volunteers helping to create a new table of values—smashers of the old values." There you have it. Many of those who are enemies of our Government and our civilization, confirm this, believing rightly enough, that to make us a nation of degenerates would be for them a long step toward victory, as they could then mold the proletariat according to their desires. They believe, too, that the theatre is the greatest propaganda agency in existence. Who can question that through degrading plays, movies and books, the standards of the American people have been lowered in recent years to a degree almost unbelievable?

The "smashers of old values" have tremendous cause to congratulate themselves on their huge success, even in supposedly conservative Boston. When our best newspapers devote many columns to contempt and ridicule of the mayor and all who share his standards of decency, when long lists of people who undoubtedly consider themselves respectable appear in the papers "demanding" that the play be given, when the Vincent girls are announced as assisting at the play, in which the heroine's interest consists in her practice of promiscuity and abortion, certainly American standards are pretty well smashed!

Booth Tarkington says: "A pretended work of art which stimulates the animal part of a spectator is dirt."
Boston, Sept. 28. LOIS CARSON

A DRAMATIC TEST

To the Editor of the Transcript:

In an unenlightened town of Eastern Europe a play was prohibited on account of its being silly.
It is unfortunate that this method of procedure cannot be accepted in the rest of the world. It would contribute to the mental welfare of both the public and the censors.
NICHOLAS SZONIMSKY
Jamaica Plain, Sept. 28.

THE BOSTON HERALD, MONDAY, OCTOBER 21, 1929

DANCES, DRAMA, SEX

To the Editor of The Herald:

The college dailies and weeklies are reporting during October "The first dance of the season." The dance is a stimulant to the social life of the college student. If the fraternity is giving a dance, one must plan to attend and look around for a partner. It may be out of the question to invite the "girl friend" or the "boy friend" from home, in which case it means the beginning of new friendships.

How casually and sometimes how light-heartedly these new friendships begin! A sailor has his girl in every port, and a college student has a girl in every college within reach.

In "The Cock-Eyed World," all that one has to recall the names and addresses of girl friends is a book of names and addresses. The telephone is handy: call some one up for the dance. It never was quite so easy to begin a new "affair."

"The Cock-Eyed World," with a girl in the bath tub answering a telephone call for a "date" and saying that she has nothing on, is uncensored by politicians, priests or ministers. It is just a harmless amusing picture of typical youth having "dates" and forgetting all about them, I suppose.

A drama is written which begins in a college town. A romantic girl, the daughter of a professor, meets a college athlete. The professor looks upon it as just one of those "college affairs" easily begun and easily ended. There are other affairs easily begun in the life of this girl. It might have been an amusing comedy if the author believed this was a "Cock-Eyed World." But the author knew that what is so easy to begin is not so easy to discard and forget. The human being is not a mere animal. The human being has within the mind pages upon which are written indelibly these casual beginnings. They do not cease with the dance. They end only when the dance of life is ended.

There is no comedy for Eugene O'Neill in sex life. There is none of the comedy of "The Cock-Eyed World" in "Strange Interlude." It is an honest story of sex life, thundering home the truth that from the highest experience of romantic love to the lowest experience of prostitution the experience of the moment is the beginning not the end.

It is not the province of the mayor of Boston to be particularly concerned for the college students in and around Boston. But it is the concern of the churches and the ministers. We believe in teaching the ancient commandments as binding in the world of today. Some ministers try to get at the problem by railing again dancing, movies, theatres and unchaperoned parties. Some have condemned "Strange Interlude" as obscene. What real help is being given to the thousands of college students who during this month of October are beginning at the social functions of the colleges new friendships between those of the opposite sex? What can be said that will help?

It can be said "What you do during these months and years will remain with you all your life. The consequences of casual contacts are incalculable. That may mean something, or it may mean nothing."

Are parents content with these platitudes? Instead of condemning "Strange Interlude" would it not be a more wholesome attitude toward sex life if ministers should recommend to the parents of college students to take the time to read and to discuss with their young people this terrific drama? Which is the right attitude toward sex experience, the comedy of "The Cock-Eyed World" or the tragic consequences of "A Strange Interlude?"

Who will deny that what is true for each character of the drama is irrefragably true for every human being: the sex experience of the moment is not the end; it is the beginning for mind and memory, moulding future years. EGBERT W. A. JENKINSON.
Methuen, Oct. 18.

Boston Daily Globe

THURSDAY, DEC 19, 1929

AUTHOR PROPOSES CIVIL SERVICE FOR CENSORS

A bill providing that "any person acting as censor of either books, plays, pictures, music or dancing for the Commonwealth, or any county, city or town, shall first pass a Civil Service examination," was filed with the clerk of the Massachusetts Senate yesterday by Senator Henry Parkman for Elliot H. Paul, an author. Proposed legislation affecting censorship of books and plays designed "to protect public morals without jeopardizing education or amusement," is contained in Mr. Paul's petition, which includes "the standard Binet intelligence test for mentally of 13 years, general information and language test similar to those required for employees of the Boston Public Library."

THE BOSTON HERALD, FRIDAY, NOVEMBER 1, 1929

FROM PROF. HALL

To the Editor of The Herald:

Can anything new, on either side, be said concerning such a book or play as "Strange Interlude"? Possibly not, but I do not remember that any of the numerous correspondents who have discussed this topic in your columns have uttered exactly the sentiment which has prevented me from caring to read the book or see the play. Many people whose taste and moral it would be presumptuous in one to criticize have read or seen this drama, and have felt themselves justified—some have professed to be edified by the experience. It has been pointed out, over and over again, that the Bible and Shakespeare's plays contain frank stories of sexual misconduct. "Sentimentality" concerning sexual affairs has been denounced, and G. B. Shaw has been praised for his very successful efforts to abolish this state of feeling from the consciousness of the present generation of theatre-goers.

All of this argument for "liberality," for "freedom," leaves me unpersuaded, so far as I am personally concerned, not because I am especially puritanical in my reading. I have read many things far more erotic than "Strange Interlude" appears to be, but because I believe the general effect of such a work as this is depressing in its tendency to foster a low and hopeless view of human life and possibilities.

I have read Flaubert's famous story, Madame Bovary, which may well have given O'Neill the motif for "Strange Interlude." One book of that sort is enough for a lifetime. In Madame Bovary, Flaubert takes a set of utterly commonplace people, the central ones being a pretty, selfish, empty-headed wife, her insignificant husband, and her artist paramour, and tells, with much literary grace and delicacy, the wretched story of their relations. In one sense this story is a tragedy, but it is a tragedy without any ennobling moral stimulus. The Bovary family is ruined, to be sure, but such people, the reader feels, were hardly worth saving anyway. The artist goes on unscathed to whatever new adventures may be in store for him. The vice of such a book, the curse of it, lies in its utter lack of any idealism except that of literary expression. The reader despises every character in it.

Let those who, in their efforts to justify such a drama as "Strange Interlude" venture to couple the name of O'Neill with that of Shakespeare, quote from any play of this modern writer a single noble line or name a single noble character. It seems to me that the astounding prevalence of the sex motive, in its grosser forms, in the novels and plays of today is not evidence of intellectual vigor and moral courage on the part of present-day writers, but rather an indication of weakened faith and lowered aspiration for the future of mankind. Is there not a certain insidious danger in the habit of dwelling unnecessarily, even in what we choose to think a purely philosophic frame of mind, on the manifestations of this elemental and invincible passion?

EDWIN H. HALL.
Cambridge, Oct. 28.

CONFLICT OF TESTIMONY

To the Editor of The Herald:

I note that you play up on the front page the statement of Mrs. Ernest Ludlow, who sailed for England after a five weeks' visit in New England and Canada, that "prohibition is simply a farce in America."

Is not the truth more apt to be presented in statements from Mrs. Margot Asquith and Lady Astor?

On Mrs. Asquith's last visit to America she criticised similarly conditions under prohibition, but later wrote to Dr. C. W. Saleeby as follows:
"It perhaps is unwise for me to write at all upon prohibition, as during my stay I only saw 'particular kinds of people in the great cosmopolitan cities of the United States who did not represent more than a small stratum of that great community.' This is quite true. I understand since I wrote that I have been wrong and that though there has been a great deal of drink concealed and consumed in the United States, it is infinitely less than before prohibition."

Lady Astor said she had heard it said that the rich in America could get drinks, while the poor could not, but declared that she had not, during her visit to America, seen such a condition herself. She said social workers had told her that the Salvation Army, social societies and churches now had a greatly reduced task as a result of the dry laws.

"When I balance the result, offset the uplifting of the poor and struggling and the salvation which prohibition has brought to many wives and children against the alleged degradation of some of the rich—well, I have no doubt the net result for the country has been good," she continued. "The general sentiment seems to be that it is the rich and not the poor who really get the worst of it. Prohibition in the United States has been a big contribution to the spiritual regeneration of the world."

DELCEVARE KING.
Quincy, Oct. 22.

Horizon.' This has been accomplished in his latest offering, 'Strange Interlude,' which the Theatre Guild has made the most-discussed play in New York. Some see it only as a reactionary use of the old-fashioned 'aside' or 'soliloquy'; but others see deeper into his purpose of giving the Freudian psychology an exposition on the stage. What seems certain is that the realistic drama has received a body-blow. What his characters speak are not only the words that mark the progress of the play's action, but only the thoughts that lie on the surface of the speaker's consciousness, though remaining unexpressed, but many of the unexpressed impulses and feelings that the playwright himself divines. This may seem like an effort to apply the technique of the novel to the use of the stage, but this description is inadequate, for it is declared by some observers that the full effect of the play could not be derived from reading. This is a case where more is asked of the audience than almost ever happens. They must take part in the creative act. They must watch the drama of spoken thoughts as well as the drama of action expressed in words.

—Literary Digest

"The most provocative and interesting event of the season and probably the most significant contribution to the American drama"

—JOHN ANDERSON, N. Y. Journal

"In the play which he calls 'Strange Interlude' Eugene O'Neill has written the finest, the profoundest drama of his entire career, a drama, I believe, that has not been surpassed by any that Europe has given us in recent years and certainly by none that has been produced in America. Into this work he has poured his accumulation of dramatic skill, his mounting ability in the flow and

... them, and the situation is really serious enough to warrant immediate attention. Recently an official survey has been made, but no results are forthcoming. Meanwhile, the demand for immediate enlargement increases every day. The library has been in existence now eight years, and is serving an admirable purpose. In view of the fact that an appropriation has been made by the city council, and that there is contiguous property available, it seems as if the work of enlargement might be promptly inaugurated. The residents of Joffries point and the First Section are entitled to a library that will properly accommodate and meet their needs. If not, Councilor Donovan should give the matter his immediate attention, to the end that the enlargement be made as soon as possible.

... The need for an enlargement of the present First Section branch library and reading room on Webster St., opposite Belmont Sq., should long since have been cared for. The inadequacy of the single room now occupied is apparent at a glance, and it is no reflection on the faithful attendants of the First Section branch, to say that it is not accomplishing its best work. With larger quarters this could be done, and to the satisfaction of the people, and especially the children it caters to. During its eight years of existence the First Section branch has served a good purpose, and with the passage of time this range of human benefit has widened to a remarkable extent which can be materially increased by suitable accommodation. This deficiency, fortunately, can easily be provided for by simply adding to the present size of the branch.

fire of dramatic English, his increasing invention and all the wisdom of life, with all its admixture of hopeful cynicism and hopeless exaltation, that he has garnered since first he set himself to convert the American theatre into something worthy of the attention of intelligent men and women. Here is a play beside which his antecedent work—beside which his 'The Emperor Jones,' 'The Great God Brown' and other more important drama—seems trivial; a play beside which even the more latterly and brilliant 'Marco Millions' pales and beside which the directly previous 'Lazarus Laughed' seems a completely negligible product."

—GEORGE JEAN NATHAN, American Mercury

"One of the most astounding adventures a stage ever held."

—LEONARD HALL, N. Y. Telegram

"... 'Strange Interlude' succeeds in proportion to all that it chances; and, I can only repeat, it chances vastly more than any other play of this generation. It is aware of its danger of being physically overpowering, awkward, morose, anti-climactic—and this awareness makes it all the sturdier, bolder, to trespass and to triumph. ... Innumerable men can set language on fire. It is only the distinguished one among them who can burn it in an altar lamp as high as O'Neill's. 'Marco Millions' and 'Strange Interlude' have made this theatrical season memorable."

—Vanity Fair

"The finest play yet written by an American, and perhaps the most remarkable play of our generation, which should endure, even as any classic is ageless."

—THOMAS VAN DYCKE, N. Y. Telegraph

"With 'Marco Millions' and 'Strange Interlude' the Theatre Guild has again achieved a notable mark and it has rendered a fine service to the theatre-going public in New York in

THE BOSTON HERALD

TUESDAY, OCTOBER 15, 1929

CENSORED

To the Editor of The Herald:

Oct. 11th I went into our branch library of the Boston Public Library, secured the October Scribner's, and settled myself down for enjoyment of a literary nature. Yet what pleasure undisturbed and undisturbed is there, in this woe of the world? For as I turned the pages of this dignified and honorable magazine, I found some vulgar had cut out from page 370 to 389. Asking one of the librarians if this had been done by some outlaw, I was told that the reason for the mutilation came from headquarters orders of the Boston Public Library.

So this is Boston: the land of the bean and the cod. Where the books are cut up by the censors. And the censors only stopped by the cod.

May they not rest in peace.

CARLYLE SUMMERBELL.

Roslindale, Oct. 11.

Boston Transcript

324 WASHINGTON STREET, BOSTON, MASS.

MONDAY, SEPTEMBER 30, 1929

SMASHING OLD VALUES

To the Editor of the Transcript:

After all the widespread discussion of the "Strange Interlude" incident in Boston, someone has at last hit the bull's-eye. Dr. William Stidger states that in his opinion the movement of which such plays are a part "has back of it the objective of establishing a new moral code of American life." There is no lack of confirmation of this in the writings of our Communists themselves. Michael Gold, Communist editor of the Communist magazine 'The New Masses' of which O'Neill is contributing editor, says in that periodical: "We are volunteers helping to create a new table of values—smashers of the old values." There you have it. Many of those who are enemies of our Government and our civilization, confirm this, believing rightly enough, that to make us a nation of degenerates would be for them a long step toward victory, as they could then mold the proletariat according to their desires. They believe, too, that the theater is the greatest propaganda agency in existence. Who can question that through degrading plays, movies and books, the standards of the American people have been lowered in recent years to a degree almost unbelievable?

"The 'smashers of old values' have tremendous cause to congratulate themselves on their huge success, even in supposedly conservative Boston. When our best newspapers devote many columns to contempt and ridicule of the mayor and all who share his standards of decency, when long lists of people who undoubtedly consider themselves respectable appear in the papers 'demanding' that the play be given, when the Vincent girls are announced as assisting at the play, in which the heroine's interest consists in her practice of promiscuity and abortion, certainly American standards are pretty well smashed."

Booth Tarkington says: "A pretended work of art which stimulates the animal part of a spectator is dirt."

Boston, Sept. 28. LOIS CARSON

A DRAMATIC TEST

To the Editor of the Transcript:

In an unenlightened town of Eastern Europe a play was prohibited on account of its being silly.

It is unfortunate that this method of procedure cannot be accepted in the rest of the world. It would contribute to the mental welfare of both the public and the censors.

NICOLAS SLONIMSKY

Jamaica Plain, Sept. 28.

THE BOSTON HERALD, MONDAY, OCTOBER 21, 1929

DANCES, DRAMA, SEX

To the Editor of The Herald:

The college dailies and weeklies are reporting during October "The first dance of the season." The dance is a stimulant to the social life of the college student. If the fraternity is giving a dance, one must plan to attend and look around for a partner. It may be out of the question to invite the "girl friend" or the "boy friend" from home, in which case it means the beginning of new friendships.

How casually and sometimes how light-heartedly these new friendships begin! A sailor has his girl in every port, and a college student has a girl in every college within reach.

In "The Cock-Eyed World," all that one has to recall the names and addresses of girl friends is a book of names and addresses. The telephone is handy; call some one up for the dance. It never was quite so easy to begin a new "affair."

"The Cock-Eyed World," with a girl in the bath tub answering a telephone call for a "date" and saying that she has nothing on, is uncensored by politicians, priests or ministers. It is just a harmless amusing picture of typical youth having "dates" and forgetting all about them, I suppose.

A drama is written which begins in a college town. A romantic girl, the daughter of a professor, meets a college athlete. The professor looks upon it as just one of those "college affairs" easily begun and easily ended. There are other affairs easily begun in the life of this girl. It might have been an amusing comedy if the author believed this was a "Cock-Eyed World." But the author knew that what is so easy to begin is not so easy to discard and forget. The human being is not a mere animal. The human being has within the mind pages upon which are written indelibly these casual beginnings. They do not cease with the dance. They end only when the dance of life is ended.

There is no comedy for Eugene O'Neill in sex life. There is none of the comedy of "The Cock-Eyed World" in "Strange Interlude." It is an honest story of sex life, thundering home the truth that from the highest experience of romantic love to the lowest experience of prostitution the experience of the moment is the beginning not the end.

It is not the province of the mayor of Boston to be particularly concerned for the college students in and around Boston. But it is the concern of the churches and the ministers. We believe in teaching the ancient commandments as binding in the world of today. Some ministers try to get at the problem by railing against dancing, movies, theatres and unchaperoned parties. Some have condemned "Strange Interlude" as obscene. What real help is being given to the thousands of college students who during this month of October are beginning at the social functions of the colleges new friendships between those of the opposite sex? What can be said that will help?

It can be said "What you do during these months and years will remain with you all your life. The consequences of casual contacts are incalculable." That may mean something, or it may mean nothing.

Are parents content with these platitudes? Instead of condemning "Strange Interlude" would it not be a more wholesome attitude toward sex life if ministers should recommend to the parents of college students to take the time to read and to discuss with their young people this terrific drama? Which is the right attitude toward sex experience, the comedy of "The Cock-Eyed World" or the tragic consequences of "A Strange Interlude?"

Who will deny that what is true for each character of the drama is irrefragably true for every human being: the sex experience of the moment is not the end. It is the beginning for mind and memory, moulding future years.

EGBERT W. A. JENKINSON.

Methuen, Oct. 18.

Boston Daily Globe

THURSDAY, DEC 19, 1929

AUTHOR PROPOSES CIVIL SERVICE FOR CENSORS

A bill providing that "any person acting as censor of either books, plays, pictures, music or dancing for the Commonwealth, or any county, city or town, shall first pass a Civil Service examination," was filed with the clerk of the Massachusetts Senate yesterday by Senator Henry Parkman for Elliot H. Paul, an author.

Proposed legislation affecting censorship of books and plays designed "to protect public morals without jeopardizing education or amusement," is contained in Mr. Paul's petition, which "the standard Binet Intelligence test for mentally of 15 years, general information and language test similar to those required for employees of the Boston Public Library."

THE BOSTON HERALD, FRIDAY, NOVEMBER 1, 1929

FROM PROF. HALL

To the Editor of The Herald:

Can anything new, on either side, be said concerning such a book or play as "Strange Interlude"? Possibly not, but I do not remember that any of the numerous correspondents who have discussed this topic in your columns have uttered exactly the sentiment which has prevented me from caring to read the book or see the play. Many people whose taste and morals it would be presumptuous in one to criticize have read or seen this drama, and have felt themselves justified—some have professed to be edified by the experience.

It has been pointed out, over and over again, that the Bible and Shakespeare's plays contain frank stories of sexual misconduct. "Sentimentality" concerning sexual affairs has been denounced, and G. B. Shaw has been praised for his very successful efforts to abolish this state of feeling from the consciousness of the present generation of theatre-goers.

All of this argument for "liberality," for "freedom," leaves me unpersuaded, so far as I am personally concerned, not because I am especially puritanical in my reading. I have read many things far more erotic than "Strange Interlude" appears to be, but because I believe the general effect of such a work as this is depressing in its tendency to foster a low and hopeless view of human life and possibilities.

I have read Flaubert's famous story, Madame Bovary, which may well have given O'Neill the motif for "Strange Interlude." One book of that sort is enough for a lifetime. In Madame Bovary, Flaubert takes a set of utterly commonplace people, the central ones being a pretty, selfish, empty-headed wife, her insignificant husband, and her artist paramour, and tells, with much literary grace and delicacy, the wretched story of their relations. In one sense this story is a tragedy, but it is a tragedy without any ennobling moral stimulus. The Bovary family is ruined, to be sure, but such people, the reader feels, were hardly worth saving anyway. The artist goes on unscathed to whatever new adventures may be in store for him. The vice of such a book, the cause of it, lies in its utter lack of any idealism except that of literary expression. The reader despises every character in it.

Let those who, in their efforts to justify such a drama as "Strange Interlude" venture to couple the name of O'Neill with that of Shakespeare, quote from any play of this modern writer a single noble line or name a single noble character. It seems to me that the astounding prevalence of the sex motive, in its grosser forms, in the novels and plays of today is not evidence of intellectual vigor and moral courage on the part of present-day writers, but rather an indication of weakened faith and lowered aspiration for the future of mankind. Is there not a certain insidious danger in the habit of dwelling unnecessarily, even in what we choose to think a purely philosophical frame of mind, on the manifestations of this elemental and ineradicable passion?

EDWIN H. HALL.

Cambridge, Oct. 28.

character. It seems to me that the astounding prevalence of the sex motive, in its grosser forms, in the novels and plays of today is not evidence of intellectual vigor and moral courage on the part of present-day writers, but rather an indication of weakened faith and lowered aspiration for the future of mankind. Is there not a certain insidious danger in the habit of dwelling unnecessarily, even in what we choose to think a purely philosophical frame of mind, on the manifestations of this elemental and ineradicable passion?

EDWIN H. HALL.

CONFLICT OF TESTIMONY

To the Editor of The Herald:

I note that you play up on the front page the statement of Mrs. Ernest Ludlow, who sailed for England after a five weeks' visit in New England and Canada, that "prohibition is simply a farce in America."

In not the truth more apt to be presented in statements from Mrs. Margot Asquith and Lady Astor?

On Mrs. Asquith's last visit to America she criticized similarly conditions under prohibition, but later wrote to Dr. C. W. Saleeby as follows:

"It perhaps is unwise for me to write at all upon prohibition, as during my stay I only saw 'particular kinds of people in the great cosmopolitan cities of the United States who did not represent more than a small stratum of that great community.' This is quite true, I understand since I wrote that I have been wrong and that though there has been a great deal of drink concealed, and consumed in the United States, it is infinitely less than before prohibition."

Lady Astor said she had heard it said that the rich in America could get drinks, while the poor could not, but declared that she had not, during her visit to America, seen such a condition herself. She said social workers had told her that the Salvation Army, social societies and churches now had a greatly reduced task as a result of the dry laws.

"When I balance the result, offset the uplifting of the poor and struggling and the salvation which prohibition has brought to many wives and children against the alleged degradation of some of the rich—well, I have no doubt, the net result for the country has been good," she continued. "The general sentiment seems to be that it is the rich and not the poor who really get the worst of it. Prohibition in the United States has been a big contribution to the spiritual regeneration of the world."

DELCEVARE KING.

Quincy, Oct. 22.

producing these remarkable plays of America's foremost dramatist."
—The Spur

"The greatest of American plays . . . 'Strange Interlude' has the space and depth, the pauses and vast convolutions of a novel, and also the surprise, the mystery, the physical shock and reality of a play. . . . A rich and wise and beautiful and original and profound and immensely moving play. . . . After covering itself with such glory as 'Strange Interlude,' the American Theatre can say 'Stop, look and listen' to the whole wide world." —ROBERT LITTELL, N. Y. Evening Post

"You can find no play in town more rich in suggestion, more stimulating for discussion, than this strange, beautiful, terrible play." —Drama Calendar

"Most significant drama. A masterly gathering of character studies . . . the reader has something entirely new coming to him when he becomes a spectator." —E. W. OSBORN, N. Y. Evening World

"I would if I could get your private ear and thought you would be interested, strongly, and probably a little wildly, urge attendance of 'Strange Interlude.' . . . The play marks the most significant milestone in the progress of our drama that it has recorded in this generation's day, or is likely to record in the next generation's day." —BURNS MANTLE, N. Y. Daily News

"Put us all in debt to the Theatre Guild." —J. BROOKS ATKINSON, N. Y. Times

"It gives something—some depth, some solidity—which no play has ever had, and its strange method does make possible a kind of virtue new to dramatic art. . . . Without the many innovations of O'Neill's method this particular story could not be told, these particular effects could not be obtained upon them, and the situation is really serious enough to warrant immediate attention. Recently an official survey has been made, but no results are forthcoming. Meanwhile, the demand for immediate enlargement increases every day. The library has been in existence now eight years, and is serving an admirable purpose. In view of the fact that an appropriation has been made by the city council, and that there is contiguous property available, it seems as if the work of enlargement might be promptly inaugurated. The residents of Jeffries point and the First Section are entitled to a library that will properly accommodate and meet their needs. If not, Councillor Donovan should give the matter his immediate attention, to the end that the enlargement be made as soon as possible.

The need for an enlargement of the present First Section branch library and reading room on Webster St. opposite Belmont Sq., should long since have been cared for. The inadequacy of the single room now occupied is apparent at a glance, and it is no reflection on the faithful attendants of the First Section branch, to say that it is not accomplishing its best work. With larger quarters this could be done, and to the satisfaction of the people, and especially the children it caters to. During its eight years of existence the First Section branch has served a good purpose, and with the passage of time this range of human benefit has widened to a remarkable extent which can be materially increased by suitable accommodation. This deficiency, fortunately, can easily be provided for by simply adding to the present size of the branch.

upon the stage, and he has, therefore, conquered a new province for the theatre. 'Strange Interlude' is Mr. O'Neill's best play and it has received by far the best—the 'rightest'—production which his plays have ever received." —JOSEPH WOOD KAUTCH, The Nation

"A complete and agitating drama, brilliantly acted and produced." —PERCY HAMMOND, N. Y. Herald-Tribune

"An overwhelming milestone in the American theatre. It stretches the range of modern English drama to a wide, rich, new limit, the range in subtlety of motivation and themes, in complexity of feeling, in modernity of subject-matter, in intellectual candor, and in the degree attained of that combination, necessary in good dramatic writing, of typicality and underscoring with particularization and individual creation—I mean the sense of a type that is an individual and an individual in whom the type is implicit and contagious. Such frankness and closeness in feeling, such venturing in poetic inclination and statement, such technical courage and obstinacy, and such a will to force into drama stronger substance of ideas, a more immediate and necessary thought, has a tremendous significance." —STARK YOUNG, The New Republic

"An extraordinarily moving experience and all in all quite the greatest thing the American theatre can show the world." —Editorial, N. Y. Evening Post

"The outstanding American drama of last season and this." —Judge

THE BOSTON HERALD

TUESDAY, OCTOBER 15, 1929

CENSORED

To the Editor of The Herald:

Oct. 11th I went into our branch library of the Boston Public Library, secured the October Scribner's, and settled myself down for enjoyment of a literary nature. Yet what pleasure unadulterated and undefiled is there, in this wretched world? For as I turned the pages of this dignified and honorable magazine, I found some vandals had cut out from page 370 to 389. Asking one of the librarians if this had been done by some outlaw, I was told that the reason for the mutilation came from headquarters orders of the Boston Public Library.

So this is Boston: the land of the bean and the cod.

Where the books are cut up by the censors.

And the censors only stopped by the cod.

May they not rest in peace.

CARLYLE SUMMERBELL.
Roslindale, Oct. 11.

Boston Transcript

324 WASHINGTON STREET, BOSTON, MASS.

MONDAY, SEPTEMBER 30, 1929

SMASHING OLD VALUES

To the Editor of the Transcript:

After all the widespread discussion of the 'Strange Interlude' incident in Boston, someone has at last hit the bull's-eye! Dr. William Stidger states that in his opinion the movement of which such plays are a part "has back of it the objective of establishing a new moral code of American life." There is no lack of confirmation of this in the writings of our Communists themselves. Michael Gold, Communist editor of the Communist magazine The New Masses, of which O'Neill is contributing editor, says in that periodical: "We are volunteers helping to create a new table of values—smashers of the old values." There you have it. Many of those who are enemies of our Government and our civilization, confirm this, believing rightly enough, that to make us a nation of degenerates would be for them a long step toward victory, as they could then mold the proletariat according to their desires. They believe, too, that the theater is the greatest propaganda agency in existence. Who can question that through degrading plays, movies and books, the standards of the American people have been lowered in recent years to a degree almost unbelievable?

The "smashers of old values" have tremendous cause to congratulate themselves on their huge success, even in supposedly conservative Boston. When our best newspapers devote many columns to contempt and ridicule of the mayor and all who share his standards of decency, when long lists of people who undoubtedly consider themselves respectable appear in the papers "demanding" that the play be given, when the Vincent girls are announced as assisting at the play, in which the heroine's interest consists in her practice of promiscuity and abortion, certainly American standards are pretty well smashed!

Booth Tarkington says: "A pretended work of art which stimulates the animal part of a spectator is dirt." —LOIS CARSON

A DRAMATIC TEST

To the Editor of the Transcript:

In an unenlightened town of Eastern Europe a play was prohibited on account of its being silly.

It is unfortunate that this method of procedure cannot be accepted in the rest of the world. It would contribute to the mental welfare of both the public and the censors. —NICOLAS SZONIMSKY
Jamaica Plain, Sept. 28.

THE BOSTON HERALD, MONDAY, OCTOBER 21, 1929

DANCES, DRAMA, SEX

To the Editor of The Herald:

The college dailies and weeklies are reporting during October "The first dance of the season." The dance is a stimulant to the social life of the college student. If the fraternity is giving a dance, one must plan to attend and look around for a partner. It may be out of the question to invite the "girl friend" or the "boy friend" from home, in which case it means the beginning of new friendships.

How casually and sometimes how light-heartedly these new friendships begin! A sailor has his girl in every port, and a college student has a girl in every college within reach.

In "The Cock-Eyed World," all that one has to recall the names and addresses of girl friends is a book of names and addresses. The telephone is handy; call some one up for the dance. It never was quite so easy to begin a new "affair."

"The Cock-Eyed World," with a girl in the bath tub answering a telephone call for a "date" and saying that she has nothing on, is uncensored by politicians, priests or ministers. It is just a harmless amusing picture of typical youth having "dates" and forgetting all about them, I suppose.

A drama is written which begins in a college town. A romantic girl, the daughter of a professor, meets a college athlete. The professor looks upon it as just one of those "college affairs" easily begun and easily ended. There are other affairs easily begun in the life of this girl. It might have been an amusing comedy if the author believed this was a "Cock-Eyed World." But the author knew that what is so easy to begin is not so easy to discard and forget. The human being is not a mere animal. The human being has within the mind pages upon which are written indelibly these casual beginnings. They do not cease with the dance. They end only when the dance of life is ended.

There is no comedy for Eugene O'Neill in sex life. There is none of the comedy of "The Cock-Eyed World" in "Strange Interlude." It is an honest story of sex life, thundering home the truth that from the highest experience of romantic love to the lowest experience of prostitution the experience of the moment is the beginning not the end.

It is not the province of the mayor of Boston to be particularly concerned for the college students in and around Boston. But it is the concern of the churches and the ministers. We believe in teaching the ancient commandments as binding in the world of today. Some ministers try to get at the problem by railing again dancing, movies, theatres and unchaperoned parties. Some have condemned "Strange Interlude" as obscene. What real help is being given to the thousands of college students who during this month of October are beginning at the social functions of the colleges new friendships between those of the opposite sex? What can be said that will help?

It can be said "What you do during these months and years will remain with you all your life. The consequences of casual contacts are incalculable." That may mean something, or it may mean nothing.

Are parents content with these platitudes? Instead of condemning "Strange Interlude" would it not be a more wholesome attitude toward sex life if ministers should recommend to the parents of college students to take the time to read and to discuss with their young people this terrific drama? Which is the right attitude toward sex experience, the comedy of "The Cock-Eyed World" or the tragic consequences of "A Strange Interlude"?

Who will deny that what is true for each character of the drama is irrefragably true for every human being: the sex experience of the moment is not the end; it is the beginning for mind and memory, moulding future years. —EGBERT W. A. JENKINSON.
Methuen, Oct. 18.

Boston Daily Globe

THURSDAY, DEC 19, 1929

AUTHOR PROPOSES CIVIL SERVICE FOR CENSORS

A bill providing that "any person acting as censor of either books, plays, pictures, music or dancing for the Commonwealth, or any county, city or town, shall first pass a Civil Service examination," was filed with the clerk of the Massachusetts Senate yesterday by Senator Henry Parkman for Elliot H. Paul, an author.

Proposed legislation affecting censorship of books and plays designed "to protect public morals without jeopardizing education or amusement," is contained in Mr. Paul's petition.

Under "the standard Binet intelligence test for mentally 15 years, general information and language test similar to those required for employees of the Boston Public Library."

THE BOSTON HERALD, FRIDAY, NOVEMBER 1, 1929

FROM PROF. HALL

To the Editor of The Herald:

Can anything new, on either side, be said concerning such a book or play as "Strange Interlude"? Possibly not, but I do not remember that any of the numerous correspondents who have discussed this topic in your columns have uttered exactly the sentiment which has prevented me from caring to read the book or see the play. Many people whose taste and morals it would be presumptuous in one to criticize have read or seen this drama, and have felt themselves justified—some have professed to be edited by the experience.

It has been pointed out, over and over again, that the Bible and Shakespeare's plays contain frank stories of sexual misconduct. "Sentimentality" concerning sexual affairs has been denounced, and G. B. Shaw has been praised for his very successful efforts to abolish this state of feeling from the consciousness of the present generation of theatre-goers.

All of this argument for "liberality," for "freedom," leaves me unpersuaded, so far as I am personally concerned, not because I am especially puritanical in my reading. I have read many things far more erotic than "Strange Interlude" appears to be, but because I believe the general effect of such work as this is depressing in its tendency to foster a low and hopeless view of human life and possibilities.

I have read Flaubert's famous story, Madame Bovary, which may well have given O'Neill the motif for "Strange Interlude." One book of that sort is enough for a lifetime. In Madame Bovary, Flaubert takes a set of utterly commonplace people, the central ones being a pretty, selfish, empty-headed wife, her insignificant husband, and her artist paramour, and tells, with much literary grace and delicacy, the wretched story of their relations. In one sense this story is a tragedy, but it is a tragedy without any ennobling moral stimulus. The Bovary family is ruined, to be sure, but such people, the reader feels, were hardly worth saving anyway. The artist goes on unscathed to whatever new adventures may be in store for him. The vice of such a book, the curse of it, lies in its utter lack of any idealism except that of literary expression. The reader despises every character in it.

Let those who, in their efforts to justify such a drama as "Strange Interlude" venture to couple the name of O'Neill with that of Shakespeare, quote from any play of this modern writer a single noble line or name a single noble character. It seems to me that the astounding prevalence of the sex motive, in its grosser forms, in the novels and plays of today is not evidence of intellectual vigor and moral courage on the part of present-day writers, but rather an indication of weakened faith and lowered aspiration for the future of mankind. Is there not a certain insidious danger in the habit of dwelling unnecessarily, even in what we choose to think a purely philosophic frame of mind, on the manifestations of this elemental and ineradicable passion?

EDWIN H. HALL.
Cambridge, Oct. 28.

CONFLICT OF TESTIMONY

To the Editor of The Herald:

I note that you play up on the front page the statement of Mrs. Ernest Ludlow, who sailed for England after a five weeks' visit in New England and Canada, that "prohibition is simply a farce in America."

Is not the truth more apt to be presented in statements from Mrs. Margot Asquith and Lady Astor?

On Mrs. Asquith's last visit to America she criticized similarly conditions under prohibition, but later wrote to Dr. C. W. Sateby as follows:

"It perhaps is unwise for me to write at all upon prohibition, as during my stay I only saw 'particular kinds of people in the great cosmopolitan cities of the United States who did not represent more than a small stratum of that great community.' This is quite true. I understand since I wrote that I have been wrong and that though there has been a great deal of drink concealed and consumed in the United States, it is infinitely less than before prohibition."

Lady Astor said she had heard it said that the rich in America could get drinks, while the poor could not, but declared that she had not, during her visit to America, seen such a condition herself. She said social workers had told her that the Salvation Army, social societies and churches now had a greatly reduced task as a result of the dry laws.

"When I balance the result, offset the uplifting of the poor and struggling and the salvation which prohibition has brought to many wives and children against the alleged degradation of some of the rich—well, I have no doubt, the net result for the country has been good," she continued. "The general sentiment seems to be that it is the rich and not the poor who really get the worst of it. Prohibition in the United States has been a big contribution to the spiritual regeneration of the world."

DELCEVARE KING.
Quincy, Oct. 22.

Quincy Theatre

Quincy, Mass.

EVENINGS ONLY
at 5:30 Sharp

Dinner intermission from 7:40 to 9:00
Final Curtain at 11.

Late arrivals are seated only during intermissions.

To insure prompt restaurant service in the limited time allotted for the dinner intermission it is suggested that patrons should make their dinner reservations in advance.

Now Playing

Mail Orders Now

Prices:

$4.40, $3.00, $2.50, $2.00, $1.65, $1.00

serious enough to warrant immediate attention. Recently an official survey has been made, but no results are forthcoming. Meanwhile, the demand for immediate enlargement increases every day. The library has been in existence now eight years, and is serving an admirable purpose. In view of the fact that an appropriation has been made by the city council, and that there is contiguous property available, it seems as if the work of enlargement might be promptly inaugurated. The residents of Jeffries point and the First Section are entitled to a library that will properly accommodate and meet their needs. If not, Councilor Donovan should give the matter his immediate attention, to the end that the enlargement be made as soon as possible.

The need for an enlargement of the present First Section branch library and reading room on Webster St. opposite Belmont Sq., should long since have been cared for. The inadequacy of the single room now occupied is apparent at a glance, and it is no reflection on the faithful attendants of the First Section branch, to say that it is not accomplishing its best work. With larger quarters this could be done, and to the satisfaction of the people, and especially the children it caters to. During its eight years of existence the First Section branch has served a good purpose, and with the passage of time this range of human benefit has widened to a remarkable extent which can be materially increased by suitable accommodation. This deficiency, fortunately, can easily be provided for by simply adding to the present size of the branch.

THE BOSTON HERALD

TUESDAY, OCTOBER 15, 1929

CENSORED

To the Editor of The Herald:

Oct. 11th I went into our branch library of the Boston Public Library, secured the October Scribner's, and settled myself down for enjoyment of a literary nature. Yet what pleasure unadulterated and undefiled is there, in this woe-filled world? For as I turned the pages of this dignified and honorable magazine, I found some vandals had cut out from page 370 to 389. Asking one of the librarians if this had been done by some outlaw, I was told that the reason for the mutilation came from headquarters orders of the Boston Public Library.

So this is Boston: the land of the bean and the cod. Where the books are cut up by the censors. And the censors only stopped by the cod.

May they not rest in peace.

CARLYLE SUMMERBELL.
Roslindale, Oct. 11.

Boston Transcript

324 WASHINGTON STREET, BOSTON, MASS.

MONDAY, SEPTEMBER 30, 1929

SMASHING OLD VALUES

To the Editor of the Transcript:

After all the widespread discussion of the "Strange Interlude" incident in Boston, someone has at last hit the bull's-eye! Dr. William Stidger states that in his opinion the movement of which such plays are a part "has back of it the objective of establishing a new moral code of American life." There is no luck of confirmation of this in the writings of our Communists themselves. Michael Gold, Communist editor of the Communist magazine The New Masses of which O'Neill is contributing editor, says in that periodical: "We are volunteers helping to create a new table of values—smashers of the old values." There you have it. Many of those who are enemies of our Government and our civilization, confirm this, believing rightly enough that to make us a nation of degenerates would be for them a long step toward victory, as they could then mold the proletariat according to their desires. They believe, too, that the theater is the greatest propaganda agency in existence. Who can question that through degrading plays, movies and books, the standards of the American people have been lowered in recent years to a degree almost unbelievable?

The "smashers of old values" have tremendous cause to congratulate themselves on their huge success, even in supposedly conservative Boston. When our best newspapers devote many columns to contempt and ridicule of the mayor and all who share his standards of decency, when long lists of people who undoubtedly consider themselves respectable appear in the papers "demanding" that the play be given, when the Vincent girls are announced as assisting at the play, in which the heroine's interest consists in her practice of promiscuity and abortion, certainly American standards are pretty well smashed!

Booth Tarkington says: "A pretended work of art which stimulates the animal part of a spectator is dirt."

Boston, Sept. 28. LOIS CARSON

A DRAMATIC TEST

To the Editor of the Transcript:

In an unenlightened town of Eastern Europe a play was prohibited on account of its being silly.

It is unfortunate that this method of procedure cannot be accepted in the rest of the world. It would contribute to the mental welfare of both the public and the censors.

NICOLAS SLONIMSKY
Jamaica Plain, Sept. 28.

THE BOSTON HERALD, MONDAY, OCTOBER 21, 1929

DANCES, DRAMA, SEX

To the Editor of The Herald:

The college dailies and weeklies are reporting during October "The first dance of the season." The dance is a stimulant to the social life of the college student. If the fraternity is giving a dance, one must plan to attend and look around for a partner. It may be out of the question to invite the "girl friend" or the "boy friend" from home, in which case it means the beginning of new friendships.

How casually and sometimes how light-heartedly these new friendships begin! A sailor has his girl in every port, and a college student has a girl in every college within reach.

In "The Cock-Eyed World," all that one has to recall the names and addresses of girl friends is a book of names and addresses. The telephone is handy; call some one up for the dance. It never was quite so easy to begin a new "affair."

"The Cock-Eyed World," with a girl in the bath tub answering a telephone call for a "date" and saying that she has nothing on, is uncensored by politicians, priests or ministers. It is just a harmless amusing picture of typical youth having "dates" and forgetting all about them, I suppose.

A drama is written which begins in a college town. A romantic girl, the daughter of a professor, meets a college athlete. The professor looks upon it as just one of those "college affairs" easily begun and easily ended. There are other affairs easily begun in the life of this girl. It might have been an amusing comedy if the author believed this was a "Cock-Eyed World." But the author knew that what is so easy to begin is not so easy to discard and forget. The human being is not a mere animal. The human being has within the mind pages upon which are written indelible these casual beginnings. They do not cease with the dance. They end only when the dance of life is ended.

There is no comedy for Eugene O'Neill in sex life. There is none of the comedy of "The Cock-Eyed World" in "Strange Interlude." It is an honest story of sex life, thundering home the truth that from the highest experience of romantic love to the lowest experience of prostitution the experience of the moment is the beginning not the end. It is not the province of the mayor of Boston to be particularly concerned for the college students in and around Boston. But it is the concern of the churches and the ministers. We believe in teaching the ancient commandments as binding in the world of today. Some ministers try to get at the problem by railing against dancing, movies, theatres and unchaperoned parties. Some have condemned "Strange Interlude" as obscene. What real help is being given to the thousands of college students who during this month of October are beginning at the social functions of the colleges new friendships between those of the opposite sex? What can be said that will help?

It can be said "What you do during these months and years will remain with you all your life. The consequences of casual contacts are incalculable." That may mean something, or it may mean nothing.

Are parents content with these platitudes? Instead of condemning "Strange Interlude" would it not be a more wholesome attitude toward sex life if ministers should recommend to the parents of college students to take the time to read and to discuss with their young people this terrific drama? Which is the right attitude toward sex experience, the comedy of "The Cock-Eyed World" or the tragic consequences of "A Strange Interlude?"

Who will deny that what is true for each character of the drama is inescapably true for every human being: the sex experience of the moment is not the end; it is the beginning for mind and memory, moulding future years. EGBERT W. A. JENKINSON.
Methuen, Oct. 18.

Boston Daily Globe

THURSDAY, DEC 19, 1929

AUTHOR PROPOSES CIVIL SERVICE FOR CENSORS

A bill providing that "any person acting as censor of either books, plays, pictures, music or dancing for the Commonwealth, or any county, city or town, shall first pass a Civil Service examination," was filed with the clerk of the Massachusetts Senate yesterday by Senator Henry Parkman for Elliot H. Paul, an author. Proposed legislation affecting censorship of books and plays designed "to protect public morals without jeopardizing education or amusement," is contained in Mr. Paul's petition. It includes "the standard Binet intelligence test for mentality of 15 years, general information and language test similar to those required for employees of the Boston Public Library."

THE BOSTON HERALD, FRIDAY, NOVEMBER 1, 1929

FROM PROF. HALL

To the Editor of The Herald:

Can anything new, on either side, be said concerning such a book or play as "Strange Interlude"? Possibly not, but I do not remember that any of the numerous correspondents who have discussed this topic in your columns have uttered exactly the sentiment which has prevented me from caring to read the book or see the play. Many people whose taste and morals it would be presumptuous in one to criticize have read or seen this drama, and have felt themselves justified—some have professed to be edified by the experience. It has been pointed out, over and over again, that the Bible and Shakespeare's plays contain frank stories of sexual misconduct. "Sentimentality" concerning sexual affairs has been denounced, and G. B. Shaw has been praised for his very successful efforts to abolish this state of feeling from the consciousness of the present generation of theatre-goers.

All of this argument for "liberality," for "freedom," leaves me unpersuaded, so far as I am personally concerned, not because I am especially puritanical in my reading. I have read many things far more erotic than "Strange Interlude" appears to be, but because I believe the general effect of such a work as this is depressing in its tendency to foster a low and hopeless view of human life and possibilities.

I have read Flaubert's famous story, Madame Bovary, which may well have given O'Neill the motif for "Strange Interlude." One book of that sort is enough for a lifetime. In Madame Bovary, Flaubert takes a set of utterly commonplace people, the central ones being a pretty, selfish, empty-headed wife, her insignificant husband, and her artist paramour, and tells, with much literary grace and delicacy, the wretched story of their relations. In one sense this story is a tragedy, but it is a tragedy without any ennobling moral stimulus. The Bovary family is ruined, to be sure, but such people, the reader feels, were hardly worth saving anyway. The artist goes on unscathed to whatever new adventures may be in store for him. The vice of such a book, the curse of it, lies in its utter lack of any idealism except that of literary expression. The reader despises every character in it.

Let those who, in their efforts to justify such a drama as "Strange Interlude" venture to couple the name of O'Neill with that of Shakespeare, quote from any play of this modern writer a single noble line or name a single noble character. It seems to me that the astounding prevalence of the sex motive, in its grosser forms, in the novels and plays of today is not evidence of intellectual vigor and moral courage on the part of present-day writers, but rather an indication of weakened faith and lowered aspiration for the future of mankind. Is there not a certain insidious danger in the habit of dwelling unnecessarily, even in what we choose to think a purely philosophic frame of mind, on the manifestations of this elemental and ineradicable passion?

EDWIN H. HALL,
Cambridge, Oct. 28.

CONFLICT OF TESTIMONY

To the Editor of The Herald:

I note that you play up on the front page the statement of Mrs. Ernest Ludlow, who sailed for England after a five weeks' visit in New England and Canada, that "prohibition is simply a farce in America."

Is not the truth more apt to be presented in statements from Mrs. Margot Asquith and Lady Astor?

On Mrs. Asquith's last visit to America she criticised similarly conditions under prohibition, but later wrote to Dr. C. W. Slesby as follows:

It perhaps is unwise for me to write at all upon prohibition, as during my stay I only saw "particular kinds of people in the great cosmopolitan cities of the United States who did not represent more than a small stratum of that great community." This is quite true. I understand since I wrote that I have been wrong and that though there has been a great deal of drink concealed and consumed in the United States, it is infinitely less than before prohibition.

Lady Astor said she had heard it said that the rich in America could get drinks, while the poor could not, but declared that she had not, during her visit to America, seen such a condition herself. She said social workers had told her that the Salvation Army, social societies and churches now had a greatly reduced task as a result of the dry laws.

"When I balance the result, offset the uplifting of the poor and struggling and the salvation which prohibition has brought to many wives and children against the alleged degradation of some of the rich—well, I have no doubt the net result for the country has been good," she continued. "The general sentiment seems to be that it is the rich and not the poor who really get the worst of it. Prohibition in the United States has been a big contribution to the spiritual regeneration of the world."

DELCEVARE KING.
Quincy, Oct. 22.

THE MORAL CYCLE

By T. N. CARVER

Now that the tempest in a teapot which raged for a time over the question of censorship has subsided, it is time to consider the deeper significance of that episode. It is a general fact, universally recognized, that moral attitudes change from time to time. It is also a fact, not so generally recognized, that these changes are not always in the same direction. Attitudes change, and then change back again, so that one change reverses the other and, in a sense, cancels it. They who like the change which is taking place at the moment call it progress or some other high sounding name. They who dislike it call it decadence or some other disagreeable name. When the change reverses itself they who called the previous movement progressive call the present one decadent, etc.

Just now the movement is distinctly in the direction of greater freedom (or laxity) in matters of sex. Erotic novels and plays are only surface indications of that deeper current. Sex taboos are giving way to greater frankness (or shamelessness), both verbal and actual, both theoretical and practical, in such matters. The superiority of fire is now on the side of those who favor the change. They who oppose it have to duck into their trenches if they would escape the barrage of ridicule which is aimed at them.

The emotional horror once felt (or expressed) toward freedom (or looseness) in sex is now giving way to a more rational attitude. Instead of thinking of adultery as wrong in itself, the more sophisticated are coming to look at it as something to be considered on its merits. Excessive or indiscreet indulgence, like excessive or indiscreet indulgence in tobacco, liquor or narcotics, is of course condemned. Such excess or indiscretion is, of course, bad form and not to be committed by really nice people. But, as for being wrong in itself, that is a survival of Victorianism!

There have been numerous periods of this kind, preceded and followed by waves of what it is now popular to call puritanism. It is highly probable that there will be another revival (or recrudescence) of puritanism after the present movement has spent itself. It will be a period in which the superiority of fire will be on the other side, when the advocates of sex freedom will have to duck into their trenches to escape the barrage of ridicule aimed at them, when they themselves will scarcely be able to avoid a sheepish grin when they attempt to identify art with eroticism.

The last wave of this kind reached its height in the middle of what is called the Victorian period. Dean Inge has reminded the deriders of that period that it was a great era. Except in the field of physical science and the mechanic arts, the present period has done nothing so well as it was done in that period. One may go further and add that the brains and the virtue of the Old World were largely shot away by the World War, as those of our South were shot away by the Civil War. This has left the balance of intellectual and moral power in the hands of the shallow and the characterless. But races seem to have ways of renewing themselves. The balance of power is therefore likely to return to the deeper thinking and better disciplined elements of Europe and America as it has already returned to those elements in our Southern States since the decadence following the Civil War.

Dean Inge, of course, does not imply that the achievements of the Victorian period were the results of puritanism. It is not to be inferred that the present dominance of the cheap and lawless in art, literature, and social philosophy is the result of libertinism. It is worth suggesting, however, that we of the present period should not be too cocksure of our own intellectual and moral preeminence.

The last preceding wave of laxity seems to have reached its height in England and America just before the Wesleyan revivals. The last one before that came in with the Restoration. They all, together with their Puritan reactions, suggest that a study of moral cycles may yield as good results as recent studies of business cycles—which isn't saying much.

HIGH COURT TO RULE ON BOOKS

Publisher of "American Tragedy" Appeals $300 Fine by Judge Hayes

WANTS FULL TEXT SUBMITTED TO JURY

The Massachusetts supreme court will determine the controversial issue of book censorship, under existing statute laws, as a result of the exceptions to rulings of Judge Hayes in the superior court, taken by Donald S. Fricke, New York publisher of Theodore Dreiser's "An American Tragedy."

Fricke, originally found guilty in municipal court of making a sale of an obscene book to L. Daniel J. Hines of the police department, and fined $100, appealed and was convicted by a jury in Suffolk superior court, April 18. He was fined $300 when the case came up for disposition yesterday afternoon by Judge Hayes, who granted a stay of sentence that the issue may be submitted to the supreme court.

FILES HERE FOR SENTENCE

The particularly relevant issue is whether a book is to be judged by its complete text or by alleged objectionable or obscene sentences or paragraphs. Judge Hayes ruled during the trial in April that the reading to the jury of alleged obscene passages complied with state laws and he refused the demand of counsel for Fricke to force the submission of the entire text to the jury. It has been the contention of Fricke that the book in question should not be judged by excerpts.

Yesterday Fricke flew from New York to appear before Judge Hayes late in the afternoon. Asst. Dist. Atty. Frederick Doyle, in moving for sentence, asked that the publisher be sent to jail, and argued that his sole motive in challenging the validity of the censorship system in effect in Boston was to increase the sales of Dreiser's book. He asserted that Fricke had used Boston as a broadcasting medium to stimulate sales and that neither probation nor a fine would be adequate punishment.

Mr. Doyle admitted that the district attorney and unquestionably judges of lower courts are interested in the determination of the censorship controversy and he recalled the refusal of Dist. Atty. Foley to act as book censor or to allow any attacks of his office to exercise such authority.

Atty. Thomas D. Lavalley ridiculed the contentions of the assistant district attorney and told Judge Hayes that while the court was considering the case, a public meeting, presided over by ex-Mayor Peters and attended by very many prominent citizens, was providing opportunity for a discussion of the need of changes in the censorship laws.

DECEMBER 5, 1929

Speakers Attack Law Banning Books By Reason of Isolated Paragraphs

The Massachusetts law which makes it possible for a book to be banned because of indecent or obscene passages was bitterly attacked yesterday afternoon at a meeting held in Perkins hall, Boylston street, under auspices of the Massachusetts committee for the revision of the book law.

Edward A. Weeks, Jr., chairman of the committee, presided, and the speakers were former Mayor Andrew J. Peters, of Boston; Dr. Abraham Myerson, psychiatrist and professor of neurology at Tufts medical school, and the Rev. Spence Burton of the Cowley Fathers of the Episcopal Church of St. John the Evangelist, Bowdoin street.

Mr. Weeks in his introductory remarks said there is something unsound and unjust about a law which enables a book to be judged by "isolated" passages or words.

Former Mayor Peters said, "We have a step to take beyond the correction of the statute, and that is to educate the public as to what forms of literature or types of books are acceptable to good taste, and what forms tend to injure the morals or minds of youth and should properly be suppressed."

Fr. Burton said there are undoubtedly "dirty books" but there are also "dirty sneaks" who set themselves up as censors under an appearance of "spiritual snobbery." "We do not need any amateur auxiliary to the police force of Boston, for which I have the greatest respect," he said.

Dr. Myerson said that inquiry among criminals had revealed to him that these men do not read forbidden books or "liberal" magazines, but read only the sentimental stories depicting "the kind of life which has no blood in it and does not treat of sex or the facts of life."

CENSORSHIP

The effort to obtain the needed revision of our book censorship law is to be renewed at the coming session of the General Court. The new bill is sponsored by Representative Henry L. Shattuck and backed by more than 150 of the responsible and outstanding citizens of the State—such churchmen as Bishop Slattery and Dr. Stafford, such educators as Bliss Perry and President Mary E. Woolley, such librarians as C. F. D. Belden, such lawyers as Robert Dodge and Andrew J. Peters, and others equally eminent in the professions and the service of the public. This is not the wild proposal of half-informed individuals who have slight interest in the general welfare. The bill represents the efforts, covering many months, of a Massachusetts Citizens Committee, whose members have studied their problem from every angle.

The sole purpose, of course, is to prevent the banning of a book or a pamphlet because of a single word or sentence or paragraph or page, and to require that the context shall be considered in making a judgment. The immediate problem is to provide a formula of words which shall accomplish that purpose and shall merit the support of all the parties properly interested. The present law brings under the ban any book "containing language which is obscene, indecent or impure, or manifestly tends to corrupt the morals of youth." Nobody has proposed the elimination of the phrase about the corruption of youthful morals.

Two substitutes for the phrase "containing language which is obscene" have been examined. The Committee proposes that this shall be changed so as to make an explicit requirement that the entire context shall be considered in the judging of a book. This would read: " . . . a book which, considered as a whole, is obscene."

The other alternative was to reduce the phrase to this very simple form: " . . . a book which is obscene. . . ." The Committee rejected the latter reading on the ground that it is ambiguous and would require a court decision for its application in any instance. There are Federal Court decisions which interpret "is obscene" as meaning "containing obscenity," and as a book with a single obscene word or phrase contains obscenity this wording in practical effect would leave the situation just where it is now.

The absurdities of the present situation many times have been emphasized. We have a censorship of intimidation and threat. A bad law is interpreted literally by private parties and the courts are not called upon for actual decisions. Judges and juries do not pass upon the books we ban. They are removed from the shelves by the booksellers upon notice by some agent or officer that various passages are deemed objectionable. The rest of the world looks on in amazement and jeers and we endure a small amount of the sort of advertising that does the city harm. Let us now examine this new proposal from every point of view and see if it ought not to command the support of the people and of their representatives in our law-making body.

JUDGMENT IN MASSACHUSETTS

An Immoral Phrase! Ban the Whole Book!

BY CARL ROSE

SAYS TEACHING ADULTS IN U. S. LAGS

Expert Declares Europe Leads in Educating Grown-ups

Declaring that "Americans are particularly liable to consider themselves completely educated if they have finished high school or even grammar school," Miss Hilda Smith, director of the committee on affiliated summer schools for women workers in industry, at a luncheon yesterday given in her honor at the Women's City Club, also said the United States is far behind Europe in the development of adult education.

"All over the world the adult education movement has had a mushroom growth since the war. Adult education must be related to life, it must come down to brass tacks. It must go on throughout life, and simplicity must be the keynote of adult education, especially for workers," she added.

"In this country public night schools fulfill many of the functions of the workers' schools abroad, but there is still much room for development of schools which more nearly fit the workers' needs," she pointed out.

Other speakers included Arthur Morgan, president of Antioch College; Charles F. D. Belden, director of the public library; James A. Moyer, university extension service; Mrs. Rose Norwood, Trade Union College.

Miss Frances G. Curtis, president of the club, presided at the meeting, which was held under the auspices of the subcommittee on education, of which Mrs. Cornelia Stratton Parker is chairman.

Boston Transcript

TUESDAY, DECEMBER 10, 1929

AN OLD, WELL-KNOWN STORY

[From the Syracuse Herald]

A Boston bookstore has been fined $300 for the sale of "An American Tragedy," Theodore Dreiser's famous novel. The result will, of course, be widespread ridicule of the literary censorship under which the Boston court censorship under penalty. In central New York, the news can be read with special interest and astonishment, owing to the origin of Dreiser's romance—a work much overrated in the literary sense.

Mr. Dreiser was one of the newspaper reporters at the memorable trial in Herkimer (former Justice Devendorf) presiding of Chester K. Gillette for the drowning of Grace Brown in Big Moose Lake. The tragedy and its distressing circumstances supplied him with the chief material for his once "best seller." In the development of his ready-made plot he displayed more business sense than literary skill. In other words, his exploit was principally notable as a practical application in a celebrated case of the time-honored Byronic maxim that "truth is always stranger than fiction." The book transcript therefore sold itself, without much regard to its literary workmanship. This, however, is not said with any view to disparaging the better exhibitions of Dreiser's talents.

The point of present interest hereabouts is that after four or five years' widespread circulation throughout the United States, the book version of the tragic story of a young man from Cortland and his pitiful double victim is now branded with the stamp of outlawry by a magistrate in what was once America's most brilliant literary center. This startling news will produce two effects in central New York. Some of our older fellow citizens will be consolence-stricken by the reflection that they read every word of the published proceedings of the Gillette trial about twenty-four years ago. Others will be only amazed or amused by the revelation of Boston's compulsory sensitiveness or delicacy. But we should say that the latter class will outnumber the former by about a thousand to one.

Propose New Law on Book Censorship

Citizens Committee's Bill to Be Introduced by Representative Shattuck

Wide in Scope

Would Allow Court to Consider Whole of Objectionable Volume

By Karl Schriftgiesser

A revised censorship law, designed to meet the approval of the public, the bookseller and the guardians of Massachusetts morals, and endorsed by a distinguished committee of citizens, will be filed with the Legislature next week by Representative Henry L. Shattuck of Boston. Under this revision, it is pointed out by the committee, no book of "manifest pornography" will escape the eye of the law, but every book, when adjudged in court, will be judged as a whole and not, as under the present law, by isolated passages.

Known as the Massachusetts Citizens Committee for the Revision of the Book Law, this group of prominent men and women from all over the State have been studying the censorship situation in Boston for the past year. They have at last evolved a proposed statute that they hope will solve what they call "the distressing situation which has brought the ridicule of the entire civilized world upon the city of Boston." Recognizing the need of legal control of printed matter for the protection of youth, they nevertheless also recognize that with the changing times the book law needs revision. Acting insofar as possible upon the assumption that no law should be introduced favoring an interested group by itself but that whatever change is made should favor the greatest number of people. The proposed law reads as follows:

The New Law
Whoever imports, prints, publishes, sells or distributes a book, pamphlet, ballad, printed paper or other thing which, considered as a whole, is obscene, indecent or impure, or manifestly tends to corrupt the morals of youth, or an obscene, indecent or impure print, picture, figure, image or description, manifestly tending to corrupt the morals of youth, or introduces into a family, school or place of education, or buys, procures, receives, or has in his possession any such book, pamphlet, ballad, printed paper, obscene, indecent or impure print, picture, figure, image or other thing, either for the purpose of sale, exhibition, loan or circulation or with intent to introduce the same into a family, school or place of education, shall be punished by imprisonment for not more than two years and by a fine of not less than $100 nor more than $1000.

A statement issued today by Edward A. Weeks, chairman of the committee, reads:

"For a quarter of a century censorship of books in Boston has been a subject of study by many thoughtful people. For some time the present law, which had worked effectively in ridding the State of manifest pornography, was believed adequate. But within the past few years a wave of censorship, which seemed prompted more by hysteria than by common sense, swept from the shelves of Boston bookstores sixty-five volumes. Among them were many of the best efforts of the leading writers of the world. In one instance at least a bookseller was called into court and because of this it became apparent that the law so works that a single isolated passage in a book, if allegedly obscene apart from the text, is sufficient to bar the entire book.

Result of Wide Study
"When this interpretation of the statute became common knowledge hundreds of people began to realize the futility of the statute. They realized that a law designed to protect youth from indecent literature was working to prevent mature minds from reading books recognized all over the world as sincere pieces of literature. They then saw that the only way a revision of the book law was not a demand for a piece of special legislation to protect the bookseller alone, but that it was a demand to inject commonsense into an outworn statute that was not alone making Boston ridiculous outside but that was making it ridiculous even to the most conservative element inside.

"With this in mind the committee was formed to study the situation. Many proposed changes were considered, thrashed out, rejected. Inasmuch as it was clear that any book should be judged as a whole and not in part, and that a bad book judged as a whole was just as objectionable as a book judged upon objectionable passages, it was eventually decided that the revision of the statute should make it clear that the whole book must be considered.

"At first it was thought that the change should read, 'Whoever imports, etc., a book which is obscene, indecent and improper should be in violation of the statute. But research revealed precedents in Federal law and other State legislation held that even if the law did so read it was not essential to study the whole book. It was then that the present proposed revision was framed, specifically setting forth the necessity to judge a book as a whole and not by single passages. Such a law would not let loose a flood of manifest pornography, nor would it bar a serious study, or novel, or play in which there might be frank scenes essential to the whole book. Thus it was felt that the distressing situation which has brought the ridicule of the entire civilized world upon Boston would be removed without weakening a law essentially necessary.

Watch and Ward Out
"Mr. Caulkins of the Watch and Ward Society stated in a press interview that in all cases of judging a book, it must, as it now does, study the entire book. Despite this tacit admission the Watch and Ward Society will not endorse this bill, although several ministers, including Bishop Slattery, do.

"It was felt by the committee that a revision such as the one using the 'which is' phrase was obscure in its meaning. After consulting several legal authorities it was decided that the clear, well-defined law, entirely lacking in need for judicial interpretation was the one and only revision which should go before the General Court this winter. Therefore the law quoted above will be filed with the Legislature by Representative Henry L. Shattuck during the coming week."

A partial list of the ministers, editors, educators, and men and women in public life are the following:

The Committee
Rev. Charles L. Slattery, Bishop of Massachusetts; Rabbi Harry Levi, Dean Philomen Sturges of St. Paul's Cathedral; Father Spencer Burton; Dr. George H. Spencer, secretary Massachusetts Bible Society; Rev. E. Talmadge Root; Rev. George Lyman Payne; Rev. Samuel A. Elliot; Dr. Albert C. Dieffenbach, editor of the Christian Register; former Mayor Andrew J. Peters; Charles F. Belden; Grafton Cushing; George R. Nutter; Alfred R. Shrigley, assistant attorney general; Harry Russell, Central Labor Union; Lawrence Dodge; John L. Hall; Frederick M. Jones; Third National Bank, Springfield; Ashton L. Carr, State Street Trust Co.; Carl Dreyfus; Hugh Bancroft; Isaac R. Webber; Allen Pittman; Reginald Washburn, Worcester; Dr. John B. Hawes; Dr. Tracy Putnam; Dr. Abraham Myerson; Dr. George R. Minot; Dr. Lincoln Davis; M. A. DeWolfe Howe; Philip Hale; H. Addington Bruce; Allen French; Walter Pritchard Eaton; Professor Bliss Perry; Professor John Livingston Lowes; Langdon Warner; Professor F. W. Taussig; Professor Charles Hall Grandgent; Professor Samuel Elliot Morison; Professor Zachariah Chafee, Jr.; President William E. Neilson of Smith College; President Mary E. Woolley; Dr. Alfred E. Stearns; President Ellen Fitz Pendleton; Professor Vida Scudder; Dr. Arthur D. Little; President John A. Cousens; Professor A. Kingsley Porter; President Arthur Stanley Pease; Edgar Sedgwick; Alfred R. McIntyre; Herbert F. Jenkins; Ferris Grenslie; Edwin Francis Edgett; Robert L. O'Brien; Kent Knowlton; Lowell Couric-Citizen; Dr. William Healey; Mrs. Eva Whiting; White; Henry L. Bowles; Springfield Republican; Cooper Gay, New Bedford Standard; Mrs. John F. Moors; Mrs. Courtney Baylor; Miss Marion L. Spencer; Stockton Raymond, Children's Welfare Society; Mrs. Roland M. Baker; Mrs. Ronald Lynde; Mrs. Barrett Wendell; Mrs. William Z. Ripley; Mrs. Henry D. Tudor; Mrs. George Hoague; Mrs. Arthur Rotch; Mrs. Carl L. Watson; and Orra L. Stone.

Whole Book—or a Part?

Regarding the effort of a distinguished committee of citizens to secure a change of the Massachusetts book censorship statute, the Boston Post of this morning makes a significant statement. "The change in the law proposed by the committee," says our friendly contemporary, "is really directed against the interpretation of the present law by the courts." Although this editorial statement itself requires careful interpretive analysis before it can be properly understood by the average reader, still we must say that the Post's contention seems to us substantially correct. There are, it is true, no words in the existing statute which unambiguously give definite, exact and unambiguous instructions that a book shall be considered obscene if it contains any single passage which seems to a jury obscene. The makers of the statute left this question open.

That being the case, it becomes necessary regarding this law, as sooner or later it becomes necessary regarding every other law that ever was written, to look to the records of our courts in order to see how the courts have decided any questions which, under the statute itself, are left open. In this instance, the decision as given by the Supreme Judicial Court some twenty years ago seems to determine the matter in a most definite and positive fashion. We refer to the case of Commonwealth vs. Buckley (200 Mass. 346), which is commonly accepted as the ruling case, and which involved the notorious but second-rate novel "Three Weeks." Here the defendant had asked the trial judge to rule, among other points raised, that "The jury have a right to consider the whole of the contents of the book in determining whether the parts referred to come within the description of the indictment."

The trial judge refused such a ruling, and instructed the jury in his charge: "It makes no difference what the object in writing this book was, or what its whole tone is, if these pages that are complained of, the language that is set out in the bill of particulars, is in your mind obscene, impure, indecent, and manifestly tending to the corruption of youth, then you must find a verdict of guilty." And the Supreme Court, having heard the case on appeal, said, "We see no error in the manner in which the court dealt with any of the [defendant's] requests."

Now, in this case, the courts merely did their level best to discover and define what the true intent and effect of the existing Massachusetts censorship law was regarding the issue whether a book shall or shall not be condemned if it contains any single passage or passages which, taken alone, a jury considers obscene. And the courts determined that this was the intent and effect of the existing statute. That being so, the statute has this force and effect quite as certainly and just as precisely as though it contained definite language of its own determining the issue. And the statute will have this force and effect, unless it is either changed by the Legislature or reinterpreted, in a different sense, by the Supreme Court. In the light of this inescapable truth, it is, we think, folly to try to show that the distinguished committee of citizens who are now engaged in endeavoring to secure a change of the existing statute are, as the Post seeks to suggest, merely tilting at a windmill. The committee is seeking a change of the statute because it now has a legal force and effect of precisely the kind which the committee declares it does—namely, that under the Massachusetts law both the Bible and any set of the works of William Shakespeare might at any time be banned because each unquestionably contains passages which, taken alone, are objectionable.

CENSORSHIP AGAIN

To the fact (1) that Professor Julian Coolidge has resigned from the Watch and Ward Directorate, add these prior facts: (2) Enrollment for the Harvard House which he is to supervise proceeds sluggishly, while the applications for the other House in charge of Professor Greenough are numerous; (3) a Watch and Ward agent cajoled the Dunster Book Shop in Cambridge into obtaining for him by special order a nasty book which has formed the basis for a successful prosecution; (4) a member of Professor Coolidge's family is actively aiding the Dirs. We do not know what the implication of these four factors is, and we are thrown back on the familiar query of the immortal Holmes: "What do you make of this, Watson?" Professor Coolidge's explanation is direct and specific. He is too busy to continue to serve. However, the statement is so brief that one hesitates whether to describe him as Emersonian in his restraint or to wonder whether the Cambridge and academic branch of the family is emulating the Northampton and political branch.

It is charged, in the case to which we have referred, that a Watch and Ward agent persuaded the book dealer to obtain a volume which was not on sale there, was not even in stock, and was to be had only by special order mailed to the publisher. The Watch and Ward Society is understood to defend this practice of beguiling a dealer into obtaining a questionable volume. We doubt that the public, however, will approve of such a measure. Perhaps it stops short of that kind of "entrapment" which the courts condemn, but it seems highly reprehensible on the part of a society which aims to improve the general morals of the community. We hope that the procedure in the case of the Dunster Book Shop is not typical.

In justice to Professor Coolidge it should be said that the explanation offered by Godfrey L. Cabot of the Watch and Ward Society has to do only with the character of the book, not the character of the methods employed to force a sale. We cannot imagine Professor Coolidge approving tactics of this kind. To condemn a nasty book is one thing. To induce dirty methods of obtaining evidence is another.

Somebody, perhaps, must be a Paul Pry of literature, but the son of man faces so many temptations that the "planting" of new ones is repugnant to the ordinary person's sense of decency. The harmful effects of one objectionable book on the community—especially a sophisticated college community—are far less than the damage done to the publisher, the reading public, free speech, and the good name of Boston by underhand methods of obtaining evidence.

DAILY RECORD, Thursday

December 19, 1929

FUES BILL FOR CENSORING SPICY BOOKS

A bill to "raise the standard of censorship and of culture" in Massachusetts was yesterday filed in the Senate on petition of Elliot H. Paul, Boston author, by Senator Henry Parkman, Jr.

The proposed act first calls for civil service examinations for censors of books, plays, pictures, music and dancing, the examination to include the standard Binet intelligence tests for mentality of 18 years, and general information and language tests, similar to those required for employees of the Boston Public Library.

In addition, each censorship candidate would be required to "submit to the State Department of Health satisfactory evidence of experience."

Section 2 of the bill provides that "in cases where the author or publisher of a book alleged to be unlawful or improper, reside in the commonwealth, either or both of them shall be prosecuted and in such case no bookseller, proprietor or employee of a book store shall be prosecuted."

Another section would require the attorney general to take steps to secure prosecution for improper use of the mails, when a book shall be held by a court to be unlawful or indecent.

The petitioner gave his address as 64 Pemberton sq., Boston.

Author's Bill Demands Brain Test for Censors

Elliot H. Paul's Plan, Backed by Parkman, Requires Book Banners to Have at Least 18-Year-Old Minds

Ability to pass intelligence tests will be necessary requisites of censors in this state if the Legislature acts favorably on a bill filed at the State House today.

PREPARED BY AUTHOR

Elliot H. Paul, author, who gives his address as 64 Pemberton square, is the author of the latest censorship act which would throw out practically all parts of the statute now having to do with "protection" of the morals of youth and force censors to qualify for their jobs.

The bill was filed with the clerk of the Senate today by Senator Henry Parkman, Jr. If it follows the normal course it will go before the committee on legal affairs for public hearing, after which a report either favorable or against it will be submitted to the Legislature.

Paul is now at his cabin in Maine, where he is at work, but is expected to return to Boston to appear at the hearing and there argue for his proposed legislation.

TO IMPROVE CULTURE

The bill follows: "An act to raise the standard of censorship and of culture in the commonwealth.

"Section 1.—Any person acting as censor, or other bookseller, plays, pictures, music or dancing, for the commonwealth, or any county, city or town thereof, shall first pass a civil service examination including the standard Binet intelligence test for mentality of 18 years, general information and language test similar to those required for employees of the Boston Public Library, and shall submit to the state department of health satisfactory evidence of normal sex experience.

"Section 2.—In cases where the author or publisher of a book which is alleged to be unlawful or indecent, resides in the commonwealth, either or both of them shall be prosecuted and in such case no bookseller, proprietor or employee of a bookstore shall be prosecuted.

DUTY OF ATTORNEY-GENERAL

"Section 3.—Whenever any book shall be held by a court to be unlawful or indecent, it shall be the duty of the attorney-general to take steps to have its publisher prosecuted for improper use of United States mail. If, subsequently, a federal court decides the book may be sent through the mails it shall be allowed to be sold within the commonwealth.

"Section 4.—If any word or group of words is held by a court to be indecent in any one book, all other books containing such word or group of words shall be suppressed without further process of law.

"Section 5.—Any act or parts of acts inconsistent with the above provisions are hereby repealed."

FROM THE WATCH AND WARD

To the Editor of The Herald:

For some months past for reasons best known to the management, but less clear to the community, The Herald has repeatedly and persistently gone out of its way to reflect unfairly and unjustly upon the New England Watch and Ward Society.

Undue and misleading prominence was given it in connection with the arrest and trial of a degenerate, who many years previous had been employed briefly by the society as an investigator, and who had since been refused employment by our organization.

Repeatedly in the progress of this case through the court, bold type headlines, as well as text of articles, conveyed the impression that his connection had been either immediate or recent. Certainly, notwithstanding protest and information from the society, nothing to correct that impression was printed; on the contrary, the original description was several times prominently repeated.

In a more recent case, a party arrested for some crime or misdemeanor was said to be the secretary of the Lynn representative of the New England Watch and Ward Society, although the alleged representative had not been connected with the society for nine years, his alleged secretary had never been heard of and we had no agency in Lynn.

In today's issue you comment editorially on alleged methods of the society in procuring evidence. The fact that the case in question is now pending trial on appeal precludes discussion by us at the present time as it should have precluded your editorial discussion.

These are specimen instances of the policy pursued. Fairness to your readers and also to the society, which has had nothing to do with the various occurrences for which it has been held responsible, suggest a change in both your news and editorial policies.

The society is conducting a disagreeable, a thankless task in a broad-minded spirit which, while considering changes in thought and in expression incident to the "Newer Freedom" can not overlook that which unquestionably violates the common decencies and reasonable conventions built up through centuries of human experience. We request that you give this communication the same prominence that you gave the editorial in question.

RAYMOND CAULKINS
GODFREY L. CABOT
MARK W. RICHARDSON
SUMNER CLEMENT
GROSVENOR CAULKINS
BERNARD J. ROTHWELL

For the Board of Directors
The New England Watch and Ward Society.
Boston, Dec. 16.

Each of the men referred to had been connected with the Watch and Ward Society prior to the time when the newspapers published news articles about them. The society objected to the newspapers' characterization of the men as formerly connected with the organization. One of them, Joseph Farrell, a degenerate of the worst type, is now serving a 30-year sentence. The other, Harold A. Rounsaville, is being held in jail of $10,000 on a hold-up charge. The crime proved against Farrell and the charge made against Rounsaville were of a sensational kind, and the newspapers "displayed" the stories in the customary manner. The prominence of the display was not related in any way to the former connections of these men with the society. The society's objection to a recent editorial refers to one on the methods which the society agent pursued to obtain evidence against a Cambridge bookseller. Mr. Atty.-Gen. Parker is to appear in his behalf tomorrow. The news "policy" of The Herald is to print the news with that degree of prominence which seems proper. The editorial policy is to comment what seems commendable and to condemn what seems to deserve condemnation.—Ed.]

WEDNESDAY, DECEMBER 18, 1929

Author's Bill Demands Brain Test for Censors

Elliot H. Paul's Plan, Backed by Parkman, Requires Book Banners to Have at Least 18-Year-Old Minds

Ability to pass intelligence tests will be necessary requisites of censors in this state if the Legislature acts favorably on a bill filed at the State House today.

PREPARED BY AUTHOR

Elliot H. Paul, author, who gives his address as 64 Pemberton square, is the author of the latest censorship act which would throw out practically all parts of the statute now having to do with "protection" of the morals of youth and force censors to qualify for their jobs.

The bill was filed with the clerk of the Senate today by Senator Henry Parkman, Jr. If it follows the normal course it will go before the committee on legal affairs for public hearing, after which a report either favorable or against it will be submitted to the Legislature.

Paul is now at his cabin in Maine, where he is at work, but is expected to return to Boston to appear at the hearing and there argue for his proposed legislation.

TO IMPROVE CULTURE

The bill follows:
An act to raise the standard of censorship and of culture in the commonwealth.

"Section 1—Any person acting as censor of either books, plays, pictures, music or dancing, for the commonwealth, or any county, city or town thereof, shall first pass a civil service examination including the standard Binet intelligence test for mentality of 18 years, general information and language test similar to those required for employees of the Boston Public Library, and shall submit to the state department of health satisfactory evidence of normal sex experience.

"Section 2—In cases where the author or publisher of a book which is alleged to be unlawful or indecent, resides in the commonwealth, either or both of them shall be prosecuted and in such case no bookseller, proprietor or employee of a bookstore shall be prosecuted."

DUTY OF ATTORNEY-GENERAL
"Section 3—Whenever any book shall be held by a court to be unlawful or indecent, it shall be the duty of the attorney-general to take steps to have its publisher prosecuted for improper use of United States mail. If subsequently a federal court decides the book may be sent through the mails it shall be allowed to be sold within the commonwealth.

"Section 4: If any word or group of words is held by a court to be indecent in any one book, all other books containing such word or group of words shall be suppressed without further process of law.

"Section 5: Any act or parts of acts inconsistent with the above provisions are hereby repealed."

THE BOSTON HERALD

THURSDAY, DECEMBER 19, 1929

Bill for Intelligence Test for Censors Filed on Author's Petition

A bill "to raise the standards of censorship and of culture in the commonwealth," was filed by Senator Henry Parkman, Jr., on petition of Elliot H. Paul, Boston author.

The bill called for an examination including the standard Binet intelligence test for mentality of 18 years, general information and language tests similar to those required of employees of the public library. The applicant must successfully pass the test in order to be a censor of books, plays, music or dancing.

Senator Parkman, with Senator Michael J. Ward also filed a petition for the city council legislative committee, providing that fees for licenses or permits in the city be established by the city council with the approval of the mayor.

A petition to allow the Massachusetts

Agricultural College to convey 10,000 square feet of land fronting on East Pleasant street in Amherst, to the Amherst Water Company, subject to terms approved by the Governor, was filed by Senator Elder of Amherst.

Senator Frank Hurley of Holyoke filed a bill with the Senate providing for the publication of the annual reports of the state department of public utilities in sufficient numbers to be available for public distribution at cost.

A section of the bill which aroused some interest at the State House, is as follows: "If any word or group of words is held by a court to be indecent in any one book, all other books containing such word or group of words shall be suppressed without further process of law."

Among those in the court room were

224 WASHINGTON STREET, BOSTON, MASS.

(Entered at the Post Office, Boston, Mass., as Second Class Mail Matter)

THURSDAY, DECEMBER 19, 1929

Many Harvard Men Attend Book Trial

Manager and Clerk of Cambridge Bookshop Charged with Selling Obscene Volume

With a large audience of Harvard undergraduates and faculty members and others interested in the book censorship issue in attendance, James A. DeLacey, manager of the Dunster House bookshop, Cambridge, and Joseph Sullivan, his clerk, went on trial before Judge Fosdick in a jury-waived session of the Middlesex Superior Court this morning on the charge of selling an obscene book. The defendants appealed from the decision in the District Court by which DeLacey was sentenced to four months in the House of Correction and fined $800 and Sullivan was given a sentence of two weeks and a fine of $200.

The charge is based on the purchase by agents of the New England Watch and Ward Society of a certain book. By agreement of counsel today the name of the book will not be mentioned in the testimony at the trial. Judge Fosdick also warned the spectators that there may be offensive language used in the course of the testimony and said he wanted no demonstration of any kind. The volume in dispute will be formally referred to as "The Book." District Attorney Robert T. Bushnell is prosecuting and the defense is represented by former Attorney General Herbert Parker and Richard C. Everts.

Judge Fosdick, at the opening, referred to the censorship controversy now raging in Boston and elsewhere and said he would leave on the counsel the burden of how far the public should know the evidence. Attorney Bushnell remarked that he had "a definite idea about these self-appointed guardians of the public morals."

Charles S. Bodwell of 31 Lincoln avenue, Sharon, secretary of the N. E. Watch and Ward Society, was the first witness called. When Mr. Parker objected to the line of questioning taken up with Mr. Bodwell, he was excused, and John Slaymaker of Dedham, an investigator for the Watch and Ward Society, was called.

Slaymaker said he went to the bookshop Aug. 15 with another investigator named Fox and saw Sullivan. He told the clerk, he said, that he was interested in literature and asked for a certain book, "the book" of this case. Sullivan replied that it was not in stock and that he thought it inadvisable to keep it in stock because of its nature. He said he would order one if desired and that the price would be $15.

The witness said he returned the next day and gave the order to DeLacey. Later he returned with Bodwell, saw both the defendants and obtained the book, paying the price demanded. At this point "the book" was placed in evidence by District Attorney Bushnell.

In cross examination by Mr. Parker the witness admitted that he gave a false name when he purchased the book, as he did not wish it to be known that he was connected with the Watch and Ward Society.

"Are you ashamed of the Watch and Ward Society?" asked Mr. Parker.

"Not yet," replied the witness.

The witness denied that he had attempted to induce Sullivan to commit a crime. He said that before he purchased the volume he had not read it, but he had heard complaints about it and believed it to be "spicy." He was still on the stand at the luncheon recess.

Among those in the court room were Robert S. Hillier, instructor in English at Harvard, Lincoln Kirstein, president of the Harvard Society of Contemporary Art, George Parker Winship, librarian of the Harry Elkins Widener Collection, Harvard, Whitney Wells, Harvard instructor, Professor Zechariah Chafee and Stewart Mitchell, historian and editor of the New England Quarterly.

BOSTON EVENING TRANSCRIPT, THURSDAY, DECEMBER 19, 1929

"Tell It to the Judge"

BOSTON EVENING AMERICAN

FRIDAY, DECEMBER 20, 1929

Book Men Convicted; Watch, Ward Flayed

Following a bitter arraignment of the Watch and Ward Society by Dist. Atty. Robert T. Bushnell in Middlesex Superior Court today, James A. DeLacey, manager and Joseph Sullivan, clerk, of Dunster House Bookshop, were found guilty of selling an improper book.

They had previously been found guilty in lower court and appealed house of correction sentences.

In finding both men guilty Judge F. W. Fosdick said:

"Judging the book as a whole, rather than by specific passages, it is significant that as an entity the book is obscene, indecent and impure and manifestly tends to corrupt the morals of youth."

WARNS WATCH & WARD
In summing up the government's case before the judge's finding, Dist. Atty. Bushnell said:

"I want to serve a warning to the agents of the Watch and Ward Society that if they ever again come into Middlesex County while I am district attorney here and go to a bookstore and induce or procure a bookseller to commit a crime, I will proceed against them for the crime of conspiracy."

"If these men hadn't been induced to commit the crime only five persons to whom they had previously sold copies of the book would have read it. Now, as a result of the publicity given the book by this trial, the book has had a much wider sale."

"I do not want anybody to think that because of my participation in this case I endorse the tactics or policy of this society as evidenced by this trial."

"I'd much prefer to prosecute the author of this book than these defendants. Every printed page of this book is the lowest product or culmination of a diseased brain."

"I am opposed to any public official, appointed or elected or self-appointed, who sets himself up as a censor of books or plays."

Mr. Bushnell said the book in question, D. W. Lawrence's "Lady Chatterley's Lover," could not be called literature by the farthest stretch of imagination.

Herbert Parker, counsel for the defendants, called the Watch and Ward Society agents "falsifiers, deceivers and procurers" during his summing up. He referred to Agent Slaymaker of the society as a "leering satyr."

In addition, Attorney Parker called the book "a genius of prostituted talent; part of the literature of the day," and said, "It must be circulated under supervision but no moral wrong was committed in placing it in the hands of a man 60 years of age and that was the age of the man who bought it."

Pointing to Agent's Bodwell and Slaymaker he called them "miserable false pretenders, posing as guardians of public morals, lingering in the ancient vineyard of forbidden prohibitory laws. God forbid that the hands of this commonwealth be stained by such imps."

In the lower court DeLacey was sentenced to four months in the house of correction and fined $800. Sullivan was sentenced to two weeks in the same institution and fined $200.

DECEMBER 19, 1929

WOMEN HEAR BOOK APPEAL

Throng Courtroom When Harvard Square Case Comes up

Many women were in the crowded Middlesex county superior criminal court room today, when hearing of the appeal of James A. DeLacey and Joseph Sullivan of the Dunster Bookstore at Harvard square, opened before Judge Frederick W. Fosdick at East Cambridge.

The defendants were charged in the lower court with selling an alleged obscene book. DeLacey was fined $800 and sentenced to eight months in the house of correction. Sullivan was fined $200 and sentenced to two weeks in the house of correction. Both waived jury trial on the appeal.

Many of the women who wanted to hear the proceedings today were ordered to stop smoking in the corridors, where signs prohibiting smoking were posted.

Judge Fosdick warned women in the court that excerpts from the book that might seem objectionable might be read in open court. Counsel for both sides declared excerpts from the book would not be read in open court. Counsel made no objection to Judge Fosdick hearing the appeal when he observed that, not knowing the defendants were going to waive a trial by jury, he had read parts of the book.

Dist. Atty. Robert T. Bushnell is conducting the case for the prosecution. Former Atty.-Gen. Herbert W. Parker appeared as one of the members of counsel for defendants today.

SAYS HE OFFERED TO GET BOOK

John T. Slaymaker, agent for the Watch and Ward Society, who testified at the trial in the lower court, was the first witness today. His testimony in the main was a reiteration of that given by him at the previous trial.

Cross-examined by Atty. Parker Slaymaker said he gave his middle name when he went to purchase the book, declaring that his full name is John Tate Slaymaker. Asked if that was the attitude he assumed in working for the Watch and Ward Society, the witness answered he did not. Witness denied that he tried to induce Sullivan to sell an unlawful book, and said that his only intention was a find out if a certain book was on sale at the store.

Witness admitted that Sullivan told him the book was not kept in stock, but added that Sullivan offered to get the book in question, and admitted telling him that it was a spicy and racy book, and that he told Sullivan he was interested in this particular book.

SOLD HARVARD PROFESSORS BANNED WORK

Bookseller Says Leading Men Bought Lawrence
Book

FOSDICK TRIES THE CASE WITHOUT JURY

Watch and Ward Men Under Keen Cross-Examination by Parker

Three Harvard professors, a lawyer and a book collector, all unnamed, purchased copies of D. H. Lawrence's work, "Lady Chatterley's Lover," in addition to the copy sold a few weeks ago to John T. Slaymaker, an agent of the Watch and Ward Society, according to evidence introduced yesterday afternoon in the trial of James A. DeLacey and Joseph Sullivan on a charge of selling an obscene book.

The cases of DeLacey and Sullivan, appealed from the East Cambridge district court, came before Judge Frederick W. Fosdick yesterday in the Middlesex superior criminal court at East Cambridge, and they elected to proceed without a jury. Judge Fosdick, therefore will render the verdict individually when the time comes.

Trial of these cases developed a scene much different from that usually found in court at East Cambridge. Fashionably gowned society women, a few members of the Harvard faculty, some of the students and groups of the so-called intelligentsia filed into the courtroom and throughout the day filled every seat in the big room. It was discovered that some of the women were smoking cigarettes in the corridor in violation of rules and they were dispersed by Court Officer Charles Robinson.

MANAGER AND CLERK

DeLacey is manager, and Sullivan a clerk in the Dunster House bookshop at 20 South Street, Cambridge, and many of its customers are connected with Harvard. When their cases came before Judge Arthur P. Stone in the East Cambridge district court, DeLacey was ordered fined $800 and sentenced to four months in jail, and Sullivan was fined $200 and given two weeks in jail.

When the case was called in the superior court yesterday, Dist. Atty. Bushnell appeared as prosecutor, and former Atty.-Gen. Herbert Parker and Atty. Richard C. Evaris represented the defendants. Much of the testimony in the district court was repeated yesterday, but a number of new angles were developed.

The specific charge under which the defendants are being tried is selling a book containing obscene, indecent or impure language, or manifestly tending to corrupt the morals of youth. Before opening the trial Judge Fosdick said he wished to inform counsel that some days ago, before he knew that a jury-waived trial would be asked, he had read sections of the book. Counsel had no objection to proceeding.

Tries Book Case

JUDGE FREDERICK W. FOSDICK

John T. Slaymaker of 38 Riverside street, Dedham, was the first witness for the government. He visited the bookshop in question on Oct. 15 with another Watch and Ward agent and inquired of Sullivan for a copy of the book in question. Sullivan replied it was inadvisable to carry a book of that type in stock. He went back the next morning and Sullivan told him he would order the book. DeLacey told Sullivan, according to the witness, to take Slaymaker's name and address. On Oct. 30 Slaymaker paid $15 and got a copy of the book.

GAVE NAME AS TAIT

Under cross examination by Atty. Parker, Slaymaker admitted he gave his name as John Tait, these being his first and middle names.

"Is the giving of false names the attitude you assume in connection with your Watch and Ward work?" asked Mr. Parker.

"No," said the witness. "I did it to conceal my connection with the Watch and Ward."

Asked whether he solicited the commission of a crime, or was trying to induce Sullivan to sell an unlawful book, Slaymaker denied he was trying to do these things. He said he merely asked Sullivan for the book. He said he did not ask Sullivan to get it, but rather Sullivan offered to get it. Witness said his purpose in going to the shop was to find out if the book was sold there. He admitted that in talking with Sullivan he referred to the book as "spicy" and racy.

Slaymaker admitted that if he had dropped the matter after his first visit, there would be no sale and no prosecution, and that his renewal of the matter brought the sale about.

"You kept after them until you got the book, didn't you?" asked Atty. Parker.

"Well, I got it," replied witness.

C. F. BODWELL TESTIFIES

Charles F. Bodwell, secretary and executive officer of the Watch and Ward Society, was the next witness. He said he went to the book shop with Slaymaker on Oct. 30 and gave the latter $15 to buy the book. Under cross-examination by Mr. Parker, he was asked:

"Did you induce Slaymaker to give a false name?"

"I understood he gave the name of John Tait," said witness.

"Did you understand that falsehood was to be used?" pursued Mr. Parker.

"I didn't consider it ordinary falsehood," said Bodwell.

"What distinction do you make between ordinary and extraordinary falsehood?" asked Mr. Bushnell.

Judge Fosdick said to him a falsehood was a falsehood, and Mr. Bushnell then said he felt the same way about it.

Recalled, Slaymaker said that all DeLacey did was tell his clerk to get the name and address, and that he also said to the clerk they would try to get the book. He also had conversations with DeLacey on the phone.

Shown the book and asked by Judge Fosdick what condition it was in when he got it as compared to its present condition, Slaymaker said it looked considerably worn. Witness said Mr. Bodwell had possession of it before it was impounded by the court.

The defence called 10 witnesses. Sullivan, the clerk, said that when Slaymaker first came in on Oct. 15 he said he was an A. L. A. man. He desired a copy of the book involved. Sullivan showed him other books, he said, but Slaymaker wasn't interested. Sullivan told his visitor he would have to see DeLacey. Witness then related other incidents that led up to the actual sale of the book.

Under cross-examination by Mr. Bushnell, he said he didn't know about five copies of the book in question being received at the store last August.

DeLacey testified he was formerly assistant in the reference library at Yale. He told of telephone conversations he had with Slaymaker. Witness said that after the request had been received from Slaymaker, a young man came into the shop with a copy of the book which he bought for $15, later selling it to Slaymaker for the same price. Witness said he had not seen the young man since. He doesn't know him. It has been testified in the case that the shop buys second hand as well as new books. He said that when Slaymaker, known as Tait, came after the book, he took it from a shelf in his office, and handed it to him.

PROFIT OF $10 ON EACH

Under cross-examination DeLacey said that he had some D. H. Lawrence collectors among his customers and that last August he got five copies of the book now involved from New York. He paid $5 each for them, he said, or $25 for the five copies, and sold them for $15 each, making a profit of $10 on each one. The buyers, he said, were all men older than he, and there were no young men or Harvard undergraduates among them.

"Who were the five purchasers?" asked Dist. Atty. Bushnell.

Counsel for the defendants objected.

"I see no reason," said the court, "why the names of people who buy such literature should not be made public."

Mr. Bushnell did not press the question.

DeLacey said one buyer was a lawyer, another a book collector, and the other three were members of the Harvard faculty. A book collector in New York, witness said, paid $250 for a first edition copy of the book, but not because it was a "rotten" book.

Several witnesses testified to their knowledge of DeLacey's reputation and gave him a clean bill of health. George P. Winslip, librarian at Harvard, said he had never heard anything against him.

Prof. Robert T. Hillyer, assistant professor of English at Harvard, said DeLacey's reputation as a book seller was of the highest. Lawrence, he said, was regarded as one of the most interesting of modern authors, and a course in English couldn't be given and be ignored.

"Do you mean to say," asked Mr. Bushnell, "that this book is used anywhere in a course for young people?"

"I wouldn't even mention it in my class," answered Prof. Hillyer.

A conference on rulings of law followed at the bench and the trial will proceed at 10 o'clock this morning.

A Larger Vision Needed

2 GUILTY IN BOOK CASE; WATCH AND WARD FLAYED

Bushnell Will Prosecute If Society Again Procures Commission of Crime in Middlesex

In the Middlesex Criminal Superior Court in East Cambridge this morning Judge Frederick W. Fosdick found James A. DeLacey and Joseph Sullivan, manager and clerk respectively of the Dunster book shop, Cambridge, guilty of selling obscene literature, and continued the case until 3:45 this afternoon for sentence.

In handing down his decision, Judge Fosdick stated from the bench that he found that the book involved as a whole is obscene, indecent and impure, and manifestly tending to corrupt the morals of youth. He stated that some portions are particularly obscene and would be so dangerous to youthful morals that he refrained from further characterization of the book or quotations from it.

Judge Fosdick said that a poison, however exposed, is still poison. He said that he felt that there was no willful intent on the part of the defendants to corrupt the morals of youth but rather an indifference on their part.

The trial of the accused reopened this morning when the Watch and Ward Society and its activities were flayed by both prosecuting and defense attorneys in their arguments concerning one of the Watch and Ward agents obtaining the book involved in the case.

Trial Resumed

Witnesses in the case were heard yesterday and arguments of the attorneys ended with Dist Atty Robert T. Bushnell serving public notice on the Watch and Ward Society.

Charles S. Bodwell, secretary and executive officers of the Watch and Ward Society, sat within a few feet of Mr Bushnell in the courtroom.

Dist Atty Bushnell turned directly to Bodwell and said: "I want the public to understand that the district attorney does not endorse the policy of the Watch and Ward Society. I serve warning now that as long as I am district attorney of this district, and their agents go to a bookstore of good reputation and induce and procure the commission of a crime I will proceed

Boston Daily Globe

FRIDAY, DEC 20, 1929

against them for conspiracy."

When proceedings reopened this morning, Herbert Parker, counsel for the defense, making his final argument to the court, contended that the publicity of such work as the book in question is what is calculated to affect the morals of the public. He criticized the book in question for being abominable "by the very genius of a prostituted talent."

He said its exposure is "the turpitude, the criminal offense." He said in this particular case the question is what was the conduct of the defendants, and, as defense counsel, he said there was evidence upon which the court could find his clients guilty of violation of the law technically, but he said morally no sale was ever made to the Watch and Ward agent.

He criticized the Watch and Ward people connected with this case as "miserable false pretenders, procuring posing as guardians of public morals."

There was no sale, he contended, because there was no real vendee, he contending that the agent of the Watch and Ward procured the sale of the book, that it was at the agent's instigation the book was sold.

The procurers of the alleged sale he said were falsifiers and deceivers, who themselves sought to corrupt a younger man (meaning Joseph Sullivan, clerk in the bookstore).

The testimony of the defense, he said, showed that the book was sold to a 60-year-old man, a Watch and Ward agent, whom the defendants believed to be a lover of books.

Dist Atty Bushnell arguing for the Government concluded by saying he is opposed to public officials or self-appointed persons setting themselves up as censors of plays and books, assuming to guard the morals of people in general.

The law under which the complaint is brought is the only censor he recognizes, he said.

"It is a sound law," he said, but he added that he would much prefer to prosecute the author of the book than the book sellers.

Then he continued that he would like to have it clearly understood that by proceeding with this case people should not get an idea that he is endorsing the tactics of the Watch and Ward Society as practiced in this case. At this point he served the public notice to the society.

The book he said, must be outlawed. The defense had admitted the sale, he said, and had admitted the obscenity of the book, therefore a sale had been made legally despite the circumstances under which it was made. The defendants are clearly guilty, he felt as a matter of law.

"But," concluded Dist Atty Bushnell, he would have something to say on the disposition of the cases in the event that the defendants were found guilty.

He argued that there is no justification for printing the book and he denied that it is a part of the literature of the day. The whole case comes down, he said to whether or not there was legally a sale of the book, and he said the evidence clearly established a sale in law.

Then he continued that he would like to have it clearly understood that by proceeding with this case people should not get an idea that he is endorsing the tactics of the Watch and Ward Society as practiced in this case. At this point he served the public notice to the society.

The book he said, must be outlawed. The defense had admitted the sale, he said, and had admitted the obscenity of the book, therefore a sale had been made legally despite the circumstances under which it was made. The defendants are clearly guilty, he felt as a matter of law.

"But," concluded Dist Atty Bushnell, he would have something to say on the disposition of the cases in the event that the defendants were found guilty.

Watch and Ward Given Warning by Bushnell

Will Be Prosecuted If It Induces Anyone to Commit Crime—Judge Has "No Cordiality" Toward Censor Group—Defendants Guilty

The New England Watch and Ward Society was served notice today that criminal prosecution will follow inducement or procurement of any person to commit a crime in Middlesex county. The declaration by Dist. Atty. Robert T. Bushnell was made in East Cambridge superior court after the organization had been mercilessly flayed by ex-Atty. Gen. Herbert Parker, counsel for James A. DeLacey and Joseph Sullivan, on trial for selling an alleged obscene book.

BOTH GUILTY, HOWEVER

It was followed by an utterance by Judge Frederick W. Fosdick from the bench that he "entertains no cordiality toward the Watch and Ward Society." Both DeLacey, manager, and Sullivan, clerk of the Dunster House book shop, South street, Cambridge, were found guilty by Judge Fosdick, however, and passing of sentence was set for later in the day.

Hearing of evidence in the case was concluded early in today's session and arguments of counsel begun. It was a jury-waived trial, before a single justice—Judge Fosdick—and one of the first criminal cases to be so tried since the enactment of the law granting that privilege.

PARKER HITS CENSORS

Atty. Parker was the first to speak. Without restraint, he castigated the censor organization backing up the witnesses who purchased the book from his clients. Several members of the Harvard faculty testified they had bought and read the book. The courtroom was crowded with fashionably attired women.

John T. Slaymaker of Riverside street, Dedham, Watch and Ward agent, had testified that he visited the bookshop with another agent and, under another name, asked Sullivan to order the book for him when he was told it was inadvisable to carry such a book in stock.

Charles F. Bodwell, secretary and executive officer of the Watch and Ward, admitted giving Slaymaker $15 with which to buy the book and admitted he was aware the name "John Tait" had been used by Slaymaker.

Atty. Parker, in his blast, said, "Who are those people? This despicable kind of witness whose only remuneration is from getting cases of this kind." He referred to the Watch and Ward Society as "miserable false pretenses." He declared, vehemently, "They are procurers, falsifiers and deceivers."

NOT "ROMAN HOLIDAY"

He continued his bitter denunciation of the organization. Judge Fosdick interrupted him, when he was particularly bitter, with the advice, "This is not a Roman holiday." Parker agreed and shortly after drew his argument to its conclusion, but not before he had described as unfair the means by which the evidence had been procured.

Dist. Atty. Bushnell immediately rose and facing half about toward the spectators said, "I do not want the public to think I endorse the tactics of the Watch and Ward Society." After pointing out the legal aspect of the case and reviewing the evidence he again turned to the Watch and Ward.

"I want to serve warning on them," he averred, "that if ever again, as long as I am district attorney of this district, they go into a bookstore in this district and induce or procure a person to commit a crime, I will proceed against them for criminal conspiracy."

The words of both Park and Bushnell hung well with the crowd, apparently. Heads were nodded in approval and Slaymaker and Bodwell held the interest of the spectators, suddenly transferred from the defendants to the prosecution's star witnesses.

Judge Fosdick then spoke without hesitation. He said: "The book, as a whole, is obscene, indecent and impure and manifestly tends to corrupt the morals of youth beyond a doubt."

He praised both defense counsel and the district attorney for refraining from insisting that objectionable passages be read and declared these passages were so dangerous that they would refrain from further reference to them. He said, "Poison, either by accident or intent, is a poison."

"There was no wilful intent by the defendants to corrupt but they were indifferent."

He found Sullivan and DeLacey guilty and postponed sentencing them to a later hour. Then Judge Fosdick said, "The court entertains no cordiality for the Watch and Ward Society."

Lash Watch and Ward at Book Trial

Methods of Society's Agents Scored by Prosecution and Defense

Tactics "Despicable"

Cambridge Bookseller and Clerk Found Guilty of Selling Obscene Volume

Judge Fosdick in Middlesex Superior Court this afternoon sentenced James A. DeLacey, manager of the Dunster House Bookshop, Cambridge, to one month in the House of Correction and fined him $500 on the charge of selling an obscene book. Sentence was stayed pending an appeal and bail was reduced from $5000 to $1000. The case of James Sullivan, DeLacey's clerk, convicted of the same offense, was placed on file. The defendants had appealed from lower court sentences of four months in the House of Correction and a $800 fine in the case of DeLacey and two weeks and a $200 fine in the case of Sullivan. DeLacey was given two months in which to file exceptions to the Supreme Court.

By Karl Schriftgiesser

Following one of the most vicious attacks upon the New England Watch and Ward Society ever uttered, in which prosecuting attorney and counsel for the defense vied with each other in their choice of denunciatory words and phrases, James A. DeLacey and James Sullivan, proprietor and clerk of the Dunster House bookshop, Cambridge, were found guilty this morning in Middlesex Superior Court of selling an obscene, indecent, and impure book to John T. Slaymaker, agent of the Watch and Ward.

"Depraved and perverted procurers," "deceivers" and "falsifiers" were some of the terms hurled at the society by Herbert Parker who appeared for the defense. Following his denunciatory attack District Attorney Robert T. Bushnell served notice on the Watch and Ward Society, in no uncertain terms, that if ever again its agents entered Middlesex County with the same methods of procuring evidence used in the present case he would seek indictments against them for criminal conspiracy.

Disposition of sentence of the two defendants, who were found guilty of selling a copy of D. H. Lawrence's "Lady Chatterley's Lover," was postponed until quarter of four o'clock this afternoon. Veteran officers of the Middlesex court-house said that never in their years of experience had so bitter an attack been made upon the Watch and Ward Society as that made today by both Attorney Parker and District Attorney Bushnell. The latter roared at the court the following ultimatum: "I want the public to understand that the district attorney does not endorse the Watch and Ward Society's policy or tactics. I serve warning here and now that as long as I am district attorney of this district and agents of this society go into a bookstore of good repute and induce and procure the commission of a crime I will proceed against them for criminal conspiracy."

Judge Fosdick, who heard the testimony and arguments in a jury-waived session, did not join in the denunciation of the Watch and Ward Society while making his rulings other than to state that "the court entertains no cordiality" for its methods of getting evidence.

Both attorneys for the prosecution and the defense agreed that "Lady Chatterley's Lover"—although under the gentleman's agreement of yesterday it was still referred to in the court room as "that book"—was a book of manifest pornographic intent, and both admitted that the sale to Agent Slaymaker had taken place as alleged in the indictment. Attorney Parker's summary was the sensation of the day, delivered as it was with all the forcefulness of a hardened warrior of the courtroom.

Asks Exposition of Law

Mr. Parker opened his argument by saying that what the defense wished was "an exposition of the law from the bench which will reassure this distracted country as to the execution of the laws protecting the morals of the Commonwealth." Referring to the complacence as "self-appointed guardians of the public morals who are seeking by fanaticism to place an obscene construction on these laws," he said they had "purchased the book to be wrought into a miserable fiction of fabrication and deception."

"Who are these people?" he asked. "They are the detested type of witnesses who linger within the somewhat withered vineyards of our moral prohibitory laws."

As for the book complained of, Mr. Parker said he made no excuse for it, "but it is part of the literature of our day and as such must circulate under restrictions." The book itself is not obscene, he said, "but when it falls into the hands of the public, is widely circulated, it would be termed abominable from every standpoint." The character of this publication, if given wide circulation, is calculated to appeal to emotion and is by transmutation, obscene. Turning to Bodwell, who was sitting within the enclosure, he said:

"These miserable, false pretenses who pose brazenly as protectors of public morals! They are nothing but procurers, falsifiers and deceivers. God forbid that the standards of this Commonwealth should be stained by the false and poisonous hands of such persons."

Later, turning again to the secretary of the Watch and Ward Society, he said: "This leering, idle satyr who sought to pervert the morals of a young man! It was in the days of Athens they would press the hemlock cup to his lips. Let their type be forever exiled from the confines of this State."

Mr. Parker, dealing with DeLacey's share in the transaction, said the book was purchased from the defendant through cunning and deceit, sold to a man sixty years old who was supposed to be interested in literature, with a warning that it had no place in the hands of the public.

"This book in the sanctuary of a literary laboratory would be perfectly proper," he said, "but in the hands of the public it would be abominable."

Judge Fosdick, in announcing the verdict, ordered the courtroom locked and all noises within or in its immediate vicinity stopped by the sheriff. Then, in a calm and unemotional tone, he read his decision. Declaring that while there might be reason for a change in the law as it stands, such a change was entirely legislative and not a judicial function. He then went on to say that under the law he must find both defendants guilty of selling an "obscene, indecent and impure book, manifestly tending to corrupt the morals of youth."

Judge Fosdick said that the book, viewed as a whole and not merely in regard to its significance as an artistic or literary work, was a "book of indecency" beyond any reasonable doubt "obscene, indecent and impure, and manifestly tending to corrupt the morals of youth." The book contained, he said, several passages which, when read aloud and out of their context, were equally in violation of the law. "And when so read," he added, "they have been attributes in greater degree."

The court declared that the book was so dangerous to youthful morals that the court refrained from further characterization or quotation than that already made in the course of the trial. "To do so," he said, "would be to defeat the purpose of the law." The fact that the book might be of contemporary or even historical significance did not change its indecent character.

Relying upon the now-famous Supreme Court decision, in Commonwealth versus Buckley, or the "Three Weeks" case, the court found that upon the evidence presented it could not do otherwise than find the defendants guilty. For even the defense openly admitted that the book contained passages in violation of the statute.

Judge Fosdick said that the defendant may have shown more indifference than wilful intent to corrupt the morals of youth when they sold the book, but the fact remains that they did sell the book. They did not know who the purchaser was, nor did they know whether the book might not fall from his hand into those of some "academic adolescent" that attend the many institutions of learning in and around Cambridge. Judge Fosdick said also that even if I. H. Lawrence, author of "that book," did have a "certain mediocre reputation as a writer," it made no difference as to the contents of the book.

Throughout the entire hearing the courtroom was packed. Several women were again present, as well as a number of men noted in professional and literary circles.

BOYCOTT DENIED BY COOLIDGE

Wife's Dry Activities Said to Have Hurt Harvard Unit

HE SAYS "LOWELL HOUSE" NOW FULL

Declares There Will Be No "Snooping" as to Alcohol

While Professor Edwin H. Hall, professor emeritus at Harvard, declared last night that he understood from more than one reliable source that the new unit of the Harvard House plan, to be in charge of Professor Julian L. Coolidge, was being boycotted because of Mrs. Coolidge's ardent advocacy of the dry cause, this situation was denied by Professor Coolidge himself and Professor Chester N. Greenough, the master of a second Harvard house.

Professor Hall, who once before called public attention to the new house system by criticizing the faculty for not allowing it sufficient discussion, stated last night that he had learned that Professor Greenough's house was being favored over Professor Coolidge's.

He also said that he understood that tutors who have been invited to become a part of the "Coolidge household" are unwilling to accept the invitation if they cannot be free to continue their present views regarding the use of alcohol. Last night at his home on Garden street, Cambridge, he said that while he did not want to be quoted that Professor Greenough had allowed his tutors the use of intoxicants, he commented on the possibility of such a situation arising.

"If you allow the tutors to use liquor you give a sort of official sanction to the student to trade with bootleggers," he said. "The experiment of the House plan sets up new contacts between the students and their instructors which involves social conduct. It is the sort of thing that is bound to come up under the new system."

"Now if it is a fact that tutors habitually use liquor, I don't care to comment on it, but it is a matter for the public to reflect upon."

Coolidge and Greenough Deny

Professor Hall declared that he had no information as to whether or not Professor Coolidge himself was a "dry" but he knew that the professor's wife is an ardent prohibitionist and had "written letters on the subject." Professor Hall stated that he himself was a dry and was opposed to the repeal of the Massachusetts enforcement act.

Both Professors Coolidge and Greenough were prompt in their denial that no boycott of the "Coolidge household" existed. They refused to become alarmed over the information that had come to the ears of Professor Hall and were inclined to make light of it.

Coolidge's Statement

Sitting in his living room at 27 Fayerweather street, Cambridge, Professor Coolidge did no beating about the bush in replying to questions which suggested that his recent Watch and Ward affiliations, or Mrs. Coolidge's well known prohibition activities as one of the foremost women "drys" in this part of the country, had acted as a damper on enrollments for the Lowell House.

"Well," he said, smiling broadly, "I have received some 140 applications for the first 85 places. There's no symptom of boycott in that, is there? And all the tutors I have chosen for Lowell House have accepted, except one, who is an older man and is going to Europe next year."

"There are about 285 places in all in Lowell House. The places for the first class, 85 of them, have been thrown open for applications. That is for the present juniors. We shall open the next third to applications from the present sophomore class, sometime in January. The final third will be thrown open to applicants of the present freshman class, early in February."

He was told that it had been said that a virtual boycott existed against Lowell House, because the word had gone around that, by reason of Mrs. Coolidge's Watch and Ward connections, and Mrs. Coolidge's "dry" affiliations, those accustomed to having their liquor could not do so there.

Denies Restrictions

"Oh, Lord!" he said, "There will be no special or extra restrictions in Lowell House, other than the regulations which govern all Harvard dormitories."

"Will Mrs. Coolidge live there with you?"

"Certainly."

"How do you suppose such a boycott report got around?"

"Well," he smiled, "I suppose that is a natural inference."

"You mean, that Mrs. Coolidge being known as a leading 'dry' would account for such a report, without any other reason?"

"Yes, it is a natural inference, I suppose."

"Well, did you resign from the directorate of the Watch and Ward Society, because your connection with it was hurting enrollment for the Lowell House?"

He laughed again. "Oh, Lord!" he said, "Let's not bring all that up again."

Lowell House, he said, was going to be just like any other Harvard House, a decent place, without any special rules, censorship, or spying upon its inhabitants.

"As for the report that students and tutors are unwilling to accept the invitation to join Lowell House because they cannot be free to continue their present habits," he said, "and that Professor Greenough's house is being favored while my house faces a boycott, I can only give you my figures: 140 or so applicants for 85 places. I don't know what Professor Greenough's figures are."

Mrs. Coolidge had nothing to say of the subject, it being held by the Professor as well as Mrs. Coolidge that she had nothing to do with the situation, and was entirely without jurisdiction even if she wanted to have anything to do with it, which she does not.

Houses to Open in Fall

The two houses in question will be opened to the senior class at Harvard when college opens next fall. Professor Greenough's unit, the Dunster House, is named after the first president of Harvard and Professor Coolidge's is the Lowell House, named after President A. Lawrence Lowell. Each will have 15 tutors, six of the instructors to reside in the dormitory and nine to live outside.

When the matter was called to the attention of Professor Greenough last night he stated that applications for both houses had not only been oversubscribed but that there had been received twice as many applications as there were accommodations available. He maintained that in face of these conditions it was obvious that no boycott existed. As to Professor Coolidge's tutors he said:

"The tutors that Professor Coolidge has secured are among the best in the university and as far as I know, gladly joined his house just as the other men joined mine. His staff has been completed."

"The whole matter of good order in the Harvard buildings in which students live," he added, "is covered by a set of rules. These rules will govern the two houses, mine and Professor Coolidge's. And these rules, which we try to enforce, are against the use of intoxicants."

Professors Buyers of 'Raw' Book

Three members of the Harvard faculty bought copies of "Lady Chatterley's Lover," a book adjudged obscene in the lower courts, according to testimony in East Cambridge Superior Criminal court by James A. DeLacey, one of two defendants on trial for selling the book.

His testimony and that of the co-defendant, Joseph Sullivan, his clerk, was given in a literary and social atmosphere, many Boston society women, authors and writers making up the audience which filled Judge Fosdick's court.

Dist. Atty. Bushnell was pressing hard for the names of those who bought copies of the book, aided by Judge Fosdick, while DeLacey was displaying a hazy memory on the subject.

HARVARD BUYERS

"I see no reason why the names of men who buy such literature ought not to be made public," the judge said when Bushnell appealed to him to make the witness give the information.

And Bushnell added: "The man who writes literature of that type evidently has the mind of a filthy degenerate."

It was then DeLacey revealed the type of man who purchased the book:

"Three purchasers were members of the Harvard faculty," he said. "One was a book collector and the other was a lawyer."

Bushnell went no further in his demand for names. Though warned that they might be shocked by the proceedings, none of the society women or literary folk left the court room after the admonition of Judge Fosdick.

DeLacey was fined $800 in the lower court and given a four months' sentence for the sale of the book, and Sullivan, his assistant, was given two weeks and fined $200. The case is now being heard on their appeal.

NOT "ORDINARY" LIE

Charles S. Bodwell, secretary of the Watch and Ward Society, testified he had sent Agent Slaymaker into the Cambridge bookshop run by DeLacey to purchase the book, which cost $15. It was not in stock and had to be obtained, he admitted.

"Don't you think you were procuring by falsehood the commission of a crime?" Bushnell asked him.

"No, not ordinary falsehood" the witness replied.

Prior to the opening of the trial and during the recess society women and authors hobnobbed in the corridors puffing cigarettes until stopped by orders from court officers who told them that no smoking was permitted in the upper hallways of the building.

Harvard college professors were interested spectators, too, at the trial and it was recalled that Julian L. Coolidge, professor of mathematics at Harvard and master of Lowell house, had resigned from the Watch and Ward Society after the lower court conviction.

Among the character witnesses for DeLacey was George P. Winship, Harvard librarian, and Prof. Robert T. Hillier, poet and assistant professor of English at Harvard.

BOOK SELLER GIVEN JAIL TERM

Harvard Folk Raising Fund to Aid Him; Society Will Not Change Tactics

Despite the warning of Dist. Atty. Bushnell that he will prosecute Watch and Ward agents for conspiracy if they again employ the methods used in securing evidence in the Cambridge "bad book" sale case in Middlesex County, officers of that organization announced today there would be no change in the society's tactics.

At the same time, James A. Delacey, manager of a Cambridge book store, is facing a stay of execution of a sentence of one month in the House of Correction and a fine of $500 which Judge Frederick W. Fosdick imposed after adjudging him guilty of the sale of an objectionable book.

Delacey was convicted and sentenced after the methods employed by Watch and Ward agents who testified against him had been scored by the court, district attorney and defense. All denounced the manner in which the agents had arranged for the sale of the book.

APPEALS TO HIGH COURT

The stay of execution was granted to allow counsel for Delacey to appeal to the Supreme Court on several points of law. So today a drive was being conducted among the faculty and students at Harvard to raise funds to assist Delacey in his appeal.

In connection with the drive for funds at Harvard to aid Delacey, unconfirmed reports were circulated today that $500 had been subscribed. Sponsors of the movement were said to be Bernard Barnes, president of the Harvard Crimson, Lincoln Kirstein, and Felix Warburg, son of the New York philanthropist.

Joseph Sullivan, a clerk employed by Delacey at the Dunster House Book Shop on South street, Cambridge, was also adjudged guilty of selling a copy of D. H. Lawrence's "Lady Chatterley's Lover," but his case was filed.

"I don't care to see anybody sent to jail to satisfy the Watch and Ward Society," said Dist. Atty. Bushnell, in moving for disposition of the case. He suggested that no sentence be imposed. In his address to the court he referred to "private snooping societies" and "spies."

"I am opposed to censorship by appointed or elected officials, or by those who set themselves up as censors of plays and books," Bushnell said.

"The law under which this complaint was brought is the only censor I recognize. It is sound law. Personally, I'd much prefer to prosecute the author of this book than the booksellers. The author is a filthy degenerate with a sewer brain."

"And I want to say now," he declared as he thumped the table, his voice rising to a shout, "that if agents of this or any other society ever come into this district and procure the commission of a crime, which otherwise would not be committed, while I am district attorney, I will proceed against them for criminal conspiracy."

Judge Fosdick, in making his finding of guilty in the case, declared the Lawrence book as a whole, indecent and impure and manifestly tends to corrupt the morals of youth, adding that the court found this to be a fact beyond any reasonable doubt.

He found that the defendants did not actively seek a buyer for the volume in question but that the sale was made "wholly upon the impetuosity of the buyer, whose sole motive was to induce the defendants to make a sale the buyers being convinced that the sale, if made, would institute a crime."

"The court," continued the finding, "detects no cordiality for such things but nevertheless rules that such facts are not a defense."

The Rev. Charles S. Rodwell, secretary of the Watch and Ward organization, declared that the comment of Atty.-Gen. Bushnell was "all nonsense."

The secretary stated that most of the work of the society had to deal with the suppression of objectionable magazines which were usually in stock but denied that any "unusual effort" was used to obtain a sale of the book in Cambridge on which the charges were based.

The Rev. Mr. Rodwell stated that on a visit to New York he learned of the Greater Boston dealers who were handling the book. He stated that one other dealer in Greater Boston received copies of the book but declined to state whether or not the Watch and Ward had attempted to procure a sale on the part of this particular dealer.

Less objectionable to the board of directors of the society, he said, that there would be no change in the prosecution tactics of the organization.

SATURDAY, DECEMBER 21, 1929

The Watch and Ward Society

THREE distinguished citizens of Massachusetts, a judge, a district attorney and a defense attorney, have said words about the New England Watch and Ward Society that should interest every thoughtful resident of the New England states.

A book censorship case was before the Middlesex superior court. A Watch and Ward agent had persuaded a bookseller to procure for him a book which the court ruled to be obscene, indecent and impure. Atty. Herbert F. Parker, for the defense, pointing out the method used to induce the dealer to sell the book, referred to the society as "procurers, falsifiers and deceivers."

Dist. Atty. Robert T. Bushnell, prosecuting the case against the bookseller, said:

"I want to serve warning on them (the Watch and Ward Society) that if ever again, as long as I am district attorney of this district, they go into a bookstore in this district and induce or procure a person to commit a crime, I will proceed against them for criminal conspiracy."

Judge Frederick W. Fosdick, hearing the case, said from the bench that he "entertains no cordiality toward the Watch and Ward Society."

The society, in its appeal for funds, informs the public that it has the good will of the courts and police. Yet we find that this is not the first time its agents have been rebuked by the courts. Judge Irwin and Judge Murray had occasion to offer criticism from the bench.

To protect the moral standard of the community, particularly of the young, is a laudable work but to us it appears to be a police function. The Watch and Ward Society urges the public to report all possible evils to the society. Why have we a police department?

The Watch and Ward Society is in a peculiarly strong position. If one attacks its methods the society may easily accuse such person of being in league with the forces of vice. There is no doubt that the society numbers among its members individuals whose sole interest is one of public service. The words of the three eminently respectable citizens in Middlesex county court yesterday will give the supporters of the society something to consider.

DAILY RECORD.

Saturday, December 21, 1929

Appeals Jail Term in Sale of Spicy Book

Following the bitterest denunciation of the Watch and Ward Society ever heard in a courtroom, in which prosecution, defense and even the judge joined, James A. Delacey was fined $500 and given a month in the House of Correction yesterday for the sale of an obscene book.

The same charge against his clerk, Joseph Sullivan, was filed, on order of Judge Fosdick in East Cambridge Superior Criminal Court. Atty. Herbert Parker announced an appeal would be taken to the Supreme Court, and this acted as a stay of sentence. Delacey's bail was lowered from $1000 to $500 and he was released.

"DANGEROUS BOOK"

Before passing sentence, Judge Fosdick declared "Lady Chatterley's Lover," the book in question, was an unspeakably dangerous book, but he also scored the Watch and Ward, saying: "The actions of this society call for severe condemnation."

Atty. Parker called for the banishment of Watch and Ward men from the State, declaring in the days of Athens they would have had to drink the poison cup.

"These miserable, false pretenders who pose brazenly as protectors of public morals, are nothing but procurers, falsifiers and deceivers," he declared.

Neither did Dist. Atty. Bushnell spare them.

"I serve warning here and now," he cried, "that as long as I am district attorney and agents of this society go into a bookstore of good repute and induce and procure the commission of a crime I will proceed against them for criminal conspiracy."

"When misery stalks the homes of the poor, well-meaning persons bestow their money on a society that has no standing and has paid spies and snoopers to watch over the public morals. The public can take better care of its morals than the type of person this society has."

In the lower court, where a similar finding was made against the book, Delacey was given four months and a fine of $500 and Sullivan was given two weeks and a $200 fine. Judge Fosdick absolved Sullivan, but said Delacey was aware of the character of the book he sold and therefore his offense called for a sentence as well as a fine.

Methods of Watch and Ward Society Scored

JUDGE, BUSHNELL, DEFENCE CAUSTIC

Court Rules Book In- decent—Friends to Aid Delacey

After the court, district attorney and counsel for the defense separately scored the methods employed by the Watch and Ward Society in obtaining evidence in the case, James A. Delacey, manager of a Cambridge book shop, late yesterday in Middlesex County was sentenced to one month in the house of correction and fined $500 by Judge Frederick W. Fosdick, who earlier in the day, had adjudged him guilty of the sale of an obscene book.

A stay of execution was granted pending an appeal on points of law which counsel for Delacey will argue before the Supreme Court. Joseph Sullivan, a clerk, employed by Delacey at the Dunster House Book Shop, 20 South street, was also adjudged guilty on the same charge. His case was filed.

The two men were tried before Judge Fosdick on an appeal from the district court where, on Nov. 28, Delacey was sentenced to four months and fined $500, and Sullivan sentenced to two weeks and fined $200 after they had been adjudged guilty of selling a copy of D. H. Lawrence's book, "Lady Chatterley's Lover," to an agent of the Watch and Ward society.

Bushnell Flays Watch and Ward

Before pronouncing sentence Judge Fosdick declared there was no doubt in his mind that the sale of the book had been brought about with no good purpose on the part of those who procured it. This fact, he said, had obviously weighed on the mind of the jury and less obviously on the mind of the court.

It was brought out in the testimony at the trial that the Watch and Ward agent, John Slaymaker, had left an order for the book after he was told that it was not kept in stock. Some weeks later he returned and received one copy of the book for which he paid $5. Delacey admitted securing the book and testified he told Slaymaker that he "did not consider it fit to sell."

Defense Attorney Robert T. Bushnell, in moving for disposition of the case, declared, "I don't care to see anybody sent to jail to satisfy the Watch and Ward society," and suggested that no sentence be imposed. In his address to the court he referred to "private snooping societies" and "spies."

Pounds Table as He Argues

It would be much better, he declared, if people who contributed to the support of these organizations protecting the morals of the public, devoted the money to relieving some of the grief and misery which stalks the streets of every city at this season of the year. In a brief but forceful argument before the court yesterday afternoon District Attorney Bushnell, pounding a table with his clenched fist to emphasize his statements, declared:

"I am opposed to censorship by appointed or elected officials, or by those who set themselves up as censors of plays and books."

"The law under which this complaint was brought is the only censor I recognize. It is sound law. Personally, I'd much prefer to prosecute the author of this book than the booksellers. The author is a filthy degenerate with a sewer brain."

Court Rules Book Is Bad

"And I want to say now," he declared as he thumped the table, his voice rising to a shout, "that if agents of this or any other society ever come into this district and procure the commission of a crime which otherwise would not be committed while I am district attorney, I will proceed against them for criminal conspiracy."

The Rev. Charles S. Rodwell, secretary of the Watch and Ward Society, sitting on one side of the courtroom continued to make notes on a pad of paper. He gave no outward indication of his reaction to the district attorney's remarks.

Judge Fosdick in making his finding of guilty in the case, declared the Lawrence book as a whole, "obscene, indecent and impure and manifestly tends to corrupt the morals of youth," adding that the court found this to be a fact beyond any reasonable doubt.

"Detested Type of Witness"

He found that the defendants did not actively seek a buyer for the volume in question but that the sale was made "wholly upon the impetuosity of the buyer, whose sole motive was to induce the defendants to make a sale, the buyers being convinced that the sale, if made, would institute a crime."

"The court," continued the finding, "entertains no cordiality for such things but nevertheless rules that such facts are not a defense."

Formerly Attorney General Herbert S. Parker, defense counsel with Attorney Richard C. Evans, began his argument shortly after the opening of court yesterday morning and when he had finished, veteran court officials declared it one of the most eloquent ever made in a Middlesex court.

And in his summation Parker did not neglect the Watch and Ward agents who had testified at the trial. "Who are these people," he demanded, "they are the detested type of witness who linger within the somewhat withered vineyard of our moral prohibitory laws."

Attacks Methods as Reprehensible

At another point he turned to where the Rev. Mr. Rodwell sat taking notes and referred to him as "this boring hole's satire, who sought to pervert the morals of a young man."

Later referring to the testimony of one of the government witnesses, Parker declared, "If it was in the days of Athens the hemlock heap would have been pressed to his lips. Let this type be forever exiled from the confines of this Commonwealth."

The former attorney general attacked the methods employed by the Watch and Ward Society as reprehensible and referred to the agents in the case as "falsifiers, procurers, and deceivers."

"They bought the book to be brought into a miserable fiction of fabrication and deception," he declared.

Parker lauded District Attorney Bushnell at the conclusion of his address for his fairness and the manner in which he had conducted the government's case. After Mr. Bushnell had completed his argument, Parker paid tribute to his courage in declaring his attitude on the methods employed by the Watch and Ward Society in obtaining evidence in the case on trial.

At the conclusion of arguments in the forenoon, Judge Fosdick declared a short recess while he made his finding. After this had been made the court put over the case of Delacey and Sullivan until afternoon for disposition.

DRIVE AT HARVARD TO ASSIST DELACEY

A drive to raise sufficient funds to defray the legal expenses of James A. Delacey, Harvard Square book shop manager, found guilty yesterday of the sale of an obscene book, has been started among Harvard students and faculty, it was learned last night.

According to unconfirmed reports $500 had been subscribed last night. Sponsors of the movement, it was said, are Bernard Barnes, president of the Harvard Crimson; Lincoln Kirstein, and Felix Warburg, son of the New York philanthropist.

Delacey, manager of the Dunster House Book Shop, 20 South street, off Harvard Square, Cambridge, is reported to be very popular with Harvard faculty members and undergraduate students. The students in charge of the drive are members of the senior class.

"ALL NONSENSE"

Secretary of Watch and Ward Society So Characterizes Threat of Dist. Atty. Bushnell to Prosecute Organization for Conspiracy If Methods Used in Securing Conviction Are Followed—Won't Change Tactics

There will be no change of tactics on the part of the Watch and Ward Society in securing evidence on dealers alleged to be selling obscene books, it was stated last night by the Rev. Charles S. Rodwell, secretary of the organization.

He declared that the comment of Mr. Bushnell in which he said that he would proceed against the society for conspiracy if they again employed the methods used in securing evidence against the Cambridge bookseller, was "all nonsense."

The secretary stated that most of the work of the society had to deal with the suppression of the obscene magazines which were usually in stock but denied that any "unusual effort" was used to obtain a sale of the book in Cambridge on which the charges were based.

The Rev. Mr. Rodwell stated that on a visit to New York he learned of the Greater Boston dealers who were handling the book. Besides the Cambridge bookstores, he stated that one other dealer in Greater Boston received copies of the book but declined to state whether or not the Watch and Ward had attempted to procure a sale on the part of this particular dealer. Unless otherwise ordered by the board of directors of the society, he stated that there would be no change in the prosecution tactics of the organization.

The Rev. Raymond Calkins of Cambridge, president of the society, declined to comment on Mr. Bushnell's statement until authorized to do so by the directors.

THE WATCH AND WARD

"The Court entertains no cordiality for the Watch and Ward Society," Judge Fosdick of the Superior Court.

"The District Attorney does not endorse the Watch and Ward Society's policy or tactics. If agents of this society go into a bookstore of good repute and procure the commission of a crime, I will proceed against them for criminal conspiracy."—District Attorney Bushnell of Middlesex.

"These miserable, false pretenders who pose brazenly as protectors of public morals! . . . God forbid that the standards of this Commonwealth should be stained by the false and poisonous hands of such persons."—Ex-Attorney-General Herbert Parker.

A young District Attorney, a middle-aged Judge of the Superior Court and a long and highly honored bar leader who will be 74 years old in a few months, thus expressed their tacit opinions yesterday of the Watch and Ward Society. We think that they have expressed the attitude of the overwhelming mass of the public also.

The fact that Judge Fosdick, who was under no obligation to characterize the Society, did so in unmistakable terms is significant. So is the statement of the District Attorney, who put decency and the law above the letter of a particular law, and lived up to the highest ideals of his position. From Herbert Parker, as counsel for the defense, it was to be expected that the fire which flared in his masterly proceedings against a former Attorney-General might blaze again, but not with such heat. "Old age never cools the Douglas blood," and the splendid vehemence of Mr. Parker indicates the fury with which he viewed the miserable proceedings. These three men, one young, one middle-aged, one old, representing the three great branches of the law, have voiced public opinion more effectively than it has been voiced for years. They have done a genuine public service.

The statements in regard to the Dunster bookshop case seem even stronger when read in connection with the 1927-8 annual report of the Society. In its appeal for funds, it says, among other things: "We believe that we have a well-won reputation for fairness and common sense as well as for courage and persistence in the warfare which we wage against vice."

We co-operate with and have the good will of the police, the courts and the prosecuting authorities throughout New England." In view of Dist. Atty. Bushnell's warning and Judge Fosdick's remark, that statement should perhaps be modified somewhat. And presumably the District Attorneys of Suffolk and many other counties hold opinions like Mr. Bushnell's.

Is the Watch and Ward Society a necessity in this community? We hesitate to say. It has a group of well known directors and vice-presidents, including Bishop Lawrence and Bishop Anderson, Dr. David D. Scannell and Bernard J. Rothwell, some of whom interest themselves continually in the work of the Society. Independently of the police, it has done some considerable scavenging of a helpful kind by concentrating on the detection of odious forms of vice which might otherwise escape the attention of the police. It is an unofficial police force in itself. It has been incorporated since 1884, received about $7000 in donations last year and has an endowment of about $18,000. Its income last year was about $16,000 and its expenses about $15,000.

If the Society is necessary, it is, as one well informed man has described it, a necessary and half-acceptable evil. Its agents are given to excesses. They acquire the professional, fanatical touch. They out-police the police. They are anxious to show results, to justify their work. Setting themselves up as guardians of morals, they resort to practices which fair-minded men loathe. It is not altogether certain that, if they abated their activities considerably, the police might not enforce the criminal laws just as effectively. And certainly, in view of the Dunster bookshop case, the community is not going to consider any bill of the Watch and Ward Society for the amendment of the censorship law as sacrosanct.

We cannot believe that all the officers approve of such methods as those used in the Dunster bookshop case, which, incidentally, is not dissimilar from the procedure followed in a great many other cases. It is impossible that these reprehensible methods have the indorsement of all the following gentlemen, who are given in the last annual report as officers: President, the Rev. Raymond Calkins; Vice-presidents, the Rt. Rev. W. F. Anderson, the Rev. W. H. van Allen, the Rev. Austin K. DeBlois, the Rt. Rev. W. Lawrence, Joseph Lee, the Rev. Daniel L. Marsh, Arthur McArthur, the Rev. Endicott Peabody; Treasurer, Godfrey L. Cabot; Secretary, Charles S. Rodwell; Counsel, John W. Rorke; Auditor, George W. Macgregor; Directors, Frank Chouteau, George W. Macgregor, Cabot, Thomas Dudley Cabot, Grosvenor Calkins, Francis J. Moors, Dr. Mark W. Richardson, Bernard J. Rothwell, Dr. David D. Scannell, John H. Storér, and the Rev. Henry B. Washburn.

Work Held Vicious — De-Lacey Sentenced—Other's Case Filed

Mr. Parker delivered what was conceded to be one of the most eloquent arguments ever heard in Middlesex. Like others connected with the case, he

Joseph Sullivan (left) and James A. De Lacey, Cambridge book seller, held guilty for sale of Lawrence's work.

The court finds both defendants guilty.

thorship in portrayal of situation and delineation of character and in general literary construction; that this very feature adds to rather than detracts from its general dangerous nature; that in proper hands and under proper circumstances it is a safe subject of study; whether as an isolated piece of DeLacey, he said, had an equally good record, but he confessed that he really didn't know what should be done in this case. And then, for the second time yesterday, the district attorney paid his respect to the Watch and Ward Society.

WILL GO ON AS BEFORE
 Watch and Ward Expects No Need To Test Bushnell Threat
 New England Watch and Ward So-

Bernard J. Rothwell, a director, remarked that it looked as if agents were expected to go labeled, and to tell who they were. He said it was another

Watch and Ward Expects No Need To Test Bushnell Threat

New England Watch and Ward Society officials last night indicated they did not fear Dist. Atty. Bushnell's threat of prosecuting them if they again sought in his county to entrap a bookseller into violation of the law against

HIT WATCH AND WARD

Defense, Prosecution and Judge Score Society

Dist Atty Bushnell to Act If Same Tactics Are Used

Book Seller, Given Month, Gets Stay on Exceptions

Following vitriolic arraignment and condemnation of Watch and Ward Society officials and their activities, by the defense, the prosecution and the court, James A. Delacey, manager of the Dunster House Bookshop, Cambridge, was given one month in the House of Correction and a $500 fine, in Middlesex Criminal Court yesterday afternoon, on a charge of selling an obscene book to an agent of the Watch and Ward Society.

The case of Joseph Sullivan, a clerk in the bookshop, found guilty with Delacey, was placed on file.

Delacey was granted a stay of sentence pending the outcome of exceptions to the Supreme Court, and he was released in bonds of $1000.

When the case was over and the final official denunciation of Watch and Ward officials and methods had been made, Charles S. Bodwell, secretary of the Watch and Ward Society, and John Slaymaker and Edward Fox, two of its agents, applied at the district attorney's office for their fees as witnesses.

Judge's Comment

Before a crowd which filled every available seat in the courtroom and included members of the Harvard faculty, under-graduates, men and women bearing all of the marks of being of the "Intelligentsia," Judge Foster W. Fosdick commented from the bench upon various phases of the case prior to making his dispositions.

He had no difficulty of decision in the case of the defendant Sullivan, he said. "The youthful Sullivan, clerk in the bookshop, while not free from blame, said Judge Fosdick, was not the authority for the negotiation of the sale or for the shop's stock in trade. The court added that he had been favorably impressed by Sullivan as a witness and would file the case against him.

Relative to the defendant Delacey, the court said that he was troubled by the evident indifference of the defendant to the future of the book which was sold.

Delacey knew that it was work which is not fit for distribution, Judge Fosdick said, and yet he put it in the hands of a person whom he did not know and who might have been a "low pander" buying for the purpose of reselling to an academic adolescent. He characterized the book as "unspeakably dangerous."

Hits Watch and Ward Method

Speaking of the purchase of the book by Slaymaker, the Watch and Ward agent, Judge Fosdick said: "The way in which the defendant was induced to sell the book calls for all the condemnation which has been put upon it. It is evident that there would not have been a sale if it had not been deliberately procured, with no obvious good purpose on the part of those who procured it."

Judge Fosdick continued that the way in which the sale was procured has a bearing on what should be done in disposition of the defendant's case. "It tells the offense of a great deal of its wickedness," said the court.

The court continued to the effect that there was clearly no intent on the part of the defendant to bring any kind of antisocial attitude, but, he added, he felt the court would not be doing its duty unless a jail sentence was imposed.

He pointed out that there is more to the situation than the dealing with an individual. Those who deal with dangerous instrumentalities, he observed, must practice more than mere discretion, and Delacey sold such an instrumentality without knowing the purchaser or its future destination.

For two days the case occupied the attention of the Superior Court and as many spectators as could crowd into the courtroom. It reached the court on appeal from the lower court, where Delacey was given four months in the House of Correction and a $500 fine, while Sullivan was given two weeks in the House of Correction and a $200 fine. Due to the fact that the bookshop caters largely to Harvard undergraduates the case attracted much attention.

Used False Name He Admits

John T. Slaymaker, agent for the Watch and Ward Society, purchased the book in question, D. W. Lawrence's "Lady Chatterley's Lover." According to his testimony, he visited the bookshop three times and also telephoned in his effort to get the book, and posed under the name of John Tait so that the defendants would not know of his connection with the Watch and Ward Society.

He admitted that, if he had dropped the matter after any of his visits or telephone calls, there would have been no sale and, consequently, no offense committed. He admitted that he was told at the shop that the book was not kept in stock and that it was not for sale. He said that his purpose in going to the bookshop was investigation of crime, but admitted that there was no crime except as he procured it.

Charles S. Bodwell, secretary of the Watch and Ward Society, when asked if he approved of the procuring of the crime in question, answered that he did under the circumstances. Asked if he approved of falsehood and deception, relative to Slaymaker posing under the name of John Tait in the procuring of sale of the book, Bodwell answered, "It was not ordinary falsehood."

This answer brought the remark from Judge Fosdick, "Falsehood is falsehood."

Delacey claimed that he made no effort to get the book, never had it in his shop for sale, had never read it, and that he obtained it on Slaymaker's order, paying the same amount that he charged Slaymaker for it. He admitted that he had previously sold five copies of the book, on order, three of which went to members of the Harvard University faculty.

A Harvard professor, the Harvard University librarian, and others, testified as to the good reputation of Delacey, not only as a bookseller, but as to decency and propriety.

Parker's Argument

In final arguments of counsel, attorney Herbert Parker, for the defense, referred to the book in question as "abominable, by the very genius of prostituted talent." He admitted that there was evidence upon which the court could find a violation of the law, but he argued that from a moral standpoint there had been no sale because there had been no real vendee (buyer).

He argued that the law aims to prevent corruption of the morals of youth and that Slaymaker, the Watch and Ward agent, is 37.

He attacked the methods used in procuring the sale of the book, characterizing the Watch and Ward representatives as "procurers of crime," "miserable false pretenses posing as the guardians of public morals," and as "belonging to the detested type of predatory beings."

Attorney Parker argued that it may be on the testimony that the defendant made a sale in law and, he added, "It avails us nothing to call them (the Watch and Ward representatives) falseifiers, deceivers and procurers, who sought to corrupt a younger man" (Sullivan, the clerk).

Bushnell Denounces Author

Dist Atty Bushnell, in his final argument, opened by saying that he wished to make clear the Government's position in the case. He said that the case had come to him and he had presented it, but he added that he is opposed to a censorship which makes appointed or self-appointed persons censors of plays or books. The law, he said, under which this complaint was brought, is the only censor he recognizes, and, he added, it is a sound law.

"I'd much prefer," thundered Mr. Bushnell, to prosecute the author of this book than these booksellers." He characterized the author as "a filthy degenerate," and the book as "The lowest outpouring of a diseased, sewer brain."

The question in the case at bar, he said, was not merely whether or not a sale of the book was made. That was established, he said, and the defendants were clearly guilty as a matter of law.

"By proceeding with this case, I don't want anybody to get the idea that I endorse the tactics employed by this society (the Watch and Ward)," continued Mr. Bushnell, "and I say that, if ever they go again into a bookstore in this district, while I am in office, and procure the commission of a crime which would not otherwise be committed, I'll proceed against them for criminal conspiracy."

A deep silence filled the crowded courtroom as the challenge rang through the chamber. Sitting within a few feet of Mr. Bushnell was Charles S. Bodwell, secretary of the society, taking notes from time to time.

Following the final arguments, a recess was declared while Judge Fosdick prepared his decision. Finding both defendants guilty, was returned.

Judge Fosdick's Decision

Judge Fosdick's decision, read from the bench, found the book to be indecent, impure and manifestly tending to corrupt the morals of youth, "so dangerous to youthful morals that the court refused to further characterization and description and from any quotation."

"The defendants here contend that the sale of one book to a minor person of that age (37) is not in fact a breach of the statute's prohibition because by the single sale to but one person, who was not a minor, the sale of the book into the hands of one of the class which the statute seeks to protect," Judge Fosdick continued.

"The defendants knew nothing about the person to whom they sold the book other than what he told them and neither his appearance nor what he told them gave any indication or assurance that he was not, for example, a low pander buying what they knew to be a filthy book for the purpose of selling it to one of the academic adolescents being educated in one of the many institutions of learning hereabouts."

"The defendants took no precautions as to the future of the particular volume other than to tell the buyer that it was not to be sold, and that he well knew without being told. There was no evidence of the use by the buyer of the phrases and expressions peculiarly to be expected of buyers of first edition or rare volumes as markers of literary virtuosity, or to be expected of dilettante or professional students of literature."

"The court finds that the sale by the defendants was made from no purely unselfish motive but was made requested desire of a customer. On the other hand the court does not find that there was any willful intent to corrupt the morals or to do harm upon any ground by the sale. Rather the attitude was one of indifference. The court does not find that either defendant profited in money by the sale."

Such Facts No Defense

"The court finds that the volume in question was not kept in stock for regular sale, but was specially prepared for this particular transaction."

"The court finds that the defendants did not actively seek a buyer for the volume in question, but that the sale was made wholly upon the importunity of the buyer, whose sole motive was to induce the defendants to make the sale, the buyer being convinced that the sale, if made, would constitute a crime."

"The court entertains no cordiality for such doings, but nevertheless rules that such facts are not a defense. It is true that the inevitable result in these days of procuring a sale of such a book as the one in question, followed by the starting of a prosecution, is to give undesirable publicity to the particular book and to stimulate minds of a certain low type to a desire to read it."

"With that the court has nothing to do. The changing of the law to drive such evils is a problem for legislative and not judicial action. If it be material, the court rules that no aspect of application of the result referred to by any defensive value to these defendants on the question of their criminal responsibility."

Calls Society "Snooping"

Dist Atty Bushnell, in moving for sentence, pointed out that the defendants had no previous criminal record. He said that he felt that Sullivan made a good impression, was frank in his testimony, and that it might be well to file the charges against him. It would do the public no good, Mr. Bushnell said, to fine this 37-year-old clerk.

The case against Delacey was another matter, Mr. Bushnell said. He stated that the situation had its inception last August when the Watch and Ward Society received word that five copies of the book had been consigned from New York to the Dunster House Bookshop.

"There is, however, no suggestion that it is not true that he got those books on order of regular customers," Mr. Bushnell said.

Two months went by, Mr. Bushnell said, and then an agent of the society (Slaymaker) was sent to Delacey's bookshop. "And the more I consider the case," continued Mr. Bushnell, "the more I feel that it is the best illustration of the futility of the existence of private, snooping societies."

Mr. Bushnell then referred to what would have happened if the New York information had come originally to the police, rather than to the Watch and Ward. He said that a State officer would have gone to the shop and asked for the book, and upon being told that it was not carried in stock and was not for sale or considered advisable to have for sale, would have departed satisfied that the law was not being violated. He would not have become a partner with the bookseller in procuring the book, Mr. Bushnell said, and Delacey would not have been encouraged to get it.

"But these people (the Watch and Ward representatives) were interested primarily in getting a sale," said Mr. Bushnell, "so that the defendants could be prosecuted."

Criticizes Contributors

"It is ironical to me," he continued, "when misery and want fill the streets of every large city, that contributors, instead of bestowing their wealth for the benefit of the poor and unfortunate, consider it their duty to contribute to a private organization which hires paid snoopers to watch over the morals of the general public."

"The general public is better able to care for its own morals than are the type of men who appear in this prosecution."

Referring to the methods used in procuring the sale of the book, Mr. Bushnell said, "Their spy came around and gave a false name. It was a human nature for the defendant to sell and get his profit, which I believe he did."

In disposition of the case, the effect upon the community must be considered, Mr. Bushnell said. He added that he did not want to see anybody go to jail to satisfy the Watch and Ward Society.

He commented to the effect that the publicity resulting from this prosecution would probably increase the demand for the book in certain quarters and result in much higher prices for it, which might be an argument for a warning in this case as a warning to other booksellers. On the other hand, he said, he felt that Delacey had learned a lesson and would never offend again. He left the matter of sentence to the court without recommendation.

It is understood that the defense will attempt to set aside the verdict in the Supreme Court, largely on the contention that the sale of one book to a person of 37 years is not in fact a breach of the statute's prohibition.

COOLIDGE'S WIFE QUITS DRY LEAGUE

Reported Result of "Boycott" of Harvard Unit

In the face of the so-called "boycott" of Lowell House, the unit of the new Harvard housing plan of which her husband is master, Mrs. Julian L. Coolidge has resigned her position as president of a prominent woman's dry organization, The Law Enforcement League, it was learned yesterday.

The activities of Mrs. Coolidge as the head of an organization, embracing most of the "dry" members of Boston society, has been given as the reason why so many Harvard juniors have expressed their preference to live in Dunster House, which will be under the mastership of Professor Chester N. Greenough, instead of Professor Coolidge's house.

Both masters have denied that there has been any boycott of the "Coolidge household" although it was learned in Cambridge yesterday that Dunster House was the favorite among the applicants by rather heavy odds.

The information that Mrs. Coolidge had decided to withdraw from her prohibition activities was given to the Post yesterday by Professor Coolidge himself. A few days ago the professor announced that he himself had resigned his position as a director of the Watch and Ward Society because of the pressure of other duties.

Explains Wife's Position

Though the matter of his wife's prohibition activities and their effect on the registration for Lowell House, has been the subject of public interest for several days, Professor Coolidge elected to deal lightly with the subject yesterday. In referring to the applications received for quarters in the Lowell House were more than could be accommodated, he admitted that his wife had resigned her position as president of the Law Enforcement League.

He then added that when she took this office last spring, it was understood that she was to hold it for about a week. After the organization work had progressed to a favorable stage, someone else, but no applicant being available, she continued to act as president, it was said.

Yesterday Professor Coolidge declared that he had felt all along that his wife ought to resign her position. He stated that she has already sent in her resignation and while the League has not yet had time to act upon it, he felt that it would become effective in the very near future.

Coolidge Refers to Prof. Hall

Professor Coolidge declared that he had no way of knowing how many students had professed their preference for Professor Greenough's house over his. He was sure, however, that no tutor had declined to serve with him, because of possible restriction of personal liberties. The outcries who had declined the invitation was an older man who had plans to go to Europe next year, he stated.

In concluding the interview yesterday, Professor Coolidge made one vague reference to Professor Edwin H. Hall, it was Professor Hall, professor emeritus of the physics department of Harvard whose statements brought the allegations of the "boycott" to the forefront. The new master of Lowell House made no attempt to answer the statements of Professor Hall but of him, he stated: "At the time of the Boston police strike Professor Hall was a volunteer policeman."

Officials of the college and university were reluctant to discuss the relative popularity of Dunster and Lowell Houses yesterday. These will be the first of the new Harvard houses to be opened, and as this English system of university education is such a radical departure from accepted American college life, they have attracted wide attention.

Dunster House Preferred

From several authenticated sources it was learned that among the applications to the housing system which had been received, several of the blanks bore the notations, "Dunster House or none at all," and "Prefer Dunster House—will not consider living at Lowell." First and second choice of living quarters were provided for in the application blanks. For "second choice" of household some of the Dunster application blanks carried the word, "none." Yet the number of members to be drawn from the junior class left no possibility that the quota of 193 men places, there have already been more than 140 applicants. After the Christmas holidays applications will be received from the present sophomores and freshmen to join the houses, it was stated.

Professor Hall, who helped bring the present discussion into the limelight, announced yesterday that he was not further interested in substantiating his declaration of the alleged Lowell House boycott. He explained that he based the assertion on information which had come to him, and if Professor Greenough and Coolidge had announced that no boycott existed, he was entirely satisfied to let the matter rest there without pursuing it further.

Rival Women's Leagues

The Law Enforcement League which has been headed by Mrs. Coolidge was formed last May and entered the feminine prohibition field. Directly, another group of prominent women formed the Moderation League. This later organization, whose attitude toward prohibition is indicated in the name, was headed by Mrs. F. Lothrop Ames of the Back Bay and North Easton.

After a summer of comparative little public activity, the Law Enforcement League began to put itself forward and sent cards to the socially elite of the city and suburbs, outlining the evils of prohibition and the virtues of prohibition. Mrs. Coolidge, in a public address attacked the women who were organized to oppose prohibition. Subsequently she took the "smart set" of Boston to task for giving hot dinners and parties in the Back Bay and expressed her opinion that the people who drink today "are the dregs of the underworld and the privileged rich."

WATCH AND WARD WILL MAKE MOVE

Special Meeting Will Discuss Action in "Book Crime"

A special meeting of the Board of Directors of the Watch and Ward Society has been called for tomorrow, at which it is expected that the conduct of the representatives of that organization in securing evidence against a Cambridge bookseller will come up for discussion, it was stated yesterday by officers of the society.

BUSHNELL NON-COMMITTAL

While most of the officers of the society had no comment to offer on the unusual criticism that had come to the organization in the trial of the Cambridge case, Joseph Lee, one of the vice-presidents, declared that he believed "it would be a crime to induce an otherwise innocent person to commit a crime." He added that if a person made a business of dealing in obscene literature or opium, it would be not only justified but praiseworthy to make purchases in order to prevent further crimes of that nature.

District Attorney Bushnell, whose attack on the society created a sensation at the trial of the case, would not state yesterday whether or not he intended to proceed against the organization on the evidence brought out at the trial of James A. Delacey, the proprietor of the Cambridge book shop and his clerk, Joseph Sullivan.

"I haven't said that I would not proceed against them," Mr. Bushnell stated, "nor have I said that I would."

Warner and Foley Not Concerned

In addressing the court on Friday Mr. Bushnell declared that if any representative of the society went to a bookstore and procured the commission of a crime that otherwise would not be committed, he would proceed against them for criminal conspiracy.

Both Attorney-General Joseph E. Warner and District Attorney William J. Foley declared that their offices had nothing or little to do with the work of the Watch and Ward Society in securing evidence.

"In Suffolk county," said Mr. Foley, "all of our cases come to us as a result of evidence secured by the Boston Police Department. We have never yet received a case prepared by any association or society. We have found that in every instance the jury has been satisfied with the evidence secured by the Boston Police Department."

No Comment by Warner

"We have employed no detectives or society agents to secure evidence or to secure the commission of an offense. The decision of the jury, we believe, is an endorsement of our method of procedure. During my term as the district attorney of Suffolk county, I can recall no case brought to the office by the Watch and Ward Society. I do recall a case in which their representative was a defendant. He was convicted and sentenced to two years in the House of Correction, and is now serving that sentence."

District Attorney Foley stated that he was referring to Nicholas Cokinos, who was a defendant last spring in the trial of the "Ritz case," in the Suffolk County Court. Attorney-General Warner stated that the Watch and Ward Society brought no complaints to his office, but to the offices of the various district attorneys in the State. He said that he had no comment to make on the evidence produced at the Cambridge trial.

Lee Lauds Watch and Ward

Mr. Lee, who has achieved a national reputation for his work in furthering public recreation, paid a compliment to the Watch and Ward Society for the work it has done in the past and stated that he wanted to secure more information about the Cambridge case before he commented on it. He then said:

"I don't think that detective work can be successfully done without a certain element of deception. Detective work can't be carried on perfectly above board but that does not justify a detective doing any old thing."

"Now I don't know all about the present case. I do think it would be a crime to induce an otherwise innocent person to commit a crime. But I do think if a person is in the habit of dealing in a crime—for instance, selling opium or obscene literature as a part of his regular business—it would be not only justified but necessary to buy an obscene book, or opium, for the sake of preventing him and others from permanently committing crimes of that nature."

Public Statement to Be Made

"I believe that it is only by such action that the opium trade or the selling of printed poison can be put a stop to. Personally, I should be in favor of stopping both those trades. As to the present case in Cambridge, I am not yet sufficiently informed to have a valuable opinion."

Raymond Calkins, one of the directors of the Watch and Ward Society, stated: "We have plenty of courage and we are used to abuse." He said that at the meeting of the directors which was called for tomorrow the recent public attacks on the organization would undoubtedly be taken up and that, at its conclusion, a public statement would be made. The meeting will be held at the Boston City Club, he stated. The regular meeting of the directors was scheduled for the second Monday in January.

The Rev. Raymond Calkins of Cambridge, president of the society, had no comment to offer and all the other directors and vice-presidents who could be reached were similarly non-committal.

FILES BOOK BILL

Proposed Law Would Make It Necessary to Show That Any Publication "Considered as a Whole" Is Objectionable Before It Could Be Banned

The book censorship bill, under which it would be necessary to show that a book or other publication, "considered as a whole," is objectionable before it could be banned, was filed by Representative Henry L. Shattuck of Boston, yesterday on petition of the Massachusetts committee for the revision of the book law.

Under the present law a book may be banned if it contains obscene or other objectionable language, but the proposed bill would make it necessary for those who objected to a certain publication to show that it is obscene, indecent, impure or manifestly tends to corrupt the morals of youth.

The bill amends Section 28 of Chapter 32 of the General Laws so that that section would read as follows: "Section 28. Whoever imports, prints, publishes, sells or distributes a book, pamphlet, ballad, printed paper or other thing, which is considered as a whole, is obscene, indecent or impure or manifestly tends to corrupt the morals of youth, or an obscene, indecent or impure print, picture, figure, image or description, manifestly tending to corrupt the morals of youth, or introduces into a family, school or place of education, or buys, procures, receives or has in his possession any such book, pamphlet, ballad, printed paper, obscene, indecent or impure print, picture, figure, image or other thing, either for the purpose of sale, exhibition, loan or circulation or with intent to introduce the same into a family, school or place of education, shall be punished by imprisonment for not more than two years and by a fine of not less than $100 nor more than $1000."

WHITING'S COLUMN

Let's get at the root of this problem of what books to sell and what not to sell. Let's go to the source; get at the malady, and quit doctoring symptoms. We have dabbled with censorship and a free press and public morals and the written word and sex and context and cuss words and subtleties and subversion, perversion, diversion and even animadversion; and we are just nowhere. Take off the lid, and who knows what will boil over? Clamp it on, and who knows what will explode? And in the meantime bookleggers and college faculties sleep in the same legal bed, the streets are strewn with classics and best sellers, bonfires blaze with literature and royalties, and altogether things are unsatisfactory. Let's go to the source of all this trouble.

Day by day contributions are made toward solution; but they further complicate it. The latest suggestion, from an author whose realism has on occasion been realistic, is that professional, official censors shall be required by law to take examinations, to include the celebrated Binet test—the name of which every one knows, no matter how few know what it is—and thus establish among censors, policemen, reformers, etc., an intelligence rating of 18 years of age. And any who flunk the test would be barred forever after from officially judging or censoring books, plays, music or dancing. The proposal might even be extended to include the manufacture of apple pie—a crying need.

Now, this is interesting, and it sounds reasonable enough; but is it? Just what does an 18-year-old know that a 17-year-old does not know? And does a 10-year-old have better judgment than a 10-year-old? Who reads the bad books? The stupid or the clever? It is very perplexing.

Any one knows that the way to handle common colds is not to have them; to prevent rather than cure. What's good for common colds ought to work with common scolds. Fire departments put out fires; but if you are careful with match ends and cigarette stubs and doughnut fat and gas pipes and electric wires and old waste and gasoline and gunpowder and T. N. T. and frying bacon and kerosene lamps and Christmas candles and Santa Claus whisksers and fuzzy bathrobes and the furnace ashes and magnifying glasses and rats and mice and phosphorus and vitriol and naphtha and benzine and cigarette lights when functioning and table toasters or waffle irons and heaters and window curtains and dry grass and pine needles in the woods and open fires and chimneys—you won't need to call the fire department.

What we need is not a Binet test, or a blood test, or a test for color blindness for censors. We need it, or them, for authors. Get at the source. License all writers. Give them a stiff examination. Make it a penal offense for any one to write a book until he, or she, has demonstrated to a competent authority that he (or, again, she) has something to write about, can write about it, and is a fit person to be entrusted with a pen or pencil or typewriter.

Literature has been running wild. It is out of tune with the time. If you want to mend a lead pipe you have to know something about lead pipes, and in most towns you have to belong to a union. But you can go ahead and dash off a book with all the looseness of a rabbit running around a lot. No one these days would undertake to sit down in a machine shop and make a motor car. It takes many men and many minds and many tools to do the job. One man, as the old yarn has it, just tightens nut No. 63. The result is a motor car. But books are made by jacks of all trades who do all the chapters.

Let's get literature systematized. There are thousands of young men and young women who are good at first chapters, but who cannot get much farther. They can start novels, but they cannot finish them. Yet these good starters are hungry, and sometimes thirsty, and they produce nothing, just because there is in the present disorganized condition of the book market no market for single chapters. There ought to be. There is no more reason why one-chapter writers should not have a chance to make a living than there would be to condemn to want and penury the man who can hit a bit of iron with a hammer but couldn't make a motor car.

The pay in literature is woefully uneven, too. It ought not to be so. A plumber or a carpenter or even a lawyer, within limits, gets a standard pay for a specific piece of work. If a man works hard eight hours a day he ought to get a day's pay. Who would dispute it? But in the making of books it is not so. Spruce forests topple and disappear to make books that few read, and which return no appreciable royalties to their authors. One man writes a book and retires to a mansion on the proceeds. Another author works just as hard, and he retires to the almshouse. It is not right.

We want to see the authors consolidated and put on a business basis. We want book factories, where energetic young writers can be sure of their jobs so long as they leave liquor alone and obey the rules against getting their fingers caught in the typewriter. We want to see rows on rows of writers hard at work turning out books, each doing his allotted chapter, and each secure in knowing that when Saturday night comes he can take home a stout pay envelope to the patient wife. We want to see the business of books ennobled by hard work.

However, all this is a dream. For some time to come we shall have the hit-or-miss method of book production from the pen of writers who don't know where the next word is coming from. The first step is to license them. Licenses should be grouped in classes. Grade the authors. Those who fail under 12 years of age in intellect could be given licenses to turn out detective stories. The 18-year-olds should be restricted to sex novels. Those who showed no reaction at all to the intelligence tests could do the biographies.

Authors who insist on writing..... this way, and who cannot work up a plot without using..... all through their pages, so that the reader..... has to guess what's the matter with..... or what is the purpose of..... the author, ought to have a special license at a high rate. Use of such sentences as this, which we found in a current thriller: "He told her in monosyllables that he was at the Embassy Hotel"—this ought to be penalized by suspension of the license.

Objectionable words might be catalogued and let out under special license only to those who would restrict their use to such contexts as would make them noble, or at least harmless. With every offensive word the licensed author might be required to use an antidote.

Maybe readers ought to be licensed, too. The use of motor cars, automatic guns, fishing rods, etc., is restricted, but anything about it but try to censor a book now and then. What need censoring are the authors and the readers.

If they applied the Binet test to authors the book stalls would not be so crowded.

13 STATES FOLLOW MASSACHUSETTS LAW ON BOOKS

The supporters of the move to effect a radical change in the Massachusetts law relating to obscene books declare that Massachusetts is the "laughing stock" of the country because of its "absurd" law censoring books.

The facts are that the laws of Delaware, Florida, Iowa, Maine, Michigan, Nebraska, Rhode Island, South Carolina, Tennessee, Vermont, Virginia, West Virginia and Wisconsin on the subject of obscene books are identical with the Massachusetts law. Most of these States have obviously copied our law and made it a part of their own statute law.

Certainly, no citizen of any of these States can consistently attack the Massachusetts law.

But suppose the legislators should say to the bitter critics of our book law, "All right, we are willing to be as liberal on that subject as any State in the Union. Go through the statutes of every State and pick out one that you feel will meet the objections you have raised to the Massachusetts law and we will substitute it for our law."

Would they accept? No, they would not because they know well that it would not make the slightest change in the situation.

Every State in the Union has a law against obscene books. Many, including New York, Texas, Mississippi and Washington, have much more drastic laws on the subject than the Massachusetts law. Texas and West Virginia make a stiff jail sentence mandatory on conviction for violation of the law.

Fourteen States, including Massachusetts, bar any book "containing obscene language." The laws of all the other States in the Union bar "any obscene book" or any book "which is obscene."

Decisions of the various State courts concerning the interpretation of the words "any obscene book" or any book "which is obscene" are not available, but the federal courts have, time after time, ruled that these words have exactly the same meaning as the Massachusetts statute barring any book "containing" such language.

Thus the Massachusetts law, according to Federal Court rulings, is exactly the same as the law of every other State in the Union. Not one State of the entire 48 specifically compels the court to consider the book as a whole.

It is plain, therefore, that those who wish to change our law demand that we let down the bars to a greater extent than any State in the Union.

The real object, as the Post has observed before, is not so much to change the law as to compel our Supreme Court to rule that the extent of the obscenity in a book, and not the presence of it, should govern the jury's verdict. The proponents of the bill realize that the substitution of the law of any other State in the Union will not accomplish this purpose.

They want a law which will compel a judge to say to the jury: "The mere fact that there is obscene and indecent language in the book does not warrant a finding of guilty. There may be indecent episodes, there may be language which you find grossly improper, but these things alone are not sufficient. The entire book must be considered obscene before you are warranted in returning a verdict of guilty. Remember, the statute is not directed against obscene and indecent language in a book, but against the book itself, considered as a whole."

That, we submit, does not at all represent the sentiments of the vast majority of citizens, and we believe that the present law, which is in line with the laws of every other State in the Union, ought to be good enough for Massachusetts. If our law is "absurd," we are in good company.

Boston Transcript

224 WASHINGTON STREET, BOSTON, MASS.

(Entered at the Post Office, Boston, Mass., as Second Class Mail Matter)

MONDAY, DECEMBER 23, 1929

Watch and Ward Prepares Statement

The directors of the New England Watch and Ward Society met today at luncheon at the Boston City Club to discuss the recent occurrences in the Middlesex Superior Court when representatives of the organization and the methods they employed in bringing about convictions for the sale of obscene books were assailed by both prosecution and defense.

At the close of the two-hour session, Rev. Raymond Calkins, D.D., of Cambridge, president of the society, gave out this information:

"As I can say is that the directors have formulated a statement with respect to this case and have ordered it placed on the records of the society and a copy to be mailed to every member of the organization."

When asked if the statement would be made public he replied that it was not for the public and also said that it has yet to be prepared.

"What Do You Mean—'The Glad Christmas Season'?"

By CARL ROSE

THE BOSTON HERALD

SUNDAY, DECEMBER 22, 1929

15TH CENTURY CENSORSHIP

To the Editor of The Herald: History does, and does not, repeat itself; history contains lessons, but we cannot read them. The mysteries it suggests and conceals are as momentous and elusive as any in the Divine Book, and we read both, less to dispel those mysteries than to refine them. In a small circle of young Italians the Renaissance was born into the world at Florence. From that table, around which, in the early years of the 15th century, sat Niccolò Niccoli, Palla Strozzi, Leonardo Bruni, Filippo Brunelleschi and Poggio Bracciolini, the spirit of the middle ages, for the first time in 1000 years, was absent. These men were not all individually great, but collectively they are a great landmark. I hope it is not untimely to offer an extract from a letter written by Bruni to a noble lady, Battista Malatesta, wife of a future lord of Pesaro:

"But there are disputants of another class. Their attitude is merely this: The themes of the ancient poets are chosen from stories of love and sin. But I point to the tale of Penelope and Ulysses, of Alcestis and Admetus, which are but typical of many others, and I ask: Where can you find nobler examples of constancy and devotion, or more pointed lessons in the highest virtues of womanhood? 'True,' it is replied, 'but there are stories of a different kind, of Phœbus and Danaë, of Vulcan and Venus.' But who can fail to understand that such fictions are not to be read literally, that such episodes are insignificant in number as compared with that great array of noble figures which stand forth from the pages of Vergil and Homer, and that it is unjust criticism to ignore the beauties of any work of art and to call attention only to its blemishes? 'Yes,' I hope it is not untimely to offer an extract from a letter written by Bruni to a noble lady, Battista Malatesta, wife of a future lord of Pesaro:

the poets themselves nor put them into the hands of others.' Plato and Aristotle, however, studied the poets, and I decline to admit that in practical wisdom or in moral earnestness they yield to our modern critics. They were not Christians, indeed, but consistency of life and abhorrence of evil existed before Christianity and are independent of it. Suppose we turn to the Scriptures. We must admit that they contain not a few narratives which compare unfavorably with any treated by the poets, but we do not for that reason prohibit the Bible. When I read the loves of Aeneas and Dido in the Aeneid I pay my tribute of admiration to the genius of the poet, but the matter itself I know to be a fiction, and thus it leaves no moral impression; and so in other instances of the kind, where literal truth is not the object aimed at. The Scriptures, on the other hand, whose literal accuracy no one questions, not seldom cause me misgivings on this head."

EDWARD M. PICKMAN, Boston, Dec. 17.

BANNED BOOK

To the Editor of The Herald:

Your editorials are always fair and broadminded, and this statement, is confirmed by others in this morning's Mail Bag. I think it is safe to make the statement that all Boston booksellers wish to violate no law. It is an old maxim that ignorance of the law excuses no one. But, how are we booksellers to know what book or books are to be banned? If the society gave us all notice that the sale of a certain book was prohibited and then we sold it, it would perhaps be foolish to argue that we should pay no penalty.

Personally, I had never heard of Lawrence's book until this recent case. Now, supposing, as is very often the case even with recent books, I am called to a fashionable apartment to purchase some books. The owner is leaving town and does not wish to bother with carrying the small library. I buy the lot, mark them and place on the shelves. In our bookstore customers are allowed to wander where they please, and unless they indicate they desire attention, are left alone. One of the snoopers comes in and buys a banned book. We are haled to court, and this is the first indication that we have violated any law.

I have asked a number of other booksellers if this or that book is a banned publication. No one seems to know. Let's clean up the mess. Unless we know what is banned, place the blame somewhere else. Give us at least a 50-50 break.

GUY A. JACKSON, Boston, Dec. 21.

BOOKS AND MINORS

To the Editor of The Herald:

The Dunster Book Shop-Watch and Ward case shows how inferior in certain respects law and justice in Massachusetts is to that of some oriental potentates, such as Haroun-Al-Raschid.

In Massachusetts the book seller was found guilty and sentenced to prison, but had the case come before Haroun, undoubtedly the Watch and Ward agent would have been dragged forth with from the courtroom, bastinadoed on the feet until they were in such condition that it would be many a long day before he would don gum shoes again.

This matter of censorship, which is troubling so many citizens of Massachusetts and making it ridiculous in the eyes of so many people in the rest of the world, can be easily settled. In the statute describing obscene, etc., literature and prohibiting its sale, add in the proper place words which would limit the prohibition of sale to the case of a sale to a minor, thus carrying out the theory, now apparently obsolete in fact, that a minor needs protection, and freeing adult intelligence to choose what it shall read upon.

WILLIAM BROSS LLOYD, Boston, Dec. 21.

WATCH AND WARD MUM ON BIG CASE

Keeps Statement on Bookseller's Trial
Private

After a long meeting yesterday afternoon at the City Club, at which they discussed the recent trial of a Cambridge bookseller, the directors of the Watch and Ward Society refused to make public a statement they had prepared for their members or to say whether they condemned or endorsed the methods employed by their representatives in securing evidence in the case.

WON'T BACK NEW BILL

Besides reviewing the Cambridge case, in which the society was severely criticized, the directors took up the question of censorship and issued a statement in which they announced they could not support the bill, which would change the wording of the statute from "containing obscene language" to "which is obscene." The statement said that the society will endorse a bill by which books could be banned by injunctions in the Equity Superior Court.

Because the case of James A. DeJaree, the Cambridge bookseller who was adjudged guilty of selling an obscene book and sentenced to one month in jail and fined $500, is now before the Supreme Court on exceptions, the directors stated that they decided not to make their statement on the case public.

Unanimously Endorsed

"But we felt that the members of the society should be informed as quickly as possible of the position that the board of directors has taken in the matter," said one of the directors. Another member of the board said they wanted to "correct a slur" which the members might have received on the Cambridge case. The secretary, the Rev. Charles S. Bodwell, declared that the statement received the unanimous endorsement of the directors.

He also announced that the resignation of Professor Julian L. Coolidge of Harvard, who was one of the society's directors, had been accepted "with regret" at the meeting. Professor Coolidge, the master of Lowell House, one of the first units of the new Harvard housing system, which is said to have been discriminated against by students in applying for quarters in the new houses.

Coolidge Vacancy Not Filled

The secretary also announced for the first time that Dean Henry B. Washburn of St. John's Episcopal Theological School in Cambridge had resigned several months ago on account of ill health and that David B. Clayborn had been appointed in his place. No appointment was made to fill the place on the board made vacant by Professor Coolidge, the secretary stated. He declared that the professor had given no reason for his resignation.

Yesterday's meeting was called for 8 o'clock and was attended by all but two of the directors. Those present were the Rev. Raymond Calkins, the president; Frank Chouteau Brown, Godfrey L. Cabot, Thomas Dudley Cabot, Grosvenor Calkins, Sumner Clement, Francis J. Moors, Mark W. Richardson, Bernard J. Rothwell, Joseph Lee, one of the vice-presidents; Mr. Bodwell and Attorney John W. Horke, the counsel for the organization.

At the conclusion of the meeting Dr. Calkins stated the directors had formulated a statement with respect to the Cambridge case which would be placed on the records of the society and would be mailed to all of the members. It was said that the membership of the organization numbered about 500.

The "censorship statement" made public late in the afternoon at the office of the society on Tremont street, declares that the organization will not oppose any change in the present law, but that it cannot endorse a bill by which the only test of a volume is the entire book.

Text of Statement

The statement read:

"The demand for change in the existing law against the circulation of obscene books is based on a widespread objection to what is termed 'unofficial' censorship. Unofficial censorship is censorship by any authority except of the courts or by a board of censors created by law. The New England Watch and Ward Society has not opposed and will not oppose any proposals which in its opinion will meet these objections to unofficial censorship without removing the protection which society still requires against the dangerous and insidious influences of obscenity in publications and pictures.

"It should be noted, however, that in practice it is impossible to avoid official censorship in some form as long as the only method by which cases can be brought before the courts for decision is through the machinery of criminal prosecution. Some publishers and authors may be willing to submit to trial in the criminal courts and possible conviction of crime. Most authors and publishers of books which have been complained of are not within the jurisdiction of Massachusetts. The only way of determining under existing law by a process of legal censorship the status of a publication is through criminal prosecution of booksellers and their employees. Rather than to submit to the odium and dangers of this process, the booksellers do and will withdraw from circulation any books which may involve a criminal complaint.

For Injunction Censorship

"This situation puts it in the power of any individual, organization or official charged with law enforcement to become an effective 'unofficial' censor. If a book dealer refuses to handle a suspected book because in his opinion it is over the line, he himself becomes his own unofficial censor.

"Two years ago a bill was introduced into the Legislature which, in the case of books only, required proceedings in the equity side of the Superior Civil courts leading to a temporary injunction against circulation, with published notice as a preliminary requirement to any criminal prosecution. This bill, if enacted, would have these advantages: First, without the odium and danger of criminal prosecution the status of a book could be determined promptly by a judge of the Superior Court—a universally recognized 'official' censor. Second, it would put an end to the present anomaly of a given book being proper in Boston and illegal in Cambridge. Decrees of the Superior Court are effective throughout the State.

The Watch and Ward Society supported this bill two years ago. It has urged that this bill be introduced this year and has promised its unanimous endorsement and wholehearted support.

"Instead of correcting the machinery for determining the status of a book and by this means putting an end to unofficial censorship, the proponents of a change in the existing law have agreed upon a bill which substitutes for the words in the existing statute 'containing obscene language,' the words—'which is considered as a whole is obscene.' This proposed change in the law has been carefully considered by the society. With regret the conclusion has been reached that it cannot support a change in the existing law in this form for two reasons:

"First, The objection to the present law is because it is possible to convict on a chapter, paragraph or phrase. This objection can be met without requiring as does the proposed law that the only test is the whole book. The Watch and Ward Society will not oppose any change in the present law. But it can not endorse a bill by which the only test is the entire book.

"Which Is Obscene"

"Second, The proposed law is a legislative novelty. The society has examined the federal laws relating to criminal obscenity and the statutes in England, in the New England States, in New York, Illinois and other States. It has thus verified the statement in the book on criminal obscenity written by Mr. Justice Ford of New York that the laws on criminal obscenity in England and in the United States may be divided into two classes: The first and largest class uses the simplest possible definition 'any obscene book' or 'any book which is obscene.' The second and numerically smaller class follows the present Massachusetts definition: 'Any book containing obscene language.'

"If, in the judgment of the Legislature, a change in the present law is required, the Watch and Ward Society will not oppose deleting the words 'containing obscene language' and substituting therefor the words 'which is obscene.' Thus amended the law will prohibit the sale of any book 'which is obscene' and will become uniform with the federal statute and with the laws of a majority of the States.

U. S. BOOK BAN

Amendment to Tariff Bill Allowing Entry of Foreign Literature Regarded by Customs Officials as Obscene Expected to Be Thrown Out by the Senate

WASHINGTON, Dec. 23 (AP)—Chairman Smoot of the Senate finance committee expects the Senate to reverse itself and throw out the Cutlin amendment to the tariff bill which would permit entry into the United States of foreign literature regarded by customs officials as obscene.

Such reading matter is barred under existing law, but under an amendment Smoot expects the Senate to reverse itself and throw out the Cutlin amendment to the tariff bill which would permit entry into the United States of foreign literature regarded by customs officials as obscene.

Such reading matter is barred under existing law, but under an amendment Smoot expects the Senate to reverse itself and throw out the Cutlin amendment to the tariff bill which would permit entry into the United States of foreign literature regarded by customs officials as obscene.

The tariff bill will be given exclusive attention by the Senate after the holidays until disposed of. Reviewing the situation after a conference today with President Hoover, Smoot said he looked for Senate passage by the middle of February.

WATCH, WARD AGAINST NEW BOOK LAW

Society Agrees on Giving Some Ground, but Firm
on Major Issue

Directors of the New England Watch and Ward Society, after preparing for members a private defence of their activities in the Dunster Bookshop case, issued a public statement announcing changes in the book censorship law the organization is willing to accept.

The statement, made after a meeting at the City Club, expressed vigorous opposition to the bill recently filed in the Legislature with the support of hundreds of prominent citizens to provide that a book must be judged by its contents as a whole and not by a single part.

The directors said that there is another method agreeable to them of meeting the objection to the present law, which makes possible conviction on a chapter, paragraph or phrase.

They pointed out that the present law is built on the words "containing indecent language." They said the society would not object to a change which would substitute the words "which is indecent." This amendment to the present law, the statement said, would make the Massachusetts statute conform with the federal law and with the laws of a majority of the states.

The society implied in its statement that this change would make it possible to have a book judged by its contents as a whole.

The statement also pointed out that the society has urged in the past a bill which would make a judge of the superior court the official censor of books through equity proceedings and expressed the willingness of the organization to support similar legislation if presented to the Legislature next year.

The directors met in special session to consider the severe criticism of the society in the case of the Dunster Bookshop of Cambridge.

A resolution was passed in answer to the criticism of Judge Frederick W. Fosdick and Dist. Atty. Robert T. Bushnell, and will be mailed privately to its 500 privileged and contributing members.

Banned Book Shocks Senator Smoot

D. H. Lawrence's book, "Lady Chatterley's Lover," the sale of which led to the conviction of a Cambridge bookseller and his clerk and invoked the wrath of prosecuting officials against the Watch and Ward agents who enticed the bookstore manager to make the sale, is likely to become a national issue.

Senator Reed Smoot of Utah, apostle of the Mormon Church and the outstanding Puritan in Congress, has just finished reading the book, the first of the list of 40 "off color" volumes he has appointed himself to inspect to gather material for opposing an amendment to the tariff bill which would take from customs officials their power to bar foreign books as obscene.

Expressing himself as horrified at Lawrence's work, Senator Smoot declared today it would be his principal exhibit in asking the Senate to reconsider its recent action in adopting the amendment which would end the censorship of imported books.

WATCH & WARD CONCEDES POINT ON CENSORSHIP

Directors Cite Changes Society Will Accept in State Book Law

DUNSTER BOOKSHOP
ACTIONS DEFENDED

Private Report Outlines Body's Position on Alleged "Snooping"

Directors of the New England Watch and Ward Society, after preparing for members yesterday a private defence of their activities in the Dunster Bookshop case, issued a public statement announcing changes in the book censorship law the organization is willing to accept.

The statement, made after a meeting at the City Club, expressed vigorous opposition to the bill recently filed in the Legislature with the support of hundreds of prominent citizens to provide that a book must be judged by its contents as a whole and not by a single part.

WOULD CHANGE WORDS

The directors said that there is another method agreeable to them of meeting the objection to the present law, which makes possible conviction on a chapter, paragraph or phrase. They pointed out that the present law is built on the words "containing obscene language." They said the society would not object to a change which would substitute the words "which is obscene." This amendment to the present law, the statement said, would make the Massachusetts statute conform with the federal law and with the laws of a majority of the states.

The society implied in its statement that this change would make it possible to have a book judged by its contents as a whole. The statement also pointed out that the society has urged in the past a bill which would make a judge of the superior court the official censor of books through equity proceedings and expressed the willingness of the organization to support similar legislation if presented to the Legislature next year.

The directors met in special session to consider the severe criticism of the society in the case of the Dunster Bookshop of Cambridge.

Banned Book Shocks Senator Smoot

D. H. Lawrence's book, "Lady Chatterley's Lover," the sale of which led to the conviction of a Cambridge bookseller and his clerk and invoked the wrath of prosecuting officials against the Watch and Ward agents who enticed the bookstore manager to make the sale, is likely to become a national issue.

Senator Reed Smoot of Utah, apostle of the Mormon Church and the outstanding Puritan in Congress, has just finished reading the book, the first of the list of 40 "off color" volumes he has appointed himself to inspect to gather material for opposing an amendment to the tariff bill which would take from customs officials their power to bar foreign books as obscene.

Expressing himself as horrified at Lawrence's work, Senator Smoot declared today it would be his principal exhibit in asking the Senate to reconsider its recent action in adopting the amendment which would end the censorship of imported books.

retary and agents of the society in the case which resulted in the conviction of the manager and a clerk of the Dunster Bookshop of Cambridge. A resolution was passed in answer to the criticism of Judge Frederick W. Fosdick and Dist. Atty. Robert T. Bushnell, and will be mailed privately to its 500 privileged and contributing members.

RESOLUTION KEPT SECRET

The Rev. Dr. Raymond Calkins of Cambridge, president, who presided at the directors' meeting, explained the resolution was not made public as the Dunster bookshop case was pending before the court on appeal.

The recent resignation as a director of Prof. Julian Coolidge of Harvard, which came on the heels of the public criticism of the organization by members of the court, was accepted at this meeting "with regret." It was announced.

The directors present at the meeting in addition to Dr. Calkins were: Frank O. Brown, Godfrey L. Cabot, Grosvenor Calkins, Sumner Clement, Francis J. Moors, Mark W. Richardson, Bernard J. Rothwell, Joseph Lee, one of the vice-presidents was also at the meeting.

Dr. Henry B. Washburn, dean of St. John's Episcopal Theological School in Cambridge, has resigned as a director of the society, on account of ill health. It was announced yesterday. He has been succeeded by David B. Clayborn.

The public statement issued by the directors follows:

Two years ago a bill was introduced in the Legislature which, in the case of books only, required proceedings in the equity side of the superior civil courts leading to a temporary injunction against circulation, with published notice as a preliminary requirement to any criminal prosecution. This bill, if enacted, would have these advantages:

First, without the odium and danger of criminal prosecution the status of a book could be determined promptly by a judge of the superior court—a universally recognized "official" censor. Second, it would put an end to the present anomaly of a given book being proper in Boston and illegal in Cambridge. Decrees of the superior court are effective throughout the state.

The Watch and Ward Society supported this bill two years ago. It has again urged that this bill be introduced this year and has promised its unanimous endorsement and wholehearted support. The demand for change in the existing law against the circulation of obscene books is based on a widespread objection to what is termed "unofficial" censorship. Unofficial censorship is censorship by any authority except of the courts or by a board of censors created by law. The New England Watch and Ward Society has not opposed and will not oppose any proposals, which in its opinion will meet these objections to unofficial censorship without removing the protection which society still requires against the dangerous and insidious influences of obscenity in publications and pictures.

THE BOSTON HERALD DECEMBER 24, 1929

GOOD NEWS FROM MASSACHUSETTS

(From the New York Herald-Tribune)

Censorship never received a severer blow than the strange "victory" just won by the Watch and Ward Society in Cambridge, Mass. An agent of the society visited a bookshop and asked for a privately printed book by D. H. Lawrence. The bookstore did not have the book in stock; the bookseller remarked that he did not think it fit for general circulation. The agent, acting under a false name, begged the dealer to get him a copy, and the dealer finally did so. Accordingly, he was prosecuted and convicted of selling what, under Massachusetts law, is admittedly an obscene, though in a literary sense a distinguished book.

The district attorney of Middlesex county, obviously averse to prosecuting a case initiated by an agent provocateur in disguise, announced that he did not endorse the ethics or the policy of the society, and that if he ever again found

SOME CENSORSHIP NEEDED

It should be noted, however, that in practice it is impossible to avoid unofficial censorship in some form as long as the only method by which cases can be brought before the courts for decision is through the machinery of criminal prosecution. Some publishers and authors may be willing to submit to trial in the criminal courts and possible conviction of crime. Most authors and publishers of books which have been complained of are not within the jurisdiction of Massachusetts. The only way of determining under existing law by a process of legal censorship the status of a publication is through criminal prosecution of booksellers and their employees. Rather than to submit to the odium and dangers of this process, the booksellers do and will withdraw from circulation any books which may involve a criminal complaint.

This situation puts it in the power of any individual, organization or official charged with law enforcement to become an effective "unofficial" censor. If a book dealer refuses to handle a suspected book because in his opinion it is over the line, he himself becomes his own unofficial censor.

SETS LIMIT IT WILL BACK TO

Instead of correcting the machinery for determining the status of a book and by this means putting an end to unofficial censorship, the proponents of a change in the existing law have agreed upon a bill which substitutes for the words in the existing criminal statute "containing obscene language," the words—"which is considered as a whole is obscene." This proposed change in the law has been carefully considered by the society. With regret the conclusion has been reached that it cannot support a change in the existing law in this form for two reasons:

First, The objection to the present law is because it is possible to convict on a chapter, paragraph or phrase. This objection can be met without requiring as does the proposed law that the only test is the whole book. The Watch and Ward Society will not oppose any change in the present law. But it cannot endorse a bill by which the only test is the entire book.

Second, The proposed law is a legislative novelty. The society has examined the federal laws relating to criminal obscenity and the statutes in England, in the New England States, in New York, Illinois and other States. It has thus verified the statement in the book on criminal obscenity written by Mr. Justice Ford of New York that the laws on criminal obscenity in England and in the United States may be divided into two classes: The first and largest class uses the simplest possible definition, "any obscene book" or "any book which is obscene." The second and numerically smaller class follows the present Massachusetts definition: "Any book containing obscene language."

If, in the judgment of the Legislature, a change in the present law is required, the Watch and Ward Society will not oppose deleting the words "containing obscene language" and substituting therefor the words "which is obscene." Thus amended the law will prohibit the sale of any book "which is obscene" and will become uniform with the federal statute and with the laws of a majority of the states.

CHOLERA AND BOOKS

To the Editor of The Herald:
The abuse being heaped upon the N. E. Watch and Ward Society seems to me unjust, and due to a failure to appreciate the important service which it is rendering.

One who scatters cholera germs is less of a menace to society than one who sells an impure book. Any pastor who has tried to help a youth in agony of conflict with vile habits—any one who has had a glimpse of the awful fruits of impure thinking in our hospitals for mental diseases—knows that this is no exaggeration. That lover of humanity whose birth we are celebrating said: "Whoso shall cause to stumble one of these little ones, it were better for him that a great millstone should be hanged about his neck and that he should be drowned in the depth of the sea!"

Society has embodied an echo of this righteous wrath into legislation. No law is more difficult to enforce. When a voluntary organization, including some of the most honored religious leaders, comes to the aid of the state, should it not be respected and honored instead of being vilified?

Its agents may make mistakes. These should be corrected. But their task should be sympathetically understood. Those whose motive is either to gratify passion or to make untidy profits will use all their cunning to hide their transactions. Any who attempt to get evidence must be prepared for a desperate battle of wits. In the recent Cambridge case the character of the book sold was admitted by both sides and a conviction resulted. Yet from the abuse heaped upon him it would seem as if the witness were the criminal.

Shall we strain at a gnat and swallow a camel? Shall we make all law enforcement impossible by treating as fanatics and wrong-doers our faithful police and their allies?

E. TALLMADGE ROOT.
Somerville, Dec. 22.

CHOLERA AND BOOKS

The Rev. E. Tallmadge Root's letter, which appears this morning in our Mail Bag column, says: "One who scatters cholera germs is less of a menace to society than one who sells an impure book. . . . This is no exaggeration." It seems to us a grotesque, unwarranted, cruel and barbaric exaggeration. It illustrates the unreasonable and dangerous extreme to which persons of a certain cast of mind will carry a sound principle. If Mr. Root were correct, and the courts and society shared his views, the proprietor of the Dunster Book Shop would go to the electric chair because he sold a smutty book. Judge Fosdick, Dist. Atty. Bushnell and ex-Atty.-Gen. Herbert Parker would be in the position of viewing wholesale murder calmly, and, of course, the Watch and Ward Society agents who brought about a sale which otherwise would not have been effected would go to the chair with the Dunster proprietor.

There may be a legitimate place in the community for the Watch and Ward Society, but we would be better without an organization which is animated by such a sentiment as that expressed by the gentleman who serves as the Executive Secretary of the Massachusetts Federation of Churches. Of course it is difficult to get evidence against wrong-doers. It is also difficult for a young lawyer to get clients, a doctor to get patients, a business man to make profits, a District Attorney to convict. But mere difficulty has never been considered by civilized men a justification for ambulance-chasing, quackery, fraud or entrapment. If the Watch and Ward Society wishes to retain—possibly regain is the better word—the respect of the community, it must itself set an example of respect for law, order and decency.

Book in Dunster Case Alarms Smoot; Senate to Hear "Muck"

Body, in Secret Session,
To Be Asked to Protect Morals of Nation

AMENDMENT ON BAN REMOVAL WAITS VOTE

[Special Dispatch to The Herald]

WASHINGTON, Dec. 23.—D. H. Lawrence's book, "Lady Chatterley's Lover," the sale of which led to the conviction of a Cambridge bookseller and his clerk and invoked the wrath of prosecuting officials against the Watch and Ward agents who enticed the bookstore manager to make the sale, is about to become a national issue.

Senator Reed Smoot of Utah, tall apostle of the Mormon Church and the outstanding Puritan in Congress, has just finished reading the book, the first of the list of 40 "off color" volumes he has appointed himself to inspect to gather material for opposing an amendment to the tariff bill which would take from customs officials their power to bar foreign books as obscene.

Expressing himself as horrified at Lawrence's work, Senator Smoot declared today it will be his principal exhibit in asking the Senate to reconsider its recent action in adopting the amendment which would end the censorship on imported books. Whatever effect the Massachusetts case may have toward making the censorship law there more elastic, Senator Smoot is confident that this book alone will cause the Senate to reject the amendment. The latter was adopted on motion of Senator Bronson Cutting of New Mexico several weeks ago.

Cutting declared customs clerks are not competent to decide for the whole country what it should read. Senator Smoot pledged himself to maintenance of the federal ban, and undertook the task of reading the 40 "mucky" books not for his own pleasure, he emphasized, but to strengthen his side of the argument.

What the condition of Senator Smoot is not inclined to expose them to the dangers which he feels secure.

SENATOR REED SMOOT

out of his office tonight in high dudgeon after having dipped into the book which caused so much furor in Massachusetts.

He found things in the book, he declared, which were "indecent in the extreme. They were simply filthy and the book contained not only a few such expressions, but it abounded in them." The senatorial moralist intends to bring the expressions to the attention of the Senate, according to his promise, but by no means in open session, for the words and phrases, he asserts, are too prurient by far. The Senate must go into executive session, Senator Smoot said, before he dares call its attention to them.

When he finishes reading the excerpts in the Senate, the literary martyr from Utah is certain not one member of the body, even Senator Cutting, will be in favor of letting down the bars.

So interested are several of his colleagues, in fact, they have offered to assist Senator Smoot in raking through the mass of "muck" not for their own pleasure, let it be known again, but for the sake of saving the morals of the nation's youth. Senator Smoot said he will be when he finishes the list of dangers which he feels secure.

Need of Clear Law on Book Censorship Here

To the Editor of the Post:

Sir—In your editorial of this date you mention 13 States which have laws similar to those of Massachusetts relating to books, but I do not think you can mention one of them in which any one has undertaken to work those laws as they have been worked and over-worked in Massachusetts. Just as soon as any attempt is made to do what has been done here, you will find that it arouses the same opposition from those who know about books, or think about the subject, or realize generally that eternal vigilance is the price of liberty. Scandal has been caused by the federal statutes, which have been continued, in some cases in the federal courts, to mean pretty much what the present Massachusetts law means. Everybody remembers how this matter came to a head in the United States Senate within a few months.

As for the New York law, which you classify with others, as more drastic than that of Massachusetts, I must observe that it is not generally so estimated, but this possible ground for controversy does not affect the Massachusetts committee for the revision of the book law, because it has seen no reason to advocate the adoption of the New York laws here.

To state one essential point most briefly, you write that we desire a ruling that the extent of the obscenity in a book and not the presence of it, should determine the verdict of the jury. To characterize it, out of hand, as obscenity is to beg the question. Substituting some neutral phrase, such as "the matter objected to" for the word "obscenity" ought to clear up this particular matter, for there is no doubt that the extent of the matter objected to, not the mere presence of such matter, is one of the things which must be considered, in order to avoid absurdity. It is also necessary to consider the character of that matter, and relation to the whole work. Any failure to take these things into account, will lead to the foolish conclusion that it is illegal to circulate literary works, in great numbers, of which many are a part of the valued inheritance of humanity, and many others are the work of contemporaries, some of whom are undoubtedly adding to the permanent literature. So far, the matter has been argued thoroughly during the past two years, at least, and we believe that the public is convinced. The persistence of arguments which we have met so fully, makes it necessary to refer again to the Bible and Shakespeare to which I might add the names of many other works. If I were willing to arouse false hopes among the censors, that there are works which will never be suppressed, in which, nevertheless, matter such as the censors ferret out, is present, it is clear.

On the other hand, there is no such thing as a book which is wholly obscene. No phraseology which could be devised, short of absolutely expressive language, which would be foolhardy could induce a court to rule that a statute would apply only to books wholly obscene, which do not exist. It is necessary to consider matters of degree, of kind, and of relation. We say that the parts are to be considered in relation to the other parts, which means that the work is to be considered as a whole. The fundamental reason is, that any other rule will lead to wrong results, because any other rule prevents the court from considering the true nature of the act of the defendant, in producing or circulating the book, and the true nature of its own act in refusing to suppress the book, both of which depend upon the same thing, namely, the character of the book. If, on considering the book as a whole, a tribunal finds that it contains matter of such a kind and in such an amount, that it is not sufficiently justified by anything else in the work, that the work is obscene, indecent or impure or manifestly tends to corrupt the morals of youth, then it can and will condemn that book under our proposed law. No book ought to be condemned as to which such findings cannot be made. I will add that if the Massachusetts law is "absurd," it does not help much to be absurd in good company.

Very truly yours,
HENRY L. BURNHAM.

155 State street.

The Boston Post

Established 1831

WEDNESDAY, DEC. 25, 1929

W. & W. IN DEFENCE OF PROCEDURE

Expected Criticism and Was "Not Disappointed"

A defence of the methods used by the Watch and Ward Society in securing evidence which resulted recently in the conviction of two Cambridge men in Superior Court is contained in an official statement issued to members of the society by the directors yesterday.

"NOT DISAPPOINTED"

The statement says that the society was animated solely with the desire to prevent the circulation of literature which is prohibited by law. They realized the directors said, that they would encounter severe criticism, "and in this," the report says, "we have not been disappointed."

The statement, in part, was as follows: "We had received information that a book dealer was selling a book which has been called the 'work of a filthy degenerate, the product of a seamy brain.' Investigation showed that he had already ordered and sold five different copies of this book. What, under such circumstances, were we to do? Should we have ignored such a situation? Should we have introduced such a situation? When he found that the book was not on the shelves, should he have gone away? No efficient detective would have done any such thing. He would still seek to know if the dealer would sell the book to an unknown casual customer. That is what our agent did."

"This organization was not seeking to make a man a lawbreaker. Upon his own admission he had previously sold five copies of this pornographic book at a profit of $10 per copy or $50 per book. Had no action been taken against him it is possible to believe that he would have continued to traffic in literature which he knew he had no legal right to sell. This society was animated solely with the desire to prevent the circulation and distribution of literature which is prohibited by law. We realized that in proceeding in this case, we were likely to encounter severe criticism, and in this we have not been disappointed."

"We are quite willing to leave our case in the hands of the public at large, which appreciates our motives and the purpose which underlies the work we seek to do for the health and welfare of the community."

Boston Transcript

134 WASHINGTON STREET, BOSTON, MASS.

(Entered at the Post Office, Boston, Mass., as Second Class Mail Matter)

TUESDAY, DECEMBER 24, 1929

Watch and Ward to Oppose Book Bill

Directors of the New England Watch and Ward Society were on record today as opposed to the bill recently filed in the Legislature with the support of a committee of clergymen, educators and other prominent citizens to change the Massachusetts censorship law so that a book shall be judged by its contents as a whole and not by a single passage.

The attitude of the directors toward the proposed change in the censorship law was made known in a public statement issued after their special meeting yesterday afternoon at the Boston City Club, at which a private statement for members of the society was prepared on the recent Dunster Bookshop trial in Cambridge. During the trial, the society was severely criticized by former Attorney General Herbert Parker and District Attorney Robert T. Bushnell for their methods in obtaining evidence in the case.

Rev. Raymond Calkins, D. D., president of the society, who presided at the directors' meeting, explained that the statement on the bookshop case was not made public because the case of James A. DeLacey, the bookseller who was convicted of selling an obscene book and sentenced to a month in jail and fined $500, was pending before the Supreme Court on exceptions. The directors refused to say whether they endorsed or condemned the activities of their representatives in connection with the case. It was announced that the statement would be mailed to all members, whose number about 600.

The public statement on censorship said that the Watch and Ward Society would not oppose any change in the present law, but "it cannot endorse a bill by which the only test is the entire book." The proposed law would change the wording of the present statute from "containing obscene language" to "which is obscene as a whole is obscene." The statement added that the directors would not oppose deleting the words "containing obscene language" and substituting therefor the words "which is obscene." This change already has been voted unanimously by the Massachusetts Committee for the Revision of the Book Law.

The statement urged the passage of the bill which the Watch and Ward Society supported two years ago to take censorship from the jurisdiction of the police and criminal courts and place it in the quiet session of the Superior Civil Court.

Rev. Charles S. Bodwell, secretary of the society, announced that the resignation of Professor Julian L. Coolidge of Harvard as a director of the Watch and Ward had been accepted "with regret" at the meeting. The secretary also announced that Dean Henry B. Washburn of the Episcopal Theological School in Cambridge had resigned as a director of the society several months ago on account of ill health and that David B. Clayborn had been appointed to succeed him. No appointment was made to fill the vacancy caused by the resignation of Professor Coolidge.

Besides the president and secretary, those present at the meeting were Frank Chouteau Brown, Godfrey L. Cabot, Grosvenor Calkins, Sumner Clement, Francis J. Moers, Mark W. Richardson, Bernard J. Rothwell, Joseph Lee, and John W. Rourke, counsel for the society.

The public statement issued by the directors follows: "Two years ago a bill was introduced in the Legislature which, in the case of books only, required proceedings in the equity side of the superior civil courts leading to a temporary injunction against circulation, with published notice as a preliminary requirement to any criminal prosecution. This bill, if enacted, would have these advantages:

"First, without the odium and danger of criminal prosecution the status of a book can be determined promptly by a judge of the Superior Court—a universally recognized 'official' censor."

"Second, it would put an end to the present anomaly of a given book being proper in Boston and illegal in Cambridge. Decrees of the Superior Court are effective throughout the State. "The Watch and Ward Society supported this bill two years ago. It has again urged that this bill be introduced this year and has promised its unanimous endorsement and wholehearted support. "The demand for change in the existing law against the circulation of obscene books is based on a widespread objection to what is termed 'unofficial' censorship brought before the courts for decision without removing the protection which society still requires against the dangerous and insidious influences of obscenity in public places and pictures."

"It should be noted, however, that in practice it is impossible to avoid unofficial censorship in some form as long as the only method by which cases can be brought before the courts for decision is through the machinery of criminal prosecution. Some publishers and authors may be willing to submit to trial in the criminal courts and possible conviction of crime. Most authors and publishers of books who have been complained of, however, are within the jurisdiction of Massachusetts. The only way of determining under existing law by a process of legal censorship the status of a publication is through criminal prosecution of booksellers and their employees."

Rather than to submit to the odium and danger of this process, the booksellers do and will withdraw from circulation any books which may involve a criminal complaint. "This situation puts it in the power of any individual, organization or official charged with law enforcement to become an effective 'unofficial' censor. If a book dealer refuses to handle a suspected book because in his opinion it is over the line, he himself becomes his own 'unofficial' censor."

"Instead of correcting the machinery for determining the status of a book and by this means putting an end to unofficial censorship, the proponents of a change in the existing law have agreed upon a bill which substitutes for the words in the existing criminal statute 'containing obscene language,' the words 'which is considered as a whole is obscene.' This proposed change in the law has been carefully considered by the society. With regret, the conclusion has been reached that it cannot support a change in the existing law in this form for two reasons:

"First, the objection to the present law is because it is possible to convict on a chapter, paragraph or phrase. This objection can be met without requiring as does the proposed law that the only test is the whole book. The Watch and Ward Society will not oppose any change in the present law. But it cannot endorse a bill by which the only test is the entire book."

"Second, the proposed law is a legislative novelty. The society has examined the Federal laws relating to criminal obscenity and the statutes in England, in the New England States, in New York, Illinois and other States. It has thus verified the statement in the book on criminal obscenity written by Mr. Justice Ford of New York that the laws on criminal obscenity in England and in the United States may be divided into two classes: The first and largest class uses the simplest possible definition, 'any obscene book' or 'any book which is obscene.' The second and numerically smaller class follows the present Massachusetts definition: 'Any book containing obscene language.'"

"If, in the judgment of the Legislature, a change in the present law is required, the Watch and Ward Society will not oppose deleting the words 'containing obscene language' and substituting therefor the words 'which is obscene.' Thus amended the law will prohibit the sale of any book 'which is obscene' and will become uniform with the Federal statute and with the laws of a majority of the States."

WATCH & WARD DEFENDS ACTION

Statement Ordered by Directors Says Other Methods Futile

BOOK CASE APPEAL 'PREVENTS' COMMENT

The confidential statement of the attitude of the board of directors of the New England Watch and Ward Society toward its investigators in the now famed Dunster Bookshop case came to light yesterday, and proved to be one of the tactics which were scored by Judge Fiedel and Dist. Atty. Bushnell when the case was on trial in Middlesex county court.

The statement was sent to members of the organization following a resolution adopted by a majority of the directors requiring the secretary, Charles S. Bodwell, to compose it. The letter sets out that the methods criticized by the court were necessary in the case because the defendant had been violating the obscene book law in having sold five copies of the book complained of, "Lady Chatterley's Lover."

The society directors took the stand that they would have been remiss in their duty had their investigators gone openly to the shop and sought the book. "No efficient state detective would have done any such thing," the statement points out.

NOT UNANIMOUS

The directors were not unanimous in their conclusions, however. Mr. Bodwell refused to tell how they were divided, but his answer to a question—"was there any dissent?"—brought forth the reply—"I can't tell you about that—the statement was authorized by unanimous vote."

It became known that the majority of the directors favored making a statement, but its form was the subject of considerable discussion. In fact, the meeting was prolonged more than an hour and a half, and the dissenters finally agreed to make it an unanimous vote when a poll disclosed that the majority favored its adoption.

The directors were loath to issue a public statement which might be viewed as a reply to the court and district attorney, and it was for this reason that they adopted a suggestion that the statement regarding the particular case be made known only to the "privileged," as the Rev. Raymond Calkins, president, expressed it, the privilege extending only to the 500-odd contributors, who, by custom, have become members of the Watch and Ward.

200 COPIES "STOLEN"

It was expected that the statement would be ready for mailing tomorrow, but a glib printer accepted the assertion of a pseudo office attaché of the society, and delivered about 200 wet copies which had been run off the presses and were drying.

The directors explained their statement is called for by the bitter criticism of the society and its agents, but expressed their reluctance to discuss the Dunster House case because an appeal is pending to the supreme court. They further explain, however, that they are replying to those who do not approve of detective methods, because "any form of espionage is distasteful." In the statement they add, "it is not congenial to any one," and explain, "if the evidence is to be procured that will hold in a court of law, it must be obtained by detective methods."

Further justifying the investigators, the directors point out that in the Dunster House case, agents had information that copies of the book had been sold, and while the society disapproves of making anyone a lawbreaker, they feel justified in exposing anyone who had already become a lawbreaker, regardless of the means employed.

The full statement follows:

STATEMENT "ORDERED"

To the Members of the New England Watch and Ward Society.

Dear Friends:

The following statement is sent you in accordance with a unanimous vote of the directors of this society at a meeting held Dec. 23. The directors of the New England Watch and Ward Society have carefully considered the criticism passed on them in the recent trial of the Dunster House Book Shop case.

They are not concerned with the condemnation of the general aims and intentions of this society. There are doubtless people who resent any attempt to safeguard in any way the morals of the community, and feel that it is officious and obnoxious for any organization of citizens to seek to discover and suppress forms of immorality and vice. These people are entitled to their opinions. With this admitted, however, it may be said that such people might well be temperate in the language which they employ in criticizing those who are endeavoring to serve the community in ways which they do not themselves approve. This organization was founded by such men as Edward Everett Hale and Phillips Brooks. Some of Boston's best citizens have been in its service. It has achieved an international reputation in its field. It is entitled to be treated with some respect.

ESPIONAGE DISTASTEFUL

Again there are those who do not approve the use of detective methods. Any form of espionage is distasteful to them. It is not congenial to any one. The directors of this organization are not in a congenial form of service. Yet they recognize, and it must be admitted, that if the evidence is to be procured that will hold in a court of law, it must be procured by detective methods. If these methods, regularly employed by official authorities, were to be abandoned in the work of a private organization, the community less reputable than our critics, would be very much relieved also.

It is relevant to discuss the recent case against the Dunster Book Shop because an appeal to the supreme court on exceptions is pending. The fact, however, of the criticism to which we have been subjected it is impossible to keep wholly silent without being misunderstood and misjudged. The defendant in this case has been found guilty in two courts of violating the law in the selling of a vile and obscene book.

There remains the matter of the manner in which the society obtained the evidence in this case. We have the best information that a book dealer was selling a book which has been called the "work of a filthy degenerate, the product of a seamy brain." Investigation showed that he had already ordered and sold five different copies of this book. What, under such circumstances were we to do? Should we have ignored such a situation? When our investigator went to interview this book dealer should he have introduced himself as an agent of this society? When he found that this book was not on the shelves, should he have gone away? No efficient state detective would have done any such thing. He would still seek to know if the dealer would sell the book to an unknown casual customer. That is what our agent did. This organization was not seeking to make a man a lawbreaker. On his own admission he had previously sold five copies of this pornographic book at a profit of $10 a copy or 200 per cent. Had no action been taken against him, it is possible to believe that he would have continued to traffic in literature which he knew he had no legal right to sell. This society was animated solely with the desire to prevent the circulation and distribution of literature which is prohibited by law. We realized that in proceeding in this case, in which the defendant has many influential friends, we were likely to encounter severe criticism, and in this we have not been disappointed."

We are quite willing to leave our case in the hands of the public at large which appreciates our motives and the purpose which underlies all that we seek to do for the health and welfare of the community. Also, at the meeting mentioned above, an announcement of this society's position with reference to the proposed changes in the existing law relating to obscene books was drawn up, and as it will doubtless be of interest to all of our members a copy is transmitted herewith.

Sincerely yours,

RAYMOND CALKINS, President.

Charles S. Bodwell, Secretary.

THE BOSTON HERALD

THURSDAY, DECEMBER 26, 1929

FROM A PROFESSOR EMERITUS
To the Editor of The Herald:

I hold no brief for the Watch and Ward Society. Much as I respect those of its directors whom I know personally, I doubt whether all of its methods can be successfully defended. On the other hand, it seems that the lawyers engaged in the case recently tried before Judge Fosdick, all of whom I hope I have the right to count among my personal friends, were in one particular a little too severe with the unhappy W. and W. agent who bought the book in question. This man did not give his full name to the bookseller, but he did give correctly his first name and his middle name. This, it seems to me, was a suppression of the truth, rather than a falsehood; but, if the newspaper account of the trial was correct, the lawyers on both sides treated this delinquency as if it were a lie of the most heinous character. How many of us fairly reputable citizens, how many lawyers even, have not many times been guilty of greater deviations from the truth than this?

It seems to me that the people who are showing real moral hysteria just now in this community are not the censors of books and plays, but the individuals, editors included, who tell us that they are made unhappy and that all of us hereabout should be made unhappy by the comments of other communities regarding our censorship. For example, about two months ago, when the Strange Interlude was with us, or only 10 miles away. The Herald published on its editorial page a cartoon representing Boston as the laughing stock of various other cities, Detroit being one. What does it prove to Boston's disadvantage if Detroit does laugh at her? Must we take our cue as to morals or literary taste from Detroit?

EDWIN H. HALL.
Cambridge, Dec. 21.

[Detroit is only one of a large number of communities here and abroad which chide Boston for the absurd application of censorship laws. When the world continually derides one city, Professor, there is a possibility that the city itself is in some measure responsible for this attitude.—Ed.]

THE LAYMAN'S VIEWPOINT

To the Editor of The Herald:

The Herald of Dec. 21 contains the following: "Even Dist. Atty. Robert T. Bushnell . . . served notice on the (Watch and Ward) Society that if it ever came into his county with such tactics again, he would proceed against it for criminal conspiracy." From a layman's viewpoint, there are several things I do not understand. Since the Dist. Atty. has had the matter of a criminal conspiracy brought to his attention, why does he wait until the crime is repeated before he prosecutes? If Messrs. DeLacey and Sullivan were prosecuted on the first offence and without warning, why the favoritism in dealing with Messrs. Slaymaker and Bodwell? It seems to me that Mr. Bushnell will be derelict in his duty if he does not prosecute those whom he knows instigated this crime.

If the directors of the Watch and Ward Society persist in continuing the policies (as some of them indicated that they would in their interviews) they, too, should be prosecuted on the next offence.

DR. PAUL R. WITHERINGTON.
Milton, Dec. 23.

Boston Transcript

THURSDAY, DECEMBER 26, 1929

WE THINK YOU ARE SAFE

To the Editor of the Transcript:

I am thinking of returning to Boston for a New Year's visit to my father. Can you inform me if I would be arrested if I should bring with me a copy of "An American Tragedy"?

I have now been living in the Middle West for twelve years and must say that it is only since the pitiful spectacle which Boston has presented since the censorship farce became effective that I have got over being homesick for home. I am ashamed of Boston.

MALCOLM DEAN MILLER, M.D.
Akron, O., Dec. 22.

THE BOSTON HERALD

THURSDAY, DECEMBER 26, 1929

WATCH AND WARD REPLY

Replying to charges that it obtained evidence against Cambridge booksellers by methods repugnant to decent men, the Watch and Ward Society says that good evidence "must be procured by detective methods." That is perhaps true. But by what kind of detective methods?

Judge Fosdick, who indicated the court's lack of approval of the society, District Attorney Bushnell, who warned that he would prosecute its agents for criminal conspiracy if they should repeat their performance, and ex-Attorney-General Parker, who denounced the society, are all familiar with detective methods. They have prosecuted or sentenced many men on the strength of evidence obtained by such methods, and not even the prisoners' attorneys have objected. Why the protest in Cambridge? Because the "detective methods" of the Watch and Ward go beyond the limits which those and three men consider appropriate. The Watch and Ward directors do not care to understand the attitude of those three men. It is of great significance that after a court and a district attorney disavow Watch and Ward methods, the president and secretary should issue a reply which says, in effect, that the society will continue to do business as usual.

The Wickersham Commission has recently appointed a subcommittee which is investigating the whole subject of abuse of authority by government agents. Justice Holmes of the United States Supreme Court has characterized telephone tapping for the purpose of obtaining evidence as "dirty business." Chief Justice Taft, recognizing the evil, referred to the possibility of Congressional relief from this activity. Some states make that kind of evidence inadmissible. These devices come within the "detective methods" which apparently the Watch and Ward has encouraged and will continue to encourage among its agents.

The Boston Post

Established 1831
THURSDAY, DECEMBER 26, 1929

PRAISES EDITORIAL

To the Editor of the Post:

Thank you for your sane editorial on the subject of the obscene book law.

You have hit the nail on the head: "Massachusetts is the laughing stock of the country." "Our absurd censorship laws" et cetera, are merely slogans of the radicals, who would break down all laws, if they could.

When one sees the Sacco-Vanzetti group, the American Civil Liberties Union—one of the most subtle of the un-American organizations (an organization that helps communists)—and members of the Radical Socialist Women's International League for Peace and Freedom, and others of our defeated crowd at the State House hearing on this bill, it makes one wonder what influence is behind this breaking down of the censorship of obscene literature. Most of the radicals who speak at our Boston forum are keen on going the limit on the sex stuff, on the feminist, sex equality theories, do you know whether or no, they ever decided to have babies?

Yours for sound sense,
G. F. GRAHAM.

THE BOSTON HERALD

FRIDAY, DECEMBER 27, 1929

DETECTIVE METHODS

To the Editor of The Herald:

The Watch and Ward officers are termed "Criminal Conspirators," and prohibition agents are "Snoopers," when the former succeed in detecting the crime which is the vilest as well as the most harmful to society; and when the latter bring to account the criminal who debauches manhood and destroys the peace and happiness of more innocent women and children than any other crime upon the entire criminal calendar. Did the presiding judge, the district attorney, or the ex-attorney-general, criticized or object to the evidence secured by the detective, sheriff or police officer against the murderer, the bank robber, the burglar or the one who makes away with the life savings of the poor widow or the honest working man, simply because such evidence was secured by methods of ruse or trickery of any kind? No! The more deplorable the method, the greater the praise for the shrewdness of the detective!

I do not expect that this letter will be published, but I think it is about time that something was said in the interests of fairness to both sides.

CLAYTON E. DELAMATER.
Contoocook, N. H., Dec. 23.

BELIEVES IN PERSONAL LIBERTY

To the Editor of The Herald:

Somebody on The Herald staff deserves a congressional medal. Every time that I begin to think that the good time that I begin to think that the good old American spirit has hied itself to bat with something that convinces me that the spirit of the New England privateer still stalks broad in the land.

Whoever it was that exchanged broadsides with the Rev. Root deserves the cheers of every American who still hangs to the old belief that a person has a right to choose his own food for thought. It is about time some one nailed the flag of liberty to the mast-head and called the boarders away.

The Watch and Ward boys are having all the fun. I want to play, too! And there are probably a lot of other long-suffering Americans who would like to get into the game.

The Watch and Warders have appointed themselves to watch the police. There is no organization to watch the Watch and Warders. I am all for organizing a society of Sneak and Snoopers to watch the Watch and Warders. And somebody else can organize a society of Peek and Pryers to watch the Sneak and Snoopers who watch the Watch and Warders. Then we can all play.

Salem, Dec. 24.

BOSTON POST.

DECEMBER 30, 1929

BISHOP OUT OF WATCH, WARD

Report Bishop Lawrence Has Resigned Office

A report that the Right Rev. William Lawrence, Episcopal bishop of Massachusetts, had resigned from his position as director of the Watch and Ward Society, and that his tendered resignation will be acted upon at the next meeting of the Board of Directors of the society, Jan. 12, was widely circulated last night.

When asked whether he had resigned, he said that he could give out no statement. He referred questioners to the Rev. Raymond Calkins, president of the society. The Rev. Mr. Calkins said that nothing would be given out on the matter until the meeting. Bishop Lawrence held the position of vice-president of the society and is a member of the board of directors.

The recent publicity given the society in the East Cambridge Court in which it was assailed by Judge, district attorney and a former attorney-general appearing for a Cambridge bookseller, the society obtained evidence against, is believed to be very distasteful to Bishop Lawrence.

64

The Nation

[Vol. 130, No. 3367]

My Brother's Peeper

By GARDNER JACKSON

Boston, January 2

THE methods of the New England Watch and Ward Society and, incidentally, the workings of that peculiar mechanism, the mind of the censor, have been suddenly thrust into the limelight. The glare of publicity has been revealing, if not complimentary. Felix, the Greek newsdealer who sold a copy of the American Mercury containing the story, Hatrack, a few years ago, was poor and without prestige. In the latest instance, the society was unlucky enough to catch in one of its numerous traps a bookseller who had sufficient influence to enlist noted counsel, a scholarly clientele, and a press campaign in his defense.

The Watch and Ward Society sent an agent some months ago to the Dunster House Bookshop in Cambridge to buy a copy of D. H. Lawrence's novel, "Lady Chatterley's Lover." The society knew that James A. DeLacey, the manager, had already sold five of the "obscene" books. The fact that three of the five had been sold to members of the Harvard faculty, one to "a prominent lawyer," and one to a book collector did not deter the society's directors. Temptation must be removed wherever it exists. The agent, John Tait Slaymaker, experienced representative of the society, approached DeLacey and his clerk, Joseph Sullivan. He said his name was "John Tait." This was no error of dishonesty but merely one of omission, according to Charles S. Bodwell, executive secretary of the society, who explained that Slaymaker's name had recently appeared in the news and "it would have been announcing himself an agent of the society to have used it in securing evidence." Slaymaker also said that he was an agent of the Automobile Legal Association. DeLacey and Sullivan told Slaymaker that they did not keep Lawrence's book in stock and had none at hand. Slaymaker was persistent and persuasive, and suggested that there might be ways of getting one. He returned another day and chance produced a second-hand copy from a Harvard student which DeLacey sold to him without profit.

After trial in the District Court of East Cambridge before Judge Arthur P. Stone, DeLacey was sentenced to pay a fine of $800 and spend four months in the House of Correction; Sullivan drew a $200 fine and two weeks in the House of Correction. The case was appealed to the Superior Court of Middlesex County. DeLacey waived jury trial and appeared before Judge Frederick W. Fosdick, with District Attorney Robert T. Bushnell prosecuting. Judge Fosdick found DeLacey guilty and sentenced him to pay a fine of $500 and spend one month in the House of Correction. The case of Sullivan, the clerk, was placed on file. DeLacey has appealed to the Supreme Court on technical exceptions. During the trial in the District Court Richard C. Evarts, well-known Harvard graduate, son of the Reverend Prescott Evarts, was subjected to a bitter tongue-lashing and was threatened with the charge of contempt of court by Judge Stone because he (Evarts) questioned the methods used by the Watch and Ward to procure the evidence.

The sentence in the District Court aroused the Harvard elements of Boston and Cambridge to an even greater extent than the banning of "Strange Interlude." It was the common tea-table and dinner talk in all Boston intellectual circles. The Boston Herald, in a vigorous editorial, dissected the Watch and Ward Society and its methods, pointing out incidentally that a number of former agents of the society had been convicted of crime. The board of directors of the society struck back with a letter to the Herald charging unfairness. It was signed by the Reverend Raymond Calkins, president, Godfrey L. Cabot, treasurer, Dr. Mark W. Richardson, Sumner Clement, Grosvenor Calkins, and Bernard J. Rothwell, former president of the Boston Chamber of Commerce, directors. These gentlemen complained at the prominence given to the fact that the criminals referred to were once agents for the society. The editor of the Herald replied by again listing some of the former agents by name. "One of them, Joseph Farrell, a degenerate of the worst type, is now serving a thirty-year sentence." The campaign of the Herald and the Transcript whetted general as well as Harvard interest. (The Post alone upheld the censors' position.) Sympathetic Harvard students (who form a large part of the Dunster House Bookshop's clientele) started a subscription fund to pay DeLacey's fine and help him along during his incarceration.

When the case came up on appeal in the Superior Court, the courtroom was crowded. Mr. Evarts, more at home with pen than with tongue, had associated with him as defense counsel Herbert Parker, white-haired and elderly, former attorney general of the State. Mr. Parker elicited all the sordid details from Slaymaker of the Watch and Ward and his active superior, Mr. Bodwell. Then he pointed his patrician finger at the Watch and Warders and called them "depraved and perverted procurers . . . deceivers . . . falsifiers." He was so vehement that the Herald subsequently felt called upon to justify his words.

Meanwhile the prosecutor, District Attorney Bushnell, young Harvard graduate who is loudly steaming ahead to higher political office on his record of convictions in Middlesex County, found himself in a difficult position. To preserve his reputation as a "killer"—a name bestowed upon him by reporters—he must answer the immaculately fervent Mr. Parker. But if he convicted the favorite bookseller of Harvard intellectuals on charges of obscenity, what would his classmates, some of whom were among those same intellectuals, think of him? Mr. Bushnell was clever. He straddled the issue, stole part of the limelight from Mr. Parker, and received at the moment the uncritical praise of everyone concerned. He did this by attacking the Watch and Ward Society himself—the society which had induced him to prosecute DeLacey. He pounded the jury rail and shouted:

I want the public to understand that the district attorney does not indorse the Watch and Ward Society's policy or tactics. I serve warning here and now that as long as I am district attorney of this district and agents of this society go into a bookstore of good repute and induce and procure the commission of a crime, I will proceed against them for criminal conspiracy.

these conferences a lengthy defense of the society's conduct was prepared for private distribution over the signatures of Messrs. Calkins and Bodwell, to the 500 or more contributors to the society. It was a pitiful plea. The society, it said, language test similar to those required for employees of the Boston Public Library, and shall submit to the State department of public health satisfactory evidence of normal sex experience.

The Boston Post
Established 1831
MONDAY, DECEMBER 30, 1929

HITS FOES OF WATCH AND WARD

Dr. Conrad in Fling
at Bushnell, Lauds
Censorship

Assailing the recent denunciation of the Watch and Ward Society by District Attorney Robert T. Bushnell of Middlesex county, Dr. A. Z. Conrad, in his sermon prelude at the Park Street Church, last night, defended the Watch and Ward with the declaration that such organizations are made necessary by "the very fact of official negligence."

PRAISES CENSORSHIP

Dr. Conrad's reference to the Watch and Ward came during an attack upon pornographic literature and a spirited defence of censorship which he prefaced by praising the Boston Post for its editorial position on censorship.

He also commended President Hoover's prohibition programme and commented that Andrew J. Mellon, Secretary of the Treasury, under whose office prohibition enforcement has rested, couldn't be expected to lie awake nights worrying over enforcement of the liquor laws when his own money had been made directly or indirectly by giving people intoxicants.

Without referring to District Attorney Bushnell by name, Dr. Conrad declared: "Do not be too eager to listen to denunciations of such organizations as the Watch and Ward Society," he said. "How long since has it been the duty of a district attorney to undertake to intimidate, by threatening, organizations that are seeking to stay the currents of evil all too life among us?"

"If, anywhere at any time, illegal methods are employed, why is it not the function of high officials to take action, rather than to threaten? With a man like Dr. Raymond Calkins at the head of the Watch and Ward Society, you may be sure that the moral interests of Boston will not be imperiled by that society."

"It would be much more seemly if some public officials would devote half the diligence to the fulfillment of their own duties as protectors of the public morals that they have shown in denunciation of the efforts of organizations whose sole reason for existence is the very fact of official negligence."

Answering the question, "Should the United States Senate pass a bill modifying the censorship law?" Dr. Conrad defended censorship and assailed "literary degenerates," who, he said, were "debauching youth with their own mental sewage."

"At the instigation of misguided Liberal Leaguers," he declared, "and at the further instigation of certain avaricious writers and publishers, a frantic effort is today being made to do away with censorship. Censorship and civilization have gone hand in hand. Without censorship, civilization would have no more been possible than health without restraints placed upon men and women who are ever willing to wreck humanity for personal indulgence and material gain."

Severs Connection

RT. REV. WILLIAM LAWRENCE

Boston Daily Globe.

MONDAY, DEC 30, 1929

REPORT BISHOP LAWRENCE OUT

Watch and Ward Silent on Rumored Resignation

At noon today eight men gathered in the offices of the New England Watch and Ward Society, 43 Tremont st., behind locked doors, and the emergency meeting was in session until shortly after 2 p. m.

After the meeting those in attendance left at different times. Some refused to answer questions by reporters; some said they did not know there had been a meeting and two who came out just laughed out loud when a reporter asked them about a meeting.

Finally Rev Raymond Calkins, DD, president of the society, came out and greeted the reporters. He told them there was no statement concerning the meeting to be issued today and also emphatically, but courteously, refused to confirm or deny the report that Bishop Lawrence has resigned from the society. Rev Dr Calkins said he would give his assurance that if anything is to be said it will be written out and furnished to all the newspapers simultaneously.

Secretary Charles S. Bodwell, subsequently seen, declined to give out any information concerning the meeting, explaining that he has no authority to make public anything at this time.

The directors are Raymond Calkins, Frank C. Brown, Godfrey L. Cabot, Thomas D. Cabot, Grosvenor Calkins, Sumner Clement, Francis J. Moors, Mark W. Richardson, Bernard J. Rothwell, David D. Scannell and David Claghorn. They were not all present.

The activity today followed a report given circulation this morning that Bishop William Lawrence has tendered his resignation as vice president, because of the methods used by the society in the Dunster bookshop case.

At diocesan headquarters, 1 Joy st., Bishop Lawrence would have nothing to say. It was intimated over the telephone that Bishop Lawrence has had little active connection with the Watch and Ward Society for several years.

The next regular meeting of the society, when a resignation would normally be acted on, is scheduled for Jan. 13.

THE BOSTON HERALD

MONDAY, DECEMBER 30, 1929

DUNSTER BOOK CASE METHODS GIVEN AS CAUSE

Proceedings and Criticism
Distasteful to Episcopal Church Leader

HAS NO SYMPATHY WITH SOCIETY ACTION

President Calkins Refuses To Comment Until
Jan. 13 Meeting

The Rt. Rev. William Lawrence, Episcopal bishop of Massachusetts, has resigned from the board of directors of the Watch and Ward Society, and his resignation will be acted on at the next meeting of the board to be held Jan. 13.

From the same source of information it was learned that Bishop Lawrence regarded with ill favor the procedure of the society in the recent Dunster Bookshop case and the nationwide publicity which resulted.

REFUSES STATEMENT

Asked point blank last night if he had resigned from the Watch and Ward directorate, Bishop Lawrence said: "I can give out no statement. You will have to see the Rev. Raymond Calkins, president of the society."

Mr. Calkins was considerably disturbed by what he considered an "impertinent" question when he was asked about Bishop Lawrence's resignation last night. He said that nothing would be given out on the matter until the meeting of the board of directors of the society Jan. 13. That he did not deny that Bishop Lawrence has resigned seemed to verify the report.

Other high officials of the Watch and Ward Society were also uncommunicative regarding the reported resignation. It was learned, however, from a reliable source, that Bishop Lawrence's resignation is already in the hands of the Watch and Ward officials.

Bishop Lawrence held the position of vice-president of the Watch and Ward Society. The other vice-presidents are: The Rev. W. H. van Allen, the Rev. Austin K. DeBlois, Joseph Lee, President Daniel L. Marsh of Boston University, Arthur McArthur and the Rev. Endicott Peabody.

Bishop Lawrence has never taken a militant course in his directorship and it is said that he did not become acutely aware of his connection with the society until the sensation caused by the prosecution of the owner and employee of the Dunster Bookshop of Cambridge.

PROCEEDINGS DISTASTEFUL

The resulting focus of publicity on the methods of the Watch and Ward Society in securing evidence, it has been learned, was extremely distasteful to the bishop, who is said to have no sympathy for such proceedings.

BOSTON HERALD.
TUESDAY, DECEMBER 31, 1929

WATCH AND WARD AGAIN

To the Editor of The Herald:
In regard to the activities of the Watch and Ward Society, there is one point whose explanation I have not as yet observed either in your correspondence columns or in your excellent editorials. I realize that I may require considerable space to elucidate this point, but it is so important that it seems to me to justify a careful explanation.

The machinations of spies and informers are almost always sullied with a certain amount of treachery. Now treachery (i.e. the use of fraud against a person who trusts the deceiver), has always been considered one of the worst crimes on the calendar. Dante, for example, consigns the souls of traitors to the nethermost depths of hell; and before and after the creation of the Divine Comedy it has been the consensus of civilized mankind that such malefactors are among the lowest of the low.

Unfortunately in an imperfect world, both private and public officials have frequently felt it necessary to make use of the service of such persons. In war, for instance, the armies and secret service bureaus of belligerents are full of spies and informers. Similarly, in times of peace, even in the commonwealth of Massachusetts, both the police and the district attorneys and attorneys-general have employed stool pigeons and persons of like character to further the end of justice. Such employment is at best very dangerous, although at times it may seem the only method of bringing desperate criminals to book. We must never forget, however, that our guardians of public welfare are public officials. They are either elected by a majority vote or else are appointed by a representative of the sovereign people. The place they hold is not only one of power, but also of strict responsibility to their superiors and to the public.

Moreover, their every action is defined and limited by common and statute law. For the most part, they are men who have passed the major portion of their lives in learning how to qualify for the position they occupy, and therefore they are able to discriminate in many cases which a private citizen would find beyond his ken.

From these considerations it seems a far cry to the case of the Rev. E. Tallmadge Root, who, in his paper, has now twice appeared as a champion of the Watch and Ward. He is, I believe, one of the directors. I select him as an example, not at all from personal animus, but because he has put himself forward as a prominent type of Watch and Ward mentality. In his letter, he reveals himself as a dear old gentleman whose head is full of notions for the betterment of humanity. Some of these notions seem distorted and fantastic, and more of them wholly impracticable, but they do not prevent him from being a personality, who in his pulpit and among his acquaintances may be a noble inspiration for better living. In private life, he is probably a lovable character, whose influence is wholly for good.

It is when the Rev. E. Tallmadge Root, and those like him, seek to erect themselves into an amateur, irresponsible and extra legal police force, to impose their notions on the body politic, that they cease to function as useful citizens, and become not only a public nuisance but possibly a public menace. Knowing little or nothing of the machinery of the laws they pretend to uphold, they become themselves either law breakers or accessories before the fact. If they seek to enforce purity by means of treachery, they commit a greater moral crime to prevent a lesser. In so doing, they set themselves up as arbiters of the lives of adult fellow-citizens, who pursue equally useful careers, and presumably have an equally valuable standard of right and wrong. They may be beneficent in the field of persuasion. As unofficial guardians of public morals their role of self-appointed police is indeed disastrous.

I suppose there is no state or federal law to forbid either individuals or private organizations from hiring people of dubious character to spy upon their neighbors. Such a law would possibly defeat its own purpose. At best, it would be an aggravation to the prohibitions which cumber and overburden our statute books. On the other hand, for these good gentlemen to indulge in such practices, and then demand the respect of the community, is asking a little too much. Why not forgo an activity which they say is personally disastrous to them and for which they are so eminently unequalled? Why do they not disband this very questionable organization, and confine their energies to making their fellow-citizens better men and women, in a perfectly legitimate way?
HENRY HARMON CHAMBERLIN.
Worcester, Dec. 28.

THE BOSTON HERALD

TUESDAY, DECEMBER 31, 1929

WATCH & WARD DIRECTORS MUM

Special Meeting Called After News of Bishop's Resignation

PRECAUTIONS FOR SECRECY ARE TAKEN

Directors of the Watch and Ward Society were silent yesterday after a hurried meeting called a few hours after The Herald announced that Bishop William Lawrence had resigned as vice-president and director.

The governing board was called yesterday morning by Charles S. Bodwell, executive secretary of the society. Eight of the directors were rounded up, presumably to discuss the situation caused by the resignation of Bishop Lawrence.

Every effort was made to make the meeting a secret one. It lasted from shortly after noon until 2 o'clock. While the meeting was in progress an agent of the society paced up and down the hallway to see that no one disturbed the session.

OTHERS MAY RESIGN

Despite the precautions there were rumors that still other directors of the society are contemplating resigning because of the methods used by Watch and Ward agents to obtain evidence in the Dunster Bookshop case.

Apparently, all the directors attending yesterday's meeting were instructed to refer inquiries to President Raymond Calkins or Mr. Bodwell. Neither of the officials would give out any statement. Calkins said that when the society has a press statement he will give it to the Associated Press and all Boston newspapers simultaneously.

Many of the directors like Bishop Lawrence were inactive members of the governing board. Apparently the bishop did not realize that he held such a prominent post with the society until the nationwide publicity given the recent Dunster Bookshop case.

"TAKES NO INTEREST"

Such a director is Arthur McArthur, who told a reporter yesterday that the late J. Frank Chase asked him if he could use Mr. McArthur's name.

"I did let him use it," Mr. McArthur said, "but I never took any interest in the society."

It is expected that action on Bishop Lawrence's resignation will be taken formally at the scheduled director's meeting Jan. 13. The hurried meeting yesterday indicated that heads of the society are considerably disturbed over the bishop's withdrawal.

The officers and directors of the Watch and Ward Society are: President, Mr. Calkins; vice-presidents, the Rev. W. H. van Allen, the Rev. Austin K. DeBlois, Joseph Lee, the Rev. Daniel Marsh, Arthur McArthur, the Rev. Endicott Peabody, executive secretary, Mr. Bodwell; counsel, John W. Forder, auditor, George W. Macgregor; directors, Frank C. Brown, Godfrey L. Cabot, Thomas D. Cabot, Grosvenor Calkins, Francis J. Moors, Dr. Mark W. Richardson, Bernard J. Rothwell, Dr. David D. Scannell, John H. Storer and the Rev. Henry B. Washburn.

Boston Transcript

224 WASHINGTON STREET, BOSTON, MASS.

(Entered at the Post Office, Boston, Mass., as Second Class Mail Matter)

FRIDAY, JANUARY 3, 1930

SMOOT READS THE NAUGHTY ONES

[From the Milwaukee Journal]

Senator Reed Smoot is spending his holidays in the company of those naughty European authors who horrify our customs clerk. The apostle of Mormonism, beet sugar and purity wants to know at first hand just what it is in these volumes which makes it necessary to turn them back under the tariff regulations when they are shipped to these shores.

Mr. Smoot says that in the forty volumes which he took to his apartment when Congress adjourned for the holidays, he is finding plenty. We thought he would. The senator undoubtedly was looking for plenty. He was looking for material upon which to base a new appeal to the Senate to restore the clause in the tariff bill which provided for a moral censorship of book importations. One generally finds what one is searching for. Of course the senator might have found out in other ways. But it is best to do the thing yourself, and do it scientifically, just like going over a sugar schedule. You have to hand it to Smoot.

However, it is to be hoped that when the senator has gone through all these books and has formed his opinion, he will realize that it is just his own judgment and may not fit another's mind at all. And the senator also might reflect that if the United States applied the same kind of intolerance to other matters that he is advocating in a customs censorship, he certainly would not be in the Senate, and he might not even be a voting citizen.

THE BOSTON HERALD

SUNDAY, JANUARY 5, 1930

GETTING EVIDENCE

To the Editor of The Herald:

The Watch and Ward Society has for many years been doing a useful and disagreeable job, and doing it, in the main, with much discretion. It occasionally makes a mistake—naturally, since its officers and agents are human, and not infallible. But that is no reason for raising a hue and cry against it, and forgetting the vast amount of valuable work it has done, for which all good citizens have reason to be grateful.

I have not read the book just now under discussion, and cannot give an opinion as to whether its sale ought to be forbidden. Of course, the friends of free speech and a free press have to be always on the alert against any attempt to suppress social or economic heresy under the plea of suppressing indecency. In any case of serious doubt, I should give the cause of a free press the benefit of the doubt. But, leaving aside the question whether this particular book ought to be forbidden, I fail to understand the outcry over the method used to get evidence against the bookseller.

It is the method used by the government to get evidence against law breakers in all sorts of lines. If a man is suspected of peddling narcotic drugs, for instance, it would be thought perfectly proper for someone to ask him to sell them a supply, in order to get evidence of the fact. It would be the act of a respectable detective, not that of an agent provocateur. And, if a bookseller is selling illegal books, how can it be proved unless some such method is taken?

ALICE STONE BLACKWELL.
Dorchester, Dec. 31.

QUESTIONS WATCH AND WARD LISTS

Bishop Anderson Not Notified of Election to Office

SURPRISED TO FIND HE IS A VICE-PRESIDENT

But One of Nine on List at All Active in Society

Although he says that he has not resigned from the Watch and Ward Society, Bishop William F. Anderson of the Methodist Episcopal Church, issued a statement yesterday afternoon in which he stated that he was surprised when he read in the Boston newspapers that he was a vice-president of the organization and that he was never notified of his election in that capacity.

METHODS NOT APPROVED

While Bishop Anderson refused to amplify the brief statement in which he made clear his connection with the Watch and Ward Society, one of his close friends stated last night that the bishop was not in sympathy with the methods used by the society in the recent Dunster bookshop case and only his friendship and respect for some of the other officers of the organization, prevented him from severing his connection with it.

It was pointed out that Bishop Anderson took a stand on book censorship when on Dec. 16, he became a member of the Massachusetts committee on the revision of the book statutes, and that he took this action before Bishop Lawrence of the Episcopal Church, who was also a vice-president of the Watch and Ward Society, submitted his resignation.

Thinks Bishop Forgetful

Dr. Raymond Calkins of Cambridge, president of the society, refused to comment on Bishop Anderson's statement last night. He declared that he was not even interested in having it read to him.

Summer Clement was the only official of the organization who offered any comment on the statement. He stated a number of eminent gentlemen are vice-presidents of organizations and totally forget that they hold these offices.

Retirements Help Society

Mr. Clement declared, in connection with the recent announcement of Dr. David D. Scannell's retirement as a director, that he was sure that the other nine members of the board had weathered the storm which has centered around the society since the trial of the bookcensor in Cambridge and "intended to see it through." He declared that all of the criticism which was directed toward the society would prove to be tremendously helpful in securing new support from the community.

Bishop Anderson's statement, made public yesterday, read:

An Inheritance

"My relation to the Watch and Ward Society, if I have any, I suppose might be characterized as an inheritance. Upon my arrival in Boston in 1924 to take up my work as resident bishop of the Methodist Episcopal Church I was associated with the organization. A request was made that I allow the use of my name, to which request I assented.

"When recently the statement was made in the Boston press that I was a vice-president, it was to me a good deal of a surprise, as I never had any notice as to my election in that capacity nor have I, to the best of my knowledge, ever received notice of the meetings of the organization.

"The need of safeguarding our literature in the interests of the young life of the city and the Commonwealth should be apparent to all without discussion. The only question is as to the wisest method of procedure.

"On Dec. 16, 1929, I authorized the addition of my name to the list of citizens comprising the Massachusetts committee on the revision of the book law."

It was learned yesterday that when the regular meeting of the directors of the society is held next Monday, the present list of vice-presidents which appear on the official publications of the organization will be revised.

But One Active Vice-President

Of the nine vice-presidents whose names appear on the last report of the society, only one of them, Joseph Lee, has taken an active interest in the affairs of the association. The others have stated they never attended any of the meetings of the organization.

Dr. Endicott Peabody, master of the Groton School; President Daniel L. Marsh of Boston University; and Arthur McArthur of West Roxbury, Bishop Anderson and Mr. Lee make up the list of vice-presidents who are residing in this section and have not withdrawn from the organization.

Waiting for Statement

Mr. McArthur stated yesterday that he had received a letter from the organization in which they said a statement would be issued soon and he was waiting to read it before he made up his mind whether or not he would leave the society.

The other names of vice-presidents which the society carries on its list includes the Rev. Austin K. DeBols, former pastor of the First Baptist Church, who left Boston three years ago; the Rev. William H. van Allen, who retired more than a year ago from the church of the Advent and is now residing in Baltimore; the Rev. George A. Gordon, former pastor of the Old South Church, who died last October; and Bishop Lawrence, who resigned a short time ago.

Boston Traveler

Vol. CV.—No. 155.

171 Tremont Street.

Established 1925.

TUESDAY, JANUARY 7, 1930

President Marsh of B. U. Stands by Watch & Ward

Honorary Vice-President of Society Admits He Never Attended a Meeting, but Sees No Reason Why He Should Resign

The Watch and Ward Society, tottering along a rocky road, with resignations to the right of it and reported resignations to the left of it, received a helping hand today in a statement given by the Rev. Dr. Daniel L. Marsh, president of Boston University.

MARSH'S STATEMENT

Following the resignation and statement by the Rt. Rev. William F. Anderson, bishop of the Methodist Episcopal church, The Traveler got in touch with President Marsh, listed as one of the vice-presidents of the society.

President Marsh's statement follows:

"I know of no new developments—or any other developments for that matter—in the Watch and Ward Society. As I understand it, I am an honorary vice-president. I have never attended a meeting or received notice of a meeting. I am not faulting the society for that. I am not a director, but only an honorary vice-president.

"You ask whether I intend to resign? I do not so long as the society is being attacked, unless some reason appears of which I have no present knowledge. I cannot understand why the newspapers have trained their guns upon the society instead of upon the book store that was the occasion for the present furor. Howsoever reprehensible the methods used by the Watch and Ward Society may have been in the purchase of the book, one thing is worse, and that is that the book store was willing to sell the book."

FROM JOSEPH LEE

Joseph Lee, another vice-president of the society, reached over the telephone at his home on Beacon Hill, said that he expects to remain a vice-president.

Asked if he cared to say anything in connection with the present stormy voyage of the society, Mr. Lee said he did not as anything that might be said now might be considered in contempt of court.

Secretary Charles S. Rodwell was not at his office in the Carney building today. An attaché of the society said there was no statement to be made or information given out. Asked when Rodwell was expected to return the employé said "in a day or two." Pressed as to whether he was out of town on business of the society, only a laconic "maybe" came after a pause.

THE BOSTON HERALD, MONDAY, JANUARY 6, 1930

May Ban Play Which Ridicules Boston Mayors and Watch and Ward

After hearing reports that "The Whistling Oyster," a two-act play by former Representative Arthur F. Blanchard, ridiculed Boston mayors, the Watch and Ward Society and other institutions, Police Chief John J. McBride of Cambridge declared last night he would read the manuscript and decide whether it is fit for presentation. The play is scheduled for production late this month at the Laboratory Theatre in Cambridge.

Mayor-elect Richard M. Russell of Cambridge declined to comment on the play last night, saying he preferred to wait until after his inauguration this morning.

The play is described by Hugh William Towne, the producer, as a "daring satire on love, youth, society, politics, censorship and prohibition." The name of the piece is derived from that of a helicopter, supposed to be flown by the heroine, "Patricia, homeliest girl in Yonkers."

One of the outstanding characters of the play is "Big Bill" Slattery, mayor of Boston, made a social climber. In the opening act of the play Mayor Slattery, becoming intoxicated, is found bathing his feet in a garden pond on a North Shore estate at the height of a brilliant society house party.

At a New York party a strip poker game is in progress. Someone is trying to present a copy of "Lady Chatterley's Lover" to the brother of the heroine. He refuses it and one of the girls at the party tears off the wrapper of the book to read to the gathering.

One of the characters explains that when a book is banned in Boston the police procure it and read it, then the mayor peruses it; then the Watch and Ward Society, and finally the "Sneaking Snappers." By that time, the character explains, the book is in a dilapidated condition.

"Bishop Channing," head of a wealthy Boston church, is another lively character of the play. He dotes on "taking slaps" at Boston mayors. In one part of the play he says, "ex-mayors of Boston should be disenfranchised and should never be allowed to run for higher office."

Boston Daily Globe

TUESDAY, JAN 7, 1930

WATCH AND WARD LEGACY TO BISHOP

Dr Anderson Never Got Notices of Meetings

Declaring that his connection with the Watch and Ward Society might be characterized as an inheritance and stating that he never had received notice of the meetings of the organization, Bishop William F. Anderson of the Methodist Episcopal Church last night issued a formal statement in regard to the Watch and Ward Society.

In the first sentence, he indicated his stand with the society by asserting: "My relation to the Watch and Ward Society, if I have any, I suppose might be characterized as an inheritance."

"Upon my arrival in Boston in 1924 to take up my work as resident bishop of the Methodist Episcopal Church, I was informed that my predecessors had been associated with the organization. A request was made that I allow the use of my name, to which request I assented.

"When recently the statement was made in the Boston press that I was a vice president, it was to me a good deal of surprise, as I never had any notice as to my election, nor have I, to the best of my knowledge, ever received notice of the meetings of the organization.

"The need of safeguarding our literature in the interests of the young life of the city and the Commonwealth should be apparent to all without discussion. The only question is as to the wisest method of procedure."

"On Dec. 16, 1929, I authorized the addition of my name to the list of citizens comprising the Massachusetts committee on the revision of the book law."

Boston Transcript

TUESDAY, JANUARY 7, 1930

Watch and Ward "Sponsors" Now Enter Dispute

Bishop William F. Anderson Denies Resignation as Vice President

Vice presidents of the Watch and Ward Society, a position variously interpreted as sponsors or members of an advisory committee, although these officers declare they never received notices of meetings nor were called upon to lend more than the prestige of their names in the conduct of the vice society's affairs, came to the front today in the most recent developments of the dissension which has resulted in three resignations, and possibly more, on the eve of a board meeting scheduled for next Monday at 1 P. M. in the Boston City Club.

In a statement which makes no reference to resigning as a vice president but simply explains how he came to be connected with the society, Bishop William F. Anderson of the Methodist Episcopal Church today reaffirmed his position that his relation, "if I have any, might be characterized as an inheritance," but at the same time stated that he had not resigned nor did he intend to consider such action until after the meeting, of which he has not officially been advised, Monday.

Joseph Lee, another vice president, is now at work on a statement which he is giving careful preparation, to set forth his attitude on the society and the Dunster Bookshop case. As one of the "sponsors" who has never been called into the deliberations of the society he proposes to ask about the Jan. 13 meeting in his capacity of vice president. He has not resigned and says he is not seeking to avoid the responsibility of the office.

Rev. Endicott Peabody, D. D., headmaster of Groton School, declared he has not resigned and that he considers it "manifestly unfair to resign without a full knowledge of the case." Dr. Peabody said he was not considering resigning but was hoping to hear both sides of the case, particularly as it is his understanding that the Watch and Ward Society plans to issue a statement within a few days. Dr. Peabody added that he is in sympathy with the aims of the society and considers that it has done a great deal of good. On the Cambridge trial, he said he was not sufficiently informed to pass judgment on the activities of the Watch and Ward, nor did he consider it ethical while the case is still before the courts.

Arthur McArthur of 33 Stafford street, West Roxbury, a vice president, said he has received a letter from the society advising him that the organization plans to make a statement to the press within a few days, and until that time he will withhold decision on resigning from office.

"If the Watch and Ward Society is an unworthy institution, it should be disbanded," Mr. McArthur said. "The question seems to be whether the institution should have the support of the public or not. If it is not worthy it should be abolished. I don't see why Bishop Lawrence and the others would get out if it is a worthy institution."

Mr. McArthur then asked how many vice presidents the society had and how many are reported to have resigned. He said he had been connected with the society for ten years or fifteen years, from the time when his friend, J. Frank Chase, was secretary and asked him to be a vice president. In that time, Mr.

McArthur said, he had not been active in the affairs of the society and has never attended meetings. He expressed the opinion that "vice presidents don't amount to a great deal."

Bishop in Quandary

Bishop Anderson, at his rooms in the Copley Plaza, was visibly disturbed by the publicity given by press and radio to his reported resignation as vice president. He pointed out that the statement issued by him late yesterday made no such announcement. When, in turn, it was pointed out to him that he had not answered the question whether he had or had not resigned he immediately declared that he had not resigned nor did he intend to take such a step before the meeting of the board of directors Monday. Bishop Anderson's statement is as follows:

"My relation to the Watch and Ward Society, if I have any, I suppose might be characterized as an inheritance. Upon my arrival in Boston in 1924 to take up the work as resident bishop of the Methodist Episcopal Church I was informed that my predecessors had been associated with the organization. A request was made that I allow the use of my name to which request I assented."

"When recently the statement was made in the Boston press that I was a vice president, it was to me a good deal of a surprise, as I never had any notice as to my election nor have I, to the best of my knowledge, ever received notice of the meetings of the organization."

"The need of safeguarding our literature in the interests of the young life of the city and the Commonwealth should be apparent to all without discussion. The only question is as to the wisest method of procedure."

"On Dec. 16, 1929, I authorized the addition of my name to the list of citizens comprising the Massachusetts committee on the revision of the book law."

Not Active Officers

Bishop Anderson insisted that he wanted his attitude to be expressed by his carefully-prepared statement and that until the society meets next week he is in a quandary. He said he had not been informed of this meeting and that the society was first brought to his attention the day of the publication of District Attorney Bushnell's strictures against the agents of the Watch and Ward for their methods in obtaining evidence in the Dunster Bookshop case. In that account, the bishop said, he was surprised to find his name, at the end of the news report, listing him as a vice president of the society.

He agreed with Mr. Lee's interpretation of the office of vice president as being that of a sponsor or member of an advisory board. But to business men, according to Mr. Lee, this is open to misinterpretation because Watch and Ward vice presidents, unlike vice presidents of railroads or other corporations, are not active officers. Mr. Lee implied that the statement he is now preparing will have a bearing on the bookshop case, but as that matter is still before the courts comment at this time is questionable.

Friends of Bishop Anderson expressed the opinion today that the bishop was incensed by the methods used by the Watch and Ward in the bookshop case and the criticism which that brought on the organization, and that Bishop Anderson would have taken decided action before now had it not been for his friendship with Rev. Raymond Calkins, D. D., the president of the society.

On its letterhead the Watch and Ward Society lists as vice presidents, the late Rev. George A. Gordon, D. D.; Rev. William Harman van Allen, S. T. D., now in England; Bishop Lawrence, who resigned last Monday; Rev. Endicott Peabody, D. D., headmaster of Groton School; Rev. Daniel L. Marsh, D. D., president of Boston University; Rev. Austin K. DeBols, former pastor of the First Baptist Church, now in Philadelphia.

Boston Traveler

Vol. CV.—No. 156 171 Tremont Street. Established 1825.

WEDNESDAY, JANUARY 8, 1930

Guard Your Good Name

BISHOP WILLIAM F. ANDERSON of the Methodist Episcopal Church is the victim of a practice that should be stopped.

This eminent churchman, busy with the affairs of his area, "inherited" when he first came to Boston, a nominal vice-presidency of the Watch and Ward Society. Subsequently he had no time to give to its activities. He assumed that the society was doing a good work.

There is altogether too much good-heartedness among men and women of note, too little resistance to the persistence of organizations that seek the use of their names. The pleas of these organizations are hard to resist. They will assure you that there will not be any demand on your time. Thus they forestall your excuse that you are too busy to attend meetings. Guard your good name.

BOSTON EVENING AMERICAN
WEDNESDAY, JANUARY 8, 1930

MARSH AND LEE BACK WATCH AND WARD

Declaring that they have no intention of resigning, two vice-presidents of the Watch and Ward Society, Joseph Lee of Mount Vernon st., and Pres. Daniel L. Marsh of Boston University, have come forward with a defense of the organization against the barrage of criticism laid against it.

Bishop William F. Anderson of the Methodist Episcopal Church, who on Monday issued a statement saying that he never received notice of his election as vice-president of the Watch and Ward, declared today that he would have nothing to say regarding his resignation until after the directors' meeting of the organization next Monday.

Another vice president of record, Dr. Endicott Peabody of the Groton School, says that he is going to continue his connection with the society which, he says, has done a large amount of good work in the community.

The remaining vice president, Arthur McArthur of West Roxbury, has stated that he will delay his decision on resignation until he reads the statement being prepared by the society.

The Boston Post
Established 1821
WEDNESDAY, JANUARY 8, 1930

B. U. CHIEF IN DEFENCE OF W. & W.

Dr. Marsh and Joseph Lee Won't Resign Society Posts

Two vice-presidents of the Watch and Ward Society, Joseph Lee of Mt. Vernon street and President Daniel L. Marsh of Boston University, came to the defence of that organization yesterday and announced that they had no intention of resigning their positions.

PEABODY TO STAY

Bishop William F. Anderson of the Methodist Episcopal Church, who on Monday issued a statement saying that he never received notice of his election as vice-president of the Watch and Ward, declared yesterday that he would have nothing to say regarding his resignation until after the directors' meeting of the organization next Monday.

Another vice-president of record, Dr. Endicott Peabody of the Groton School, says that he is going to continue his connection with the society which, he says, has done a large amount of good work in the community. The remaining vice-president still connected with the society, Arthur McArthur of West Roxbury, has stated that he will delay his decision on resignation until he reads the statement being prepared by the society.

As far as could be learned yesterday the nine remaining directors of the society continue to retain their offices without any breaks in the ranks.

Though handicapped from saying all he would like to because the Dunster Bookshop case is now before the Supreme Court, Mr. Lee's statement last night was an answer to the wholesale criticism which has been directed at the society since the case was tried in Cambridge last month, resulting in the conviction of a book dealer on evidence produced by the society. It reads:

Lee's Statement

"To form a general judgment on the merits of the Watch and Ward Society one should have some knowledge of what it has accomplished. I have seen very little evidence of such knowledge in the criticisms that have been made. As to the merits of the Dunster Bookshop case I have nothing to say because I believe it would be contempt of court to say anything now that would be worth saying. The case has been appealed and is now before the Supreme Court. I have not resigned nor have I ever contemplated resigning."

President Marsh declares in his statement that regardless of the methods used by the Watch and Ward Society in obtaining the sale of the questionable book, the fact that the store was willing to sell the book was more reprehensible. His prepared statement reads:

"As I understand it, I am an honorary vice-president of the Watch and Ward Society. I have never attended a meeting or received notice of a meeting. I am not a director, but only an honorary vice-president."

"You ask whether I intend to resign. I do not so long as the society is being attacked, unless some reason appears of which I have no present knowledge. I cannot understand why the newspapers have trained their guns upon the society instead of upon the bookstore that was the occasion for the present furor. However reprehensible the methods used by the Watch and Ward Society may have been in the purchase of the book, one thing is worse and that is the fact that the bookstore was willing to sell the book."

Boston Transcript
124 WASHINGTON STREET, BOSTON, MASS.
(Entered at the Post Office, Boston, Mass., as Second Class Mail Matter)

THURSDAY, JANUARY 9, 1930

Facing the Crisis

Now quite near comes the long appointed hour—Monday, Jan. 13, at 1 P. M.—when the Watch and Ward Society will meet to receive, in formal assembly, the official resignations which have been sent to it, and to issue to the press, as the promise runs, "a full and accurate statement." This is well. A wise restraint may have dictated the delay which has hitherto ensued, but a policy of delay can perform, in the existing circumstances, no durable service. A crisis has arisen in relation to the Watch and Ward Society, and neither Boston nor the society itself has anything to gain from futile attempts to deny or evade it. The issue was writ in bold letters for all to see and mark upon the most authoritative public records which exist, namely, this Commonwealth's judicial records, at the moment when Judge Fosdick declared on Friday, Dec. 20, from the bench of the Superior Court that he "entertained no cordiality" for the methods of the society in obtaining evidence, and when District Attorney Bushnell served notice that as long as I am district attorney of this district and agents of this society go into a bookstore of good repute and induce and procure the commission of a crime I will proceed against them for criminal conspiracy.

If any could doubt the significance of this utterance, the scant remaining question was soon afterwards swept away. The resignations which have since occurred, including that of Bishop Lawrence, show conclusively the loss of confidence which has occurred. This loss exists within the very ranks of the society itself, among the members of its administration, whether as "sponsors" whose names were used merely "by inheritance," as Bishop Anderson has said, or as duly notified and responsible vice presidents, it matters little. The methods of the Watch and Ward Society having failed of indorsement even among those to whom its inner council-table was at least accessible, of a surety that large section of the public which distrusts and reprehends those methods as recently exemplified stands justified in its distrust. With certain essential purposes of the Watch and Ward Society we have no quarrel. On the contrary we are inclined to believe them necessary and in their way vital. But unless the full and accurate statement promised from next Monday's meeting brings the welcome news of a far-reaching change both of heart and of practical administrative order within the society, then this long awaited assembly will be of little avail. It will mean that the society, by insisting upon placing ends at all times above means, has failed to face its crisis in the open, and has doomed itself to that slow extinction which, in this nation, naturally fair and above-board, the Ku Klux Klan has suffered.

THE BOSTON HERALD
MONDAY, JANUARY 13, 1930

WATCH AND WARD TODAY

Has the Watch and Ward Society a proper place in the community? Judge Fosdick of the Superior Court has said in open session that he entertains no cordiality for it. District Attorney Bushnell has threatened to prosecute the society if it repeats its tactics in its jurisdiction. Former Attorney-General Herbert Parker has condemned it furiously. Bishop Lawrence and Professor Coolidge of Harvard have resigned. Bishop Anderson questions whether he is a member. Dr. David D. Scannell is reported to have withdrawn. The other prominent officials, including the Rev. Dr. Endicott Peabody, headmaster of Groton School, have not rallied to its support. These are matters of fact, not open to argument.

The statement which the Rev. Dr. Calkins, President of the Society, has promised for today, will be inadequate unless it meets the criticism of Messrs. Fosdick, Bushnell and Parker, and also explains the resignations as due to a misconception of the aims and operations of the Society. The refusal of the Society to discuss the Dunster Book Shop case, on the ground that it is still pending and will have the attention of the Supreme Court on exceptions, is childish. The newspapers, the best law reviews and the trade publications, make a regular practice of discussing cases which "go up" on exceptions. No contempt of court is based on such an exercise of the right of free speech. Apart from that, the Society is certainly not prevented by any legal restraint from defending itself, and is just as certainly under a moral obligation to try to justify its practices, existence, and appeal to the public for funds. As to the resignations, implied and reported, it may be said that more ability has left the Society than remains in it, and that a perfunctory explanation of the resignations will not satisfy the public.

The Watch and Ward controversy has broadened out since the Dunster Book Shop case reached Judge Fosdick, and we are inclined to think that he and District Attorney Bushnell have crystallized public sentiment against it. They have had the moral courage to say what a great many others would have liked to say, but have left unsaid, feeling that such a man as Bishop Lawrence, for one example, could not knowingly give his support to an unworthy organization. At first there was severe condemnation of the Society because of its methods in the Cambridge case and of a suspicion that the nasty book on the sale of which the Society constructed its case, might have come from an agent of the Society itself. Now the public is half disregarding that particular case as merely a minor incident showing the typical methods of the Society. The public wonders whether a private organization, a self-constituted censor of public morals and literature, exercising the functions which experience shows can be safely entrusted only to a public body, has any more excuse for existence than the Ku Klux Klan.

Should the Society close up shop, go out of existence and make arrangements to divert its funds to some object of unquestioned good? Can it regain the ground which it has lost in the last few weeks? Can it hereafter get the co-operation of courts, police and district attorneys? Can it replace the men who have resigned with others in whom the public has equal confidence? The statement which Dr. Calkins has promised to make today should contain information on which fair minded men can base definite, final and sure judgment in answering these questions.

THE BOSTON HERALD
SUNDAY, JANUARY 12, 1930

WATCH & WARD'S FATE AT STAKE

Tomorrow's Monthly Meeting May Settle Whether It Is to Go On

AWAIT DECISION ON BOOK CENSORSHIP

The future of the New England Watch and Ward Society depends upon the outcome of a regular monthly meeting of its directors which will be held at 1 P. M. tomorrow.

There have been resignations from the society recently, and other officers have declared their intentions of resigning unless they are favorably impressed by a statement which the Rev. Dr. Raymond Calkins, president, has promised to issue tomorrow.

Obviously, the chief point at issue is the method used by the society in censoring books, and the Dunster House Bookshop case is the pivotal point. The question to be laid before the society tomorrow probably will be whether it is to insist upon the right to pursue such methods of suppression in the future or directly or indirectly to modify its present crusading plans.

Dr. Calkins, the honorary vice-presidents and the directors of the society are maintaining a close-lipped silence. "What I have to say I shall say after tomorrow's meeting, until then I have no statement to make," said Dr. Calkins last night.

INSISTS ON GOING ON

Dr. Calkins has insisted that the Watch and Ward Society shall go on, but several of its members have intimated strongly that upon his statement tomorrow rests their decision to remain with it or to resign.

Few legal cases have produced such a flood of protesting and criticizing letters as the prosecution of James A. DeLacey on evidence obtained by agents of the Watch and Ward and his sentence to a year in the house of correction and a fine of $500.

Booksellers of Boston and Cambridge are deeply interested in the decision of the supreme court, as well as in the statement prepared for tomorrow, because at any time their stores may be subjected to the same legal entanglements.

Echoes of the same case were heard in the State House yesterday when Representative Roland D. Sawyer of Ware filed a bill entitled, "An act to protect librarians and booksellers in certain cases."

Under the terms of this bill booksellers would be entitled to maintain a reserve list and to sell to adults for scholarly purposes books from such a list, provided the purchaser signs a statement that he buys them only for scholarly purposes.

BILL OF EXCEPTIONS

Meanwhile, counsel for De Lacey is preparing the bill of exceptions which must be filed before Feb. 15, and efforts are being made to find the student, whose name is unknown, who sold De Lacey a copy of "Lady Chatterley's Lover" which had been ordered from him by Watch and Ward agents.

With the exception of Bishop Lawrence, who has resigned, the vice-presidents of the Watch and Ward have all been invited to attend today's meeting. They are: Arthur McArthur of 28 Stratford street, West Roxbury; the Rev. Endicott Peabody, headmaster of Groton School; Joseph Lee, Bishop William F. Anderson of the Methodist Episcopal Church; President Daniel L. Marsh of Boston University; the Rev. William Harman, Van Allen, formerly of the Church of the Advent, now in England; and the Rev. Austin K. DeRois, former pastor of the First Baptist Church, who is now in Philadelphia.

Directors of the Watch and Ward are: Dr. Calkins, Frank Chouteau Brown, Godfrey L. Cabot, treasurer, who is now en route to the aeronautical congress at Paris; Thomas Dudley Cabot, Grosvenor Calkins, Sumner Clement, Francis J. Moors, Mark W. Richardson, Bernard J. Rothwell, David Claghorn and Dr. David D. Scannell, who has already declared his disagreement with some of the Watch and Ward methods.

SUNDAY ADVERTISER

JANUARY 12, 1930

WATCH, WARD POLICY UP FOR VOTE MONDAY

President Calkins Promises a Statement After City Club Meeting

Whether the Watch and Ward Society will fight back at its critics or assume a different line of defense, will be decided at a meeting of the organization tomorrow at the Boston City Club.

At that time, according to Rev. Mr. Raymond Calkins, its president, a statement will be made which will "clear the atmosphere" or confirm reports of resignations of honorary vice-presidents and of members of the board.

Chiefly, the meeting tomorrow will deal with the criticism of Watch and Ward methods, specifically in procuring convictions of two Cambridge bookstore men who sold a volume of a banned book which, it is claimed, was "planted" in the bookstore in the process of setting a trap.

METHODS CRITICIZED

The method by which evidence was obtained against James A. DeLacey, manager of the Dunster House Bookshop, converted for sale of a copy of "Lady Chatterley's Lover," was denounced by Judge Frederick W. Fosdick from the bench of the Superior Criminal Court in Middlesex county. Judge Fosdick said he "entertained no cordiality" for such methods.

Dist. Atty. Robert T. Rushnell, prosecuting the case against the bookstore men, at the same session of the court said:

"As long as I am district attorney and agents of the (Watch and Ward) society go into a bookstore of good repute and induce and procure the commission of a crime, I will proceed against them for criminal conspiracy."

Contributing to the various phases of tomorrow's Watch and Ward meeting are letters of protest and criticism directed to Dr. Calkins by members of the First Congregational Church on Green st., Cambridge, of which he is the pastor. Some of his congregation are openly opposed to their pastor's activities and utterances.

CRITICIZE PASTOR

Many parishioners have written to Dr. Calkins asking whether he approves the methods of the Watch and Ward Society as exemplified in procuring evidence in the DeLacey case.

Members of his flock who resent the connection of their minister with the Watch and Ward are those who have opposed his attitude on war and what they call his "one-man methods" of conducting the affairs of the parish.

Boston Daily Globe

MONDAY, JAN 13, 1920

SOCIETY ISSUES LONG STATEMENT

Bishop Lawrence, Scannell and Coolidge Quit

Bishop William Lawrence, Prof. Julian L. Coolidge and Dr. David D. Scannell, have resigned as officials of the New England Watch and Ward Society, according to an official statement made public this afternoon after a meeting of the board of directors of the organization.

It was stated that no other resignations have been received. It was also stated that the directors of the society, in connection with the Dunster house case, cannot see anything improper in the activities of their agents in the case.

The statement was given out by Grosvenor Calkins, a director and brother of the president, Rev. Raymond T. Calkins.

Five at Meeting

Among those present at the meeting, besides Mr. Calkins, were his brother, Rev. Mr. Galkins, the president; Secretary Charles S. Bodwell and directors Thomas D. Cabot, Sumner Clement, Frank Chouteau Brown, Francis J. Moors and Mark W. Richardson.

It was stated by Mr. Calkins, in giving out the statement to the newspapermen, who jammed the corridor on the 10th floor of the Boston City Club, where the meeting was held, that Bernard J. Rothwell and Godfrey L. Cabot were not present at the meeting. Mr. Rothwell is out of the city on business and Mr. Cabot is in Europe, he told the reporters.

After the statement had been given out the directors resumed their meeting.

The statement issued by the society reads:

"The Watch and Ward Society was organized over 50 years ago for the promotion of public morality and the removal of corrupting agencies. Organizations for similar purposes, are privately maintained in other communities, including New York, Washington, Cincinnati, Chicago, Albany and London. Present critics of the society, before concluding that it has outlived its usefulness, are invited to investigate the results of its activities in many fields not generally known to the police. The masters of many private and public schools will testify to the splendid accomplishments of the society in effectively putting an end to the circulation among adolescents of highly objectionable magazines, pamphlets and pictures.

"This society is not a censor of public morality or of books, except to the extent necessarily incident to the work of an organization engaged in helping to secure the enforcement of laws which have been enacted by the people for their protection. Successfully to combat the organized business of vice and crime, it is necessary to secure evidence which will stand in court against all the counter evidence and cross-questioning which clever criminals and their astute lawyers can devise. This requires the employment of plain clothes investigators.

"It is a mistake to assume that this society spends its time in endeavoring to detect crime where it does not exist. On the contrary 90 percent of its activities are on complaints of violation of the vice laws and requests for its assistance. When the society has a complaint and has reason to believe that there has been willful infraction of the vice laws, it sends an investigator to collect the available evidence in the case.

"It is not the policy of the society to participate in the prosecution of doubtful cases. This is evidenced by the fact that there have been convictions in approximately 98 percent of the cases with which it has been associated during the past 10 years.

Reviews Dunster Case

"In the trial of the Dunster House Book Shop case in the Superior Court, at which the society was not represented by counsel, an attack was made upon the methods adopted by the society in securing evidence to which widest publicity has been given. Because of the official stenographer's absence from Boston, it has been impossible up to the date of preparation of this statement to secure a transcript of the evidence introduced at the Superior Court trial. The directors have closely questioned the witnesses for the prosecution and investigated other available sources of information. As a result of this inquiry the evidence thus far disclosed to the directors had not seemed to justify the charge that agents of the society have employed improper methods in obtaining evidence.

"The questions involved are of such vital importance to the society and have become of such general interest that the society has thought it best to retain the services of counsel outside its membership and not previously employed by it in any capacity to examine the record of the trial and to investigate all available evidence for the purpose of making an impartial fact-finding report to the directors on all aspects of the case affecting the society and its agents.

"At today's meeting of the directors the employment of such counsel has been authorized. A public announcement of his name will shortly be made. If this report discloses that methods adopted by the agents of the society in securing evidence in this now celebrated case were either illegal, improper or unethical, the directors will take immediate and effective steps to correct them.

Three Resignations

"The public is again reminded that these activities followed evidence of sales, which were admitted at the trial, of five copies of a book which the eloquent counsel for the defense publicly characterized as 'an utter abomination.'

"Fair minded persons will suspend judgment until completion of the society's own investigation and until the case has been passed upon by the Supreme Judicial Court, to which notice of appeal has been given.

"Presumably for the purpose of discrediting the society, wide publicity has been given to reported resignations of various persons. Since Jan. 1, 1920, the following resignations have been received and accepted by the board:

"On Dec. 23, 1920, the resignation as a director of Julian L. Coolidge, caused by pressure of other duties, was received and accepted by the board.

"At today's meeting the resignation as a director of Dr. David D. Scannell has been accepted. Dr. Scannell's decision to resign was reached long before the recent publicity. He resigned for personal reasons only. His resignation was not due to any criticism of the methods of the society in procuring evidence in the Dunster case.

"On Dec. 24 the president received the resignation of Bishop Lawrence as a vice president. This resignation was due to a desire to be relieved of official responsibility in this organization, as in others. He did not anticipate the publicity or the inferences which resulted from this action. Bishop Lawrence has authorized the president to withhold his resignation for the present, in order, so far as lies in his power, to correct the impression which has been broadened by some of the press that his resignation implies disagreement with the work of the society, which he feels has been a whole of much service to the community.

"These statements have been submitted to and approved by Dr. Scannell and Bishop Lawrence. No other resignations have been received.

"The society does not oppose amendment of the present law against obscene books. It does object to the phraseology of a particular bill which has been introduced. It will not oppose changing the law so as to make the law in Massachusetts conform to similar statutes enacted in most other States."

BOSTON TRAVELER
JANUARY 13, 1930

WATCH, WARD TO PROBE BOOK SHOP EVIDENCE

To Investigate Allegations Made Against Society

The Watch and Ward Society, which has been in the limelight ever since the outcome of the Dunster House bookshop case in the Middlesex superior court, will employ counsel outside of its own membership to go over the transcript of the evidence in the book shop case and make a report thereon.

RESIGNATION WITHHELD

This was made known in a statement today following a meeting of the officers and directors at the Boston City Club. The statement also gives the names and dates of resignations of directors of the society.

In connection with the resignation of Bishop Lawrence, the statement says the bishop has authorized the president of the society to withhold the resignation for the present in order that, so far as lies in his power, he can correct the impression broadcast that his resignation implies disapproval or disagreement with the work of the society, which, he feels, has been a whole of much service to the community.

The statement follows: "In the trial of the Dunster House bookshop case in the superior court, at which the society was not represented by counsel, an attack was made upon the methods adopted by the society in securing evidence, to which widest publicity has been given.

"Because of the official stenographer's absence from Boston, it has been impossible, up to the date of the preparation of this statement, to secure a transcript of the evidence introduced at the superior court trial. The directors have closely questioned the witnesses for the prosecution and investigated every available source of information.

TO NAME COUNSEL SOON

"As a result of this inquiry, the evidence thus far disclosed to the directors does not seem to justify the charge that agents of the society have employed improper methods in obtaining evidence."

The statement then says that it has been decided to employ counsel to examine the evidence and make an impartial finding and report and that at today's meeting the employment of counsel had been authorized and that announcement of the name of counsel will be made shortly.

"If this report discloses," the statement continues, "that methods adopted by the agents of the society in securing evidence in this now celebrated case were either illegal, improper or unethical, the directors will take immediate and effective steps to correct them."

"Fair-minded persons will suspend judgment until completion of the society's own investigation and until the case has been passed upon by the supreme judicial court, to which notice of appeal has been given."

REGARDING RESIGNATIONS

In connection with resignations from the society, the statement gives that of Julian L. Coolidge as director on Dec. 23, 1920, caused by pressure of other duties. At today's meeting the resignation as a director of Dr. David D. Scannell was received and accepted. The statement says that Dr. Scannell's decision to resign was reached long before the recent publicity and that he resigned for personal reasons only, and not due to any criticism of the methods of the society in procuring evidence in the Dunster case.

The statement then goes on to tell of the resignation of Bishop Lawrence and his authorization to the president to withhold it for the present in order that the statements had been submitted to the bishop and Dr. Scannell and had been approved by both.

The statement further says that no other resignations have been received. It stated that the society does not oppose amendment of the present law against obscene books and will not oppose any law that will make the law of this state conform to similar statutes enacted in most other states.

At the meeting today were the Rev. Raymond Calkins, president; Charles S. Bodwell, secretary, and the following directors: Thomas D. Cabot, Sumner Clement, F. C. Brown, Grosvenor Calkins, Francis J. Moors and Mark W. Richardson.

Boston Transcript

MONDAY, JANUARY 13, 1930

Watch, Ward Asks Critics to Investigate

Denies Resignations of Two Directors Attributable to Disagreement with Society's Methods

Hires Special Counsel

Bishop Lawrence, Approving Society's Work, Withholds His Resignation

Denial that recent resignations from executive positions in the New England Watch and Ward Society were the result of lack of sympathy with the organization's methods in the obtaining of evidence in the Dunster House bookshop case was contained in a statement issued by the directors of the society after a meeting at the Boston City Club this afternoon.

The statement declared that Bishop William Lawrence, who submitted his resignation as vice president on Dec. 24, took such action because of his desire to be relieved of official responsibility and that for the present he had authorized President Calkins to withhold his resignation in order, so far as possible, to "correct the impression which has been broadened by some of the press, that his resignation implied disapproval of and disagreement with the work of the society."

The statement further said that the recent resignation of Dr. David D. Scannell, which was accepted at today's meeting, was on account of personal considerations and not a result of any criticism of the methods of the society in obtaining evidence against the Cambridge bookstore. The meeting authorized the employment of special counsel outside its membership and not previously employed by it in any capacity to examine the record of the book trial which took place in Middlesex Superior Court and to investigate all available evidence "for the purpose of making an impartial fact-finding report to the directors on all aspects of the case affecting the society and its agents."

The meeting of this board was held in Room 910 on the tenth floor of the Boston City Club, with the door closed. As successive luncheon groups came down the hall to the elevators they were asked by the newspaper men whether they were Watch and Ward directors. One group, which included Edward E. Whiting and George W. Coleman, as well as other members of the City Club Forum committee, gave the reporters the laugh. Mr. Coleman said:

"They were in Q and we were in P."

Including our P's and Q's."

Another group greeted the newspapermen with, "We're all in Room O, boys."

Directors' Statement

The following statement was given to the press by Grosvenor Calkins: "The Watch and Ward Society was organized over fifty years ago for the promotion of public morality and the removal of corrupting agencies. Organizations for similar purposes are privately maintained in other communities, including New York, Washington, Cincinnati, Chicago, Albany and London. Present critics of the society, before concluding that it has outlived its usefulness, are invited to investigate the results of its activities in many fields not generally known to the police. The masters of many private and public schools will testify to the splendid accomplishments of the society in effectively putting an end to the circulation among adolescents of highly objectionable magazines, pamphlets and pictures."

"This society is not a censor of public morality or of books, except to the extent necessarily incident to the work of an organization engaged in helping to secure the enforcement of laws which have been enacted by the people for their protection. Successfully to combat the organized business of vice and crime, it is necessary to secure evidence which will stand in court against all the counter evidence and cross questionings which clever criminals and their astute lawyers can devise. This requires the employment of plain clothes investigators.

"It is a mistake to assume that this society spends its time in endeavoring to detect crime where it does not exist. On the contrary, 90 per cent of its activities are on complaints of violation of the vice laws and requests for its assistance. When the society has a complaint and has reason to believe that there has been willful infraction of the vice laws, it sends an investigator to collect the available evidence in the case."

Improper Methods Charge Not Justified

"The Dunster case: "In the trial of the Dunster House bookshop case in the Superior Court, at which the society was not represented by counsel, an attack was made upon the methods adopted by the society in securing evidence to which widest publicity has been given. Because of the official stenographer's absence from Boston, it has been impossible up to the date of preparation of this statement to secure a transcript of the evidence introduced at the Superior Court trial. The directors have closely questioned the witnesses for the prosecution and investigated other available sources of information. As a result of this inquiry the evidence thus far disclosed to the directors has not seemed to justify the charge that agents of the society have employed improper methods in obtaining evidence."

"The questions involved are of such vital importance to the society and have become of such general interest that the society has thought it best to retain the services of counsel outside its membership and not previously employed by it in any capacity, to examine the record of the trial and to investigate all available evidence for the purpose of making an impartial fact-finding report to the directors on all aspects of the case affecting the society and its agents."

Employs Special Counsel

"At today's meeting of the directors the employment of such counsel has been authorized. A public announcement of his name will shortly be made. If this report discloses that methods adopted by the agent of the society in securing evidence in this now celebrated case were either illegal, improper or unethical, the directors will take immediate and effective steps to correct them."

"The public is again reminded that these activities followed evidence of sales which were admitted at the trial of sales of five copies of a book which the eloquent counsel for the defense publicly characterized as 'an utter abomination.' Fair-minded persons will suspend judgment until completion of the society's own investigation and until the case has been passed upon by the Supreme Judicial Court, to which notice of appeal has been given."

Accepts Resignation

Under the heading "Resignations" the statement continues:

"Presumably for the purpose of discrediting the society wide publicity has been given to resignations of various persons. Since Jan. 1, 1920, the following resignations have been received and acted upon: On Dec. 23, 1920, the resignation as a director of Julian L. Coolidge caused by pressure of other duties was received and accepted by the board. At today's meeting the resignation as a director of Dr. David D. Scannell has been accepted. Dr. Scannell's decision to resign was reached long before the recent publicity. He resigned for personal reasons only. His resignation was not due to any criticism of the methods of the society in procuring evidence in the Dunster case."

"On Dec. 24 the president received the resignation of Bishop Lawrence as vice president. This resignation was due to a desire to be relieved of official responsibility in this organization as in others. He did not anticipate the publicity or the inferences which resulted from this action. Bishop Lawrence has authorized the president to withhold his resignation for the present in order so far as lies in his power to correct the impression which has been broadened by some of the press that his resignation implies disapproval of and disagreement with the work of the society which he feels has been a whole of much service to the community. These statements have been submitted to and approved by Dr. Scannell and Bishop Lawrence. No other resignations have been received."

"These statements have been submitted to and approved by Dr. Scannell and Bishop Lawrence. No other resignations have been received."

Not Opposed to Book Law Change

Talking on the censorship law the statement concluded: "The society does not oppose amendment to the present law against obscene books. It does object to the phraseology of a particular bill which has been introduced. It will not oppose changing the law so as to make the law in Massachusetts conform to similar statutes enacted in most other States."

Dr. Calkins also dictated the following statement to newspapermen:

"At today's meeting of the board of directors of the New England Watch and Ward Society the following were present: The president, Raymond Calkins, the secretary, Charles S. Bodwell, and the following directors: Thomas D. Cabot, Sumner Clement, F. C. Brown, Grosvenor Calkins, Francis J. Moors and Mark W. Richardson.

"Bernard J. Rothwell was not present because he is absent in the West on a business trip. Godfrey L. Cabot is in Europe. Mr. David M. Chagnon was unexpectedly detained from the meeting."

HOUSE . . . . . No. 181

By Mr. Shattuck of Boston, petition of Edward A. Weeks and others for an amendment of the law relative to the publishing and selling of obscene books, pamphlets and ballads. Legal Affairs.

The Commonwealth of Massachusetts

In the Year One Thousand Nine Hundred and Thirty.

An Act relative to Obscene Literature.

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives in General Court assembled, and by the authority of the same, as follows:

- 1 Section twenty-eight of chapter two hundred and
- 2 seventy-two of the General Laws is hereby amended
- 3 by striking out, in the second line, the word "con-
- 4 taining", and inserting in place thereof the words:—
- 5 which, considered as a whole, is,—by striking out,
- 6 in the third line, the word "language",—and by
- 7 striking out, in the said third line, the word "tend-
- 8 ing" and inserting in place thereof the word:—tends.
- 9 —so as to read as follows:—Section 28. Whoever
- 10 imports, prints, publishes, sells or distributes a book,
- 11 pamphlet, ballad, printed paper or other thing which,
- 12 considered as a whole, is obscene, indecent or im-
- 13 pure, or manifestly tends to corrupt the morals of
- 14 youth, or an obscene, indecent or impure print,
- 15 picture, figure, image or description, manifestly tend-
- 16 ing to corrupt the morals of youth, or introduces
- 17 into a family, school or place of education, or buys,
- 18 procures, receives, or has in his possession any such
- 19 book, pamphlet, ballad, printed paper, obscene,

Boston Traveler

Vol. CV.—No. 101. 111 Tremont Street. Established 1825.

TUESDAY, JANUARY 14, 1930

The Watch and Ward Report

THE Watch and Ward Society has issued its long-awaited report on the Dunster Bookshop case.

The report fails to answer public criticism. The plan of the society to engage an outside attorney to investigate the case and make a fact-finding report is aside from the question. The public knows the facts. Upon the facts it bases its indignation.

We cannot see that the report meets the situation. Neither can we see the need of such an organization as the Watch and Ward Society. The work it professes to do is the business of the police and not of private groups.

THE BOSTON HERALD

TUESDAY, JANUARY 14, 1930

WATCH AND WARD REPLY

The reply of the Watch and Ward Society to the criticisms of Judge Fosdick, Dist. Atty. Bushnell, Ex-Atty-Gen. Herbert Parker and many others is not a reassuring or a convincing document. It does not justify the use of the methods such as those employed in the Dunster Book Shop case,—and there is a general impression that Society agents have been guilty before this of employing tactics which decent men consider reprehensible.

Nor does the reply explain fully the exact reasons why various men have withdrawn from it. The statement contributes but one new fact. There is a confirmation of the report that Dr. David D. Scannell has withdrawn. The Society appears to have received his letter of resignation before the Dunster Book Shop case came to a head, but was not frank enough to verify the newspaper stories at the time.

Possibly the Society can justify its further existence. Possibly it can so reform its methods that the public will be willing to tolerate it and to contribute to its support. Possibly men of the standing of Bishops Lawrence and Anderson and Dr. Scannell will give it their active assistance and so change its attitude toward the community as to make it less objectionable than it has been. Possibly.

Boston Daily Globe

TUESDAY, JAN 14, 1930

WATCH AND WARD TO PROBE DUNSTER CASE

Votes to Retain Counsel for Study Of Its Own—Denies Resignations Are Result of Court Trial

The services of counsel not connected with the New England Watch and Ward Society will be retained by the society to examine the records of the now famous Dunster book trial and investigate all available evidence in order to make "an impartial, fact-finding report on all aspects of the case affecting the society and its agents," according to a statement made public yesterday after a meeting of the directors of the society. It was also stated that the evidence "so far disclosed to the directors" in regard to this case has "not seemed to justify the charge that agents of the society have employed improper methods in obtaining evidence."

Regarding resignations rumored to be numerous it was stated that the president, Rev. Dr. Raymond Calkins, had received the resignation of Bishop William Lawrence as vice president on Dec. 24, but that Bishop Lawrence had authorized the president to withhold his resignation for the present in order, so far as lies in his power, to correct the impression—that his resignation implies disapproval of and disagreement with the work of the society. It was further stated that Bishop Lawrence feels that this work has been "as a whole of much service to the community."

The resignation of Dr. David D. Scannell, sent in some weeks ago, was accepted at yesterday's meeting, according to the statement, and the resignation of Prof. Julian L. Coolidge of Harvard University was received and accepted on Dec. 23, 1929. Both men had been directors of the society. Prof. Coolidge's reason for resigning was given as "pressure of other duties," and Dr. Scannell was stated to have resigned "for personal reasons only."

The society statement said this resignation was not due to any criticism of the Dunster case.

"I'm out, I'm free and I'm glad to be out," was the only comment Dr. Scannell would make when questioned by reporters last night, although he added that he had the greatest respect for Dr. Calkins and other officials of the society.

Present at the meeting of the directors yesterday were Dr. Calkins, Charles S. Doxwell, secretary of the Society, and the following directors: Thomas D. Cabot, Sumner Clement, Frank Chouteau Brown, Francis J. Moore and Mark W. Richardson. Of the directors not present, Godfrey L. Cabot, treasurer and director, is in Europe; Bernard J. Rothwell is in the West and David M. Claghorne, newly added to the board, was unexpectedly detained just before the meeting. Mr. Claghorne told a Globe reporter last night that he concurred in the statement given out by the other directors.

The meeting was held at the Boston City Club. Just after 2:30 o'clock, Grosvener Calkins, brother of the president, came out with typewritten statements for the reporters. He declined to add anything to the statement as did other directors when questioned last night.

Of the vice presidents listed, only Arthur McArthur of Dorchester and Rev. Dr. Endicott Peabody, headmaster of Groton School, could be reached. Mr. McArthur, who last week said that he was considering the possibility of resigning but would take no action until he saw the promised statement, said last night that he was quite satisfied with it and would not resign.

Dr. Peabody commented in more detail.

"I call that an admirable statement," he said. "Even if a mistake was made in the Dunster case—and I am not saying that one was made—I should not abandon any organization because of one mistake if I sympathized on the whole with its aims and purposes, as I do with those of the Watch and Ward Society."

The Dunster book case arose out of the trial of James A. Delacey, manager of the Dunster House Bookshop, and Joseph Sullivan, one of his clerks, in Middlesex Superior Court at Cambridge. They were convicted of selling improper literature, following the sale by Sullivan to John T. Slaymaker, a Watch and Ward agent, of a book which has been bitterly denounced. The book, not carried in stock, was obtained for the agent at his request, Slaymaker giving his name as John Tait. According to the testimony, five other copies had been similarly obtained on special order for three members of the Harvard faculty, a lawyer and a book collector.

Dist. Atty. Robert T. Bushnell, who prosecuted the case, scored the Watch and Ward Society and its agents, saying warning that so long as he is district attorney "and their agents go to a bookseller of good reputation and induce the commission of a crime, I will proceed against them for conspiracy." He, also, denounced the book.

The Society's Statement

The statement in full is as follows:

"The Watch and Ward Society was organized over 50 years ago for the promotion of public morality and the removal of corrupting agencies. Organizations for similar purposes are privately maintained in other communities, including New York, Washington, Cincinnati, Chicago, Albany and London. Present critics of the society, before concluding that it has outlived its usefulness, are invited to investigate the results of its activities in many fields not generally known to the police. The masters of many private and public schools will testify to the splendid accomplishments of the society in effectively putting an end to the circulation among adolescents of highly objectionable magazines, pamphlets and pictures.

"This society is not a censor of public morality or of books, except to the extent necessarily incident to the work of an organization engaged in helping to secure the enforcement of laws which have been enacted by the people for their protection. Successfully to combat the organized business of vice and crime, it is necessary to secure evidence which will stand in court against all the counter evidence and cross-questioning which clever criminals and their astute lawyers can devise. This requires the employment of plain clothes investigators.

Acts on Complaints

"It is a mistake to assume that this society spends its time in endeavoring to detect crime where it does not exist. On the contrary 90 percent of its activities are on complaints of violation of the vice laws and requests for its assistance. When the society has a complaint and has reason to believe that there has been wilful infraction of the vice laws, it sends an investigator to collect the available evidence in the case.

"It is not the policy of the society to participate in the prosecution of doubtful cases. This is evidenced by the fact that there have been convictions in approximately 95 percent of the cases with which it has been associated during the past 10 years.

"In the trial of the Dunster House Book Shop case in the Superior Court, at which the society was not represented by counsel, an attack was made upon the methods adopted by the society in securing evidence to which wide publicity has been given. Because of the official stenographer's absence from Boston, it has been impossible up to the date of preparation of this statement to secure a transcript of the evidence introduced at the Superior Court trial. The directors have closely questioned the witnesses for the prosecution and investigated other available sources of information. As a result of this inquiry the evidence thus far disclosed to the directors had not seemed to justify the charge that agents of the society have employed improper methods in obtaining evidence.

Outside Counsel Retained

"The questions involved are of such vital importance to the society and have become of such general interest that the society has thought it best to retain the services of counsel outside its membership and not previously employed by it in any capacity to examine the record of the trial and to investigate all available evidence for the purpose of making an impartial fact-finding report to the directors on all aspects of the case affecting the society and its agents.

"At today's meeting of the directors the employment of such counsel has been authorized. A public announcement of his name will shortly be made. If this report discloses that methods adopted by the agents of the society in securing evidence in this now celebrated case were either illegal, improper or unethical, the directors will take immediate and effective steps to correct them.

"The public is again reminded that these activities followed evidence of sales, which were admitted at the trial, of five copies of a book which the eloquent counsel for the defense publicly characterized as 'an utter abomination.'

"Fair minded persons will suspend judgment until completion of the society's own investigation and until the case has been passed upon by the Supreme Judicial Court, to which notice of appeal has been given.

Refers to Resignation

"Presumably for the purpose of discrediting the society, wide publicity has been given to reported resignations of various persons. Since Jan. 1, 1929, the following resignations have been received and acted upon:

"On Dec. 23, 1929, the resignation as a director of Julian L. Coolidge, caused by pressure of other duties, was received and accepted by the board.

"At today's meeting the resignation as a director of Dr. David D. Scannell has been accepted. Dr. Scannell's decision to resign was reached long before the recent publicity. He resigned for personal reasons only. His resignation was not due to any criticism of the methods of the society in procuring evidence in the Dunster case.

"On Dec. 24 the president received the resignation of Bishop Lawrence as a vice president. This resignation was due to a desire to be relieved of official responsibility in this organization, as in others. He did not anticipate the publicity or the inferences which resulted from this action. Bishop Lawrence has authorized the president to withhold his resignation for the present, in order, so far as lies in his power, to correct the impression which has been broadcast by some of the press that his resignation implies disapproval of and disagreement with the work of the society, which he feels has been, as a whole, of much service to the community.

"These statements have been submitted to and approved by Dr. Scannell and Bishop Lawrence. No other resignations have been received.

"The society does not oppose amendment of the present law against obscene books. It does object to the phraseology of a particular bill which has been introduced. It will not oppose changing the law so as to make the law in Massachusetts conform to similar statutes enacted in most other States."

20 indecent or impure print, picture, figure, image or 21 other thing, either for the purpose of sale, exhibition, 22 loan or circulation or with intent to introduce the 23 same into a family, school or place of education, shall 24 be punished by imprisonment for not more than two 25 years and by a fine of not less than one hundred nor 26 more than one thousand dollars.

Boston Traveler

Vol. CV.—No. 161. 171 Tremont Street. Established 1825.

TUESDAY, JANUARY 14, 1930

The Watch and Ward Report

THE Watch and Ward Society has issued its long-awaited report on the Dunster Bookshop case.

The report fails to answer public criticism. The plan of the society to engage an outside attorney to investigate the case and make a fact-finding report is aside from the question. The public knows the facts. Upon the facts it bases its indignation.

We cannot see that the report meets the situation. Neither can we see the need of such an organization as the Watch and Ward Society. The work it professes to do is the business of the police and not of private groups.

THE BOSTON HERALD

TUESDAY, JANUARY 14, 1930

WATCH AND WARD REPLY

The reply of the Watch and Ward Society to the criticisms of Judge Fosdick, Dist. Atty. Bushnell, Ex-Atty-Gen. Herbert Parker and many others is not a reassuring or a convincing document. It does not justify the use of the methods such as those employed in the Dunster Book Shop case,—and there is a general impression that Society agents have been guilty before this of employing tactics which decent men consider reprehensible.

Nor does the reply explain fully the exact reasons why various men have withdrawn from it. The statement contributes but one new fact. There is a confirmation of the report that Dr. David D. Scannell has withdrawn. The Society appears to have received his letter of resignation before the Dunster Book Shop case came to a head, but was not frank enough to verify the newspaper stories at the time.

Possibly the Society can justify its further existence. Possibly it can so reform its methods that the public will be willing to tolerate it and to contribute to its support. Possibly men of the standing of Bishops Lawrence and Anderson and Dr. Scannell will give it their active assistance and so change its attitude toward the community as to make it less objectionable than it has been. Possibly.

Boston Daily Globe

TUESDAY, JAN 14, 1930

WATCH AND WARD TO PROBE DUNSTER CASE

Votes to Retain Counsel for Study Of Its Own—Denies Resignations Are Result of Court Trial

The services of counsel not connected with the New England Watch and Ward Society will be retained by the society to examine the records of the now famous Dunster book trial and investigate all available evidence in order to make "an impartial, fact-finding report on all aspects of the case affecting the society and its agents," according to a statement made public yesterday after a meeting of the directors of the society. It was also stated that the evidence "so far disclosed to the directors" in regard to this case has "not seemed to justify the charge that agents of the society have employed improper methods in obtaining evidence."

Regarding resignations rumored to be numerous it was stated that the president, Rev. Dr. Raymond Calkins, had received the resignation of Bishop William Lawrence as vice president on Dec. 24, but that Bishop Lawrence had authorized the president to withhold his resignation for the present in order, so far as lies in his power, to correct the impression that his resignation implies disapproval of and disagreement with the work of the society. It was further stated that Bishop Lawrence feels that this work has been "as a whole of much service to the community."

Scannell and Coolidge Out

The resignation of Dr. David D. Scannell, sent in some weeks ago, was accepted at yesterday's meeting, according to the statement, and the resignation of Prof. Julian L. Coolidge of Harvard University was received and accepted on Dec. 23, 1929. Both men had been directors of the society. Prof. Coolidge's reason for resigning was given as "pressure of other duties," and Dr. Scannell was stated to have resigned "for personal reasons only." The society statement said this resignation was not due to any criticism of the Dunster case.

"I'm out, I'm free and I'm glad to be out," was the only comment Dr. Scannell would make when questioned by reporters last night, although he added that he had the greatest respect for Dr. Calkins and other officials of the society.

Present at the meeting of the directors yesterday were Dr. Calkins, Charles S. Dowdell, secretary of the Society, and the following directors: Thomas D. Cabot, Sumner Clement, Frank Chouteau Brown, Francis J. Moors and Mark W. Richardson. Of the directors not present, Godfrey L. Cabot, treasurer and director, is in Europe; Bernard J. Rothwell is in the West; and David M. Claghorne, newly added to the board, was unexpectedly detained just before the meeting. Mr. Claghorne told a Globe reporter last night that he concurred in the statement given out by the other directors.

McArthur Not to Resign

The meeting was held at the Boston City Club. Just after 2:30 o'clock, Grosvenor Calkins, brother of the president, came out with typewritten statements for the reporters. He declined to add anything to the statement as did other directors when questioned last night.

Of the vice presidents listed, only Arthur McArthur of Dorchester and Rev. Dr. Endicott Peabody, headmaster of Groton School, could be reached. Mr. McArthur, who last week said that he was considering the possibility of resigning but would take no action until he saw the promised statement, said last night that he was quite satisfied with it and would not resign.

Dr. Peabody commented in more detail. "I call that an admirable statement," he said. "Even if a mistake was made in the Dunster case—and I am not saying that one was made—I should not abandon any organization because of one mistake if I sympathized on the whole with its aims and purposes, as I do with those of the Watch and Ward Society."

Agent Bought Book

The Dunster book case arose out of the trial of James A. Delacey, manager of the Dunster House Bookshop, and Joseph Sullivan, one of his clerks, in Middlesex Superior Court at Cambridge. They were convicted of selling improper literature, following the sale by Sullivan to John T. Slaymaker, a Watch and Ward agent, of a book which has been bitterly denounced. The book, not carried in stock, was obtained for the agent at his request, Slaymaker giving his name as John Tait. According to the testimony, five other copies had been similarly obtained on special order for three members of the Harvard faculty, a lawyer and a book collector.

Dist. Atty. Robert T. Bushnell, who prosecuted the case, scored the Watch and Ward Society and its agents, serving warning that so long as he is district attorney "and their agents go to a bookseller of good reputation and induce the commission of a crime, I will proceed against them for conspiracy." He also denounced the book.

The Society's Statement

The statement in full is as follows: "The Watch and Ward Society was organized over 50 years ago for the promotion of public morality and the removal of corrupting agencies. Organizations for similar purposes are privately maintained in other communities, including New York, Washington, Cincinnati, Chicago, Albany and London. Present critics of the society, before concluding that it has outlived its usefulness, are invited to investigate the results of its activities in many fields not generally known to the police. The masters of many private and public schools will testify to the splendid accomplishments of the society in effectively putting an end to the circulation among adolescents of highly objectionable magazines, pamphlets and pictures.

"This society is not a censor of public morality or of books, except to the extent necessarily incident to the work of an organization engaged in helping to secure the enforcement of laws which have been enacted by the people for their protection. Successfully to combat the organized business of vice and crime, it is necessary to secure evidence which will stand in court against all the counter evidence and cross-questioning which clever criminals and their astute lawyers can devise. This requires the employment of plain clothes investigators.

Acts on Complaints

"It is a mistake to assume that this society spends its time in endeavoring to detect crime where it does not exist. On the contrary 90 percent of its activities are on complaints of violation of the vice laws and requests for its assistance. When the society has a complaint and has reason to believe that there has been willful infraction of the vice laws, it sends an investigator to collect the available evidence in the case.

"It is not the policy of the society to participate in the prosecution of doubtful cases. This is evidenced by the fact that there have been convictions in approximately 98 percent of the cases with which it has been associated during the past 10 years.

"In the trial of the Dunster House Book Shop case in the Superior Court, at which the society was not represented by counsel, an attack was made upon the methods adopted by the society in securing evidence to which widest publicity has been given. Because of the official stenographer's absence from Boston, it has been impossible up to the date of preparation of this statement to secure a transcript of the evidence introduced at the Superior Court trial. The directors have closely questioned the witnesses for the prosecution and investigated other available sources of information. As a result of this inquiry the evidence thus far disclosed to the directors had not seemed to justify the charge that agents of the society have employed improper methods in obtaining evidence.

Outside Counsel Retained

"The questions involved are of such vital importance to the society and have become of such general interest that the society has thought it best to retain the services of counsel outside its membership and not previously employed by it in any capacity to examine the record of the trial and to investigate all available evidence for the purpose of making an impartial fact-finding report to the directors on all aspects of the case affecting the society and its agents.

"At today's meeting of the directors the employment of such counsel has been authorized. A public announcement of his name will shortly be made. If this report discloses that methods adopted by the agents of the society in securing evidence in this now celebrated case were either illegal, improper or unethical, the directors will take immediate and effective steps to correct them.

"The public is again reminded that these activities followed evidence of sales, which were admitted at the trial, of five copies of a book which the eloquent counsel for the defense publicly characterized as 'an utter abomination.'

"Fair minded persons will suspend judgment until completion of the society's own investigation and until the case has been passed upon by the Supreme Judicial Court, to which notice of appeal has been given.

Refers to Resignation

"Presumably for the purpose of discrediting the society, wide publicity has been given to reported resignations of various persons. Since Jan. 1, 1929, the following resignations have been received and acted upon:

"On Dec. 23, 1929, the resignation as a director of Julian L. Coolidge, caused by pressure of other duties, was received and accepted by the board.

"At today's meeting the resignation as a director of Dr. David D. Scannell has been accepted. Dr. Scannell's decision to resign was reached long before the recent publicity. He resigned for personal reasons only. His resignation was not due to any criticism of the methods of the society in procuring evidence in the Dunster case.

"On Dec. 24 the president received the resignation of Bishop Lawrence as a vice president. This resignation was due to a desire to be relieved of official responsibility in this organization, as in others. He did not anticipate the publicity or the inference which resulted from this action. Bishop Lawrence has authorized the president to withhold his resignation for the present, in order, so far as lies in his power, to correct the impression which has been broadcast by some of the press that his resignation implies disapproval of and disagreement with the work of the society, which he feels has been, as a whole, of much service to the community.

"These statements have been submitted to and approved by Dr. Scannell and Bishop Lawrence. No other resignations have been received.

"The society does not oppose amendment of the present law against obscene books. It does object to the phraseology of a particular bill which has been introduced. It will not oppose changing the law so as to make the law in Massachusetts conform to similar statutes enacted in most other States."

WATCH & WARD HIRES COUNSEL

Will Correct Methods if Such Are Found Illegal on Unethical

Defending its procedure in the Dunster Bookshop case, but promising to employ a lawyer to examine the evidence to discover if agents' methods were "illegal, improper or unethical," a statement issued after a directors' meeting of the New England Watch and Ward Society yesterday accepted the resignations of Julian L. Coolidge and Dr. David D. Scannell.

Bishop Lawrence's resignation as a vice-president is withheld "to correct the impression which has been broadcast by some of the press that his resignation implies disapproval of and disagreement with the work of the society which he feels has been as a whole of much service to the society."

"I'm out—I'm free and I'm glad of it," said Dr. Scannell yesterday when asked to comment on his resignation. He spoke highly of other members of the board.

Seven of the dozen directors of the society were present at yesterday's meeting. They were President Raymond Calkins, Frank Chouteau Brown, Thomas Dudley Cabot, Grosvenor Calkins, Sumner Clement, Francis J. Moore and Mark W. Richardson. The executive secretary of the society, Charles S. Bodwell, was also present.

It was announced that D. M. Claghorn, another director, intended to be at the meeting, but was detained. Of the other directors, Bernard J. Rothwell is in Chicago and Godfrey L. Cabot is in Europe.

The formal statement issued yesterday begins by praising the record of the society in suppressing vice. It denies that the society spends its time looking for crime where it does not exist and says there have been convictions in 98 per cent. of its cases.

It proceeds to discuss the Dunster Bookshop case and says that no stenographic report of the trial had been secured until recently. The directors, it says, have closely questioned the witnesses in the case and have found that the charge that agents used improper methods is not justified.

The directors will, however, "retain the services of counsel outside the membership and not previously employed by it in any capacity to examine the record of the trial and to investigate all available evidence for the purpose of making an impartial fact-finding report to the directors on all aspects of the case affecting the society and its agents."

If this report discloses that methods adopted by the agents of the society in securing evidence in this now celebrated case were illegal, improper or unethical the directors will take immediate and effective steps to correct them.

"Presumably for the purpose of discrediting the society," the statement continues, "wide publicity has been given to reported resignations of various persons."

THREE RESIGNATIONS

The statement then declares that the resignation of Julian L. Coolidge was caused by pressure of other duties, the withdrawal of Dr. Scannell was for personal reasons only and the resignation of Bishop Lawrence was "due to a desire to be relieved of official responsibility in this organization as in others."

In conclusion the statement says the society is not opposed to changes in the book laws to make them conform with similar laws in other states. More than a score of reporters and photographers from Boston, New York and Baltimore and the various press services waited outside room Q on the 10th floor of the City Club as the Watch and Ward directors went into session at 1 o'clock yesterday afternoon.

BOSTON TRAVELER, JANUARY 14, 1930

After about an hour Thomas D. Cabot passed through the hall and remarked that the meeting would last but a few minutes and there was again a long silence.

Various organizations were meeting in rooms adjoining that of the Watch and Ward directors. When members of these clubs came into the hallway and saw the flock of reporters and photographers they quickly exclaimed, "We're not from the Watch and Ward!"

George Coleman, attending a City Club Forum meeting in room P was asked if he heard any sounds of disturbance in room Q, the Watch and Ward meeting place.

"No," he said laughingly, "we were in room P and they are in room Q, and we are both minding our P's and Q's!"

Finally, Grosvenor Calkins emerged from the Watch and Ward room bearing copies of the statement. "There is no need asking me questions," said Mr. Calkins, "this statement explains the entire situation and there will be nothing further."

He added that under no conditions would the directors present pose for a picture.

TEXT OF STATEMENT

The Watch and Ward Society was organized over 50 years ago for the promotion of public morality and the removal of corrupting agencies. Organizations for similar purposes are privately maintained in other communities including New York, Washington, Cincinnati, Chicago, Albany and London. Present critics of the society, before concluding that it has outlived its usefulness, are invited to investigate the results of its activities in many fields not generally known to the public. The masters of many private and public schools will testify to the splendid accomplishments of the society in effectively putting an end to the circulation among adolescents of highly objectionable magazines, pamphlets and pictures.

This society is not a censor of public morality or of books, except to the extent necessarily incident to the work of an organization engaged in helping secure the enforcement of laws which have been enacted by the people for their protection.

Successfully to combat the organized business of vice and crime it is necessary to secure evidence which will stand in court against all the counter evidence and cross-questioning which clever criminals and their astute lawyers can devise. This requires the employment of plain clothes investigators.

It is a mistake to assume that this society spends its time endeavoring to detect crime where it does not exist. On the contrary, 90 per cent. of its activities are on complaints of violation of the vice laws and requests for its assistance. When the society has a complaint and has reason to believe that there has been willful infraction of the vice laws, it sends an investigator to collect the available evidence in the case.

It is not the policy of the society to participate in the prosecution of doubtful cases. This is evidenced by the fact that there have been convictions in approximately 98 per cent. of the cases with which it has been associated during the past 10 years.

MAINLY ON COMPLAINTS

On Dec. 24 the president received the resignation of Bishop Lawrence as a vice-president. This resignation was due to a desire to be relieved of official responsibility in this organization as in others. He did not anticipate the publicity or the inferences which resulted from this action. Bishop Lawrence has authorized the president to withhold his resignation for the present, in order, so far as lies in his power to correct the impression which has been broadcast by some of the press that his resignation implies disapproval of and disagreement with the work of the society.

These statements have been submitted to and approved by Dr. Scannell and Bishop Lawrence. No other resignations have been received.

The censorship law.—The society does not oppose amendment of the present law against obscene books. It does object to the phraseology of a particular bill which has been introduced. It will not oppose changing the law so to make the law in Massachusetts conform to similar statutes enacted in most other states.

DUNSTER SHOP CASE

The Dunster case.—In the trial of the Dunster House Book Shop case in the superior court at which the society was not represented by counsel an attack was made upon the methods adopted by the society in securing evidence to which wide publicity has been given. Because of the official stenographer's absence from Boston, it has been impossible up to the date of preparation of this statement to secure a transcript of the evidence introduced at the superior court trial.

The directors have closely questioned the witnesses for the prosecution and investigated other available sources of information. As a result of this inquiry the evidence thus far disclosed to the directors has not seemed to justify the charge that agents of the society have employed improper methods in obtaining evidence.

COUNSEL RETAINED

The questions involved are of such vital importance to the society and have become of such general interest that the society has thought it best to retain the services of counsel outside the membership and not previously employed by it in any capacity to examine the record of the trial and to investigate all available evidence for the purpose of making an impartial fact-finding report to the directors on all aspects of the case affecting the society and its agents.

At today's meeting of the directors the employment of such counsel has been authorized. A public announcement of his name will shortly be made. If this report discloses that methods adopted by the agents of the society in securing evidence in this now celebrated case were either illegal, improper or unethical the directors will take immediate and effective steps to correct them.

The public is again reminded that these activities followed evidence of sales which were admitted at the trial of five copies of a book which the eloquent counsel for the defense publicly characterized as "an utter abomination."

NOTICE OF APPEAL

Fair minded persons will suspend judgment until completion of the society's own investigation and until the case has been passed upon by the supreme judicial court to which notice of appeal has been given.

Resignations.—Presumably for the purpose of discrediting the society wide publicity has been given to reported resignations of various persons. Since Jan. 1, 1929, the following resignations have been received and acted upon:

On Dec. 23, 1929, the resignation as a director of Julian L. Coolidge, caused by pressure of other duties, was received by the board.

At today's meeting the resignation as a director of Dr. David D. Scannell has been accepted. Dr. Scannell's decision to resign was reached long before the recent publicity. He resigned for personal reasons only. His resignation was not due to any criticism of the methods of the society in procuring evidence in the Dunster case.

BISHOP LAWRENCE'S REASON

On Dec. 24 the president received the resignation of Bishop Lawrence as a vice-president. This resignation was due to a desire to be relieved of official responsibility in this organization as in others. He did not anticipate the publicity or the inferences which resulted from this action. Bishop Lawrence has authorized the president to withhold his resignation for the present, in order, so far as lies in his power to correct the impression which has been broadcast by some of the press that his resignation implies disapproval of and disagreement with the work of the society.

These statements have been submitted to and approved by Dr. Scannell and Bishop Lawrence. No other resignations have been received.

The censorship law.—The society does not oppose amendment of the present law against obscene books. It does object to the phraseology of a particular bill which has been introduced. It will not oppose changing the law so to make the law in Massachusetts conform to similar statutes enacted in most other states.

DUNSTER SHOP CASE

The Dunster case.—In the trial of the Dunster House Book Shop case in the superior court at which the society was not represented by counsel an attack was made upon the methods adopted by the society in securing evidence to which wide publicity has been given. Because of the official stenographer's

WATCH & WARD HIRES COUNSEL

Will Correct Methods if Such Are Found Illegal Or Unethical

EXPLAINS RECENT RESIGNATIONS

Defending its procedure in the Dunster Bookshop case, but promising to employ a lawyer to examine the evidence to discover if agents' methods were "illegal, improper or unethical," a statement issued after a directors' meeting of the New England Watch and Ward Society yesterday accepted the resignations of Julian L. Coolidge and Dr. David D. Scannell.

Bishop Lawrence's resignation as a vice-president is withheld "to correct the impression which has been broadcast by some of the press that his resignation implies disapproval of and disagreement with the work of the society which he feels has been as a whole of much service to the society."

"I'm out—I'm free and I'm glad of it," said Dr. Scannell yesterday when asked to comment on his resignation. He spoke highly of other members of the board.

Seven of the dozen directors of the society were present at yesterday's meeting. They were President Raymond Calkins, Frank Chouteau Brown, Thomas Dudley Cabot, Grosvenor Calkins, Sumner Clement, Francis J. Moore and Mark W. Richardson. The executive secretary of the society, Charles S. Bodwell, was also present.

It was announced that D. M. Claghorn, another director, intended to be at the meeting, but was detained. Of the other directors, Bernard J. Rothwell is in Chicago and Godfrey L. Cabot is in Europe.

The formal statement issued yesterday begins by praising the record of the society in suppressing vice. It denies that the society spends its time looking for crime where it does not exist and says there have been convictions in 98 per cent. of its cases.

It proceeds to discuss the Dunster Bookshop case and says that no stenographic report of the trial had been secured until recently. The directors, it says, have closely questioned the witnesses in the case and have found that the charge that agents used improper methods is not justified.

The directors will, however, "retain the services of counsel outside the membership and not previously employed by it in any capacity to examine the record of the trial and to investigate all available evidence for the purpose of making an impartial fact-finding report to the directors on all aspects of the case affecting the society and its agents."

If this report discloses that methods adopted by the agents of the society in securing evidence in this now celebrated case were illegal, improper or unethical the directors will take immediate and effective steps to correct them.

"Presumably for the purpose of discrediting the society," the statement continues, "wide publicity has been given to reported resignations of various persons."

THREE RESIGNATIONS

The statement then declares that the resignation of Julian L. Coolidge was caused by pressure of other duties, the withdrawal of Dr. Scannell was for personal reasons only and the resignation of Bishop Lawrence was "due to a desire to be relieved of official responsibility in this organization as in others."

THE BOSTON HERALD, JANUARY 14, 1930

In conclusion the statement says the society is not opposed to changes in the book laws to make them conform with similar laws in other states.

More than a score of reporters and photographers from Boston, New York and Baltimore and the various press services waited outside room Q on the 10th floor of the City Club as the Watch and Ward directors went into session at 1 o'clock yesterday afternoon.

After about an hour Thomas D. Cabot passed through the hall and remarked that the meeting would last but a few minutes and there was again a long silence.

Various organizations were meeting in rooms adjoining that of the Watch and Ward directors. When members of these clubs came into the hallway and saw the flock of reporters and photographers they quickly exclaimed, "We're not from the Watch and Ward!"

George Coleman, attending a City Club Forum meeting in room P was asked if he heard any sounds of disturbance in room Q, the Watch and Ward meeting place.

"No," he said laughingly, "we were in room P and they are in room Q, and we are both minding our P's and Q's!"

Finally, Grosvenor Calkins emerged from the Watch and Ward room bearing copies of the statement. "There is no need asking me questions," said Mr. Calkins, "this statement explains the entire situation and there will be nothing further."

He added that under no conditions would the directors present pose for a picture.

TEXT OF STATEMENT

The Watch and Ward Society was organized over 50 years ago for the promotion of public morality and the removal of corrupting agencies. Organizations for similar purposes are privately maintained in other communities including New York, Washington, Cincinnati, Chicago, Albany and London. Present critics of the society, before concluding that it has outlived its usefulness, are invited to investigate the results of its activities in many fields not generally known to the public. The masters of many private and public schools will testify to the splendid accomplishments of the society in effectively putting an end to the circulation among adolescents of highly objectionable magazines, pamphlets and pictures.

This society is not a censor of public morality or of books, except to the extent necessarily incident to the work of an organization engaged in helping secure the enforcement of laws which have been enacted by the people for their protection.

Successfully to combat the organized business of vice and crime it is necessary to secure evidence which will stand in court against all the counter evidence and cross-questioning which clever criminals and their astute lawyers can devise. This requires the employment of plain clothes investigators.

It is a mistake to assume that this society spends its time endeavoring to detect crime where it does not exist. On the contrary, 90 per cent. of its activities are on complaints of violation of the vice laws and requests for its assistance. When the society has a complaint and has reason to believe that there has been willful infraction of the vice laws, it sends an investigator to collect the available evidence in the case.

It is not the policy of the society to participate in the prosecution of doubtful cases. This is evidenced by the fact that there have been convictions in approximately 98 per cent. of the cases with which it has been associated during the past 10 years.

MAINLY ON COMPLAINTS

On Dec. 24 the president received the resignation of Bishop Lawrence as a vice-president. This resignation was due to a desire to be relieved of official responsibility in this organization as in others. He did not anticipate the publicity or the inferences which resulted from this action. Bishop Lawrence has authorized the president to withhold his resignation for the present, in order, so far as lies in his power to correct the impression which has been broadcast by some of the press that his resignation implies disapproval of and disagreement with the work of the society.

These statements have been submitted to and approved by Dr. Scannell and Bishop Lawrence. No other resignations have been received.

The censorship law.—The society does not oppose amendment of the present law against obscene books. It does object to the phraseology of a particular bill which has been introduced. It will not oppose changing the law so to make the law in Massachusetts conform to similar statutes enacted in most other states.

DUNSTER SHOP CASE

The Dunster case.—In the trial of the Dunster House Book Shop case in the superior court at which the society was not represented by counsel an attack was made upon the methods adopted by the society in securing evidence to which wide publicity has been given. Because of the official stenographer's absence from Boston, it has been impossible up to the date of preparation of this statement to secure a transcript of the evidence introduced at the superior court trial.

The directors have closely questioned the witnesses for the prosecution and investigated other available sources of information. As a result of this inquiry the evidence thus far disclosed to the directors has not seemed to justify the charge that agents of the society have employed improper methods in obtaining evidence.

COUNSEL RETAINED

The questions involved are of such vital importance to the society and have become of such general interest that the society has thought it best to retain the services of counsel outside the membership and not previously employed by it in any capacity to examine the record of the trial and to investigate all available evidence for the purpose of making an impartial fact-finding report to the directors on all aspects of the case affecting the society and its agents.

At today's meeting of the directors the employment of such counsel has been authorized. A public announcement of his name will shortly be made. If this report discloses that methods adopted by the agents of the society in securing evidence in this now celebrated case were either illegal, improper or unethical the directors will take immediate and effective steps to correct them.

The public is again reminded that these activities followed evidence of sales which were admitted at the trial of five copies of a book which the eloquent counsel for the defense publicly characterized as "an utter abomination."

NOTICE OF APPEAL

Fair minded persons will suspend judgment until completion of the society's own investigation and until the case has been passed upon by the supreme judicial court to which notice of appeal has been given.

Resignations.—Presumably for the purpose of discrediting the society wide publicity has been given to reported resignations of various persons. Since Jan. 1, 1929, the following resignations have been received and acted upon:

On Dec. 23, 1929, the resignation as a director of Julian L. Coolidge, caused by pressure of other duties, was received by the board.

At today's meeting the resignation as a director of Dr. David D. Scannell has been accepted. Dr. Scannell's decision to resign was reached long before the recent publicity. He resigned for personal reasons only. His resignation was not due to any criticism of the methods of the society in procuring evidence in the Dunster case.

BISHOP LAWRENCE'S REASON

On Dec. 24 the president received the resignation of Bishop Lawrence as a vice-president. This resignation was due to a desire to be relieved of official responsibility in this organization as in others. He did not anticipate the publicity or the inferences which resulted from this action. Bishop Lawrence has authorized the president to withhold his resignation for the present, in order, so far as lies in his power to correct the impression which has been broadcast by some of the press that his resignation implies disapproval of and disagreement with the work of the society.

These statements have been submitted to and approved by Dr. Scannell and Bishop Lawrence. No other resignations have been received.

The censorship law.—The society does not oppose amendment of the present law against obscene books. It does object to the phraseology of a particular bill which has been introduced. It will not oppose changing the law so to make the law in Massachusetts conform to similar statutes enacted in most other states.

It is not the policy of the society to participate in the prosecution of doubtful cases. This is evidenced by the fact that there have been convictions in approximately 98 per cent. of the cases with which it has been associated during the past 10 years.

DUNSTER SHOP CASE

The Dunster case.—In the trial of the Dunster House Book Shop case in the superior court at which the society was not represented by counsel an attack was made upon the methods adopted by the society in securing evidence to which wide publicity has been given. Because of the official stenographer's

January 18, 1930

The Boston Post CHALLENGE TO BROWN TO PROVE CASE

Library Director Denies Connection With Vice Squads

Charles F. D. Belden, director of the Boston Public Library, stepped into the book law fray here yesterday, and openly challenged Frank Chouteau Brown, of the Watch and Ward Society, to prove certain statements made by the latter in Springfield recently to the effect that "librarians of this State are mixed up in the vice squads."

DEMANDS PROOF

Expressing astonishment and indignation at the Brown charges and offering printed reports in substantiation of his counter charges, Mr. Belden flatly called on Brown to prove his quoted contention that "those interested in changing the book law are the book-sellers, organizations such as the Civil Liberty League and the forces of anarchy and rebellion."

Brown's statement was branded as false by the library director, in an interview yesterday with a Post reporter, citing a long list of prominent educators, librarians, statesmen, clergymen and others of high repute who are professionally in support of the Shattuck book bill, now before the Legislature.

"I have no indications that there are any 'vice interests' behind the Shattuck bill, and I myself am strongly in favor of it."

"As for Mr. Brown's charge that the librarians of this State are mixed up in 'vice squads,' why doesn't he prove it?"

Discussing the recent banning of books in this city, Director Belden took sharp issue with the ban of Ernest Hemingway's "Farewell to Arms" in particular.

"The magazine was banned in Boston," he pointed out. "We had to cut it out of all our copies of the magazine in the files. But when the book was published it was not banned and it is now on sale in all Boston book stores and is rented in all circulating libraries."

"Despite this fact, despite the fact that you can freely buy it or rent it, if you want to read a copy of it in the Boston Public Library, you must make special application to the director."

Parker May Prepare New Censor Law

Former Attorney General Offers Services to Committee on Legal Affairs

Although not scheduled to speak, former Attorney General Herbert Parker today appeared before the legislative committee considering the proposed revision of the Massachusetts book law, and offered to draft a new law for the committee if the revision now under consideration should not meet with approval. Mr. Parker's offer was made in answer to a question by Representative Barnett of New Bedford, as to whether he was willing to do so, after the former attorney general had made a stirring address urging that some new method of controlling literature be enacted in the Legislature this year. He followed an equally forceful address by former Mayor Andrew J. Peters of Boston.

Proposes Reserved List

The first person to appear was Representative Roland D. Sawyer of Ware who presented his bill which would provide for a reserved list of books which might be sold to private individuals who ought to have such books. He made a brief address in which he urged the committee in viewing all the bills before it to consider literature after the war in a different light from that which was produced before the war. It is very important, he said, "that the committee remember this line of demarcation, and he added that if they did this they could not but believe in passing the bill providing the reserved list for adults similar to that which has always been in existence in almost all libraries.

"The position has become intolerable," he said, "when literature can no longer be distributed not to children but even to college professors."

Representative Sawyer made an attack upon Frank Chouteau Brown, who recently spoke in Springfield, where he said that all those who favored revision of the censorship law should be classed with anarchists. In that case, the speaker said, men like Mr. Belden of the Boston Public Library and Mr. Bolton of the Boston Athenaeum were anarchists, something which he knew the committee would consider ridiculous. He declared that the experience of the good sense of librarians should be made into law for the protection of intelligent adults. After saying that he knew the bill as presented was in imperfect form, Mr. Sawyer left the room and there was no further discussion on his bill.

History of Movement

Henry L. Burnham, Boston lawyer and a member of the Massachusetts Committee for the Revision of the Book Laws, was the next speaker. He briefly explained the purpose of the proposed revision and then introduced Edward A. Weeks, Jr., of Boston, who told in brief form the history of the committee of which he is the chairman. He said that district attorney has, of course, the power to not prosecute the case, which would obviate the necessity of presenting the book to a jury, but not prosecuting should be done only where facts are obvious, and not where mere opinion is involved.

On the question of punishment for violation of the law he said that it might be made a substantial maximum fine for the first offense and a jail sentence for the second.

Rules of percentage of obscenity in a book would be difficult to set, he thought, as to whether there is a filthy passage on a page at the beginning of a book and none again till the last page, and what percentage that would make, say 5 per cent against 95 per cent of unobjectionable matter. It is necessary to argue from the whole book if it tends to corrupt the morals of the people.

Present Law Too Drastic

Hilmer C. Wellman of the public library in Springfield, while advocating the proposed reform in law, was willing to grant that most of the books complained of were bad books, and it would be no loss if they were disposed of, but the existing law is so drastic in its application to other books that a change is needed. The real trouble, as he viewed it, is that there is no definition of obscenity as it can be applied to a book or a picture. For instance, 5 per cent of the space is obscene and 95 per cent of the book is clean, is the book obscene? Only by knowing what effect it has upon the morals of the people, and not by the particular language used, can it be judged. Moreover, it makes a difference what kind of book it is. Language that is proper in a medical book may be obscene in a popular book. The only way to get a satisfactory solution, he said, is to allow the whole book to be read, and he believed that the jury should have the contents of the book as a whole.

As to whether the Superior Court should be the court of last jurisdiction in these cases, he saw room for argument. He thought that as a rule the decision of that court would end the case.

Against Narrow Legislation

Former Mayor Peters was the next speaker. He urged the committee seriously to consider some new bill, because he felt that any law, such as the present one, which might be considered to infringe upon the liberty of any individual should be looked at with suspicion. He too stressed the impossibility of judging a book by a single passage pointing out as a corollary that no person wants to have his character judged by one or two remarks which he might make. "You cannot make people good by legislation," he said. "The appreciation of literature and education is what is needed. We must not have a narrow and unfair standard of judgment of what may be sold." He also stressed the post-war change in conversation, general knowledge, and the general attitude toward life of the people. "I do not think we can change the public's taste, nor can we protect the public by narrow legislation."

Mr. Parker, who acted as counsel for the defense in the Dunster House book case, was next called. "I come here willingly," he said, "and not without experience in legislation or in the interpretation of laws. I say for what it is worth that I believe in the provisions of the bill as filed by Mr. Shattuck. The subject is so vital that we cannot ignore it." Mr. Parker then went on to say that the bill, as filed, might need expansion. He added that whatever was done to it, it should be borne in mind that all books "must be read and considered judiciously and in fact as a whole."

Asks "Candid" Legislation

Mr. Parker deplored the present law which allows a book to be judged by separate parts. "A book with ten chapters, he declared, "ought not to be forbidden circulation because of certain almost negligible portions. This the organized move for revision of the book law began in 1919, and it is the result of a long and arduous struggle which has happened that year. It started among a group of booksellers and publishers, but by 1926 800 librarians had joined with them. By the fall of 1929, he said, sixty-eight books had been banned in Boston, including a Pulitzer prize winner and the works of such men as H. G. Wells and Sinclair Lewis. He then referred to Ernest Hemingway's book, "A Farewell to Arms," which "for reasons suppressed when it appeared in a magazine but was freely sold when it appeared in book form." He also said that he had heard that had not Dreiser's "An American Tragedy" been suppressed Mr. Dreiser might have been awarded the Nobel prize.

He said that in the fall of 1929 the citizens of the State who felt a need for legislative relief had joined the committee to the extent of 300. These people, he said, were as much interested in public morals as they were in books. He then presented the list which contained the names of Bishop Charles Lewis Slattery and various other clergymen, business men, lawyers, social workers, booksellers, publishers and public spirited citizens, declaring that all these people believe if the "as a whole" law were passed the public would at last be relieved of the onus of the present censorship.

Mr. Weeks was questioned by one of the committee regarding Hemingway's book. The senator thought it had been published by the Atlantic Monthly Company of which Mr. Weeks is an editor, but when he heard that it was published by a New York firm he seemed very much relieved.

Mrs. Brook questioned Mr. Weeks

on "All Quiet on the Western Front," asking if that book had been deleted because of the law. Mr. Weeks replied that was one of the reasons.

Representative Ginsberg asked Mr. Weeks if he would be satisfied with the passage of a law as reported out of committee last year. Mr. Weeks said that he would, in a way, but that he felt the present vision was much more satisfactory.

District Attorney Bushnell was the next speaker.

"Don't Let Down Bars"

"I would not go so far as some in revising this law and I am certainly opposed to any law which would let down the bars regarding strictly pornographic books and the cheap magazines which are printed for no other purpose than to make a profit." District Attorney Bushnell said. "That material cannot be permitted to be sold but I think that these people have shown a wise restraint in presenting their bill. It does not in any degree let down the bars. I am sick to death of the ridicule which has been heaped upon Massachusetts and Boston. I am sick to death of having this section called a backward district populated by yokels who are without any spirit or intelligence, who must look to others for permission to look, to hear or to see anything."

Mr. Bushnell continued with the prediction that if the proposed law is passed it will eliminate all the difficulties in the future. The booksellers can then have the book passed upon as a whole by a jury, or they may waive trial by jury. But he pointed out that there is a real question whether the proposed law is broad enough to include a magazine which has one obscene story. Such a magazine should be brought within the law, he said.

Mr. Bushnell argued against continuance of what he termed the "private censorship" as it is practiced in Boston. A member of the committee inquired what he meant by saying that private enterprises are doing the censorship work, whether he had the Watch and Ward Society in mind? He said he meant the Watch and Ward and the police and others.

"Would it be for the good of the community if the Watch and Ward Society were done away with?" returned the committee member.

"If you want my personal opinion," replied the district attorney, "I'd say yes, but the Watch and Ward Society is not on trial here."

Further answering questions from the committee, Mr. Bushnell said that the revision is consonant with a sane and stern and frank attitude. He warned against allowing book control to be dominated either by "fanaticism nor by too great laxity."

Let the legislation, whatever it may be, be candid. Let it be plain, let the daylight shine upon it so that every one can understand its aims."

Chairman Charles W. Johnson, of the committee, then said that it was his purpose to see that right was done by the committee. Mr. Parker was asked by Representative Barnett of New Bedford if he would be willing to draft a law, provided the one under consideration should not meet with the committee's approval. Mr. Parker said that he would.

"Do you think the proposed bill would prohibit books of a censorable nature as well as the present one?" he was asked. Mr. Parker replied that he saw no reason why it would not.

He was then asked if he would like to see the juries of the State set up as "periodical boards of censors."

The reply was in the form of a spirited defense of the juries of all counties of Massachusetts. These juries, Mr. Parker added, "acting conscientiously under the guidance of the judiciary," were the proper tribunals for judging books.

Asked if he thought short stories incorporated in a book or magazine would be censorable under the "as a whole" provision, Mr. Parker asserted that this was a problem that would need considerable attention.

Another speaker who appeared in defense of the bill was Mrs. John H. Johnson, who reported that she had just come from a meeting of the Massachusetts Federation of Women's Clubs where it had been voted, 631 to 79, to support the "as a whole" bill in principle. Father Spence Burton spoke, urging that the Bible be censored because then, he said, people would read it. Mrs. A. L. Hutchins, a trustee of the Newton Free Library, spoke from the viewpoint of a mother, asserting that "An American Tragedy," recently adjudged obscene, was in reality an education for any woman who had a boy to bring up. Samuel Eliot Morison, professor of history at Harvard, warned against a return to Victorianism and declared that if the present law is changed Massachusetts may again "head the procession" as it did in the days when Emerson and Charles Eliot Norton were lone champions of Walt Whitman's poems. Russell H. Stafford, D. D., pastor of the Old South Church, Mrs. Henry D. Tudor of Boston, Herbert R. Burgess, Boston bookseller, Dr. George H. Spencer, Massachusetts Bible Society, and Frank H. Chase, reference librarian at the Boston Public Library, also spoke for the revision.

Boston Transcript

WEDNESDAY, JANUARY 22, 1930

Serene Among the Grenades

While bombs of the censorship battle burst today in the Gardner auditorium an old gentleman, with a long white beard, sat in a balcony seat, tranquilly smiling. Few observed him, but those who paid any notice at all, said that he was probably an intimate friend of Father Time. One who inquired drew the response that this was a matter which he would neither affirm nor deny.

To a polite inquiry why he was smiling in these hours of crisis, the old gentleman replied more precisely. He said that of course he did not expect any of the audience present to remember distinctly the state of public opinion raging in Wittenberg at the time of the censorship of Luther's theses. He thought, however, that they might perhaps remember the fact that the tearing down of the theses from the church door did not put an end to the Reformation. Indeed, that it is quite impossible to argue that there would be in Boston today one single church more, or one loss, whether the theses had remained on their nail or been torn loose from it.

All such matters he then confessed, slightly changing his tone, run three or four centuries back, and perhaps it is unreasonable to expect that any but scholars should mark their significance. Therefore such considerations were not truly the cause of his smile. But he did think that Americans might give some attention to the remarks of a very well known publisher, Joseph W. Lippincott of Philadelphia, which were printed in the Transcript only last night.

Mr. Lippincott described a significant change in the conditions of book-issue in the United States which has come to pass in the short span of twenty-five years, a period well within the active memory of many living today. Hundreds of Americans can recall the time when the annual production of novels, for example, was so limited that any one book among them which possessed notable characteristics became, beyond question, "the novel" not merely of the month but indeed of many months. It was recognized as of eminent interest, and was read by everyone who could be considered a reader of literature, and by everyone discussed, sometimes for a period which, in its movement from coast to coast, lasted for all of a year. Nowadays, said Mr. Lippincott, there is such a flood of production that no one book gains anything like commensurate attention. Indeed, this publisher expressed concern lest no works of permanent survival-value could be successfully offered, either new or old. "The crude and ephemeral," he remarked, "will always fall by the wayside, yet if all books are going to cease selling and be forgotten after a few weeks or months, who hereafter is going to prepare great works?"

The old gentleman with the long beard then said that possibly this might cast some light on the immediate cause of his smile. During a period of American life when the appearance of one book was capable of having a quite mountainous effect — if you choose to scale it so — within the general range of current thought, feeling and opinion, you Americans expressed little concern about censorship. Now, however, when new books are so numerous that in total scenic effect they have nearly all become molehills, you are in high heat about them, and some of you seem immensely anxious that no one among them, which in any particular contravenes your own thought and opinions, shall by any chance pass the censor. Over this contrast it would seem, the old gentleman concluded, logical to smile.

"Look at the matter on the whole," he suggested, as he left the Gardner auditorium. "Even look at each molehill on the whole, and not at specific grains of sand in it."

Women's Clubs Would Amend Law

The Massachusetts State Federation of Women's Clubs at the mid-winter meeting at the Hotel Statler voted 631 to 79 "approving the principle of censorship with the desire that the present law relative to publishing and selling of obscene books be amended so that a book shall be judged on its general contents rather than on isolated passages and that a record of this action be sent at once to the State House where a hearing on the matter is now being held before the joint committee on legal affairs."

The first was a voice vote, then a rising vote and finally the vote had to be counted. Mrs. John H. Kimball, fourth vice president of the Federation, took the result of the vote to the State House. The vote followed spirited criticism of the existing law by Rev. Albert C. Dieffenbach, editor of the Christian Register and member of the committee for the revision of the book censorship laws, and its defense by Frank Chouteau Brown, member of the board of directors of the Watch and Ward Society. More than 150 delegates were in the ballroom and the speakers had their undivided attention.

Until recently, Dr. Dieffenbach said, the public was in the state of mind of A. A. Milne's Christopher Robin who when he was halfway up the stairs decided he was neither up nor down, or "really isn't anywhere, but somewhere else instead." The speaker pointed out that the committee was composed of men of diversified interests and had tried to put in reasonably accurate form a "moral intelligence" which represents the will of the people of the Commonwealth on the eve of the celebration of the Tercentenary. The recent example of "privatizing censorship," he said, has been a reproach to Massachusetts in the opinion of discriminating minds.

Moral sentiment, the speaker declared, is indispensable in any law and the committee, as the standard in this case, set up three points to be regarded in the judgment of a book: first, whether the author manifests a spirit of sincerity in his book; second, is the work written according to technical standards of literary art; third, answering the first and second affirmatively, does the book, in the words of the late Dr. George A. Gordon, "cleanse and exalt the soul."

It is perfectly true, Dr. Dieffenbach admitted, that there are sins and uglinesses in life but in proper proportion these must be introduced into a sincere work of art. "All Quiet on the Western Front," he said, has passages to which objection has been made but these passages belong in the book to complete the picture of the hideousness of war. Dr. Dieffenbach then read excerpts from a letter from Rev. Raymond Calkins, president of the Watch and Ward Society:

"It has not been our policy to ban novels which may contain a few passages which could be called obscene or indecent, but only those the whole purport and tenor of which could reasonably be called subversive of those standards of morals upon which the common welfare of the community may be said to depend. "It is not our idea that the needs of adolescence should determine the reading of the general public, but it is our idea that our youth should not be swamped by a deluge of 'garbage literature.'"

Want Censorship

"We want and must have censorship," Dr. Dieffenbach continued. "There are abnormal and subnormal people in the community but the overwhelming majority is wholesome-minded. But we want censorship to be safe for normal people while having due regard for those who are weak or not intelligent, not as a judge, for those people but to protect them."

Mr. Brown, in opposing a change in the law, said he spoke as an individual, not as a director of the Watch and Ward. Any change, he said, means a lessening of pressure exerted for good in the past, more freedom on sex topics and liberty for scilicet language. The proposed legislation, he said, introduces a new element, never tried out before, in considering a book as a whole, and legal opinions of those in a position to know gravely doubt whether the law will work out in actual practice.

Digressing for a moment, Mr. Brown said in the past twelve years the society had kept possibly twenty books from sale, without publicity or delay in action. In the past three years sixty-five to sixty-eight have been banned and if the agreement between the society and booksellers had continued about eleven of that number would have been kept out of circulation. Mr. Brown said he joined the Watch and Ward because he did not believe in censorship and had an especial interest in plays.

The speaker then displayed two picture magazines which he had purchased in New York. They were available, he said, at stores opposite the playground of a public school. Each specialized in pictures of unclothed women. Under the proposed law, Mr. Brown said, if one picture was indecent and the other thirty-nine were not, there is some doubt whether the sale of the magazine can be stopped. He said the Watch and Ward exercises care in investigation of complaints and also that booksellers will act as their own censors as they have in the past.

The proposed law will mean also an additional expense to the taxpayer through cases in the courts, and when the first case is brought up two or three years will elapse before a decision. In the meantime questionable books will be free to circulate. Ironically, the speaker added that if one chapter of a book is obscene or contains profanity does that make the book any less proper if the remaining chapters are full of perfectly behaved nouns, verbs, adjectives and adverbs?

One delegate in the discussion period, which provoked almost no discussion, asked whether the law covered advertisements of motion pictures. She objected to a line advertising a picture purporting to show "din, sin and gin." Dr. Dieffenbach immediately replied that "the time is coming when motion picture outrages will be duly considered and with great solicitude by His Eminence Will Hays and Governor Miliken, who will find that the ministers of Boston are Puritan to the core. And what we tell them will be plenty."

The session, which was held by invitation of the Women's Educational Club of West Newton, marking the fiftieth anniversary of their organization, opened with an address of welcome by Mrs. Joseph Otis, president of the club. Mrs. Azel A. Packard, Federation president, responded. Before the opening of business Mayor Sinclair C. Weeks of Newton also spoke.

The legislative session, presided over by Mrs. Frederick E. Just, vice chairman of the legislative committee, who took the place of Mrs. Fred L. Pigeon, unable to attend because of the serious illness of her son, opened with the discussion of the book law. In order were considered the report of Samuel H. Thompson, president of the Massachusetts Chamber of Commerce, on overnight camps and lodgings; milk legislation, as presented by George H. Higgins, State commissioner of public health; and Joseph C. Cort, director of the division of animal husbandry; the bill to abolish capital punishment, by Mrs. Herbert B. Ehrmann, and opposed by Dean Gleason W. Archer, of the Suffolk Law School; and "This Legislative Maze," presented by Mrs. Grace Morrison Poole, first vice president of the General Federation of Women's Clubs.

In answering Mrs. Ehrmann's arguments Dean Archer pointed out that eight states which abolished capital punishment have restored the law to the statute books and that it has been proved that sentimentality is no substitute for weapons which criminals fear. Without capital punishment this State might have to furnish living targets month after month to "privileged guests" who took a fancy to shooting down prison guards.

Governor at Luncheon

Governor Allen, unable to attend the morning session, was a guest, with Mrs. Allen, at luncheon served in the Georgian Room. As this was the fiftieth anniversary of the hostess club there were many picturesque features, a birthday cake on each table and a "wreath" by those at the head table, led by Mrs. E. L. Brackett, arrayed in old time costume bearing a four tier cake and followed by pages also in costume. Mrs. Sidney Sargent, Mrs. Edna H. Clark, Mrs. Stark Burdick and Mrs. Guy M. Monroe, Mrs. Harry J. Harding represented 1930. Mrs. George W. Phipps, a member for forty-eight years, cut the cake.

Among the guests was Mrs. G. W. Albert of the Alaska Federation. The afternoon session was opened by the singing of "Hymn to America" written by Miss Clara Endicott Sears and set to music by Mrs. M. H. Gulesian, and heard for the first time in public.

"CONSIDERED AS A WHOLE"

To the Editor of the Transcript:

In all the discussion of the bill which has been introduced amending the present statute dealing with obscene books, pamphlets, etc., there seems to be no treatment of the amendment relative to pamphlets. The proposed amendment in vokes the "considered as a whole" principle. It reads: "Whoever imports, prints, publishes, sells or distributes a book, pamphlet, ballad, printed paper or other thing which, considered as a whole, is obscene," etc. The present statute punishes the seller of a book, pamphlet, etc., "containing obscene, indecent or impure language or manifestly tending to corrupt the morals of youth," etc.

In the proposed amendment the pamphlet, ballad, printed paper or other thing must be subjected to the same "considered as a whole" test. The Century Dictionary defines a pamphlet to be: "A printed work consisting of a few sheets of paper stitched together but not bound." The same authority says that a magazine is: "A pamphlet periodically published containing miscellaneous papers or compositions." If a magazine should contain a story, short or serial, picturing in words a veritable cesspool of immorality, while the rest of the issue contained learned discussions of the World Court, or navy reduction, or bed-time stories, or college athletics records, could a distributor be convicted? And what does considering a ballad, printed paper or other thing "as a whole" mean?

There is a science of statute-drafting just as there is a science of building construction. And I think a lawyer, reading disinterestedly this proposed amendment, would say that it is "artificially drawn." That it is artfully drawn there can be no question. I doubt if one in a score of the distinguished committee, whose names have been published as sponsoring this bill, has made a careful comparison with the existing law.

Not every desired law can easily be made into a workable statute. If the purpose of the statute is the prevention of the sale of pornographic literature, the statute as drawn must support, not defeat, its purpose. It must be workable and not vague; it must not be so full of holes as to expose it easily to the defeatist tactics of defendant's counsel. Judges interpret statutes as written. They cannot reword them.

The Committee on Legal Affairs, considering this bill, is made up of fifteen members of the General Court, all lawyers but one. The woman member, Mrs. Martha Brookings of Gloucester, from her experience as a member of a law-making body and a legal affairs committee, is by this time as good as a lawyer, or I would better say, as good as a good lawyer. They will study this bill as a piece of statute-drafting, taking into consideration its workability and its effectiveness. They will also weigh the fact that no State has a statute on the "considered as a whole" principle; that more than a dozen States use the words: "containing obscene language"; that many States have evidently copied the identical language of our statute; that the statutes of New York and Pennsylvania are ferocious compared with ours.

I cannot believe that this committee will report this bill as drawn.

SAMUEL W. MENDUM

Boston, Jan. 17.

NO WATCH AND WARD IN CINCINNATI

To the Editor of the Transcript:

The Watch and Ward Society in its recently published attempt to apologize for its behavior in the Dunster Book Shop case states that similar organizations exist in other cities, among which it mentions Cincinnati. The reference is presumably to a clerical association which has existed for some time here and whose object is, it must be admitted, to keep a private eye on public morals. But the use of the term "similar" is evidence of either ignorance or equivocation. So far as I am able to ascertain this body has confined its exercise of censorship strictly to the stage, and there, for the most part, to musical comedy and vaudeville. Certainly there has been no attempt on the part of anybody to imitate the Watch and Ward Society's interference with current literature—an interference that existed long before Lady Chatterly had a lover, or, for that matter, was even born. We have no list of banned books. Cincinnati reads what the rest of the world—except Boston—reads. And though we may disagree with the standards of judgment that have at times interfered with the stage here, those standards, in comparison with the temper prevailing in Boston, are enlightened and urbane.

Furthermore, in such action as it does take the Cincinnati Association is fair and straightforward. It acts in public, not by stealth, in person, not by deputy. To the best of my knowledge and belief, it has never constituted itself an amateur detective agency, never dallied with plain clothes men, disguises and false names, never employed agents provocateurs. It has never deliberately instigated the commission of an illegal act, or, when at first rebuffed, persisted in its attempt to incriminate a reputable man with the secret purpose and hope of betraying and punishing him, if only he could be induced at last to slip. Nor has it ever invited from a district attorney the threat of prosecution for criminal conspiracy. No, to say that the ministerial organization in Cincinnati is "similar" to the New England Watch and Ward Society is an error which I hope this letter may correct.

B. A. G. FULLER

University of Cincinnati, O., Jan. 23.

WATCH AND WARD

To the Editor of The Herald:

I read in the columns of your Monday's paper a statement in which Joseph Lee declares that the Watch and Ward "must go on," and has the effrontery, by an oblique sort of implication, to defend the actions of his organization during the Dunster House prosecution, even though he quite discreetly avoids any direct mention of the case. He suggests, however, that on the grounds that the society has at some remote date in the past been useful it should be excused for sanctioning the most blackguardly tactics in its present activity.

There never was a ruffian taken in crime but defended himself by saying he had once been kind to his poor old mother.

As an excuse for their incurable penchant for snouting around after fifth, the directors of the Watch and Ward say the police are inefficient and need the moral backing of their agents. This reference, of course, is made to such eminently moral influences as that of Nicholas Cockinos, their agent, who while in the service of the Watch and Ward in the investigation of a bawdy house, was detected in a bribery conspiracy and jailed for two years. Or Joseph Farrell, a former agent of righteousness, now serving 40 years for degeneracy. Or the man convicted of bribery while working for the society in Marlboro, or, in fact, any of the many Watch and Ward agents who have been found to have been criminals, before, during and after their employment by Mr. Chase and Mr. Bodwell.

It now seems possible, in view of the customary tactics of the Watch and Ward, that the evidence in the Dunster House case was planted by the society, and that it deliberately conspired to charge a respectable book-dealer with an offense committed at their instigation and planned by them in advance.

This is the type of activity, not occasional but customary, not infrequent but continuous, which Mr. Lee plausibly remarks "must go on" in the name of morality and uplift.

As long as Boston and New England continue to tolerate the brazen hypocrisy of the members of this organization, whose only incentive to their activities is a ringside view of fifth, degeneracy and indecency, and who sanctimoniously preach righteousness while instigating crime, hiring the lowest sort of procurers, and indorsing spies and agents provocateurs, the Watch and Ward, will be deserving of every particle of condemnation, ridicule and abuse which can be heaped upon them.

LUCIUS BEEBE.

New York, Jan. 22.

(Not printed at Government expense)

Congressional Record

SEVENTY-FIRST CONGRESS, FIRST SESSION

Freedom of Thought and the Censorship—Section 305 of Tariff Bill

SPEECH

HON. BRONSON CUTTING OF NEW MEXICO

IN THE SENATE OF THE UNITED STATES

Thursday, October 10, 1929

Mr. CUTTING. I offer an amendment to section 305 and ask to have it read:

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment proposed by the Senator from New Mexico will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 286, beginning in line 10, the Senator from New Mexico proposes to strike out section 305, as follows:

Sec. 305. Immoral articles—Importation prohibited: (a) Prohibition of importation: All persons are prohibited from importing into the United States from any foreign country any book, pamphlet, paper, writing, advertisement, circular, print, picture, or drawing containing any matter advocating or urging treason, insurrection, or forcible resistance to any law of the United States, or containing any threat to take the life of or inflict bodily harm upon any person in the United States, or any obscene book, pamphlet, paper, writing, advertisement, circular, print, picture, drawing, or other representation, figure, or image on or of paper or other material, or any cast, instrument, or other article, of an immoral nature, or any drug or medicine, or any article whatever for the prevention of conception or for causing unlawful abortion, or any lottery ticket, or any printed paper that may be used as a lottery ticket, or any advertisement of any lottery. No such articles, whether imported separately or contained in packages with other goods entitled to entry, shall be admitted to entry; and all such articles and, unless it appears to the satisfaction of the collector that the obscene articles contained in the package were inclosed therein without the knowledge or consent of the importer, owner, agent, or consignee, the entire contents of the package in which such articles are contained, shall be subject to seizure and forfeiture under the customs laws. Provided, That the drugs hereinbefore mentioned, when imported in bulk and not put up for any of the purposes hereinbefore specified, are excepted from the operation of this subdivision.

(b) Penalty on Government officers: Any officer, agent, or employee of the Government of the United States who shall knowingly aid or abet any person engaged in any violation of any of the provisions of law prohibiting importing, advertising, dealing in, exhibiting, or sending or receiving by mail obscene or indecent publications or representations, or books, pamphlets, papers, writings, advertisements, circulars, prints, pictures, or drawings containing any matter advocating or urging treason, insurrection, or forcible resistance to any law of the United States, or containing any threat to take the life of or inflict bodily harm upon any person in the United States, or means for preventing conception or procuring abortion, or other articles of indecent or immoral use or tendency, shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and shall for every offense be punishable by a fine of not more than $5,000, or by imprisonment at hard labor for not more than 10 years, or both.

Mr. CUTTING. Mr. President, I do not intend to detain the Senate any longer than necessary on this section, but I feel that inasmuch as it is a part of the tariff bill it should be given the attention which it deserves. In the opinion of some of us the question of free speech and free thought is of such great importance to this Republic that it even outweighs the effect of the tariff bill as a whole.

It is difficult for some who disbelieve in censorship as a general principle to debate the merits of a particular censorship provision, yet I shall try to confine my discussion to the particular problem involved, namely, the question of censorship by clerks of the Bureau of Customs.

77829—5745

The first law which was ever passed by the Congress of the United States giving customs clerks the right of censorship was passed in 1842. The Republic managed to survive for more than half a century without any censorship by the Customs Bureau. The law passed in 1842 was as follows:

Sec. 28. That the importation of all indecent and obscene prints, paintings, lithographs, engravings, and transparencies is hereby prohibited.

Mr. President, I think that even some of us who object to censorship as a general governmental function might admit that that particular provision is rather mild. It prohibited so-called works of art which had been inspired by nothing except an indecent and a pornographic point of view.

It is quite obvious that the average customs clerk could, with comparative ease, decide the difference between a decent and an indecent postcard, drawing, photograph, or any other so-called work of art which would present itself at once to his sight and his mental vision and his understanding. It is entirely different when it comes to the question of literature, where a clerk, in order to make a correct decision, must necessarily read a book as a whole.

Many books of highly moral tendency would be excluded if a man's attention were confined to one page, or one paragraph, or one sentence, or one word.

At any rate, Mr. President, there seems to have been no particular objection to the censorship provision of the tariff act of 1842; and the United States continued to survive under that section for another half century, until the tariff act of 1890.

The tariff act of 1890 provided practically the present law. It has gone on and is still in effect, and will be found, if Senators turn to their comparative print, on page 372, in the right-hand column, with the exception of the House amendments.

The only additional provision which was written into the bill after 1890 was the clause about lottery tickets and advertisements of lotteries. That came in in the tariff act of 1894. I do not know why that particular section was added; but I suppose it had something to do with the Louisiana lottery scandals, which came up sometime in the nineties.

Mr. President, those clauses were not enforced in any unreasonable way until about 1900 or thereabouts. At that time a good many people realized that the tariff law of 1890, as amended in 1894, could be construed in ways which would bar out various pieces of art and literature which previously had not been barred.

In 1909 an attempt was made under this section to prevent the Field Museum, in Chicago, from importing Chinese pictures and manuscripts, very important to them, on the ground that those pictures and manuscripts were obscene.

In 1911 the postal authorities, which worked under a similar provision of the postal law, excluded from the mails the official vice report of the city of Chicago.

Let me refer to the penalty clauses in the law. A postal official who fails to exclude an obscene or indecent picture or book is liable to a fine of $5,000 and to a penitentiary sentence of 10 years. If he excludes a book which is later determined by the courts to be perfectly proper, he is subject to no penalty of any sort. It will therefore be evident that it is to the interest of the customs clerks who deal with this particular matter to exclude, so far as possible, anything which they think may by any chance be called indecent.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, will the Senator suffer an interruption?

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from New Mexico yield to the Senator from Utah?

Mr. CUTTING. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. KING. I ask for information, because this has been suggested to me.

WATCH AND WARD
By the Editor of The Herald

"CONSIDERED AS A ..."

2

CONGRESSIONAL RECORD

I understood the Senator to state that under existing law a postal employee who does not exclude from the mails an obscene picture when it is within his power so to do is subject to the heavy penalties referred to by the Senator. I desire to ask, for information, is he to be the judge? Suppose that after weighing the matter quite carefully he concludes that it may approach the line but does not transgress, and therefore he permits it to go through the mail, and somebody—his superior or some acute and meticulous censor—reaches a different conclusion; is the postal employee then subject to those penalties?

Mr. CUTTING. Mr. President, I am trying as far as possible to confine the discussion to the customs censorship. Of course the postal censorship, which has similar provisions, is bound to be a precedent in many respects. I do not know whether or not that case has ever come up under the postal censorship. I have studied principally the cases under the customs censorship. We are now considering a tariff bill. When postal legislation comes up, I shall try to deal with that subject at the proper time.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, if the Senator will pardon me, it seems to me that it is only pertinent in view of the fact that it shows the evident purpose of some individuals or organizations to use the mails in an oppressive way and to enact legislation which may prevent the transmission through the mails of perfectly legitimate things, and to establish a censorship that will be oppressive to the American people and injurious to the cause of liberty and free speech.

Mr. CUTTING. Oh, I quite agree with the Senator. I was trying to give various precedents of cases which had come up—some of them under the postal laws, I admit.

A copy of Ovid's Metamorphoses, sent to a professor of Johns Hopkins University, was stopped in the mails. Catalogues of books sold by booksellers which advertised for sale such works as The Decameron and Elmer Gantry were barred from the mails.

Works of Tolstol and Swedenborg—books which have been published and are still being published in this country, and can be purchased at any bookstore and can be read in any library—have been barred from the mails; and the same precedents, of course, apply to censorship by the Customs Bureau.

The reason why I refer to those cases is that this difference of opinion between the Customs Bureau and the postal censorship as to what books might be admitted and what might not, finally brought about a conference, a convention of the experts of the two departments, men who had been reading indecent literature all their lives, and felt that they were entitled to say what was or was not indecent. About a year ago these various experts met, and after comparing their experiences they got up a black list, which was subsequently added to.

This black list dates from October 27, 1928. On April 16, 1929, some further works were added to this terrible roll.

Mr. President, far be it from me to read this list to the United States Senate. I shall not even introduce it in the Record, because it might be that some of these 739 books—an official list, mind you, of the 739 worst books in the world—might come to the attention of some persons who had never heard of them, and I should not care to have the responsibility of possibly influencing their future lives. The books to which I am going to refer are books which probably all of us have heard of before; but before I get to that I want to call your attention to certain interesting features of this black list.

Upon this list there are 739 books.

Of those 739 more than half, or 379, are books written in the Spanish language.

Of the remaining books more than two-thirds, 231, are written in the French language.

Five are books in the Italian language.

Ten are books in the German language.

That leaves only 114 immoral books barred by the censor which are written in the English language.

I do not know that this list is of any importance in itself. I speak of it principally to show the depths of absurdity to which bureaucratic government may go. Is it conceivable that there are as many books written in Spanish as in all other languages put together which might corrupt the morals of any of our people, when we consider what a small proportion of the population are able to read books written in Spanish? Is it possible that only 114 English books could be ruled out as against over 600 written in other languages?

The answer can not be merely that more indecent books are written in the Spanish and French languages than in others, for let me call your attention for a moment to certain features of this black list.

A great French classic of the nineteenth century, Mademoiselle de Maupin, by Gautier, is allowed by the censors to enter the country in its original print; it is allowed to enter the country in its English translation; but after it has been translated into

77829—5745

Spanish it has apparently a peculiarly deleterious effect on the morals of our people and we have got to keep it out.

The Memoirs of Brantôme, an invaluable document for the history of the sixteenth century, is again perfectly proper when written in the original French. We can study it in English. After it has been translated into Spanish no citizen of the United States is allowed to purchase a copy of that book if the customs censors can prevent it. Of course, he can go into the nearest bookstore and get a copy.

On the other hand, we find the Arabian Nights, supposed to be a classic, certainly a human document of the utmost importance in the history of literature. We do not bar it in its original, we do not bar it in the literal translations of Payne and of Burton in English, but when it has been translated into French by Mardrus it is a book that no American citizen can without danger import through the customs.

The great humanist, Pietro Aretino, who wrote a book in Italian in the sixteenth century, is barred from importation into the United States as long as he is translated into Spanish, but while he remains in his original language or is translated into English we allow him the freest entrance to this country.

So it goes on. I do not intend to go through these things in detail. Books like the novels of Balzac, like the confessions of Rousseau, books which are on every library shelf, have been declared ineligible to enter the country under this provision of the tariff act.

Mr. DILL. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. CUTTING. I yield.

Mr. DILL. If a private citizen brings in a book he has bought abroad, is he stopped at the customs office?

Mr. CUTTING. Absolutely, if the customs officer is able to find the book.

Mr. DILL. This applies to the private citizen, as well as to those who might bring books in for sale?

Mr. CUTTING. Absolutely. If you bring in a lottery ticket which is discovered on your person, it is taken away from you; or, if it is not, the customs official at the port is fined $5,000 or sent to the penitentiary for 10 years.

Mr. DILL. While I am on my feet, may I ask when the list to which the Senator has been referring was prepared?

Mr. CUTTING. Most of it was prepared on August 27, 1928, and the remainder of it on April 16, 1929.

Mr. DILL. I read somewhere that the original of the most remarkable book, I think, that has come out of the war, All Quiet on the Western Front, was forbidden by the customs officials to come into the country. Does the Senator know about that?

Mr. CUTTING. Yes, Mr. President; I know that it was forbidden to come into the country in its original English translation. It was stated in the press at the time that the English translation had 30 or 40 pages of rather unpleasant matter which had been left out of the American translation, and for that reason, under the terms of this act, the customs officials excluded it.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I want to ask the Senator whether a strict translation from English to French, or from French to Spanish, in some of the cases he has mentioned, would not show that substantial changes were made in the English translations. The name may be the same and the subject may be the same, but are there not inserted in the translation certain intimations at least that fall under the restrictions of this section?

Mr. CUTTING. Mr. President, I have not read all of these 739 books, the Senator will understand, and I have not studied the translations from the original languages.

Mr. SMOOT. I thought the Senator had looked into each one of them to find out whether it did violate the law.

Mr. CUTTING. No; but it strikes me as peculiar that half of the obscene literature of the world should be written in Spanish. But I do not want to discuss the details.

Mr. SMOOT. I have been told that while a book may carry the same name and be translated from English into Spanish, there are certain changes made in the wording itself meaning there are a different thing, and it is upon that ground that they have been excluded. I do not know whether that is so or not. I thought perhaps the Senator had read the books himself and could give us the information.

Mr. CUTTING. No, Mr. President; I disclaim all authority based on an original reading of each one of the books.

Mr. DILL. Mr. President, before the Senator leaves the thought of this book All Quiet on the Western Front—

Mr. CUTTING. I wish the Senator would discuss that further.

Mr. DILL. I am anxious to get information in regard to it, because it is such a remarkable book and in many ways the most striking book that has come from the press on the subject of war as it actually is. I was anxious to know what part of the book was looked upon as so objectionable that it could not be admitted. I have read the book as allowed to come in—I take it that it was the one that was allowed to come in—and I am wondering what is the nature of the matter that was looked upon as objectionable.

Mr. CUTTING. Has the Senator been able to secure a copy of the book in the edition that was not admitted?

Mr. DILL. I have not.

Mr. CUTTING. I have been equally unfortunate.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. CUTTING. I yield.

Mr. TYDINGS. That book All Quiet on the Western Front, to my mind, as a man who was in the service over in France, is one true story of the war written in all of its phases. It tells not only about the battles where men were killed but tells about all the effects and results of warfare, and it is one of the greatest documents making for peace and the development of peace psychology I have read for a long time. Over 2,000,000 copies of it have been sold. I happen to have read the European edition, which I have in my possession, if any Senator would like to read it. The difference between the two books is due to the fact that we are looked upon as in the kindergarten class. There is nothing immoral in the book at all. It simply tells what a soldier does, and it tells the truth. Because it shows war up in all its various phases and the results of war on the minds of men, it makes it a much better book for peace than the American edition is, which eliminates practically the indirect side of a soldier's life which results from his service in the trenches. In my opinion, it is a great shame that the American people can not get this book in its real, true edition, so that they may know what war is, because it is only through such accounts as this that we can realize what a problem it is, not only of life and death but in its other ramifications.

Mr. CUTTING. I thank the Senator for the information. I am informed that since the English translation was barred by the customs officials a good many hundred thousand extra copies have been sold, and I sometimes wonder whether the whole purpose of this kind of legislation is not to advertise some book in order that it may have an increased circulation.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, if the Senator will yield, I can see no reason why the deleted portions of that book should not be printed in English. The parts that were left out, as I view the matter, might with propriety have been printed; but, as the Senator from Maryland has suggested, the thought is that we are in the kindergarten class. I do not know why we might not accept facts as they are, truths as they are, and experiences as they are, and certainly when so high a motive as was back of this book was the impelling motive. I think it was a great contribution to the cause of peace, and I think the whole book might have been printed. I read it in Europe during the past summer, in the original form, and I could see no reason why it might not have been given to the American people.

Mr. CUTTING. I quite agree with the Senator from New York, and I am glad he has taken part in this discussion, because I want to call to his attention, as a member of the medical profession, the fact that many important, serious, solemn discussions of medical questions, such as the works of Havelock Ellis and Kraft Ebbing are barred by the Bureau of Customs. They are included in this blacklist. No exceptions are made in behalf of members of the medical profession or scientists, or other men who might make good use of these books. All of them are barred. As I said before, the customs clerk is required by law, under the severest penalty, to keep them out.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, I think the Senator might go further and say that there are barred from mailing in the United States books intended for the instruction and the widening of knowledge of the medical profession. I have long felt that there should be a revision of our laws as regards these books, because very much important material is now denied those who should properly receive it, or it is received clandestinely, material which should be sent to members of the profession and to other persons who might appropriately receive the knowledge. So I hope the Senator will go further even than he has sought to do, as indicated by his discussion, and point out the significance of the denial of the mailing of those books to persons in the United States.

Mr. CUTTING. I quite agree with the Senator. I am trying, as I said when I started this discussion, to confine it to the particular censorship by the customs. I feel that when the postal regulations come before us, we can discuss the question which the Senator has raised, and quite appropriately raised. I do not know that I have very much to say on this particular subject of the black list, except to point out that the classics, the Greek and Latin writers, who have managed to survive for 2,000 years or more, and have been passed on from one generation of school children to another, are largely barred by the regulations laid down by the Bureau of Customs.

77829—5745

CONGRESSIONAL RECORD

3

Take the works of Aristophanes, a puritan, an austere conservative, who wanted to have men like Euripides and Sophocles exiled or executed because he thought they were corrupting the morals of youth. The works of that man are now 2,000 years after his death being excluded from this country, but not because they contain coarse passages. There is only one of his works which is on the particular black list which I have here in my hand, and that is the Lysistrata, the first and most powerful argument on the futility and the brutality of warfare. I wonder whether the exclusion of All Quiet on the Western Front was perhaps induced by some similar motive as that which bars from the country the Lysistrata of Aristophanes.

I am not going to continue on this line any further except to point out that the works of Ovid, the Daphnis and Chloe of Longus, that charming pastoral of the third century before Christ; The Golden Ass of Apuleius, which is read by everyone in school and college; the works of Boccaccio, and of countless more modern authors are excluded from the country.

Mr. EDGE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. CUTTING. I yield.

Mr. EDGE. Is it the intention of the Senator to move to strike out the entire section—section 305? I understood his amendment proposed to do that.

Mr. CUTTING. Yes.

Mr. EDGE. I am very much interested in the Senator's discussion of the so-called obscene or immoral publications. Does he also propose to strike out, then, that part of the section which I think was inserted by the House and is not in existing law, which provides that such matters are to be excluded as contain "any matter advocating or urging treason, insurrection, or forcible resistance to any law of the United States, or containing any threat to take the life or inflict bodily harm upon any person in the United States"? In other words, is his amendment also directed to the expunging of that prohibition?

Mr. CUTTING. Oh, yes, Mr. President; but I prefer to take that up when I get to that part of the bill. I am trying to give a historical account of what has been done in the past in order that from that we may judge what is apt to be done in the future.

At the same time this black list was published the committee which put it out published a report. I want to read one or two sentences from their report so that the Senate may be aware of the principles on which the customs clerks are expected to act:

In passing upon such literature the Bureau of Customs has considered, primarily, its evil influence upon the impressionable minds of the young and inexperienced. In examining the text it is sought to determine if the psychological effect of the language would be to create in the mind of the individual blasphemous thoughts, and unduly excite the sexual functions or arouse the animal passions. The main reason advanced by applicants for entry of the objectionable literature is that certain of the books are "classics."

A "classic" should be defined and distinction should be recognized as between the Bible and the best literary classics (such as Shakespeare, Chaucer, Pope, Swift, and many others) on the one hand, wherein the obscene passages are incidental to the voluminous text of the superb literature, and the alleged "classics," cleverly conceived in an ancient medieval atmosphere, wherein obscenity is the motif.

Mr. President, I do not entirely grasp that distinction myself. Apparently, from reading the black list, books printed in English in these periods are considered as genuine classics and those which were originally printed in other languages are considered as "alleged classics," "cleverly conceived," and so forth.

It is very difficult for me personally to make any such distinction. I think it is splitting hairs to put, say, Boccaccio on one side of the line and Chaucer on the other, or Rabelais on one side of the line and Swift on the other. As a matter of fact, up to the eighteenth century English literature was just as plain-spoken—and perhaps a little more so—as any other literature on the face of the earth. After a century of comparative prudery I think that English literature is becoming fairly plain-spoken again. I do not believe we can make any such distinction on an issue of language.

But I should like to point out that the report of these experts does make a distinction in favor of the classics. I am therefore surprised that the Secretary of the Treasury, in a letter written to me on May 22 of this year, should have stated that there is "no exception in favor of the so-called classics or of the work of leading writers of the day, and such are not admitted to entry without regard to their character."

May I say in passing that this is a particularly good illustration of the kind of results we get by turning decisions of this kind over to a bureau such as the Bureau of Customs? What-

77829—5745

"CONSIDERED AS A WHOLE."

4

CONGRESSIONAL RECORD

ever we may think of the present Secretary of the Treasury, there is no question that he is a highly cultured and highly enlightened man. When a work of one of the leading writers of the day, sent to one of my constituents in New Mexico, was barred at the post I appealed to Mr. Mellon as an individual. I wrote him a personal letter, hoping that he might be able to provide me with some legal means of letting the book come through. It was a book incidentally—Heaven forbid that I should mention its name! It may be unknown to most of the people in this country. But on account of its exclusion by the board of censors it is going to be published next month by an American publisher. In the meantime I do not want to injure the morals of any American citizen so I shall conceal the name except to say that it is a work of a well known British author.

The letter which I received from the Secretary of the Treasury and which was signed by him is a letter which, of course, was written by the subordinate clerk who happens to have charge of this particular matter of censorship. I believe there is one clerk in the Bureau of Customs who reads all of these works. I do not know whether his morals have been injured or not. [Laughter.] Certainly if there is anything in the theory on which this law is based he ought to be the most wicked man on the face of the earth. He spends his whole time in reading alleged or suspected immoral, indecent, and obscene literature to decide whether or not it should be allowed to circulate among people less intelligent or less enlightened than himself.

Mr. DILL. Mr. President—
The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from New Mexico yield to the Senator from Washington?

Mr. CUTTING. I yield.

Mr. DILL. Does the Senator know what kind of a civil-service examination that clerk had to pass? [Laughter.]

Mr. CUTTING. I am afraid I can not enlighten the Senator. What I am trying to bring out is the fact that as in other questions where we leave the construction of the regulations to a subordinate clerk in a department, we are gradually building up a number of precedents possibly altogether contrary to the spirit of the law originally enacted, and as those precedents are built up we get a code; we get a body of doctrine which we ourselves, who are supposed to be the legislative body of the country, are powerless to cope with.

Have we any hopes from the courts against this sort of thing? Apparently not. I have been able to get only a few of the decisions of the Customs Court to whom appeal is made from the decisions of the Treasury Department. The case of W. A. Gosline, Jr., of Cleveland, came before Chief Justice Fischer. Briefs for counsel for the plaintiff said there was no testimony before the court of any kind that the books in question were obscene.

It was held that oral testimony was unnecessary, as a mere cursory glance through the volume in evidence was sufficient to convince anyone that they abound in obscenity of the vilest character.

The court stated that it—could not view with patience the claim that the work is a literary classic and that if anything it was a masterpiece of utter degeneracy.

This particular case applied to the Memoirs of Casanova, which, as most Senators are aware, are fairly important historical documents and can be purchased in any book store in the city or read in the Congressional Library established under the laws of the United States.

Chief Justice Fischer again rendered an opinion on The Golden Ass of Lucius Apuleius. The court found from an examination of the volume that "the subject matter is revoltingly obscene." This was one of the first novels ever written, a book of exquisite fancy and imagination, a book which may have a few pages in it which are repugnant to modern ideas, but which could not possibly injure any individual living at the present time.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President—
The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from New Mexico yield to the Senator from Idaho?

Mr. CUTTING. I yield.

Mr. BORAH. I have seen it stated in print that some of the books of Voltaire have been excluded. Has the Senator any facts in regard to that matter?

Mr. CUTTING. Yes, indeed. Candide, a book which has been read in most of the public schools of this country, was excluded for a period of time by some customs clerk. I believe it has since been taken off the blacklist.

I want to call the attention of the Senate to the only case so far as I could find where the courts have reversed the decision

SATURDAY, JANUARY 25, 1930

WATCH AND WARD
To the Editor of The Herald:

of the customs clerk who banished the volume. That was in the case of a book entitled "The Well of Loneliness," a book which I have not read and about which I do not care to express an opinion. What I want to speak about is the ground on which the opinion of the court was delivered. The book was protested, and the protest was sustained by Chief Justice Fischer, saying, "We have not found one word, phrase, sentence, or paragraph which could truthfully be pointed out as offensive to modesty and decency."

In other words, the test is made as to whether the book contains certain words or phrases or paragraphs—not the general tendency of the book. If the decision of Chief Justice Fischer in that case is any precedent, I submit that the most dangerous book in the English language is the dictionary, because it contains not only one or two indecent words, but it contains them all.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. CUTTING. Certainly.

Mr. TYDINGS. I might point out that not only the dictionary should be excluded, but the Bible itself would not be permitted to be circulated under that decision.

Mr. CUTTING. Oh, certainly not, Mr. President. I understand there are a great many people who are deliberately engaged now in expurgating the Bible, and certainly if we adopt the verbal test it is very difficult to see what works of literature would be allowed to pass the customs officials.

Mr. President, the obscenity law has been differently interpreted in other countries. When Lord Chief Justice Campbell introduced the act of 1857 in the British House of Parliament he made it clear in introducing the bill that it was to apply "exclusively to works written for the single purpose of corrupting the morals of youth, and of a nature calculated to shock the common feelings of decency in any well-regulated mind."

In other words, he did not, as is the case with the decisions in this country, base the law on the possible effect on the young and inexperienced, but struck a normal average of humanity and allowed the intelligent to receive literature which possibly might be injurious to some particular individual.

It was only a few years after that speech of Lord Campbell in introducing his own act that that particular act was interpreted in an entirely different way by Lord Chief Justice Cockburn, who said—and this is the test which has been applied by our own courts—

"The test of obscenity is this, whether the tendency of the matter charged as obscenity is to deprave and corrupt those whose minds are open to such immoral influences."

That, Mr. President, brings the people of the country down to the level of the lowest or most immature members of the community, members that, some of us feel, can be properly safeguarded only by their own families or by the local laws of their particular communities.

Let me read you a French decision which is interesting in this connection. Flaubert's novel, Madame Bovary, was held before the court in the middle of the nineteenth century, and the court ruled that, although there were certain passages which might offend decency, "these reprehensible passages are few in number when compared with the extent of the whole work. The book does not appear, like some, to have been written for the sole purpose of satisfying sexual desires and the spirit of license and debauch."

I think, Mr. President, that is a far fairer interpretation of a statute of this kind than the interpretation which has been adopted by the court of customs and some of our other American courts.

On June 21, 1922, there was decided in the Federal court of Cincinnati the case of the United States against Kidd, involving copies of Boccaccio and Rabelais. Judge Peck said in effect:

"There is no question in my mind but that most of the people who buy the so-called classics buy them for the fifth that is in them rather than for their literary value. If they bought them for their literary value alone an expurgated edition would do equally as well as an unexpurgated edition. The fact that there is an expurgated edition would indicate there is something in the unexpurgated edition that is not fit for the average person to read. Congress in its wisdom has not seen fit to except from the rule of section 211 (U. S. Criminal Code) the so-called classics."

Mr. DILL. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from New Mexico yield to the Senator from Washington?

Mr. CUTTING. I yield.

Mr. DILL. The Senator referred to French and English decisions. Are they decisions under the laws of those countries referring to obscene or objectionable literature or are they decisions referring to customs court action such as the Senator is discussing?

Mr. CUTTING. No; they are dealing with obscene literature. The last decision I read was an American decision of the United States court at Cincinnati.

Mr. DILL. But what I am trying to get clear is this: Do the customs laws of other countries contain provisions of this kind that have been interpreted? Does the Senator know as to that?

Mr. CUTTING. I have never heard of any such laws. The laws of certain foreign countries carry heavy penalties for people publishing and distributing obscene literature, and, of course, for sending such literature through the mails, but I do not know as to the customs laws of those countries on this subject.

Mr. BRATTON. Mr. President, will my colleague yield?

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from New Mexico yield to his colleague?

Mr. CUTTING. I yield.

Mr. BRATTON. The test, however, would be the same in either case, the only difference being the form in which the question was presented.

Mr. CUTTING. I believe it would be exactly the same.

Mr. DILL. Mr. President—

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from New Mexico yield to the Senator from Washington?

Mr. CUTTING. I yield.

Mr. DILL. I want to call attention, however, to this difference, that if the proceedings are under a law covering the general subject the decision would be made by the judges of the court in the first instance, in reality, while in this country the decisions are made by customs clerks and bureaucratic officials. That is the difference.

Mr. CUTTING. Yes; that is quite true; but there is an appeal from the decision of the bureaucratic officials to the courts. However, except in the one case to which I have referred, I do not know of any case in the country where the Customs Court has ever been overruled. I think such an occurrence will be very rare. Of course Senators must realize it is only in a comparatively small number of these cases that anyone takes the trouble to appeal. It is expensive to do so; the value of the books which are being imported amounts to very little, and it is only in a few instances that we have any definite decisions of the courts, whether the Customs Court or the district courts.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Mr. President—

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from New Mexico yield to the Senator from Montana?

Mr. CUTTING. I yield.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I should like to inquire of the Senator if there is any case where the action of the customs officials in adjudicating a book to be obscene?

Mr. CUTTING. Oh, yes, Mr. President, when books which are imported are declared to be obscene by customs clerks and are seized, confiscated, and forfeited, from that decision there is an appeal to the United States district court. If the amount involved is over a thousand dollars, as I understand, the appeal goes to the district court automatically. I will ask the Senator from Utah to correct me if I am in error as to that.

Mr. SMOOT. An appeal does lie.

Mr. CUTTING. Yes; and if the amount involved is more than a thousand dollars the appeal is automatic, but if it is under a thousand dollars, as I understand, the provision of section 608 of the present law will allow an appeal.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. It is in consequence of appeals of that character that the opinions were rendered to which the Senator has called our attention?

Mr. CUTTING. Yes; so far as the district courts are concerned. Most of the opinions which I have quoted are those of the Customs Court.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Let me ask the Senator this question: The Senator has criticized, and I think with entire justice, some of the opinions, but we must repose somewhere, must we not, the power to determine whether a book is actually obscene or not, and where can we repose it except in the courts?

Mr. CUTTING. I appreciate the force of what the Senator says, but it seems to me that the question of whether a book is obscene or not might well be considered a question of fact rather than a question of law, and that, in the ordinary course of events, it should be decided by a jury.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. That could be accomplished, could it not, by making it a penal offense to import books of this character, or the other materials described in the particular section, and providing for their being impounded pending determination?

Mr. CUTTING. That is probably so.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. In other words, Mr. President, I was curious to know whether the real solution of the matter would not be an amendment to the provision rather than its exclusion, so that the question as to whether a book is obscene or is not obscene would be determined in the usual way by a court and a jury. We must repose that power somewhere, because everybody agrees that a book confessedly obscene ought not to be admitted, and the only difficulty about the situation is that at the present time the power of determination is placed under the customs officers, whose opinion about the matter may be open to objection, and that it is subject to review by a court without a jury.

CONGRESSIONAL RECORD

5

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President—
The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from New Mexico yield to the Senator from Idaho?

Mr. CUTTING. I yield.

Mr. BORAH. The vice of the law is that 70 cases out of 100, and, perhaps, 80 cases out of 100, never get beyond the customs clerks.

Mr. CUTTING. Probably 95 cases out of 100 never reach the courts.

Mr. SMOOT. I think the Senator from Idaho is wrong there.

Mr. BORAH. I do not think so.

Mr. SMOOT. If a question of dollars and cents is involved, there is the right to appeal to the Customs Court; and then after decision by that court an appeal lies to the district court and the litigant does have a jury there.

Mr. BORAH. But a person bringing in a book, or half a dozen books, so far as that is concerned, will not go to the trouble, or, if so, it will be done very rarely, of appealing to the Customs Court. A right to do so exists, but I have been informed that perhaps in 80 per cent of the cases where the books are refused entry there is no appeal at all.

Mr. CUTTING. If I may interpose a word there, I think the Senator from Utah is wrong in saying that an appeal lies from the Customs Court to the district court. I do not believe there is any such appeal under the present law. A person can go directly into the district court on the question of confiscation, but if he goes into the Customs Court the only appeal from that court is to the Customs Court of Appeals. I do not think a jury is used at any time in the whole process.

Mr. SMOOT. The party can go there, I suppose, in case of forfeiture. And he can go there no matter what the value involved may be; even if only one book may be involved, the party can take the case to the Customs Court.

Mr. BORAH. He may, as I understand, have the right of appeal even in the case of a cheap edition of one volume; but the fact is, as a practical proposition, those who may be interested do not do that. A book is seized and confiscated, then the matter is dropped, for the reason that the expense and delay of appealing to the United States Customs Court is something that the ordinary citizen will not undergo.

Mr. SMOOT. That may be the case; but the party, none the less, has the right to go there.

Mr. DILL. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from New Mexico yield to the Senator from Washington?

Mr. CUTTING. I yield.

Mr. DILL. Has the Senator, in his study of this question, found any cases where books of this kind ever were taken to a district court of the United States and a jury allowed to pass on the question involved?

Mr. CUTTING. I do not know as to that. The last case from which I quoted was from the district court in Cincinnati. I do not know whether it was passed on by a jury or not, but I rather assume not.

Mr. DILL. There are extremely few of them that ever would be passed on by a jury.

Mr. CUTTING. Very few, because it is very seldom worth while to go to the expense and trouble of appealing to the district court.

Mr. WHEELER. Mr. President—
The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from New Mexico yield to the Senator from Montana?

Mr. CUTTING. I yield.

Mr. WHEELER. After all, it is not a question, as I see it, as to whether or not a man can appeal to the court; but it is a question whether the Congress of the United States thinks that the morals of the people of this country are going to be corrupted because a few pieces of literature come in that, in many instances, are classics. If the morals of the people of the United States are so easily corrupted, then surely the keeping out of a few volumes of classics and works of that kind is not going to save them.

Mr. CUTTING. The Senator has struck the keynote of the whole situation.

I should like to suggest that cases of this kind, cases where books are kept out under censorship, are, to a large extent, analogous to the injunction process in labor disputes, as to which the Senator from Montana is very much better informed than am I. The primary purpose of legislation of this character is to prevent something being done before it has been done. Practically every State in the Union has an antiobscenity law. The publication, the circulation, or the sale of obscene literature can be punished under our laws at the present time, just as acts of violence can be punished.

"CONSIDERED AS A WHOLE"

6

CONGRESSIONAL RECORD

This type of legislation tries to keep cases from a jury by barring them in advance, by preventing people from doing something which might possibly, under some circumstances, lead to a violation of the law.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?
The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from New Mexico yield to the Senator from Utah?

Mr. CUTTING. I yield to the Senator.
Mr. SMOOT. I desire to call the Senator's attention to the fact that every State of the Union has laws against the sale of opium. Does not the Senator think, notwithstanding the States have laws prohibiting the sale of opium, that the Government of the United States should also exclude it from entry into the United States?

Mr. CUTTING. Oh, yes, Mr. President; I think they have absolute authority to do so; and in the case of opium, which is a substance which is easily traceable and discernible and can be analyzed and tested, the United States certainly should help in the enforcement of the law. We are dealing here with something which is entirely indefinite. There is no authoritative test of obscenity. There is no definition of it which all of us sitting here in this Chamber would agree to. It is one of the vaguest words in the English language.

Mr. DILL. Mr. President—
The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from New Mexico yield to the Senator from Washington?

Mr. CUTTING. I yield to the Senator.
Mr. DILL. In connection with what the Senator from Utah suggests, I want to call attention to the fact that the Senator has cited a number of books which are forbidden entry into the country, but those very books circulate in our libraries, and are on the bookshelves, and are in the stores, and can be purchased everywhere, showing that under the laws of obscenity they are not forbidden but under the rules of some customs clerk they are forbidden.

Mr. CUTTING. It would seem to be equally important to detect them whether they are circulated internally or whether they come in from the outside.

Mr. FRAZIER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?
The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from New Mexico yield to the Senator from North Dakota?

Mr. CUTTING. I do.
Mr. FRAZIER. I should like to ask the Senator if there is any provision in the section which the Senator has moved to strike out providing for an appeal to the district courts? Under the present law I understand there is such a provision; but that was stricken out in the House and left out by the Senate committee, as I understand.

Mr. CUTTING. My impression, Mr. President, is that there is still an appeal to the district courts on questions of forfeiture. I am not a lawyer, and I find it difficult to discuss these matters; but if the Senator will read sections 608 and the following sections, I think he will see that that covers the matter.

Mr. SMOOT. Sections 608, 609, and 610, beginning at the bottom of page 462 and going over to page 464.

Mr. CUTTING. Yes; that is quite right. That is the part of the bill to which I refer. In other words, if the value is over $1,000, there is an automatic appeal to the district court. If it is under $1,000, there are certain processes which will bring it to the district court. I think there is always that appeal, but it is one that from the nature of the case is very seldom indulged in.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President—
The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from New Mexico yield to the Senator from Maryland?

Mr. CUTTING. I yield to the Senator from Maryland.
Mr. TYDINGS. In the case suggested by the Senator from Utah the facts are entirely different.

In the first place, everybody recognizes that opium is a thing that has a great deal of evil in it, a great deal of room for harm, and the experts in medicine have so decreed.

In the case we have before us the experts should be learned men who know when literature is good or bad, or who, for example, are able to read the Spanish books which come into the country; but there the decision is made not by experts but, as the Senator says, by customs clerks who probably know nothing about the books, and are not in position to judge well whether they are or are not obscene. There is no connection at all between opium and a book.

77829-5745

THE BOSTON HERALD

SATURDAY, JANUARY 25, 1930

WATCH AND WARD
To the Editor of The Herald:

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President—
The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from New Mexico yield to the Senator from Kentucky?

Mr. CUTTING. I do.
Mr. BARKLEY. Are there not expert linguists in the Customs Service who can read these Spanish and French and Italian books to determine whether or not they are obscene? Certainly no ignorant person would be put on as inspector of Spanish, Italian, or French books. He must be able to read the book in order to determine something about its character.

Mr. CUTTING. Mr. President, I am afraid I can not guarantee that at all.

Mr. BARKLEY. The Senator does not intend to leave the impression that the Government has a lot of men employed in the Customs Service to inspect these books printed in foreign languages who can not even read the language, does he?

Mr. CUTTING. I did not mean to go into that matter at all, but if the Senator will come around to my office I can show him a great many copies of translations made by various bureaus from the Spanish into the English language which are totally incorrect from start to finish.

Mr. BARKLEY. Of course, I should have to take the Senator's word as to the correctness of the Spanish translation. I should have to rely entirely on the Senator's version.

Mr. CUTTING. The Senator can rely on the dictionary, so far as that is concerned. I do not want to guarantee the accuracy of the readers in the Bureau of Customs or any other bureau of the United States Government, because I know that in many cases the translations are absolutely inaccurate.

Mr. President, I did not intend to take so much time with the discussion of this matter, the interpretation of the obscenity law; but it is quite obvious, even from what little I have quoted and read, that there are two entirely incongruous ideas of what constitutes obscenity. One is the idea that something is obscene which has the capacity to shock a sensitive mind; and that is the interpretation which is carried out in these decisions about words and phrases and sentences.

The other idea of obscenity is that it is something which has a general tendency to corrupt public morals. I submit that the two things are utterly incongruous. The more a book tends to shock an individual, the less apt it is to do him any damage. If it shocks him enough, he will throw it in the fire or the wastebasket, and it will not damage his morals at all. The books which are apt to do a man harm are books which do not shock him, but which in various insidious ways may tempt him to read a little further from page to page, and in the long run may undermine the whole moral fiber of his being.

Mr. BARKLEY and Mr. NORRIS addressed the Chair.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from New Mexico yield; and if so, to whom?

Mr. CUTTING. I yield first to the Senator from Kentucky.
Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, may not the effect of this deleterious literature be somewhat similar to the effect of narcotic drugs? It may shock the reader or the victim at first, but after a while it does not shock him, because he has become so accustomed to it that no sort of injurious literature or drug, either, could give a very serious shock to a man who was interested either in reading it or taking it.

Mr. CUTTING. Mr. President, I can not claim to be an authority on that subject. Judging from the decisions of the customs clerks and the courts which are apt to pass on those things, I think they are getting more and more sensitive as time goes on, and barring out more and more books of this sort.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from New Mexico now yield to the Senator from Nebraska?

Mr. CUTTING. I do.
Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, the Senator, in his answer, has really made the suggestion that I was about to make. A while ago attention was called to the fact that there was one clerk down here who never read anything but the alleged obscene literature. If the theory of the Senator from Kentucky is right, that man would let everything in by this time. Instead of that, he is keeping everything out. He gets worse instead of better.

Mr. CUTTING. He is still, apparently, a healthy member of society.

Mr. BARKLEY. Perhaps as his shockability decreases, the deleterious matter in the books increases, so that as it pulls down he pulls up.

Mr. CUTTING. The Senator will remember that they are all under a heavy penalty to keep out anything that may be deleterious.

Mr. President, the fundamental trouble in this whole thing is that we can not say what is decent and what is indecent. No human being is infallible in those respects. Every generation and every century changes its standards of decency, and even of morality.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?
The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from New Mexico yield to the Senator from Utah?

Mr. CUTTING. I yield to the Senator.
Mr. SMOOT. I do not want the Senator's statement to reflect upon a man whom I know, and I am quite sure the Senator does not. A prominent official of the Treasury Department passes on those books. I know that he does a great deal of other work besides passing on obscene books; and I did not want the impression to go out that all that he does down here is to deal with obscene books, because if I want any information along any other line he gives it to me. I know he is one of the very, very splendid men in the department, and this work has not corrupted him perceptibly.

Mr. CUTTING. Mr. President, I certainly did not want to reflect on the gentleman to whom the Senator refers; but, really, if he does a great deal more besides reading 739 immoral books which he has ruled out of the country—and I suppose he reads a number of books which he has decided were perfectly fit to be introduced into this country—I think he must be one of the most hardworking officials the Government has ever seen. I did not mean to reflect on him, Mr. President. I want to give him the highest encomium for his industry and efficiency.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President—
The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from New Mexico yield to the Senator from Nebraska?

Mr. CUTTING. I do.
Mr. NORRIS. I should like to ask the Senator from Utah if this gentleman reads all of this obscene literature and still is such a fine, moral gentleman notwithstanding that, what is the use of keeping out the stuff? Why not let everybody have it, and then we will all be good?

Mr. TYDINGS and Mr. BARKLEY addressed the Chair.
The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from New Mexico yield; and if so, to whom?

Mr. CUTTING. I yield first to the Senator from Maryland.
Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, I should like to inquire, if some one here can give me the information, whether this gentleman needs any help in reading these books, so that they can be properly excluded?

Mr. CUTTING. I think the Senator from Utah can enlighten the Senator from Maryland on that point.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I did not know what the question was asked for. When the Senator began it I was wondering whether he was going to seek the position himself. [Laughter.] But I can not say, Mr. President, whether this Treasury official needs any assistance or not. The books that he does read, however, I want to say, are the books that come to the ports and there is a question made as to their admissibility, and he reads those books for the purpose of passing upon the matter; that is all.

Mr. FESS. Mr. President—
The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from New Mexico yield to the Senator from Ohio?

Mr. CUTTING. I yield to the Senator.
Mr. FESS. I desire to suggest to the Senator from New Mexico that it may not be necessary to read an entire book in order to find that it is an unfit book.

That reminds me, if the Senator will permit me, of what Walter Page did when he was editor of The World's Work. He received several manuscripts for publication from an individual. He returned them from time to time saying, "Thank you for your manuscript, but it is not quite suitable for this publication." So the lady pasted two pages together and sent another manuscript to him to see whether or not he really would read it, and when the manuscript came back with the same kind of letter it offended her, and she wrote to Mr. Page taking him down because he said he had appreciated the manuscript but had not read it, which was proved by his not having separated the pages. Mr. Page wrote back:

DEAR MADAM: When I order two eggs for breakfast I do not have to eat both of them to find that they are bad.

[Laughter.]
Mr. CUTTING. Mr. President, I appreciate the Senator's contribution to the discussion; but I think, in the case of a work of literature, it is very difficult to judge any work by sentences or paragraphs or pages. The Senator probably will remember the man who endeavored to prove from the Apostle's Creed that "Pontius Pilate was crucified." I hope, for his own sake, that the gentleman to whom the Senator from Utah referred has not read the whole of these books, but only a sentence here and there which has induced him to throw them out; but that is hardly a fair way of judging the literature which the American people ought to be entitled to read. It may be a fair way of judging manuscripts for publication.

77829-6745

CONGRESSIONAL RECORD

7

Mr. FESS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield again?
Mr. CUTTING. Yes; I yield.

Mr. FESS. I do not want the Senator to conclude, from the levity of the illustration I gave, that I am deprecating in the slightest degree the strong case he is making. I am impressed with what he is saying. I did want to protect this gentleman who read 700 books. It might not have been necessary for him to read the whole of a book in order to find that the book was not good.

Mr. CUTTING. I appreciate that. I am making no attack on this gentleman.

Mr. BLACK. Mr. President, if the Senator will yield, am I correct in inferring that what the Senator is insisting on is that each State should be permitted to determine for itself what books its people might read, rather than have that determined by a customs collector?

Mr. CUTTING. Yes; that is exactly my point.

Friday, October 11, 1929

Mr. CUTTING. Mr. President, on yesterday we had an interesting general discussion of various phases of the practical workings of section 205 as it has been construed by customs clerks and by the courts. The standards of decency and morality vary from generation to generation. Of all the classical authors the three who might seem least likely to be barred by the customs censors under present regulations are perhaps, Homer, Dante, and Shakespeare. I should like to point out to the Senate that each one of those authors at various times has been branded as an immoral or licentious author. Plato in his Republic insisted that the works of Homer, as well as those of all other poets of the classical period, should be barred as the writings of immoral and indecent authors, holding up to ridicule the religious opinions of the day.

When Savonarola came into power in Florence he burned in the public square the works of three authors, the most notorious, as he said, for licentiousness and indecency. One of the three was Dante.

The plays of Shakespeare were banned from the stage within a quarter of a century of his death as the most striking example of immorality which could be put before the people of England.

The same thing applies in many ways to works of art. It was only the premature death of one of the popes which prevented him from carrying out his plan to put draperies on all the figures of Michael Angelo's Last Judgment.

I imagine there are Senators here who remember the time when Powers's Greek Slave, in the Corcoran Art Gallery, was placed in a booth, presumably with the object of insuring that none except those with a certificate of moral excellence should be allowed to see that particular work of art.

On this general subject, Mr. President, I claim that the barring of works of literature as obscene is both unnecessary and ineffective. I believe it is unnecessary because I can not think that the evil effect of works of literature is by any means as far-reaching as the proponents of this sort of legislation seem to believe. If I may be allowed to quote from some one as old-fashioned as John Milton, I should like to read what he says about bad books as compared to bad physical diet.

Bad meats—
He says—

will scarce breed good nourishment in the healthiest concoction, but herein the difference is of bad books that they to a discreet and judicious reader serve in many respects to discover, to confute, to forewarn, and to illustrate.

Further on he says:

And again, if it be true that a wise man, like a good refiner, can rather gold out of the drossiest volume, and that a fool will be a fool with the best book, yes, or without book, there is no reason that we should deprive a wise man of any advantage in his wisdom, while we seek to restrain from a fool that which being restrained will be no hindrance to his folly. . . . A wise man will make better use of an idle pamphlet than a fool will do of sacred Scripture.

Mr. President, if that was true in Milton's day, how much more must it be so at the present time among the people of this country? There has never been a nation on earth which had so widespread and far-reaching a system of universal education as has the United States, with its public schools, colleges, universities, with its libraries and night schools and correspondence courses. Is our whole educational system such a feeble thing that it can not offset the effect of an occasional bad book from abroad? Is the foundation of the American Government so feeble that it can not withstand subversive opinions of a few foreign theorists?

"CONSIDERED AS A WHOLE"

To I had ent
pai
tro
pai
vol cip pai
thi obs
ish
"ec
lan
ruf
I phi mu ere tio
pri
of
The ic
con pos
a st a v
the disc red ath
con
a b
a w
T
Just
com rent ame fich ther in a tee,
as s ful
N mad pur
of ti stat tent
and hole feat
Jud can Ti sided men
vers
Mar
expe body
by t woul
lawy plea
sider tiver that sider than tain
State
cal statu
are f
I will Bo

8

CONGRESSIONAL RECORD

If this law is unnecessary, I claim also that it is ineffective, because the very books which are barred by the censors, the titles of some of which I read to the Senate yesterday, are protected by copyright in this country. The copyright laws themselves are very stringent against indecent or obscene or immoral literature, and yet these very books which we allow to be published, which can be had in our own Congressional Library, which can be purchased in any book store are banned from importation.

I realize, Mr. President, that there are many difficult problems involved in this question. There are Senators, as I know well, who feel sincerely that the importation of certain books might be corruptive of the morals of youth. The question of the youth of the country, the adolescent especially, is, of course, a peculiar problem which has been extensively dealt with by psychological experts. I do not care to discuss it at this time. All I want to say is that when one thinks of the influences to which youth can be exposed, it seems rather far-fetched to believe that any particular difference can be made by any action of the Bureau of Customs.

I should like to read a quotation from Macaulay on this subject:

We find it difficult, to believe that in a world so full of temptation as this, any gentleman, whose life would have been virtuous if he had not read Aristophanes and Juvenal, will be made virtuous by reading them. A man who, exposed to all the influences of the state of society as that in which we live, is yet afraid of exposing himself to the influence of a few Greek or Latin verses, acts, we think, much like the felon who begged the sheriff to let him have an umbrella to hold over his head from the door of Newgate to the gallows because it was a drizzling morning and he was apt to take cold.

If that was the position in the time of Macaulay, what can be the position at the present time when any youth or any adolescent can take up a copy of a daily newspaper and read all the details of the Klipp Rheinfelder or the Peaches Browning cases or the cases which are being reported in the daily press here at the present time, the McPherson case and the O'Donnell case. The protection of the morals of the youth of this country, must, I believe, be left in all common sense to their parents and to their families and to the laws of the States in which they reside.

Mr. President, I have tried to point out as briefly as possible the workings of this obscenity law so far as it is concerned with the Bureau of Customs. I now wish to take up the subject of the amendment for the first time offered to the tariff law by the Ways and Means Committee and the House of Representatives and which has been acquiesced in by the Senate Committee on Finance. I shall ask Senators to notice that we are for the first time in the history of this country including in this law the following words:

Any book, pamphlet, paper, writing, advertisement, circular, print, picture, or drawing containing any matter advocating or urging treason, insurrection, or forcible resistance to any law of the United States, or containing any threat to take the life or inflict bodily harm upon the President of the United States.

That was the House provision. The Senate modified that provision the other day by striking out the words "the President of" and inserting the words "any person in" the United States.

Mr. President, when we deal with this matter of seditious and insurrectionary literature we, of course, are not treading on quite as firm ground as we are in connection with the question of obscenity, because the obscenity laws have been tested for a long time, but we can not, of course, be sure just how the amendment to which I am now referring might work if it were adopted.

Mr. WHEELER. Mr. President—
The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from New Mexico yield to the Senator from Montana?

Mr. CUTTING. I yield.
Mr. WHEELER. At the present time, of course, we have upon the statute books a law under which prosecutions may be instituted for treason.

Mr. CUTTING. Yes; but may I suggest to the Senator that nobody has actually been convicted of treason in the history of the United States?

Mr. WHEELER. I was going to make this observation: During the war I was prosecuting attorney and I had occasion to come to Washington and talk with the Assistant Attorney General, who handled these matters. At that time he said to me, "We do not have any trouble in the United States in getting prosecutors to prosecute cases; the great trouble we have is getting prosecutors who will go out and make a charge of treason against somebody when no such charge exists."

77820-5745

THE BOSTON HERALD

SATURDAY, JANUARY 25, 1930

WATCH AND WARD

To the Editor of The Herald:

Just think of what we are doing in these times! We are leaving it up to some clerk in a department to say whether or not some individual is bringing in a treasonable article. An individual might bring in a paper which some little 2 by 4 clerk in the department might say is treasonable. The man who brought the paper in, then, would be branded all over this country as one who had some treasonable literature in his possession.

In order to protect himself he would have to appeal to the courts, and finally have it declared not to be treasonable literature. It seems to me it is absolutely foolish to leave the decision of such a question in the hands of some clerk and give such power to him when we have all the laws upon the statute book at the present time which we need.

Mr. CUTTING. Mr. President, I remember a case in my State where a very vigorous attempt was made to have some one prosecuted for treason because he threw a stone at a schoolhouse window over which the American flag was flying.

Mr. WHEELER. Of course in times when there is some hysteria sweeping over the country there are certain groups of people who are always trying to get some prosecutor to file charges of that kind of the most serious nature when they should never be filed at all.

Mr. CUTTING. Mr. President, the House provision I have read to the Senate and I wish to speak just for a moment on the Senate amendment to the House provision, which the Senate adopted a few days ago and accepted without any debate and, I think, without due consideration.

The House provision excludes any pamphlet, and so forth, containing any threat to take the life of or inflict bodily harm upon the President. As I understand, there was a good deal of argument before the Senate Finance Committee, and they decided that it would be absolutely unfair to protect the President of the United States while we leave our distinguished friend, the Vice President, unprotected by law; and the argument was then raised that the Supreme Court judges and the members of the Cabinet and ourselves and the Members of the House were equally entitled to the protection afforded by any such provision; and on further argument it appeared that there was no reason why officials should be granted any privileges which were not given to the ordinary citizen; and the Senate committee substituted a provision which excluded any threat against the bodily welfare of any citizen of the United States.

Mr. COUZENS. Mr. President—
The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from New Mexico yield to the Senator from Michigan?

Mr. CUTTING. I do.
Mr. COUZENS. The Senator overlooks the fact that we did not confine the provision to a citizen, but it includes any person in the United States.

Mr. CUTTING. Yes; I apologize to the Senator; of course, any human being who exists in our midst is equally entitled to the protection of our laws. But the absurdity of this provision and of the Senate committee amendment and of the whole subject is that we are giving to certain clerks in the Bureau of Customs the power to decide what is or what is not injurious to the bodily welfare of any citizen of the United States.

I am sorry the Senator from New York [Mr. COPELAND], who took part in the discussion yesterday afternoon, is not here at present, because I feel that this Senate committee amendment is particularly dangerous to members of the medical profession. If we leave it to the Customs Court, or to a customs official subject to review by the Customs Court, to decide what is or is not harmful to the bodily welfare of any citizen of the United States, we are running up against medical doctrines of tremendous tenacity.

Mr. COPELAND entered the Chamber.
The VICE PRESIDENT. The attention of the Senator from New York is invited to the remarks of the Senator from New Mexico.

Mr. CUTTING. I was speaking about the effect that the Senate committee amendment might have on the medical profession in this country. The Senate committee amendment, in connection with the House provision, excludes from the country any threat to inflict bodily harm upon any person in the United States.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?
The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from New Mexico yield to the Senator from New York?

Mr. CUTTING. I do.
Mr. COPELAND. Will the Senator refer me to the part of the bill he has in mind? Is it on page 286?

Mr. CUTTING. It is.

Mr. COPELAND. I thank the Senator.

Mr. CUTTING. I contend that under this provision the customs clerk will have to decide whether a medical argument for or against chiropractic or osteopathy or homeopathy or any other medical doctrine is or is not conducive to the bodily injury of any citizen of the United States; and I ask the Senator to remember also that if he makes the wrong decision, and allows a book or pamphlet or treatise to enter, and it is afterward decided that the doctrine maintained in that pamphlet was actually injurious to the welfare of any citizen of the United States, the clerk can be sent to the penitentiary for 10 years or fined $5,000, or both.

CONGRESSIONAL RECORD

9

I consider, for instance, that there is a large body of public opinion in this country which is opposed to vaccination.

Mr. COUZENS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?
The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from New Mexico yield to the Senator from Michigan?

Mr. CUTTING. I yield to the Senator.
Mr. COUZENS. I wonder if the Senator interprets this language in the same way that the committee, I think, interpreted it. This refers only to a threat to do bodily harm, and does not refer to any recommendations as to whether or not vaccination is desirable. I think this language says that the book or other matter must contain a threat to do bodily harm.

Mr. CUTTING. Does not the Senator think that a pamphlet advocating compulsory vaccination would be a threat to the bodily welfare of a citizen of the United States if the customs clerk who reviewed that section thought vaccination was a serious danger?

Mr. COUZENS. That is not my interpretation of a threat.
Mr. CUTTING. It might not be my interpretation of a threat, either; but it might be the interpretation of a threat by the clerk who took cognizance of this particular provision of the law.

Mr. COUZENS. If the Senator will pardon me further, I do not see how any clerk could place any such interpretation on the word "threat."

Mr. WHEELER. But, Mr. President, the latter part of this provision does not use the word "threat." The provision reads:

All persons are prohibited from importing into the United States from any foreign country any book, pamphlet, paper, writing, advertisement, circular, print, picture, or drawing containing any matter advocating or urging treason, insurrection, or forcible resistance to any law of the United States, or containing any threat to take the life of or inflict bodily harm upon any person in the United States, or any obscene book, pamphlet, paper, writing, advertisement, circular, print, picture, drawing, or other representation, figure, or image on or of paper or other material, or any cast, instrument, or other article of an immoral nature, or any drug or medicine, or any article whatever for the prevention of conception or for causing unlawful abortion.

The first portion of it only refers to a threat.
Mr. COUZENS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield further?
Mr. CUTTING. I yield.

Mr. COUZENS. The Senator from Montana is dealing with another feature of the provision, which the Senator from New Mexico dealt with at length on yesterday. We were talking about the first part, which dealt with threats. As to that part, I should like to ask the Senator from New Mexico if he thinks that a medical book which contains a recommendation or a suggestion that a person be vaccinated could be construed as a threat?

Mr. CUTTING. Mr. President, I frankly say that I think it could be construed as a threat by the type of people who have been enforcing the provisions of this law in the past. I do not say that I personally should construe it as a threat.

Mr. STEWART. Mr. President—
The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from New Mexico yield to the Senator from Oregon?

Mr. CUTTING. I do.
Mr. STEWART. May I merely say to the Senator that the language employed consists of the following words?—

Any threat to take the life of or inflict bodily harm.

We all know that criminal statutes are not to be enlarged by construction. It would seem to me that that language is so clear—and I say this with all deference to the Senator from New Mexico—that no one seriously embarking upon the mission of construing this law could reasonably argue that it means anything other than stated in the act, and that it means and could mean only the communication of a threat in the article. The mere fact that there might be something illogical or scientifically unsound in an article would not, in my own personal opinion, even commence to bring it within the boundaries of this act.

I merely wanted to suggest that to the Senator now, because I am quite certain that if he will reflect carefully upon that language he will be bound to come to some such opinion as that as to the construction of the act.

77829-5745-2

Mr. CUTTING. Mr. President, I always find it difficult to deal with legal subjects; but I should have said that the danger in that particular provision was the definition of the words "bodily harm." Those words may have been so definitely construed in the past that no such construction as I have suggested could be urged in the future.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President—
The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from New Mexico yield to the Senator from Nebraska?

Mr. CUTTING. I yield to the Senator.
Mr. NORRIS. I should like to suggest to the Senator that it seems to me he is correct when he says that an article, a book, or a pamphlet that would advocate, for instance, that all people be compulsorily vaccinated, that vaccination be made compulsory and that people be forced to submit to vaccination and that their children should be forced to submit to it, would constitute a threat in the estimation of some people, when we remember that while it may be a small minority, a very respectable minority—respectable not in size, perhaps, but in quality—some very fine individuals think that the worst crime that can be committed is to vaccinate a child; and they would defend their children with a gun before they would permit it to be done. In the mind of such a person, it seems to me, this would be the worst kind of a threat that could be made; and they are conscientious about it. I am not, of course, arguing that I think they are right; but they are just as conscientious as we are in any action that we take here.

Suppose that a high-minded, conscientious official, a graduate of several colleges, and having a lot of degrees behind his name that he had obtained at different collegiate institutions, were the person who had to pass on this question.

Mr. CUTTING. Backed up by an equally intelligent judge of the Customs Court.

Mr. NORRIS. Yes. We know what he would say, and we know, too, that he would be perfectly honest and perfectly conscientious in saying it, and that kind of literature would be barred; and that is only a sample. We could take up some other branch of human propriety or morality, when some equally conscientious, intelligent, and educated person might have definite ideas on some other line, and what would the decision be?

In other words, it seems to me that we ought to remember the words of Benjamin Franklin. I wish I had them here. I have quoted them before, but I do not happen to have them now. In speaking of the right of free speech, in substance he said:

It is argued that if we permit free speech the right will be abused. Why, of course, it will be abused. Everybody knows that it will be abused; but if we are going to decide what is proper in free speech, some human being must decide. He must be the judge. He must pass on it, and his idea will prevail and become part of the law; and it may be entirely different from the idea of anybody else.

In other words, we have reached a point where it is beyond the power, ingenuity, and wisdom of man to define just what should be on this side of the line and what should be on the other side of the line.

Mr. CUTTING. With the Senator's permission, may I quote these words from Benjamin Franklin?

Mr. NORRIS. I should be glad if the Senator would.

Mr. CUTTING. (reading):
Abuses of the freedom of speech ought to be repressed; but to whom dare we commit the care of doing it?

I think that is the passage to which the Senator referred.

Mr. NORRIS. Yes.

Mr. EDGE and Mr. STEWART addressed the Chair.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from New Mexico yield; and if so, to whom?

Mr. CUTTING. I yield first to the Senator from New Jersey.

Mr. EDGE. Mr. President, these possibilities are very interesting; but I should like to ask the Senator if he sees any possibility of misunderstanding these 8 or 10 words? As I read them, I can not see how there is any possibility of reading anything general into the paragraph. It prohibits the importation of matter advocating or urging of treason—that certainly is clear—insurrection, or forcible resistance to any law of the United States, or containing any threat, and so forth.

Mr. WHEELER. Mr. President—

Mr. EDGE. Just a moment, please, until I finish my question. I should like to ask the Senator this question: If I follow the Senator's argument, he criticizes the present method of censorship. But has the Senator any plan to suggest for another type of censorship to take the place of the customs officers, or are we to understand, through his amendment to strike out this entire section, that he believes that there should not be any

"CONSIDERED AS A WHOLE"

To It has ent
pair trou pair
vok clph pub pan thin obsc ishe
"cor
lang
rupt
In phie
mus
ered tion prin
of p.
The
is cont
post
a ste
a ve
the disc redit adik conv
a ba a wh
Th
just cons
read ama ficial
there in a tee,
as si
ful c
No
made pupp
of th
statu
feat,
and holes feats Judge
cann
The
sider meml
yers Mart exper
body
by it woul lawye piece sidere
tiven that sidere
than tainin States
cal li statut
are fe
I c
will re
Bos

10

CONGRESSIONAL RECORD

censorship of the type of literature which provides the things I have just read?

Mr. STEINER. Mr. President, does the Senator want to answer the Senator from New Jersey or will he yield to me?

Mr. CUTTING. I should like to answer the Senator from New Jersey first. In answer to his question I will say that I feel that this matter is adequately taken care of by State law; that that has been done in the century and a half since this Republic was instituted, and that I believe that situation is adequate for the future.

Mr. EDGE rose.

Mr. CUTTING. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. EDGE. I do not want to interrupt the Senator. I was very much interested in his answer to my question. If he has completed it, if I understand him correctly he would remove all censorship and depend entirely upon State jurisdiction to control any possible distribution of literature from abroad that endeavored to incite treason or the infliction of bodily injury.

Mr. STEINER rose.

Mr. CUTTING. Mr. President, I am going to deal with that question a little further on in my argument, and I would rather not make an extended reference to the point now. I was particularly referring to the Senate committee amendment changing the protection granted to the President of the United States into a general protection granted to every citizen, and I think the Senator from Oregon is about to discuss that feature of the law.

Mr. STEINER. Mr. President, I wanted to make one further suggestion with respect to the interpretation of the language.

It seems to me that it is impossible for us in an intelligent way to carry forward the discussion of policy in regard to this matter if we are disagreed as to what it is the measure prohibits. I do not care at this time to engage in debate with the Senator from New Mexico with respect to the general question involved; indeed, I do not know that I want to do that at all. But it seems to me very clear that there is some misunderstanding of the language. The thing that is prohibited is the importation of a certain article. All the rest of the paragraph is in the nature of definition. Inhibition or prohibition against the importation of these certain materials is defined by the language commencing in line 15, where it is provided that the article is prohibited if it contains any matter advocating or urging certain things, and then in line 17, "or containing any threat to take the life of or inflict bodily harm upon any person."

It would seem to me, as I listened to the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. NORTON] that his assumption was not sound when he suggested to the Senate that if the proposal in the writing were of such a nature that it constituted a threat, or of such a nature that it might be said by some person at least to constitute a menace, or that it was the teaching of a doctrine that was injurious, it would fall within the inhibition of this proposed act.

Repeating what I said a little while ago, a criminal act is not so broadly construed. If there be doubt, lawyers know that the criminal act will not be enlarged, and if we are to disagree here as to the meaning of simple language, it seems very certain to me that no court, and probably no agent of the Treasury, would go so far as to say that the mere presence in the writing of the actual or implied threat would constitute a violation of this measure. It would seem to me—and I say it with all deference to the views of others—that it is perfectly clear that the thing that is prohibited is the importation of the article which contains in it some matter which is a threat to take life or do bodily harm. That means the actual making of the threat by the person who formulated the writing, and it can not mean that there is in the doctrine exhibited in the writing something which some of us might consider as a menace.

I hope that the lawyers of this body will address themselves to that, because if we misread or misunderstand the meaning of the language employed, we may argue here at large and at length and never come to a proper conclusion respecting the whole matter.

Mr. BRATTON. Mr. President—

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from New Mexico yield to his colleague?

Mr. CUTTING. I yield.

Mr. BRATTON. The point the Senator from Oregon has advanced emphasizes the soundness of the theory advanced by my colleague. The Senator from Oregon suggests that the lawyers of this body address themselves to this language and see if they can arrive at a conclusion. If it is so doubtful that the lawyers here listening can not agree upon its true interpretation, that fact accentuates the soundness of the argument of my colleague that it is dangerous to leave the determination

77829—5745

THE BOSTON HERALD

SATURDAY, JANUARY 25, 1930

WATCH AND WARD

To the Editor of The Herald:

of that question to an untrained and unskilled mind, to wit, to some customs officer.

If we can not agree—and I dare say if the lawyers of this body were to express their views at length, there would be a dozen different views advanced and argued here. I think that emphasizes the very argument of my colleague.

Mr. STEINER. Mr. President, I would like to ask just one further question. I recognize the legal ability of the senior Senator from New Mexico, who has just spoken, and I am wondering if he disagrees with me in the proposition that the writing must contain an actual threat before it comes within the inhibition of this law.

Mr. BRATTON. I am not disagreeing with the Senator about that.

Mr. STEINER. May I ask the Senator, before he leaves that, whether he does not agree with that as a legal proposition?

Mr. BRATTON. I say that legal minds will disagree as to whether a given document constitutes a threat.

Mr. STEINER. Oh, yes, Mr. President; I did not mean to discuss that question at all. I am talking about the proper interpretation of the language of the measure itself, and trying to determine the thing that is inhibited or prohibited by the language. I am still wondering whether the Senator from New Mexico will not agree with me that the inhibition does not apply unless there is an actual threat contained in the writing.

Mr. BRATTON. That is my view.

Mr. STEINER. So we are not in disagreement at all; we are agreed, and I think we will all agree if we study this language just a little.

Mr. BRATTON. But I repeat that that does not detract from the soundness of my colleague's argument, because the document itself is not so important; the important thing is the interpretation and construction to be placed upon it. My colleague complains against placing the power to make that interpretation and construction in the hands of some untrained, unskilled mind. With my colleague I am in full accord as to that.

Mr. CUTTING. Mr. President, that is exactly the point I have been trying to make.

Mr. COPELAND and Mr. WHEELER addressed the Chair.

Mr. STEINER. Mr. President, may I say just this: That, so far as the last statement made by the senior Senator from New Mexico is concerned, I am disposed to agree with him in it. I do not want to be understood as saying that the clerks of the Treasury should have the authority to interpret language upon which lawyers might disagree, and I think the Senator is quite right about that. It was only as to the interpretation of this language that I was addressing myself, and I still feel that it does not inhibit writings merely because they contain material which we might construe, or which some other person might construe, as a menace to the life or bodily welfare of some other person.

Mr. CUTTING. Mr. President, I think that this is rather an unimportant sentence in the bill, and I am not desirous of over-stressing this particular point. I should be glad to hasten discussion of this particular word or phrase. But I yield now to the Senator from New York.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, I thank the Senator. I am not a lawyer, but I think I can read this language, and perhaps I am the sort of a person who might be called upon to determine whether the book attempted to be brought in was obscene or whether a threat were contained in it. The language in line 17 is "or containing any threat to take the life of or inflict bodily harm upon any person in the United States." I think this language refers to anything which may be a menace to the life or to the bodily welfare of any person in the United States. If it means that, the criticism made by the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. NORTON] is perfectly valid. There are lots of persons in this country who would do exactly what the Senator from Nebraska has said—defend with a pistol, if need be, the rights of their children against the invasion of a board of health seeking to vaccinate or inoculate. The language refers to anything that may be a menace to the life or to the bodily welfare of any person in the United States, and if some Government official takes the view suggested by the Senator from Nebraska regarding vaccination or inoculation, he would say that any advice regarding vaccination or inoculation is something that is a menace to the life or bodily welfare of a citizen of the United States.

While I have the greatest sympathy in the world for persons who do not believe in vaccination and inoculation, yet I feel that nothing in science has been better established than the value of vaccination and inoculation, and I would say that it was pathetic, lamentable, and a tremendous mistake that there should be placed in the hands of an official of the Government the right to say that any material must be excluded because, in his opinion, it was a menace to the life or the bodily welfare of a citizen.

Mr. CUTTING. Mr. President, something else has occurred to me during the Senator's remarks. Suppose the customs clerk were an advocate of the orthodox theory of medicine, and suppose a book came before him which urged the prohibition of vaccination by any citizen of the United States; would not such a book be apt to be barred by the customs authorities at the port, and might not the judge who afterwards passed on the matter agree with the decision of the customs official?

Mr. WHEELER. Mr. President—

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from New Mexico yield to the Senator from Montana?

Mr. CUTTING. I yield.

Mr. WHEELER. During the war we placed upon the statute books a law which made it a felony for anyone to threaten to take the life of the President of the United States. It seemed perfectly plain to me what that law provided, but an examination of the decisions of the Federal district courts of the United States will show that they were not all agreed as to what a threat to take the life of the President of the United States was. During the war we went so far as to say that anybody who threatened the life of the President of the United States should be punished as a felon under the sedition act. Now, in times of peace when we are about to sign another peace treaty, we say that not only should we prohibit anybody from threatening to take the life of the President of the United States but should prohibit anybody threatening to take the life of any Member of Congress or any other citizen of the United States; and we ought to include the goats and the sheep and the cattle of the United States, because the attempt is to carry it to the utmost extreme.

As I have said, we find that the district courts of the United States disagreed in the interpretation of the sedition act, one district court and one circuit court of appeals holding that this was sedition, and another district court and another circuit court of appeals holding that something else was sedition.

Let me particularly call attention to this language—and I do not want to interrupt the Senator unduly—

Mr. CUTTING. I appreciate the Senator's remarks.

Mr. WHEELER. The language is, "advocating or urging treason, insurrection, or forcible resistance." Just think of the latitude that would give to one of these petty officials, to determine what is a book or other writing advocating treason. All we have to do is to go back to the Adams sedition law.

Under that law we find that the Federal courts of the United States prosecuted men for treason for the most trivial things. The truth about it is that the courts, the lower courts, particularly, have decided that different things amounted to treason and particularly when it came down to saying what amounted to advocating treason and what amounted to advocating forcible resistance. There is the widest kind of latitude, and I challenge the Senator from Oregon [Mr. STEINER] to get any two lawyers in the Senate who could possibly agree as to just the limit to which we could confine it.

Mr. CARAWAY. Mr. President—

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from New Mexico yield to the Senator from Arkansas?

Mr. CUTTING. I yield.

Mr. CARAWAY. I beg the Senator's pardon for digressing just slightly from the subject of his discourse, but while Senators have been talking about the language of the act itself I want to call attention to it in one particular. It reads:

All persons are prohibited from importing into the United States from any foreign country—

And then gives the names of the things that are prohibited. Those who are interested in the language of the statute will observe that the inhibition is against "importing into the United States from a foreign country." The United States is quite well defined as not including Porto Rico and the Philippine Islands, and yet if one wanted to import those things he could import them into any of those territories, because the law does not inhibit the importation into those territories, and then they could be reshipped to the United States, because they must be imported from some foreign country before they can be prohibited from entry into this country. While we were talking about language, I thought it well to call the Senator's attention to that thought.

Mr. CUTTING. I think the Senator for the suggestion.

Mr. CARAWAY. The provision is against importing into the United States from a foreign country. It would be a very easy matter to get around the entire censorship in the way I have suggested.

77829—5745

CONGRESSIONAL RECORD

11

Mr. WHEELER. We ought to protect the Filipinos if we are going to protect the people here in the United States.

Mr. CARAWAY. It would seem so, but whoever wrote the law evidently did not think so.

Mr. SMOOT. Porto Rico and the Philippine Islands can protect their own citizens.

Mr. CUTTING. I do not care to take any further time on that particular detail of the provision. I think that the two documents which I shall offer for the Record at the present time have perhaps already been printed in the Record, although I am not at all sure. One is a statement by a former assistant attorney general of the United States, Alfred Bettman, of Cincinnati. He was an assistant attorney general during the Wilson administration and had a great deal of experience in interpreting laws of this kind. I am not going to read it at length, but I want to call particular attention of the Senate to this statement:

The proposed tariff bill proposes to place the interpretation and application of the section in the hands of customs officials and customs courts, and we know by experience that language of that sort is interpreted and applied by administrative officials in a manner most dangerous to civil liberties and contrary to fundamental constitutional conceptions.

I ask unanimous consent to insert the entire statement in the Record at this point.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered. The statement is as follows:

MR. BETTMAN'S STATEMENT

"My attention has been called to section 305 of the proposed tariff act of 1929 as reported out by the Ways and Means Committee of the House of Representatives and the Finance Committee of the Senate. This section forbids the importation of 'any book, pamphlet, paper, writing, advertisement, circular, print, picture, or drawing containing any matter advocating or urging treason, insurrection, or forcible resistance to any law of the United States.'"

"If this really means what it says, then it is useless. For, as a matter of fact, nobody writes or imports any book or writing advocating or urging treason, insurrection, or forcible resistance to any law of the United States."

"In all the history of courts in the United States there has never been a conviction for treason; and Aaron Burr was the last man who advocated insurrection. But the proposed tariff bill proposes to place the interpretation and application of the section in the hands of customs officials and the Customs Court, and we know by experience that language of that sort is interpreted and applied by administrative officials in a manner most dangerous to civil liberties and contrary to fundamental constitutional conceptions."

"For instance, take a book which in a most scientific, impersonal, and philosophical manner discusses violence as a mode of political activity, for instance, as those written by the French political scientist Sobel's work on Violence, or a book which discusses the ethics of revolution in a most philosophic and detached spirit. The author might even take his stand against the use of violence under any circumstances but include within his book, for purposes of discussion, the arguments of his opponents. Such discussions occur in the works of some of our most learned political scientists and constitutional lawyers. Such books do and ought form part of the reading of students of problems of law, government, and ethics, and it is just such books which administrative officials, not equipped with the necessary philosophic and scholarly outlook, are apt to interpret as falling within a provision of this nature."

WORSE THAN USELESS

"Certainly in peace time we do not need any sedition law. What place has a sedition law in a protective tariff bill? As Justice Oliver Wendell Holmes has pointed out in his latest opinion, freedom of thought and discussion is the vital basic freedom. Without it democratic society is impossible. We have no sedition. The proposed section is worse than useless; it is mischievous."

Mr. WHEELER. Mr. Bettman was the man in the Wilson administration who at one time at least had charge of practically all prosecutions under the sedition act, if I am correctly informed.

Mr. CUTTING. That is correct.

Mr. WHEELER. One of the reasons why the Wilson administration finally had to select somebody here in Washington was because of the fact that the courts and the district attorneys all over the United States were holding different views as to what the real meaning and interpretation of the statute ought to be. They tried to confine it within proper limits, and in doing so had to select some one here in Washington to guide the various district attorneys and Federal judges to keep them from putting a wrong interpretation upon the statute.

Mr. CUTTING. Mr. President, the second document which I am going in a moment to ask to have inserted in the Record

"CONSIDERED AS A VOUCHER"

12

CONGRESSIONAL RECORD

is a statement by Prof. Zechariah Chafee, Jr. of the Harvard Law School, with regard to this particular provision in the pending bill. I think that statement has been introduced into the Record heretofore. I am not going to read it in full. With great diffidence I am inclined to think that "the power to decide whether such printed material shall be forfeited is given to the customs officials without a review before United States district judges," is probably incorrect. I believe, after some study of the matter, that there is already a proper channel for appeal to United States district judges, although there is an optional appeal to the Customs Court at the same time.

The part of Professor Chafee's statement in which I am particularly interested is where he makes it clear that this clause is not limited to books and pamphlets which specifically refer to revolutions in the United States. He states:

The clause appears to include any general advocacy of revolution as a means of social change, since such a doctrine would naturally extend to the United States as well as to other countries. Some at least of the customs officials to whom the reading of the books is intrusted would be sure to act on this interpretation of the law.

In other words, if I construe Professor Chafee's interpretation correctly, the words "treason" and "insurrection" do not refer to laws of the United States, and "forcible resistance" is the only thing which is specifically connected with the laws of the United States under the plausible interpretation of the provision.

I ask unanimous consent that the entire statement of Professor Chafee may be printed in the Record.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered. The statement is as follows:

STATEMENT OF PROF. ZECHARIAH CHAFEE, JR., OF THE HARVARD LAW SCHOOL, IN RE PARAGRAPH 305 OF PENDING HAWLEY-SMOOT TARIFF BILL.

1. The power to decide whether such printed material shall be forfeited is given to the customs officials without a review before United States district judges.

2. It seems almost certain that this clause is not limited to books and pamphlets which specifically refer to revolution in the United States. The clause appears to include any general advocacy of revolution as a means of social change, since such a doctrine would naturally extend to the United States as well as to other countries. Some at least of the customs officials to whom the reading of the books is intrusted would be sure to act on this interpretation of the law.

3. This clause creates an effective censorship over foreign literature. There are many foreign books and pamphlets which for the most part contain elaborate discussions of social and economic questions, which it is very desirable to read. Here and there the writer is so impressed with the hopelessness of legal change in the present system that he advocates resort to force if nothing else serves. That alone will render importation of the whole book impossible.

4. Many of the classics of modern economics will be put on this new index expurgations. The law will prevent a loyal citizen from obtaining from abroad the work of Marx, Proudhon, Bakunin, or Stirner. Even if we could wisely dispense with these left-wing books, much less radical publications will be excluded. For example, one of the sources of contemporary thought which has had a large sale in this country is Bertrand Russell's Proposed Roads to Freedom. The further importation of this book would be forbidden because of its extracts from the communist manifesto of 1848 and from anarchist songs. Of course, any antisocialistic book which gives an adequate historical account of its opponents will fall under the same condemnation.

5. One particular instance will show the evil of such a statute. Harvard University has been collecting in its library books, pamphlets, posters, and other material relating to the Russian Revolution. After the French Revolution nothing of the sort was attempted for many years, and in consequence the Harvard library is avoiding such a loss in the case of the Russian Revolution, which everybody, no matter what his opinion of it may be, recognizes as one of the important events in history. The proposed law would necessitate the seizure of most of any further material of this sort on its arrival from Russia. No exception is made in the bill for universities or other libraries. Even officials can not lawfully import revolutionary literature, and an exception in their favor would be an insult to the citizens of the United States.

6. This law will not merely prevent the importation of important books printed abroad, but it will also indirectly stop the reprinting of such books by our own publishers, since they will be unable to obtain the necessary sheets of the book from abroad for use in setting up the type here.

7. This law is a kindergarten measure which assumes that the American people are so stupid and so untrustworthy that it is unsafe to let them read anything about revolutions, because they would immediately become converted. If this legislation is to be enforced with any impar-

77829-5745

WATCH AND WARD
To the Editor of The Herald

ality, it must necessarily cut us off from the economic and political thought of Europe and the rest of the world in our own time.

Mr. CUTTING. Mr. President, we are now getting down to the base of the whole discussion, the propriety of excluding political opinion which may happen to differ from our own. I think it will be seen by anyone who studies the two statements which I have just sent to the desk for insertion in the Record that a customs clerk might quite plausibly exclude almost any work of advanced political thought or even of political thought which happened to disagree with his own opinion. That is the fundamental difficulty with the whole censorship matter. There is no practical appeal in an ordinary case, because it is not worth a man's time or trouble or money to prosecute an appeal in general from a decision of such clerks.

Professor Chafee makes it clear that the works of political theorists like Carl Marx, Proudhon, Bakunin, or Stirner, and even Bertrand Russell, would be excluded or might conceivably be excluded by customs clerks under the provision which we are talking of adopting. I will go further than that. If we consider the purpose for which such a provision was obviously placed in the bill I can quite conceive that any postal clerk could exclude the works of any man who would agitate a reform of any kind or any man who argued in such a way that the public spirit of unrest might be aroused.

After all, is there any vaguer word in the English language than the word "insurrection"? It is even worse than the word "disobedience."

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President—
The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from New Mexico yield to the Senator from Wisconsin?

Mr. CUTTING. I yield.
Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I was just going to suggest to the Senator that probably the English editions of Thomas Jefferson's works would be prohibited.

Mr. CUTTING. Yes; of course, they would be prohibited.
Mr. WHEELER. Likewise some of the speeches made by Abraham Lincoln would certainly have been excluded.

Mr. CUTTING. The Declaration of Independence would certainly be excluded in English editions. If there ever was a treasonable utterance toward the government which was in power at that time it certainly was the Declaration of Independence, and if treason means not treason against the Government of the United States but against any government, how could we admit the words of Tom Paine or Patrick Henry?

I thank the Senator from Montana for his reference to Abraham Lincoln. He undoubtedly remembers what Abraham Lincoln said in his first inaugural address, which I quote:

This country with its institutions belongs to the people who inhabit it. Whenever they shall grow weary of existing government they can exercise their constitutional right of amending it or their revolutionary right to dismember or overthrow it.

If those words are not insurrectionary, I can not conceive of any words that might be.

If, as Senators have suggested, the law might be interpreted to exclude the works of Thomas Jefferson and Abraham Lincoln, it would certainly exclude most of the thinkers of the present day and most of the thinkers of the past century.

Mr. WHEELER. They certainly would never allow to enter into the United States some of Ramsay MacDonald's speeches made in England, and really I am not sure, if what I am told is correct about the speech he made the other day before representatives of the foreign press association, that if he had made that speech abroad and tried to send it into the United States, it would have been barred under this section notwithstanding the fact that most of the members of the Finance Committee stood up and applauded him when he spoke the other day in the Senate.

Mr. CUTTING. Mr. President, I appreciate the suggestion made by the Senator from Montana. Every Member of the Senate was profoundly moved by the words of the British Prime Minister, certainly one of the most eminent of living statesmen. I wondered at the time—because I spent a good deal of time in England during the war—how many Members of this body were stopping to think of the fact that during those years Mr. Ramsay MacDonald was ostracized as a disloyal citizen in his own country and was occasionally even branded as a traitor. Certainly if a customs clerk were to study his written and spoken utterances at that time he might very plausibly be convinced that those utterances were of a treasonable character, because after all his country was at war when he uttered them and they must have had the effect of giving aid and comfort to the enemies of his country. I disagreed with many of the opinions which he uttered at the time and with many of them I am still in disagreement, but I think that anyone who listened to that man at the tribune of the Senate the other day and heard his sincere and straightforward statement would be convinced that it was in the long run for the benefit of humanity to allow him to say what he said then and to maintain the position which he has consistently maintained at that and at other times. I thank the Senator from Montana for his suggestion. It is a striking illustration of the fact that public opinion changes with startling rapidity, and that the heresies of to-day may easily become the commonplaces and platitudes of to-morrow. I believe that it was to a large extent Mr. MacDonald's courage and sincerity in advocating the doctrines in which he believed which has made him for the second time the foremost citizen of the British Empire.

CONGRESSIONAL RECORD

13

It is a most striking thing, Mr. President; it is one of the things which must clearly illustrate the danger of any such provision as has been incorporated into this bill, to think that quite possibly every statement made not only in war time but in the years after the war by Mr. Ramsay MacDonald might be excluded from this country, and may be excluded if this proposed legislation shall pass.

Mr. President, I am not going to take the time of the Senate to elaborate points of this character, but I wish to mention one particular thing. One of the movements which the American people should be most ready to study is the movement now going on in Russia. Those of us who disbelieve in it ought to study it even more carefully and with greater consideration than those who may happen to believe in some of its doctrines. It is one of the fundamental facts of world history. Under this provision of the pending bill, as proposed, it is quite conceivable that all books dealing with the soviet system of government would be kept out of this country. Is that really what we want? Do we really want to bury our heads in the sand like the ostrich and say that we are going ahead, without any knowledge of facts of utmost importance which are going on around us in the world?

It has been brought to the attention of the people of this country that several universities, including Harvard and Leeland Stanford, are at present engaged in an extensive collection of all documents dealing with the Russian revolution. Under the terms of this bill none of them could be imported. That applies just as much to books that denounce Bolshevism as to books which uphold it, because, of course, any study of Bolshevism, whether favorable or unfavorable, must include the statement of its principles and its slogans and manifestoes, which would be deemed seditious and insurrectionary under the interpretation of the average clerk in the Bureau of Customs. Those collections would be stopped.

The Congressional Library would, I presume, have to throw out several hundred books of Trotsky, Lenin, and their followers, which they have at the present time, and which any one of our citizens can go there and read.

By the way, Mr. President, the Congressional Library has at all times been one of the chief offenders against the obscenity statute as we have it on our books. All of those books which we bar through the Bureau of Customs we admit to the Congressional Library, and any of our citizens can go over there and read them; there is no ban on that. I imagine most of the 379 Spanish books which I spoke of yesterday can be obtained by going to the Congressional Library. If the Congressional Library keeps the proposed law, as other institutions and the citizens of the United States are supposed to keep any law, what information are we going to have as to what is going on in the world?

There are Senators in this Chamber who are making a collection of books concerning the Russian revolution, Senators who are entirely opposed to every precept and every principle which is back of that revolution. Are we going to stop them from importing works which will help them in their historical studies?

Mr. WHEELER. Mr. President—
The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from New Mexico yield to the Senator from Montana?

Mr. CUTTING. I yield.
Mr. WHEELER. I should like to suggest that there would be excluded under this statute most of the historical law cases which have been tried in the French courts, many of the law cases which have been tried by the House of Lords, criminal cases and cases of that kind. There would likewise be excluded cases decided by some of our own courts in criminal actions. I have in mind numerous cases which we had to study when we were at law school and citations from them. They would have to be excluded under this proposed act, if it were strictly enforced.

Mr. BLACK. Mr. President—
77829-5745

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from New Mexico yield to the Senator from Alabama?

Mr. CUTTING. I yield.

Mr. BLACK. Mr. President, I understand the Senator from New Mexico has moved to strike out the entire section without offering a substitute; and, as I understand his argument, his idea is based upon the belief that the Federal Government should not exercise the power of censorship at the ports; and that if there is anything wrong with these documents and books, which are so deleterious to the human mind, the police power of the States is adequate to cover the situation and protect their citizens?

Mr. CUTTING. Yes; the Senator has stated my position.
Mr. BLACK. In other words, recognizing that there might be a distinction in what New York would permit, for instance, and what California and Alabama and South Carolina would permit.

Mr. CUTTING. Absolutely.
Mr. BLACK. For that reason, the Senator takes the position that it is not necessary to have any statute at all; in other words, that we have no business with a censorship of the reading of the people by the United States Government. Is that his position?

Mr. CUTTING. That is correct.
Mr. President, in line with what we have discussed as to the possible banning of certain utterances and writings by some of our great modern statesmen, here [exhibiting] is a book which has been a classic for sixty or seventy years—John Stuart Mill on Liberty—which contains this shocking sentence, a sentence which would come under the ban of the House provision of the pending bill even before it was modified by the Senate Committee on Finance:

There ought to exist the fullest liberty of professing and discussing, as a matter of ethical conviction, any doctrine, however immoral it may be considered. It would, therefore, be irrelevant and out of place to examine here whether the doctrine of tyrannicide deserves that title. I shall content myself with saying that the subject has been at all times one of the open questions of morals; that the act of a private citizen in striking down a criminal, who, by raising himself above the law, has placed himself beyond the reach of legal punishment or control, has been accounted by whole nations, and by some of the best and wisest of men, not a crime, but an act of exalted virtue; and that, right or wrong, it is not of the nature of assassination, but of civil war.

How could a book which contains a sentence like that be permitted to come into the United States under the provisions proposed by the House and by the Senate Finance Committee?

On the question of tyrannicide, of course, Senators will remember that during the religious wars in Europe in the sixteenth and seventeenth centuries that doctrine was unanimously held by all the great theologians on either side of the discussion, each one of them admitting freely that the man who opposed him in his religious beliefs ought to be persecuted and executed as a tyrant. I believe there was scarcely an exception among the great theological writers of those centuries. Are we going to exclude all those theological works from the country because they include a doctrine of violence obviously shocking to those who propose this section in our laws?

The truth of the matter is, Mr. President, that the expression of unpopular views is highly useful to the community. It is a valuable safety valve for the individual. If that sort of expression is suppressed, it leads more surely than any other method which can be adopted to discontent and in the long run to revolt. That, I think, is one of the doctrines on which our Republic was founded.

To return to Thomas Jefferson, you will remember, Mr. President, what he said in his inaugural:

If there be any among us who would wish to dissolve this Union or change its republican form, let them stand undisturbed as monuments of the safety with which error of opinion may be tolerated where reason is left free to combat it.

And, again quoting from John Stuart Mill:
Popular opinions on subjects not palpable to sense are often true but seldom or never the whole truth. They are a part of the truth; sometimes a greater, sometimes a smaller part, but exaggerated, distorted, and disjoined from the truths by which they ought to be accompanied and limited. Heretical opinions, on the other hand, are generally some of those suppressed and neglected truths, bursting the bonds which kept them down, and either seeking reconciliation with the truth contained in the common opinion or fronting it as enemies and setting themselves up with similar exclusiveness as the whole truth.

Mr. President, I think many of the Members of the Senate have been to London, and have gone through Hyde Park on a

"CONSIDERED AS A ..."

Th er
pe re ve cl pt
th ot isl
c la ru ph er me le pr of
Tr
is cu pu
as a
th dis
rec atl
cor
a l a v jus
cor res
an fel
the
in tee
dis
ful l ma or sta fea an hol
fea
J car
i sid
me yer Ma ext hoc by wo law
ple sidi
the sidi
tha tail Sta
cal
stat
are I
will
B

Sunday afternoon, where they have heard, at every street corner, cheap and facile orators—or at least they seem so to us—arguing the most absurd propositions, or propositions which seem absurd to us, speaking on communism or atheism or what not; crowds collect around them, cheering or yelling, without the slightest disturbance of the peace, without any violence. The police are always on hand, so that if any overt act should be committed it can be punished; but the cases in which any overt act of violence has been committed are extremely few and far between. I have often wondered whether the relative absence of crime in London, as compared with most of our own great cities, may not, perhaps, be due, in large part, to the freedom of discussion and to the chance for letting off steam among these extremists. I do not really believe that they have any more actual influence on the course of affairs in public life than the extremists we have in our midst and whom we have usually tried to suppress.

The men whom we now revere as the great men of the past have usually been men who, in their own time, have been regarded as agitators, as heretics, as corruptors of the morals of youth, like Socrates, or as blasphemers, like the Founder of the Christian religion.

In the consideration of public policy it would be a very sufficient man who could stand up and say, "This train of thought is right and the other is wrong." It can not be done by the Treasury Department. It can not be done by the Bureau of Customs. In my opinion, the only policy we can accept in this matter is the belief that the American people in the long run can be trusted to take care of their own moral and spiritual welfare; that no bureaucratic guardian is competent to decide for them what they shall or shall not read.

I admit that there may be those among us who will occasionally abuse those privileges, but I insist that the same men who would abuse those privileges would abuse the privilege of the franchise. If a man is not capable of deciding what he may or may not read without injury to himself, then that man is not fit to be entrusted with the right to select his own representatives in the Government. All democracy is based on the theory that popular judgment on the average, in the long run, is more apt to bring about good than harm; that the men who are unfit to handle their own destinies form a small and negligible proportion of the population of this country. If that contention is unsound, then our whole Government goes down; but, if it is sound, we have no right to censor public thought or public opinion. The doctrine of censorship is a doctrine characteristic of the Fascist government of Italy, and equally characteristic of the Bolshevik government of Russia. It has nothing to do with a democracy. A democracy, if it means anything, must have a right to hear both sides.

You remember the old classical statement by Milton:

Though all the winds of doctrine were let loose to play upon the earth, so Truth be in the field, we do ingloriously, by licensing and prohibiting, to misdoubt her strength. Let her and Falsehood grapple: Whoever knew Truth put to the worse in a free and open encounter?

And Jefferson said, practically echoing those words:

Truth is great, and will prevail if left to herself. She is the proper and sufficient antagonist of error, and has nothing to fear from the conflict unless, by human interposition, disarmed of her natural weapons, free argument and debate; errors ceasing to be dangerous when it is permitted freely to contradict them.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President—
The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. HASTINGS in the chair). Does the Senator from New Mexico yield to the Senator from Idaho?

Mr. CUTTING. I yield to the Senator from Idaho.
Mr. BORAH. I do not think I can quote the language exactly; but President Wilson once said, in effect, that if a community found that an individual had dangerous ideas or foolish ideas the best thing to do was to rent him a hall and let him discuss them; that the people would take care of him.
Mr. CUTTING. I believe that is an entirely fundamental proposition in our system of government.

I have detained the Senate for a long time. I want to try to concentrate their attention on one thing, because this one thing is common to an obscenity law and to seditious and insurrectionary laws: Whether the pretext by which we exclude a book is obscenity, or sedition, or any other reason, the fact remains that we are leaving it to the judgment of individual decisions, for practical reasons, there is hardly ever any appeal. We talked yesterday of All Quiet on the Western Front, and of Candide. Both of those books were excluded. It is very doubtful for what reason why they were excluded. I believe the Commissioner of Customs now claims that the Eng-

77829-5746

WATCH AND WARD
For the Editor of The Herald

lish version of All Quiet on the Western Front was excluded on account of the copyright act. Whether it was on account of the copyright act, or on account of obscenity, or on account of insurrectionary or seditious propaganda, or for any other reason, the fact remains that we are giving these clerks, uneducated men for the most part—at least, uneducated in the particular matter with which they are asked to deal—the right to decide for the American people what they may or may not have the right to read.

Mr. COUZENS. Mr. President—
The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from New Mexico yield to the Senator from Michigan?

Mr. CUTTING. I yield to the Senator from Michigan.
Mr. COUZENS. Will the Senator turn to page 286, and tell us if the provision would be more agreeable to him, or more in line with his views, if the words on line 16, "treason, insurrection, or" were eliminated?

Mr. CUTTING. Oh, yes, Mr. President; I think that would help the interpretation of the law.

Mr. COUZENS. The reason why I ask that question is because I am very much in favor of the position taken by the Senator, and agree with all he has said with respect to everything except the urging and advocating of force. I believe that is not consistent with our ideas of democracy. We are taught to believe in discussion, and agitation, and all of those things, but not the use of force; and I should be glad to go along with the Senator on everything he has said, both as to the obscenity provision and the other provision, if he would provide against the urging or the advocacy of force.

Mr. CUTTING. Mr. President, I am just as hostile as the Senator is to the use of force rather than argument in political discussions; but if we adopted the suggestion of the Senator from Michigan I am afraid we would prevent the discussion of the possible use of force, which is a philosophical discussion, which is a discussion which ought to be held, on which both sides ought to be heard. The mere proposition that force should be used in overthrowing our Government is one which, after being discussed, would probably be rejected by the average citizen, although, as I pointed out a while ago, it was sustained by no less a person than Abraham Lincoln.

Mr. COUZENS. That is dealing with a different matter, so far as our internal affairs are concerned. Whether it is discussed or not does not seem to me to be the question. It is a question of advocating and urging the use of force.
If the Senator will pardon a personal reference, I remember that when I was commissioner of police of Detroit "Big Bill" Haywood came to Detroit, and all the reactionaries and big business interests and the clergy opposed his being permitted to speak. He had hired a hall, and advertised broadly a speech to be made on a Sunday afternoon.

I went down to the hall with him, and took 20 police officers with me, and said that he would not be interfered with unless he advocated the use of force. He could advocate any theory he liked, any form of government, any principle he chose, as long as he did not advocate force. I sat with him all Sunday afternoon, with 20 police officers, and there were a lot of other so-called radicals there who spoke, but none of them advocated force; and the meeting went off in an orderly fashion, even in spite of the fact that there had been general condemnation of the fact that he was permitted to speak at all.

I think there is a clear distinction there; that we can hardly permit the advocacy of force, and the shooting down and killing of people, to carry out some political theory.

Mr. CUTTING. Mr. President, I also think there is a clear distinction there; but I am not sure that I should place it along the exact lines that the Senator does. I think that a man who got up in a public meeting and advocated the use of force might properly come within the police rules, because it might obviously lead to immediate violence; but a man somewhere in Europe who writes a book or writes a letter in which he discusses the use of violence as an abstract political proposition is not, in my conception, so actively and necessarily provoking immediate violence as the man to whom the Senator refers.

I do not see any reason to exclude the discussion of the possible use of force in political matters, as the Senator does; and I believe that if that clause were retained, even though the rest of the law was struck out, it might be very difficult to import documents dealing historically with, say, the Russian revolution, and the communist manifestos, and the various other matters of which I believe most American citizens should be cognizant.

Mr. COUZENS. Mr. President, does not the Senator believe that the word "threat" must refer to something to be exercised in the future, and that the mere writing of history and of what took place in the past would not come in conflict with that law?

Mr. CUTTING. I yield to the Senator from Idaho.
Mr. BINGHAM. Mr. President, will not the Senator answer my question before he yields to the Senator from Idaho?

Mr. CUTTING. Yes.
77829-5746

Mr. CUTTING. Oh, yes; but the books would contain the threat. They would contain the threat made by the various Russian leaders.

Mr. BINGHAM. Mr. President—
The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from New Mexico yield to the Senator from Connecticut?

Mr. CUTTING. I yield to the Senator.
Mr. BINGHAM. The language of the proposed law as it will read as suggested by the Senator from Michigan would prevent the importation of any book, pamphlet, paper, writing, and so forth, urging forcible resistance to any law of the United States.

The Senator has just said that he did not see why an article discussing in abstract the use of force should be prevented from coming to this country, and I think we will all agree with him. A philosophical discussion of the use of force or a philosophical discussion of tyrannicide is one matter which is not endangering the life of the United States or inciting to riot; but does the Senator mean to say that he would be in favor of the introduction of literature urging forcible resistance to a law of the United States, and thereby inciting to riot?

Mr. CUTTING. Perhaps I misunderstood the suggestion of the Senator from Michigan. I thought it included the threat to inflict bodily harm upon some citizen of the United States.

Mr. COUZENS. The point I tried to make to the Senator was that all this anticipated some act in the future and that the mere writing of history or the relating of incidents that took place in communist Russia could not possibly be construed as advocating or urging forcible resistance to any law of the United States or as threatening the life of or the infliction of bodily harm upon a person within the United States.

Mr. CUTTING. I do not think the Senator from Michigan and I are very far apart on this question. Suppose, however, some Russian leader whose opinions were of world-wide importance should advocate forcible resistance to some law of the United States. Would not that be a historical fact with which the people of this country ought to be familiar?

Mr. COUZENS. If he is advocating it, it certainly has not happened. I mean, if he quotes what was advocated in Russia, what may have been accomplished in Russia, what has been done in Russia, that is a different thing.

Mr. CUTTING. But suppose some Russian leader gets up and advocates that the men in the United States who sympathize with him should forcibly resist some one of our laws. Would not that be a matter which we ought to know about?

Mr. COUZENS. I do not object to his writing about what may have been done in some other country; but to insist in what form he puts it, whether it is a discussion on the platform or whether it is in a book, to urge the use of force, the shooting down and killing of people because they do not approve of some law, is something I can not agree with.

I do not care what they advocate under our general understanding of a democracy. I do not object to what they say. I do not suppose there is anybody in the Senate who is more liberal with respect to those matters than I am. But I can not condone the suggestion that anybody, Russian or otherwise, can, through book or through speech, urge upon some citizen or some other person in the United States the use of force to obtain his will or his law.

Mr. CUTTING. He might be arguing with somebody in Russia. This section, as I read it, would cover the case of a man who might make a speech in Russia advocating resistance to some law of the United States. The Senator would exclude that as a matter about which our people should not know anything.

Mr. COUZENS. I would only prohibit the importation of the literature. Of course it is obvious we can not restrain a man from saying what he chooses in Russia, but to import that, and to urge it in this country, is foreign to my conception of our democracy.

Mr. CUTTING. Suppose a conservative Russian were to make a speech denouncing his opponents for urging forcible resistance to the laws of the United States, and his words were quoted; would the Senator oppose letting that in?

Mr. BORAH addressed the Chair.
Mr. COUZENS. Certainly I would. I would object to the use of any means whatever to urge force, or to recommend the use of force, in opposition to any laws we may have. So far as I am concerned, if I did approve of such a method, I would urge the use of force against the prohibition law as quickly as against any law, but I do not urge force against the prohibition officers, although oftentimes internally I feel it is justified.

Mr. CUTTING. I yield to the Senator from Idaho.
Mr. BINGHAM. Mr. President, will not the Senator answer my question before he yields to the Senator from Idaho?

Mr. CUTTING. Yes.
77829-5746

Mr. BINGHAM. I asked the Senator whether he objected to a law which would prevent the importation into the United States of any book, pamphlet, or paper urging forcible resistance to a law of the United States, in other words, inciting to riot. I am not discussing academic questions, as to whether somebody discussed in Russia or in some other country whether it would be a nice thing to do or whether it would not be fine if the people of the United States rose up and overthrew their Government. I am discussing a concrete case of a book or pamphlet distributed in the United States actually inciting to riot, and actually urging forcible resistance to a law of the United States.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President—
Mr. BINGHAM. Does the Senator object to that?

Mr. CUTTING. I will answer the Senator from Connecticut before I yield to the Senator from Idaho.

The Senator from Connecticut seems to me to be discussing a subject which has no relation to the pending provision. This provision attempts to exclude "any book, pamphlet, paper * * * containing any matter * * *"

Mr. BINGHAM. "Advocating * * * forcible resistance."
Mr. CUTTING. "Or urging," and so on.

Mr. BINGHAM. "Or urging * * * forcible resistance."
I ask the Senator whether he would object to a law providing for the exclusion from the United States of a book, pamphlet, or paper urging forcible resistance to a law of the United States?

Mr. CUTTING. The Senator omits the words "containing any matter."

Mr. BINGHAM. Will not the Senator answer my question?
Mr. CUTTING. I am trying to have it made clear whether the Senator is discussing the pending bill, or some hypothetical law in his mind.

Mr. BINGHAM. I am reading certain words in the pending bill and leaving out certain others. But these words are in the bill.

Mr. CUTTING. The Senator is leaving out words controlling the meaning of other words.

Mr. BINGHAM. I am asking whether the Senator objects to excluding from the United States any book, pamphlet, or paper urging forcible resistance to any law of the United States. That is part of the section the Senator would strike out. If it contained only those words, would the Senator object to it?

Mr. CUTTING. My objection to censorship is so fundamental that I should find it hard to accept any provision which would deny the right of free entry to discussion of matters of political opinion. But I do want to point out that the Senator from Connecticut is suggesting something which is entirely different from anything provided in this measure.

Mr. BINGHAM. Oh, no, Mr. President.
Mr. CUTTING. Because he has omitted certain words.

Mr. BINGHAM. They are part of the measure.

Mr. CUTTING. I beg to differ, because the bill contains the words "book, pamphlet, paper, writing * * * containing any matter * * * urging treason," and so on. In other words, a book which had one page containing a speech made by some Soviet leader would be excluded, whereas, as I understand the Senator, he is talking about a book which urges as its main theme forcible resistance to some law of the United States. I think there is a very fundamental distinction there.

I yield to the Senator from Idaho.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, it was the question submitted by the Senator from Connecticut to which I was seeking to address myself.

Of course, I suppose we would all be opposed to the urging or advocating of treason, insurrection, or forcible resistance to any law of the United States, if we had a proper tribunal to determine what was treason and forcible resistance, and then had a proper definition of what was treason or forcible resistance, sedition, and so forth. But what we are objecting to, so far as I am concerned, is that there is submitted a list of some pamphlets, books, and so forth, dealing with these particular subjects, leaving it to subordinate clerks in the Bureau of Customs to determine whether or not they urge treason, insurrection, or forcible resistance. A tribunal is erected or scheme devised which to my mind is wholly incapable of passing upon that question.

When we had the sedition laws in this country, it will be remembered that it was regarded as sedition for a man to make a speech upon a street corner in opposition to some view or some law or some policy of the administration, and when we turn over to a bureau to determine what is sedition, or what is treason, or what is forcible resistance, we are establishing a tribunal which is wholly incapable of passing upon the question.
Mr. COUZENS. Mr. President—

ton speaks of between truth and error or between two opinions, each one of which believes itself to be the truth.

In blazing out the trail, there is room for all of us, the conservatives and the radicals, the religious fanatics and the skeptics, the advanced dreamers and the practical men of action. But before we set out on that road let us be sure that we have our weapons with us; that we are properly equipped to take that journey, and to take note of the dangers which may meet us on that high errand. In that way alone, I believe, Mr. President, will we aid the general cause of public advancement in this country and elsewhere.

Mr. President, I believe the present situation is intolerable. I do not see that the law as it stands on the statute books today can be defended in any intelligent way, and I think the amendments which have been suggested by the House committee and agreed to by the Senate Committee on Finance will make matters worse than they are at present.

I have been impressed since I have engaged in this discussion with the possibility that some compromise might be reached, eliminating the censorship on works of literature but maintaining it on other things which might, in the judgment of many Senators, be detrimental to the people of the country. So, Mr. President, I wish to amend the amendment which I have offered by proposing a substitute.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator has a right to modify his amendment.

Mr. CUTTING. I desire to modify the amendment by inserting a substitute, and I ask to have the modification read.

The VICE PRESIDENT. If the Senator will send his modified amendment to the desk, it will be read.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 286, beginning with line 11, it is proposed to strike out through line 7 on page 288, and in lieu thereof to insert the following:

(a) Prohibition of importation: The importation of all indecent and obscene prints, paintings, lithographs, engravings, drawings, post cards, transparencies, photographs, photographic plates, advertisements, casts, instruments, and other articles of an immoral nature, and of all drugs or medicines, and all articles whatever, for the prevention of conception or for causing unlawful abortion, and all lottery tickets, and all printed papers that may be used as lottery tickets, and all advertisements of any lottery is hereby prohibited. No such articles, whether imported separately or contained in packages with other goods entitled to entry, shall be admitted to entry; and all such articles and, unless it appears in the package were inclosed therein without the knowledge or consent of the importer, owner, agent, or consignee, the entire contents of the package in which such articles are contained shall be subject to seizure and forfeiture under the customs laws: Provided, That the drugs hereinafter mentioned, when imported in bulk and not put up for any of the purposes hereinafter specified, are excepted from the operation of this subdivision.

(b) Penalty on Government officers: Any officer, agent, or employee of the Government of the United States who shall knowingly aid or abet any person engaged in any violation of any of the provisions of law prohibiting importing, advertising, dealing in, exhibiting, or sending or receiving by mail indecent or obscene prints, paintings, lithographs, engravings, drawings, post cards, transparencies, photographs, photographic plates, advertisements, casts, instruments, and other articles of an immoral nature, or drugs or medicines, or any articles whatever, for the prevention of conception or for causing unlawful abortion, or lottery tickets or printed papers that may be used as lottery tickets, or advertisements of any lottery shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and shall for every offense be punishable by a fine of not more than $5,000 or by imprisonment at hard labor for not more than 10 years, or both.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. CUTTING. I yield.

Mr. McKELLAR. As I understand, the Senator first offered an amendment to strike out section 305 entirely.

Mr. CUTTING. Yes.

Mr. McKELLAR. I notice here on the desk a printed amendment that does not go nearly so far as the amendment that has just been read at the desk. As I understand, the Senator is not going to offer his motion to strike out, but offers the amendment as read from the desk just now as a substitute for section 305. Is that correct?

Mr. CUTTING. That is correct. May I state for the benefit of the Senator that the substance of this amendment is to go back to the law of 1842, which kept out of the country the so-called works of art of an indecent character, which I believe could be quite properly and adequately judged by the customs clerk, and also adds "casts, instruments, and other articles of an immoral nature, drugs, medicines, or any article whatever for the prevention of conception or causing unlawful abortion."

tion." In other words, it includes everything which the present law includes except works of literature.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, the Senator also strikes out the provision in regard to matter advocating or urging treason or insurrection.

Mr. CUTTING. The amendment excludes all that; yes.

Mr. SMOOT. In other words, all literature is eliminated by the Senator's amendment; also, matter advocating or urging treason or insurrection or forcible resistance to any law of the United States, or containing any threat to take the life of or inflict bodily harm upon any person in the United States.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from New Mexico yield to the Senator from Florida?

Mr. CUTTING. I do.

Mr. TRAMMELL. I am not sure that I correctly construe the amendment which is proposed; but, as I caught the language of the amendment, it provides that if obscene literature is imported into this country, but not for immoral purposes, it shall be admissible; or, if other articles shall be brought in, it is claimed that they are not brought in for immoral purposes, then it shall be permissible to import them into this country.

In other words, that is a license to the party bringing in the obscene literature or other matter. The amendment does not refer to seditious literature now, I believe; but in the case of any of the articles, if it is claimed that they are brought here for moral purposes, they may be admitted; and there are plenty of people who claim that obscene literature promotes good morals.

While I think a great majority of the American people feel otherwise about it, there are people who believe that obscene literature promotes good morals. Personally, I have never yet seen how it did.

Mr. WAGNER. Mr. President—

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from New Mexico yield to the Senator from New York?

Mr. CUTTING. I do.

Mr. WAGNER. I just want to suggest to the Senator that the moment literature is determined to be obscene it becomes immoral. By that very finding it becomes immoral literature, because it is obscene, because it does impair morals. That is the finding.

Mr. TRAMMELL. I say, myself, that it is immoral if it is obscene; but I am speaking of the language of the amendment. The amendment says that if it is not brought into this country for immoral purposes, then it shall be permissible to be brought in. That is what the amendment we are considering says.

Mr. SMOOT. Absolutely.

Mr. DILL. Mr. President—

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from New Mexico yield to the Senator from Washington?

Mr. CUTTING. I yield.

Mr. DILL. I understand that under the Senator's amendment literature which might come into this country as soon as it came in, of course, would be subject to all the laws to which literature already here is subject.

Mr. CUTTING. Why, of course.

Mr. DILL. And we would not have the ridiculous condition of an individual citizen being forbidden to bring in a book which, when he got into the United States, he could go to a bookstore and buy or find on the shelves of a library because the courts had held that it was not obscene.

Mr. CUTTING. The Senator is correct. It embraces all the provisions of the present law, almost literally, with the exception of literary works.

I have spoken long enough on this subject, Mr. President. Before Senators vote on the amendment, however, I should like to read two passages. The first one is from a dissenting opinion of Mr. Justice Holmes, delivered a few weeks ago:

If there is any principle of the Constitution that more imperatively calls for attachment than any other, it is the principle of free thought—not free thought for those who agree with us, but freedom for the thought that we hate.

The other passage is from an even more classic source—the pamphlet of John Stuart Mill on Liberty:

If all mankind minus one were of one opinion, and only one person were of the contrary opinion, mankind would be no more justified in silencing that one person than he, if he had the power, would be justified in silencing mankind. Were an opinion a personal possession of no value except to the owner; if to be obstructed in the enjoyment of it were simply a private injury, it would make some difference whether the injury was inflicted only on a few persons or on many. But the peculiar evil of silencing the expression of an opinion is that it is robbing the human race—posterity as well as the existing generation; those who dissent from the opinion still more than those who hold it.

If the opinion is right, they are deprived of the opportunity of exchanging error for truth; if wrong, they lose what is almost as great a benefit, the clearer perception and livelier impression of truth, produced by its collision with error.

Mr. CUTTING's amendment was defeated by a vote of 48 to 23. Afterwards Mr. CUTTING submitted another amendment, which, as modified by the Senator from Michigan [Mr. COUZENS], reads as follows:

(a) Prohibition of importation: The importation of all indecent and obscene prints, paintings, lithographs, engravings, drawings, post cards, transparencies, photographs, photographic plates, advertisements, casts, instruments, and other articles of an immoral nature, and of all drugs or medicines, and all articles whatever, for the prevention of conception or for causing unlawful abortion, and any book, pamphlet, paper, writing, advertisement, circular, print, picture, or drawing urging forcible resistance to any law of the United States, or containing any threat to take the life of or inflict bodily harm upon any person in the United States, and all lottery tickets, and all printed papers that may be used as lottery tickets, and all advertisements of any lottery is hereby prohibited. No such articles, whether imported separately or contained in packages with other goods entitled to entry, shall be admitted to entry; and all such articles and, unless it appears to the satisfaction of the collector that the obscene articles contained in the package were inclosed therein without the knowledge or consent of the importer, owner, agent, or consignee, the entire contents of the package in which such articles are contained shall be subject to seizure and forfeiture under the customs laws: Provided, That the drugs hereinafter mentioned, when imported in bulk and not put up for any of the purposes hereinafter specified, are excepted from the operation of this subdivision.

(b) Penalty on Government officers: Any officer, agent, or employee of the Government of the United States who shall knowingly aid or abet any person engaged in any violation of any of the provisions of law prohibiting importing, advertising, dealing in, exhibiting, or sending or receiving by mail indecent or obscene prints, paintings, lithographs, engravings, drawings, post cards, transparencies, photographs, photographic plates, advertisements, casts, instruments, and other articles of an immoral nature, or drugs or medicines, or any articles whatever, for the prevention of conception or for causing unlawful abortion, or lottery tickets or printed papers that may be used as lottery tickets, or advertisements of any lottery shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and shall for every offense be punishable by a fine of not more than $5,000 or by imprisonment at hard labor for not more than 10 years, or both.

77829—5745

engravings, drawings, post cards, transparencies, photographs, photographic plates, advertisements, casts, instruments, and other articles of an immoral nature, or drugs or medicines, or any articles whatever, for the prevention of conception or for causing unlawful abortion, or lottery tickets or printed papers that may be used as lottery tickets, or advertisements of any lottery shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and shall for every offense be punishable by a fine of not more than $5,000 or by imprisonment at hard labor for not more than 10 years, or both.

This amendment was adopted by the following vote: Yeas 38, Nays 36, as follows:

YEAS—38
Black	Dill	King	Stock
Blaine	Fletcher	La Follette	Thomas, Okla.
Borah	Frazier	McKellar	Tydings
Bratton	George	McMaster	Wagner
Brookhart	Gillett	Norris	Walcott
Broussard	Glenn	Payne	Walsh, Mass.
Caraway	Hawes	Primmer	Walsh, Mont.
Connally	Hayden	Russell	Wheeler
Couzens	Howell	Robinson, Ark.
Cutting	Johnson	Simmons
NAYS—36
Allen	Greene	Oddie	Shortridge
Barkley	Hale	Overman	Smith
Blease	Hastings	Patterson	Smoot
Brack	Hatfield	Philips	Stewart
Capper	Hedlin	Reed	Thomas, Idaho
Denen	Keyes	Robinson, Ind.	Trammell
Egan	McNary	Sackett	Vandenberg
Goff	Metcalf	Schall	Warren
Goldborough	Moses	Shepherd	Watson
NOT VOTING—21
Ashurst	Glass	Kean	Swanson
Bingham	Gould	Kendrick	Townsend
Burton	Harris	Norbeck	Watman
Copeland	Harrison	Nye
Dale	Hebert	Shipstead
Edge	Jones	Stephens

Vote passed at the meeting of the Massachusetts Library Club, held at Amherst, Mass., November 3, 1928

RESOLVED, That the Massachusetts Library Club, while firmly opposed to the circulation of obscene books and pictures, believes that the emphasis should be laid on the spirit and purport, rather than the letter, of a book. Increasing freedom of speech has brought greater frankness into many good books. The Club recommends amendment of the existing Massachusetts law on the subject, so that, in passing judgment, not merely isolated passages but the entire contents and purport of a publication, or of any complete component part of a composite work, shall be considered.

A similar resolution was passed unanimously at the meeting at Lenox, October 19, 1929.

The undersigned committee has been authorized to urge librarians to appeal to their local state representatives for the passage of such an amendment.

You are earnestly requested to present the enclosed argument to your legislators, either directly or through library trustees or other prominent citizens.

Please act at once or it may be too late!

LESLIE T. LITTLE, Waltham, Chairman

FRANK H. CHASE, Boston

HILLER C. WELLMAN, Springfield.

BRIEF OF NEW ENGLAND WATCH AND WARD SOCIETY IN OPPOSITION TO HOUSE BILL No. 181

The position of the New England Watch and Ward Society with reference to House Bill No. 181 now being considered by the Committee on Legal Affairs on the petition of Edward Weeks is as follows:—

If the Legislature considers that some amendment of the existing statute relative to criminal obscenity is in the public interest, the Society does not oppose any amendment of the present law.

The Society does oppose the precise amendment proposed by House Bill No. 181 for the following reasons:—

1. If enacted House Bill No. 181 will establish the book "considered as a whole" as the only test of criminal obscenity. If the theme and context of the whole book is not obscene, it may freely be circulated even though it contains a chapter or a page of description so frank as to border on pornography. The existing law is criticised, and perhaps justly, because it requires the courts to disregard the book and to convict on a chapter, a paragraph or even a phrase. The proposed law is opposed by this Society because it requires the courts to disregard every test except the book "considered as a whole". House Bill No. 181 proposes a standard which is just as inflexible as the present law.

2. House Bill No. 181 is a legislative novelty. No precedent for such a law has been found in the statutes dealing with criminal obscenity in any English speaking jurisdiction. The statutory situation with respect to legislation has recently been studied by Mr. Justice Ford of the New York Supreme Court, from whose recent book on "Criminal Obscenity" (1925) some of the following material has been taken.

In the United States the statutes can be grouped in two classes:—

There are fourteen states (Ford p. 35) which follow the present Massachusetts law forbidding circulation of books "containing obscene language". These include of the New England States:—

Rhode Island: General Laws Chap. 339-39-43.

Connecticut: Revised Statutes Chap. 233 Sec. 6397.

Maine: 1916 Revision Chap. 126 Sec. 32.

New Mexico and Alaska have no state or territorial law on the subject.

All the remaining states, and the Federal Statutes forbid sale of an "obscene book"—Example:—

U. S. Criminal Code Sec. 241: "Every obscene . . . and filthy book, pamphlet, picture, etc. is declared unlawful."

U. S. Criminal Code Sec. 243: "Whoever shall import any obscene . . . book, pamphlet, etc."

New York Penal Law Sec. 1141: A person who sells etc. "any obscene . . . book, pamphlet, etc."

Illinois Criminal Code: Chap. 38 Sec. 222: whoever shall sell etc. "any obscene or indecent book" etc.

New Hampshire Pub. Stats. Chap. 265 Sec. 6: "No person shall sell 'any obscene book' etc."

Colorado Compiled Laws Chap. 154 Sec. 218 or 219: If any person shall sell "any obscene book" etc.

Canada: See Canadian Criminal Code Part V Sec. 207-209.

England: 29 and 31 Victoria Chap. 84: providing for seizure and condemnation of "obscene books" etc. kept to be sold etc.

See also Appendix to Ford Criminal Obscenity pp. 131-140 for full exp. of law in Massachusetts.

New York, Illinois and Federal Statutes.

p. 142 for reference to Statutes in all states.

In spite of the present agitation of an earnest and determined group principally interested in the literary aspects of the question, it is not believed that the General Court of Massachusetts is prepared to enact a more liberal law on criminal obscenity than exists in any English speaking jurisdiction and which is wholly without statutory precedent.

If the Legislature believes that some change in the present law is desirable, the obvious amendment to favor is one which will bring Massachusetts in line with a large majority of the other jurisdictions.

The Watch and Ward Society does not oppose an amendment which will delete from the present statute (General Laws Chapter 272 Sec. 28) the words "containing" in line 2 and "language" in line 3 and

"tends" in line 3, substituting for "containing" "which is" and for "tending" "tends" to read:

"Whoever sells a book which is obscene, indecent or impure or manifestly tends to corrupt" etc. This change will (a) permit the entire book to be introduced in evidence and go to the court or jury, (b) permit the prosecution to argue that a particular chapter or lesser part of the book is so objectionable as to bring the entire book within the statutory prohibition, (c) leave the courts free to determine whether the book is or is not obscene without attempting to dictate the precise test or standard.

A copy of Chapter 272 Section 28 as amended to conform to the "which is" suggestion herein contained is given below.

"Whoever imports, prints, publishes, sells or distributes a book, pamphlet, ballad, printed paper or other thing which is obscene, indecent or impure or manifestly tends to corrupt the morals of youth, or an obscene, indecent or impure print, picture, figure, image or description, manifestly tending to corrupt the morals of youth, or introduces into a family, school or place of education, or buys, procures, receives or has in his possession any such book, pamphlet, ballad, printed paper, obscene, indecent or impure print, picture, figure, image or other thing, either for the purpose of sale, exhibition, loan or circulation or with intent to introduce the same into a family, school or place of education, shall be punished by imprisonment for not more than two years and by a fine of not less than one hundred nor more than one thousand dollars."

NEW ENGLAND WATCH AND WARD SOCIETY.

March 6, 1930.

(House 184)

AN ACT RELATIVE TO OBSCENE LITERATURE

Section Twenty-eight of Chapter two hundred and seventy-two of the General Laws is hereby amended by striking out, in the second line, the word "containing", and inserting in place thereof the words: "which, considered as a whole, is—by striking out, in the third line, the word "language", and by striking out, in the said third line, the word "tending" and inserting in place thereof the word:—tends,—so as to read as follows: Section 28. Whoever imports, prints, publishes, sells or distributes a book, pamphlet, ballad, printed paper or other thing which, considered as a whole, is obscene, indecent or impure, or manifestly tends to corrupt the morals of youth, or an obscene, indecent or impure print, picture, figure, image or description, manifestly tending to corrupt the morals of youth, or introduces into a family, school or place of education, or buys, procures, receives or has in his possession any such book, pamphlet, ballad, printed paper, obscene, indecent or impure print, picture, figure, image or other thing, either for the purpose of sale, exhibition, loan or circulation or with intent to introduce the same into a family, school or place of education, shall be punished by imprisonment for not more than two years and by a fine of not less than one hundred nor more than one thousand dollars.

Introduced by Mr. Shattuck of Boston, on the petition of Edward A. Weeks and others.

The undersigned committee of the Massachusetts Library Club is a working unit in the Massachusetts Committee for the Revision of the Book Law. We have every reason to believe that the bill as reported out by the Committee on Legal Affairs will command our support if it incorporates the principle of "Consideration as a whole."

LESLIE T. LITTLE, Chairman
Waltham Public Library

FRANK H. CHASE,
Boston Public Library

HILLER C. WELLMAN,
City Library Association, Springfield

YOUR SUBSCRIPTION IS INVITED FOR A LECTURE ON

CENSORSHIP

by WALTER PRICHARD EATON

author, journalist, dramatic critic and a director of the Cambridge School of the Drama

FOR THE BENEFIT OF

The Massachusetts Association for Occupational Therapy

at 8 o'clock on Wednesday evening, March 12, 1930

at the

Women's Republican Club, 46 Beacon St., Boston

Mr. Eaton's eminence in his profession, the interesting subject of his lecture, and the worthy charity which will receive the proceeds of the lecture should draw a large audience. It is suggested, therefore, that you make early purchase of tickets and kindly mention the lecture to your friends.

TICKETS ARE $1.50 EACH and may be obtained from the Massachusetts Association for Occupational Therapy, 554 Columbus Avenue, Boston

Telephone Kenmore 0935

Checks should be payable to Herbert Nash Jr., Treasurer

RECEIVED

MAR 15 1930

BOSTON PUBLIC LIBRARY

Chapter 162

THE COMMONWEALTH OF MASSACHUSETTS

In the Year One Thousand Nine Hundred and Thirty

An Act relative to Obscene Literature.

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives in General Court assembled, and by the authority of the same, as follows:

Chapter two hundred and seventy-two of the General Laws is hereby amended, by striking out in place of books, prints, publications, printed paper

or, or manifestly

indecent or impure

material tending to corrupt family, school or place in his possession any material, indecent or impure

therefor for the purpose intent to introduce the same, shall be punished with a fine of not less than ten dollars

Witness my hand and seal, this 10th day of March, 1930.

ALTONSTALL Speaker.

27, 1930.

BACON President.

or.

HOUSE . . . . No. 181

By Mr. Shattuck of Boston, petition of Edward A. Weeks and others for an amendment of the law relative to the publishing and selling of obscene books, pamphlets and ballads. Legal Affairs.

The Commonwealth of Massachusetts

In the Year One Thousand Nine Hundred and Thirty.

An Act relative to Obscene Literature.

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives in General Court assembled, and by the authority of the same, as follows:

- 1 Section twenty-eight of chapter two hundred and
- 2 seventy-two of the General Laws is hereby amended
- 3 by striking out, in the second line, the word "con-
- 4 taining", and inserting in place thereof the words:
- 5 which, considered as a whole, is, by striking out,
- 6 in the third line, the word "language", and by
- 7 striking out, in the said third line, the word "tend-
- 8 ing" and inserting in place thereof the word: tends,
- 9 — so as to read as follows:—Section 28. Whoever
- 10 imports, prints, publishes, sells or distributes a book,
- 11 pamphlet, ballad, printed paper or other thing which,
- 12 considered as a whole, is obscene, indecent or im-
- 13 pure, or manifestly tends to corrupt the morals of
- 14 youth, or an obscene, indecent or impure print,
- 15 picture, figure, image or description, manifestly tend-
- 16 ing to corrupt the morals of youth, or introduces
- 17 into a family, school or place of education, or buys,
- 18 procures, receives, or has in his possession any such
- 19 book, pamphlet, ballad, printed paper, obscene,

YOUR SUBSCRIPTION IS INVITED FOR A LECTURE ON

CENSORSHIP

by WALTER PRICHARD EATON

author, director of

The Mas
Oc

at 8 o'clock on

Women's Re

Mr. Eaton's er
subject of his lect
receive the proceec
dience. It is sug purchase of tickets
friends.

and may be obtai
Occupational

Checks should

RECEIVED

APR 15 1930

BOSTON PUBLIC LIBRARY

Chapter 162

THE COMMONWEALTH OF MASSACHUSETTS

In the Year One Thousand Nine Hundred and Thirty

An Act relative to Obscene Literature.

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives in General Court assembled, and by the authority of the same, as follows:

Chapter two hundred and seventy-two of the General Laws is hereby amended by striking out section twenty-eight and inserting in place thereof the following:- Section 18. Whoever imports, prints, publishes, sells or distributes a book, pamphlet, ballad, printed paper or other thing which is obscene, indecent or impure, or manifestly tends to corrupt the morals of youth, or an obscene, indecent or impure print, picture, figure, image or description, manifestly tending to corrupt the morals of youth, or introduces into a family, school or place of education, or buys, secures, receives or has in his possession any such book, pamphlet, ballad, printed paper, obscene, indecent or impure print, picture, figure, image or other thing, either for the purpose of sale, exhibition, loan or circulation or with intent to introduce the same into a family, school or place of education, shall be punished by imprisonment for not more than two years or by a fine of not less than one hundred nor more than one thousand dollars, or both.

House of Representatives, March 16, 1930.

Passed to be enacted, LEVINE B. SALTONSTALL Speaker.

In Senate, March 27, 1930.

Passed to be enacted, CASPAR G. BACON President.

March 31, 1930.

Approved, FRANK G. ALLER Governor.

-2-
THE COMMONWEALTH OF MASSACHUSETTS

Office of the Secretary

Boston, April 1, 1930.

A True Copy.

Witness the Great Seal of the Commonwealth.

F. W. Co.
Secretary of the Commonwealth.

Tr. 6. 27.
EVENING TRANSCRIPT.

Librarians Ask Relief in Book Banning

More Sane Statute Is Argued
to Curb "Obscene"
Literature

Spirit of Law Good

Watch and Ward Society Fears
Changes Suggested Would Mean Harm

By Forrest P. Hull

During the last two years sixty-five books of country-wide circulation were withdrawn from the shelves of Boston booksellers because of action or suggestion by the public authorities. Publishers, booksellers, librarians and representatives of other interests immediately raised a cry that Boston had become the "laughing-stock of the world." Today that sentiment was reiterated before the legislative committee on legal affairs when a petition by the Massachusetts Library Club, Inc., seeking a change in the law relative to obscene literature, was heard.

One of the largest hearing rooms in the State House was filled with friends of the measure who came from all sections of the State, and, as many persons desired to speak, the hearing was continued during the afternoon. The only person who responded to the call for the opposition was Raymond Calkins, D. D., of Cambridge, president of the New England Watch and Ward Society, and he admitted that he should not be considered as an opponent. What he desired to do was to warn the committee that the suggested changes in the law might lead to trouble of serious nature.

Changes Suggested

The proposed legislation would eliminate from the present law the word "book" and would add to the law another section, saying in part that, "Whoever imports, reads, publishes, sells or distributes a book, knowing it to contain language which, when considered in connection with its entire context and theme, is indecent or impure" shall be punished by imprisonment for two years or by a fine of not more than $1000 or both.

Attorney Henry L. Burnham of Boston, introduced by Galen W. Hill, Quincy, president of the Library Club, handled the case for the proponents, characterizing the present law as a "legal curiosity" in that it allowed a finding of guilty on the language used in any one part of a book without considering the complete text.

There was much questioning of Attorney Burnham by members of the committee, during which a Supreme Court decision on the present law was read and the attorney refused to accept the opinion of the questioner that the court had approved the law. Mr. Burnham agreed with Representative M. E. S. Clemons of Wakefield, House chairman of the committee, that "writers who wave a flag or utter a godly phrase at the conclusion of a book to get by should be condemned."

Several of the speakers reiterated the statements of last year that the present law would, if literally enforced, cause the removal of such books as the Bible, Shakespeare, and Byron from library shelves.

"Under the present law it is enough to convict if language in the book is impure, which is a weak word," Attorney Burnham argued. "Under the present law a person may even be guilty if the language 'tends to corrupt the morals of youth.' On a sober, controversial subject just as likely to be on the wrong side as the defendant. It is a drag-net statute."

Asks for Confidence

Henry C. Wellman, librarian of the Springfield Public Library and one of the three men appointed to draft the amendment, said that there was no question but the intent of the present law is good and also no question that as it is carried out it is foolish.

"I hope you can have some confidence in the librarians of Massachusetts, who in the librarians of the reading are as deeply interested in the reading of young people as any other group and would not stand for letting down the bars. They have not acted hastily, but after a two years' discussion. The resolution for a change was approved without a dissenting voice."

Mr. Wellman told the committee that there never had been a legal definition of the word "obscene" that was satisfactory. What the librarians want is a size is that in deciding what is doubtful for morals the entire context of the book be considered, and not the offending passages alone. The New York law says that a book must be, in a great majority of the States. Our statute says a single passage. Moreover, it is of interest to know that Hawthorne's "Scarlet Letter" was bitterly assailed when published, but now it is considered proper for school children. In reply to a question he did not think the book under another name would be considered obscene now. The law, he said, ought not to be of such a nature that practically everybody violates it, and he was certain that the Watch and Ward Society reads an entire book before condemning it.

Edward A. Weeks, Jr., of the Atlantic Monthly, remarked that responsible publishers were not willing to be responsible for an indecent book. The good will of the house depends on their books, he said, and, moreover, objectionable books seldom pay.

"I am not saying that there were no objectionable books on the list banned, but will say that without the publicity attending them most of them would not have paid. Boston publishers resent the position in which they are placed by the present statute. In fact, this statute is like the antiquated policeman of 1890, who, if now turned loose would make wholesale arrests for indecent exposure."

Weed Glad to Read Book

Charles F. Weed of Brookline, vice president of the First National Bank of Boston, said that he was in favor of the principle of the bill. He had a son at Harvard who was majoring in English. On the list for reading was a book that was banned in Boston.

"I bootlegged that book and read it myself," said Mr. Weed, "and it was as fine and wholesome a book as I have ever read and I was proud that I had read a book banned in Boston—the American Tragedy."

Harold Williams of Brookline, representing the Board of Trade of the Boston Booksellers, said that "we are not defending or trying to defend any obscene books. The language in any other document, should be judged by its context. There are about 10,000 books published every year. Most of them are soon forgotten, perhaps a half dozen survive. It would be impossible for everyone through whose hands they pass to read each book. If complaint is made, perhaps by a 'crank,' there is not enough profit in any one book to fight the case and the book is withdrawn."

"Boston has been at the head of the country in the book business," he remarked, "and her influence has extended all over the country. It would be a shame to have that influence minimized."

Mr. Williams read a statement made a year ago by the Watch and Ward Society's president to the effect that it is the policy of the society to ban books not the policy of the society to ban books for single passages. The change suggested, he said, was an attempt to carry out more completely and sanely the spirit of the law.

Professor Robert E. Rogers of Massachusetts Institute of Technology, in favor of the bill, defined an immoral book as one which paints vice in such terms as to make it attractive to the reader. It would be foolish, he went on, to place in this category books which deal with important questions of living, questions which are being discussed by people of intelligence everywhere.

On the other hand, Professor Rogers went on, vulgar, sensational, glamorous books are being fed to the public from 'corner' lending libraries which "continually harp upon crime and vice" and are a menace to the "young and somewhat weak intellects" which crave them. Such books, Professor Rogers said, are allowed on sale and yet attempts are made to ban books of real merit on the charge that they are salacious or obscene. These self-same volumes, he said, are ones which can be purchased only so that they are not within the scope of young people generally.

Professor Rogers thought it a strange situation in which "smutty" musical comedies are allowed to go on in Boston while efforts are made to ban books which are not vicious in that they do not paint vice in alluring colors.

Felt Harm Would Come

Dr. Raymond Calkins, president of the New England Watch and Ward Society, who rose when the chairman asked for the opposition to the bill, explained that his organization "is in full intellectual sympathy" with the proponents of the legislation, but it felt that harm would follow if the law is changed.

"Everyone," he went on, "appeared to be satisfied with the statutes which have been on the books for years until about two years ago, when the police proscribed a number of books," he said. "Then everyone started to scrutinize the statutes, with the result that legislation changing them was requested."

Dr. Calkins indicated that if the only persons to be affected by the proposed change in the law were those interested in the pending legislation, he would have no objection to it but, he went on, the people of the entire State will be affected and for that reason his organization opposed the change.

If the law is amended, the speaker explained, it will be much more difficult than at present to obtain convictions for real violations of the statutes. It would be quite possible, he said, for a publisher to insert in a novel a chapter or several chapters which, standing alone, would be characterized as obscene by anyone, and yet the publisher beginning and ending the book in a proper manner, would be in a position of placing the volume on sale and "getting away with it."

Also, Dr. Calkins remarked, it would be extremely difficult to successfully prosecute a vendor in event the law is changed so that he will be liable for "knowingly" distributing obscene literature. An assistant lawyer, the speaker went on, could use the word "knowingly" most effectively in bringing about the quashing of a case.

The speaker further contended that the whole system of jurisprudence so far as dealing with obscene literature is concerned would be overthrown if the statutes are amended, so that it would be necessary for the courts to start afresh in deciding as to what is right and wrong in the matter of literature being sold.

Representative John S. Derham of Uxbridge, a member of the committee, showed Dr. Calkins a copy of an editorial which Dr. Calkins had written on the subject of indecent books. Representative Derham maintained that in the editorial Dr. Calkins went farther than his remarks indicated before the committee but Dr. Calkins replied that he was ready to stand his ground upon the editorial itself.

THE BOSTON HERALD

THE BOSTON HERALD

THE BOSTON HERALD

MONDAY, MARCH 10, 1930

THE WATCH AND WARD

To the Editor of The Herald:
The opposition of the Watch and Ward Society to the book bill reported to the Legislature by the committee on legal affairs, so far as that opposition is disclosed by the society's circular, reported in your issue of this date, turns upon the argument of innovation. This is a strange argument coming from that society, because two years ago, before the Legislature of 1928, the society advocated a book bill then known as the booksellers' bill, which represented an extreme innovation in this same matter, very different from the very moderate change which is proposed by the advocates of the bill reported by the committee on legal affairs. The booksellers' bill would have established an entirely new proceeding in equity relating to books, or at least without analogy in the law since the abolition of the court of star chamber in 1641. The argument based on innovation is one which has been made many times in the course of the recent discussion between speakers representing the Watch and Ward Society and speakers representing the Massachusetts Legislature for the revision of the law. I believe we have already been persuaded successfully. The alleged fact that the law which is proposed is not contained in any other State is untrue in the first place, unless it refers to the mere words of the statute. By judicial construction in New York, the law is interpreted in accordance with the proposed legislation, and decisions to the same effect exist in other jurisdictions, though, of course, there are decisions to the contrary. The argument that no other State has adopted such legislation is without significance, because when the occasion for new legislation arises, as it does in this case, it is most appropriate that Massachusetts, where the matter has taken its most acute form, and more experience has accumulated, should take the lead in legislation. If it does so by the adoption of the present proposal, it will occupy an honorable place at the head of a movement, and will be imitated instead of being an object of derision at the rear of the procession. The necessary change cannot be made by the imitation of existing laws, because these laws, in the United States at least, are all practically of two types, both of which have been fully discussed in dealing with the present proposal. Those laws differ very little between themselves, except in the variation of the epithets used to indicate the kind of books which are to be condemned. The present proposal is a real attempt to introduce the product of some thought into legislation, and to secure thereby the necessary discrimination between good books and bad books.
HENRY L. BURNHAM.
Boston, March 8.

The Censorship in Boston

Q Boston is unique among cities of the United States in its advance censorship of books, plays and public meetings. Once the literary center of the country, it has now become the hub of censorship.

Q Though Massachusetts laws affect other cities, Boston alone has established a system of advance control through threat of prosecution or of revoking licenses of halls and theaters.

Q The guarantees of civil liberty all denounce censorship in advance, leaving the determination of law-breaking to the courts. But not in Boston!

Q Here is the record of books banned, plays prohibited or censored, meetings forbidden or broken up.

Q And here are the remedies proposed to break this largely lawless and always ridiculous censorship.

Read the story as told by PROF. ZECHARIAH CHAFEE, JR., of the Harvard Law School, and give your help.

THE CIVIL LIBERTIES COMMITTEE OF MASSACHUSETTS

6 BYRON STREET, BOSTON, MASS.

Telephone: Haymarket 6063

Price 10 cents each. In quantity of ten or more 5 cents each.

Librarians Ask Relief in Book Banning

More Sane Statute Is Argued
to Curb "Obscene"
Literature

Spirit of Law Good

Watch and Ward Society Fears
Changes Suggested Would
Mean Harm

By Forrest P. Hull

During the last two years sixty-five books of country-wide circulation were withdrawn from the shelves of Boston booksellers because of action or suggestion by the public authorities. Publishers, booksellers, librarians and representatives of other interests immediately raised a cry that Boston had become the "laughing-stock of the world." Today that sentiment was reiterated before the legislative Committee on Legal Affairs when a petition by the Massachusetts Library Club, Inc., seeking a change in the law relative to obscene literature, was heard.

One of the largest hearing rooms in the State House was filled with friends of the measure who came from all sections of the State, and, as many persons desired to speak, the hearing was continued during the afternoon. The only person who responded to the call for the opposition was Rev. Raymond Calkins, D. D., of Cambridge, president of the New England Watch and Ward Society, and he admitted that he should not be considered as an opponent. What he desired to do was to warn the committee that the suggested changes in the law might lead to trouble of serious nature.

Changes Suggested

The proposed legislation would eliminate from the present law the word "book" and would add to the law another section saying in part that, "Whoever imports, prints, publishes, sells or distributes a book, knowing it to contain language which, when considered in connection with its entire context and theme, is indecent or impure" shall be punished by imprisonment for two years or by a fine of not more than $1000 or both.

Attorney Henry L. Burnham of Boston, introduced by Galen W. Hull of Quincy, president of the Library Club, handled the case for the proponents, characterizing the present law as a "legal curiosity" in that it allowed a finding of guilty on the language used in any one part of a book without considering the complete text.

There was much questioning of Attorney Burnham by members of the committee, during which a Supreme Court decision on the present law was read and the attorney refused to accept the opinion of the questioner that the court had approved the law. Mr. Burnham agreed with Representative M. E. S. Clemons of Wakefield, House chairman of the committee, that "writers who wave a flag or utter a godly phrase at the conclusion of a book to 'get by' should be condemned."

Several of the speakers reiterated the statements of last year that the present law would, if literally enforced, cause the removal of such books as the Bible, Shakespeare, and Byron from library shelves.

"Under the present law it is enough to convict if language in the book is impure, which is a weak word," Attorney Burnham argued. "Under the present law a person may even be guilty if the language 'tends to corrupt the morals of youth.' On a sober, controversial subject the complainant in such a case may be just as likely to be on the wrong side as the defendant. It is a dragnet statute."

Asks for Co-

Henry C. Springfield P. three men and legislation question but law is good as it is carried.

"I hope you in the library favor the amendment as deep of young people would not be bars. They after a two year lution for a out a dissent.

Mr. Wellin there never h the word "o tory. What size is that i for morals. I book he cons passages along that a book is the rule i States. Our sage. Moreo that Hawtho bitterly assail it is consider dren. In rep think the book be considered said, ought n that practice and he was c Ward Society fore condemn Edward A. Monthly, remi lishers were n for an indece the house de said and, mo seldom pay.

"I am not objectionable but will say i attending them have said. E position in wh present statu like the antiq who, if now wholesale arre

Edward A. Monthly, remi lishers were n for an indece the house de said and, mo seldom pay.

"I am not objectionable but will say i attending them have said. E position in wh present statu like the antiq who, if now wholesale arre

Edward A. Monthly, remi lishers were n for an indece the house de said and, mo seldom pay.

"I am not objectionable but will say i attending them have said. E position in wh present statu like the antiq who, if now wholesale arre

Edward A. Monthly, remi lishers were n for an indece the house de said and, mo seldom pay.

"I am not objectionable but will say i attending them have said. E position in wh present statu like the antiq who, if now wholesale arre

Edward A. Monthly, remi lishers were n for an indece the house de said and, mo seldom pay.

"I am not objectionable but will say i attending them have said. E position in wh present statu like the antiq who, if now wholesale arre

Edward A. Monthly, remi lishers were n for an indece the house de said and, mo seldom pay.

"I am not objectionable but will say i attending them have said. E position in wh present statu like the antiq who, if now wholesale arre

Edward A. Monthly, remi lishers were n for an indece the house de said and, mo seldom pay.

"I am not objectionable but will say i attending them have said. E position in wh present statu like the antiq who, if now wholesale arre

Edward A. Monthly, remi lishers were n for an indece the house de said and, mo seldom pay.

"I am not objectionable but will say i attending them have said. E position in wh present statu like the antiq who, if now wholesale arre

Edward A. Monthly, remi lishers were n for an indece the house de said and, mo seldom pay.

to make it attractive to the reader. It would be foolish, he went on, to place in this category books which deal with important questions of living, questions which are being discussed by people of intelligence everywhere.

On the other hand, Professor Rogers went on, vulgar, sensational, glamorous books are being fed to the public from "corner" lending libraries which "continually harm upon the minds of the

Asks for Co-

Henry C. Springfield P. three men and legislation question but law is good as it is carried.

"I hope you in the library favor the amendment as deep of young people would not be bars. They after a two year lution for a out a dissent.

Mr. Wellin there never h the word "o tory. What size is that i for morals. I book he cons passages along that a book is the rule i States. Our sage. Moreo that Hawtho bitterly assail it is consider dren. In rep think the book be considered said, ought n that practice and he was c Ward Society fore condemn Edward A. Monthly, remi lishers were n for an indece the house de said and, mo seldom pay.

"I am not objectionable but will say i attending them have said. E position in wh present statu like the antiq who, if now wholesale arre

Edward A. Monthly, remi lishers were n for an indece the house de said and, mo seldom pay.

"I am not objectionable but will say i attending them have said. E position in wh present statu like the antiq who, if now wholesale arre

Edward A. Monthly, remi lishers were n for an indece the house de said and, mo seldom pay.

"I am not objectionable but will say i attending them have said. E position in wh present statu like the antiq who, if now wholesale arre

Edward A. Monthly, remi lishers were n for an indece the house de said and, mo seldom pay.

"I am not objectionable but will say i attending them have said. E position in wh present statu like the antiq who, if now wholesale arre

Edward A. Monthly, remi lishers were n for an indece the house de said and, mo seldom pay.

"I am not objectionable but will say i attending them have said. E position in wh present statu like the antiq who, if now wholesale arre

Edward A. Monthly, remi lishers were n for an indece the house de said and, mo seldom pay.

"I am not objectionable but will say i attending them have said. E position in wh present statu like the antiq who, if now wholesale arre

Edward A. Monthly, remi lishers were n for an indece the house de said and, mo seldom pay.

"I am not objectionable but will say i attending them have said. E position in wh present statu like the antiq who, if now wholesale arre

Edward A. Monthly, remi lishers were n for an indece the house de said and, mo seldom pay.

"I am not objectionable but will say i attending them have said. E position in wh present statu like the antiq who, if now wholesale arre

Edward A. Monthly, remi lishers were n for an indece the house de said and, mo seldom pay.

PROF. CHAFEE was graduated from Brown University in 1907 and from the Harvard Law School in 1913. He was associated in the practice of law with Tillinghast & Collins, at Providence, R. I., 1913 to 1916 and 1922 to 1925. He was appointed assistant professor of law at the Harvard Law School in 1916, and in 1919 he was made full professor. He was one of twelve lawyers reporting on the illegal activities of the Department of Justice in 1920. The fall of the present year (1929) he was appointed, with Walter H. Pollak, to investigate the lawless activities of law enforcement officers for the Law Enforcement Committee appointed by President Hoover. He was chairman of the Committee on Coal and Civil Liberties reporting to the United States Coal Commission in 1923. He is author of "Freedom of Speech," "The Inquiring Mind," a chapter on law in "Civilization in the United States" and part author of "The Next War". He is prominent in the campaign to abolish capital punishment in Massachusetts.

Weed Glad to

Charles F. president of it Boston, said t principle of th Harvard who On the list for was banned in "I bottlege myself," said l fine and whol ever read and read a book but can Tragedy."

Harold Will senting the Bo ton Booksellers tending or tryi books. The is the language should be judg are about 10,0 year. Most of perhaps a half be impossible for everyone through whose hands they pass to read each book. If complant is made, perhaps by a 'crank,' there is not enough profit in any one book to fight the case and the book is withdrawn."

"Boston has been at the head of the country in the book business," he remarked, "and her influence has extended all over the country. It would be a shame to have that influence minimized."

Mr. Williams read a statement made a year ago by the Watch and Ward Society's president to the effect that it is not the policy of the society to ban books for single passages. The change suggested, he said, was an attempt to carry out more completely and sanely the spirit of the law.

Professor Robert E. Rogers of Massachusetts Institute of Technology, in favor of the bill, defined an immoral book as one which paints vice in such terms as

THE WATCH AND WARD

To the Editor of The Herald:
The opposition of the Watch and Ward Society to the book bill reported to the Legislature by the committee on legal affairs, so far as that opposition is disclosed by the society's circular, reported in your issue of this date, turns upon the argument of innovation. This is a strange argument coming from that society, because two years ago, before the Legislature of 1928, the society advocated a book bill then known as the booksellers' bill, which represented an extreme innovation in this same matter, very different from the very moderate change which is proposed by the advocates of the bill reported by the committee on legal affairs. The booksellers' bill would have established an entirely new proceeding in equity relating to books, or at least without analogy in the law since the abolition of the court of star chamber in 1641. The argument of innovation is one which has been made many times in the course of the recent discussion between speakers representing the Watch and Ward Society and speakers representing the Massachusetts Legislature. In the case of the book bill of 1928, we believe, been answered successfully. The alleged fact that the law which is proposed is not a precedent in any other state is untrue, in the first place, unless it refers to the mere words of the statute. By judicial construction in New York, the law is interpreted in accordance with the proposed legislation, and decisions to the same effect exist in other jurisdictions, though, of course, there are decisions to the contrary. The argument that no other state has adopted such legislation is without significance, because when the occasion for new legislation arises, as it does in this case, it is most appropriate that Massachusetts, where the matter has taken its most acute form, should lead in legislation. If it does so by the adoption of the present proposal, it will occupy an honorable place at the head of a movement, and will be initiated instead of being an object of derision at the rear of the procession. The necessary change cannot be made by the imitation of existing laws, because those laws, in the United States at least, are all practically of two types, both of which have been fully discussed in dealing with the present proposal. Those laws differ very little between themselves, except in the variation of the epithets used to indicate the kind of books which are to be condemned. The present proposal is a real attempt to introduce the product of some thought into legislation, and to secure thereby the necessary discrimination between good books and bad books.
HENRY L. BURNHAM.
Boston, March 8.

THE CENSORSHIP IN BOSTON

by PROF. ZECHARIAH CHAFEE, JR., of Harvard Law School

The wisest man who was ever born or lived in Boston, Benjamin Franklin, summed up the whole problem of the control of discussion when he said, "Abuses of the freedom of speech ought to be repressed, but to whom dare we commit the power of doing it?"

Often something which is said or written will seem objectionable to many persons; but in every instance the suppression of such utterances will require that fallible human beings be entrusted with the power of determining what is undesirable. The fitness of the particular officials to decide delicate questions of opinion becomes extremely important. The risks of unrestricted discussion are obvious, but against them must be balanced the dangers of error on the part of censors. The seriousness of these dangers is proved by events in Boston.

Censorship in Boston is an old story running back before the war. But its excesses have been marked chiefly in recent years. It's based on the fear of discussion of two issues—sex and economic radicalism—though it has prohibited also meetings of the Ku Klux Klan, opposed by the Roman Catholics, and on one occasion, a peace meeting on the Common.

The censorship rests on the claim that books, periodicals, plays or meetings present matters which are "obscene" or "against the public interest."

The official chiefly responsible for the censorship is the Mayor. As a member of the board entrusted with granting and revoking licenses for theaters and halls and permits for meetings on the Common, he has assumed the authority to prohibit plays and meetings he opposes. This has been true under the recent administrations of Mayor Curley and Mayor Nichols. The

Librarians Ask Relief in Book Banning

More Sane Statute Is Argued
to Curb "Obscene"
Literature

Spirit of Law Good

Watch and Ward Society Fears
Changes Suggested Would
Mean Harm

By Forrest P. Hull

During the last two years sixty-five books of country-wide circulation were withdrawn from the shelves of Boston booksellers because of action or suggestion by the public authorities. Publishers, booksellers, librarians and representatives of other interests immediately raised a cry that Boston had become the "laughing-stock of the world." Today that sentiment was reiterated before the legislative committee on legal affairs when a petition by the Massachusetts Library Club, Inc., seeking a change in the law relative to obscene literature, was heard.

One of the largest hearing rooms in the State House was filled with friends of the measure who came from all sections of the State, and, as many persons desired to speak, the hearing was continued during the afternoon. The only person who responded to the call for the opposition was Rev. Raymond Calkins, D. D., of Cambridge, president of the New England Watch and Ward Society, and he admitted that he should not be considered as an opponent. What he desired to do was to warn the committee that the suggested changes in the law might lead to trouble of serious nature.

Changes Suggested

The proposed legislation would eliminate from the present law the word "book" and would add to the law another section saying in part that, "Whoever imports, prints, publishes, sells or distributes a book, knowing it to contain language which, when considered in connection with its entire context and theme, is indecent or impure" shall be punished by imprisonment for two years or by a fine of not more than $1000 or both.

Attorney Henry L. Burnham of Boston, introduced by Galen W. Hill of Quincy, president of the Library Club, handled the case for the proponents, characterizing the present law as a "legal curiosity" in that it allowed a finding of guilt on the language used in any one part of a book without considering the complete text.

There was much questioning of Attorney Burnham by members of the committee, during which a Supreme Court decision on the present law was read and the attorney refused to accept the opinion of the questioner that the court had approved the law. Mr. Burnham agreed with Representative M. E. S. Clemons of Wakefield, House chairman of the committee, that "writers who wave a flag or utter a godly phrase at the conclusion of a book to get by" should be condemned.

Several of the speakers reiterated the statements of last year that the present law would, if literally enforced, cause the removal of such books as the Bible, Shakespeare, and Byron from library shelves.

"Under the present law it is enough to convict if language in the book is impure, which is a weak word," Attorney Burnham argued. "Under the present law a person may even be guilty if the language tends to corrupt the morals of youth." On a sober, controversial subject the complainant in such a case may be just as likely to be on the wrong side as the defendant. It is a dragnet statute.

Asks for Ct

Henry C. Springfield, three men's ed legislative question by law is good as it is carried in the library favor the art are as deep of young people would not bars. They after a two lution for a out a disse.

Mr. Wells there never the word "tory. What size is that for morals book be cons passages also that a book is the rule States. Our sage. Moreo that Hawtho bitterly assai it is conside dren. In re think the boo be considered said, ought r that practice and he was Ward Society fore condemn Edward A. Monthly, rem lishers were i for an indee the house de said, and, mo seldom pay.

"I am not objectionable but will say attending them have paid. B position in w present statuti like the anti who, if now wholesale arre

Weed Glad to

Charles F. president of t Boston, said ti principle of ti Harman who On the list fo was banned in "I bootlegge myself," said fine and whol ever read and read a book ba can Tragedy."

Harold Will senting the B ton Booksellers tending or try books. The li the language should be judg are about 10.0 year. Most of perhaps a half be impossible for everyone through whose hands they pass to read each book. If complaint is made, perhaps by a "crank" there is not enough profit in any one book to fight the case and the book is withdrawn."

"Boston has been at the head of the country in the book business," he remarked, "and her influence has extended all over the country. It would be a shame to have that influence minimized."

Mr. Williams read a statement made a year ago by the Watch and Ward Society's president to the effect that it is not the policy of the society to ban books for single passages. The change suggested, he said, was an attempt to carry out more completely and sanely the spirit of the law.

Professor Robert E. Rogers of Massachusetts Institute of Technology, in favor of the bill, defined an immoral book as one which paints vice in such terms as to make it attractive to the reader. It would be foolish, he went on, to place in this category books which deal with important questions of living, questions which are being discussed by people of intelligence everywhere.

On the other hand, Professor Rogers went on, vulgar, sensational, glamorous books are being fed to the public from "corner" lending libraries which "continually harm upon public morals."

THE CENSORSHIP IN BOSTON

censorship of books and periodicals is outside his jurisdiction, and is accomplished by threat of prosecution for their sale.

The forces behind this unique censorship are twofold and unrelated, except as they happen to agree in their viewpoint toward "obscenity." They are the Puritans and Roman Catholics. The Puritan element, reflected in the "Watch and Ward Society," is not concerned with prohibiting public meetings either favoring birth control—which have been banned for ten years—or on radical issues. It has rarely acted to censor plays. It is concerned primarily with the book censorship.

The Catholic opposition is unorganized, but the Catholic viewpoint against public agitation of birth control makes itself felt wherever Catholics approach a majority, though nowhere with such rigid determination as in Boston. Both Catholic and Protestant mayors have taken precisely the same stand under pressure of the same forces.

In addition to this advance censorship, the Boston authorities have also had recourse in recent years to the ancient statute, passed in 1646, against blasphemy. Three cases have been brought in Massachusetts since 1925, two of them in Boston, the first such prosecutions in almost a century. Two resulted from speeches at public meetings—the case against Anthony Bimba at Brockton, and against Prof. Horace M. Kallen in Boston. One was directed against a book, the "Secret of Free Masonry" by Warner G. Williams. One man was acquitted, one case was dismissed before trial, and one was dismissed on appeal after conviction. But the fact that the cases were brought at all, and only in Massachusetts of all states in recent years, is indicative of the temper of the authorities.

Various attempts have been made to break down the censorship of books and meetings. Nothing has been done to tackle the control of plays, or of meetings on Boston Common. The book censorship has been fought by test cases in court involving particular books or periodicals—twice with success—and by the introduction of various bills in the legislature. All such bills have failed of passage.

The censorship of meetings in licensed halls has been twice protested by citizens' mass meetings in the Old South Meeting

THE BOSTON HERALD

THE BOSTON HERALD

THE BOSTON HERALD

MONDAY, MARCH 10, 1930

THE WATCH AND WARD

To the Editor of The Herald:
The opposition of the Watch and Ward Society to the book bill reported to the Legislature by the committee on legal affairs, so far as that opposition is disclosed by the society's circular, reported in your issue of this date, turns upon the argument of innovation. This is a strange argument coming from that society, because two years ago, before the Legislature of 1928, the society advocated a book bill then known as the booksellers' bill, which represented an extreme innovation in this same matter, very different from the very moderate change which is proposed by the advocates of the bill reported by the committee on legal affairs. The booksellers' bill would have established an entirely new proceeding in equity relating to books, or at least without analogy in the law since the abolition of the court of star chamber in 1641. The argument based on innovation is one which has been made many times in the course of the recent discussion between speakers representing the Watch and Ward Society and speakers representing the Massachusetts Bar Association for the revision of the book law. It is, we believe, a very old and worn argument. The alleged fact that the law which is proposed is not contained in any other statute is untrue, in the first place, unless it refers to the mere words of the statute. By judicial construction in New York, the law is interpreted in accordance with the proposed legislation, and decisions to the same effect exist in other jurisdictions, though, of course, there are decisions to the contrary. The argument that no other state has adopted such legislation is without significance, because when the occasion for new legislation arises, as it does in this case, it is most appropriate that Massachusetts, where the matter has taken its most acute form, and more experience has accumulated than anywhere else, should take the lead in legislation. If it does so by the adoption of the present proposal, it will occupy an honorable place at the head of a movement, and will be initiated instead of being an object of decision at the rear of the procession. The necessary change cannot be made by the imitation of existing laws, because those laws, in the United States at least, are all practically of two types, both of which have been fully discussed in dealing with the present proposal. Those laws differ very little between themselves, except in the variation of the epithets used to indicate the kind of books which are to be condemned. The present proposal is a real attempt to introduce the product of some thought into legislation, and to secure thereby the necessary discrimination between good books and bad books. HENRY L. BURNHAM.
Boston, March 8.

THE CENSORSHIP IN BOSTON

House, sponsored by leading men and women. Efforts to stage test meetings have been repeatedly made in the hope of throwing the issue into the courts—all without success.

Practicable remedies lie in organized effort to bring actions in the courts and to pass bills in the legislature. Only a determined opposition by an aroused public opinion can break down this entrenched—and for the most part lawless—assumption of the power of advance censorship.

The story must be told in detail to make clear the lengths to which the Boston authorities have gone. Here it is.

THE BOOK CENSORSHIP

Some 65 books, freely sold in other parts of the United States and passed by the postal authorities, were withdrawn from public sale by Boston booksellers in the years 1927 to '29. A list of them will be found in the appendix. Among the best known of them were: "Elmer Gantry" by Sinclair Lewis; "An American Tragedy" by Theodore Dreiser; "The Hardboiled Virgin" by Frances Newman; "The Plastic Age" by Percy Marks; "Oil" by Upton Sinclair, and "The World of William Clissold" by H. G. Wells. Five successive issues of Scribner's Magazine have lately been barred because of a serial by Ernest Hemingway, "A Farewell to Arms."

This astonishing situation, which has made Boston ridiculous to the rest of the country, is explained in part by the wording of the law. The Massachusetts statute against the sale of books and periodicals "containing obscene, indecent or impure language, or manifestly tending to corrupt the morals of youth," differs from similar laws in other states in testing a book by passages and not as a whole.

The interesting feature of the Boston book situation is that the determination of what books are indecent and the exclusion of such books from sale has not been made for the most part by the ordinary methods of the criminal law; that is, an arrest of a bookseller followed by prosecution and a jury verdict. Private persons, not public agents and tribunals, have been the main factor in deciding what books should not be sold.

Librarians Ask Relief in Book Banning

More Sane Statute Is Argued
to Curb "Obscene"
Literature

Spirit of Law Good

Watch and Ward Society Fears
Changes Suggested Would
Mean Harm

By Forrest P. Hill

During the last two years sixty-five books of country-wide circulation were withdrawn from the shelves of Boston booksellers because of action or suggestion by the public authorities. Publishers, booksellers, librarians and representatives of other interests immediately raised a cry that Boston had become the "laughing-stock of the world." Today that sentiment was reiterated before the legislative committee on legal affairs when a petition by the Massachusetts Library Club, Inc., seeking a change in the law relative to obscene literature, was heard.

One of the largest hearing rooms in the State House was filled with friends of the measure who came from all sections of the State and as many persons desired to speak, the hearing was continued during the afternoon. The only person who responded to the call for the opposition was Rev. Raymond Calkins, D. D., of Cambridge, president of the New England Watch and Ward Society, and he admitted that he should not be considered as an opponent. What he desired to do was to warn the committee that the suggested changes in the law might lead to trouble of serious nature.

Changes Suggested

The proposed legislation would eliminate from the present law the word "book" and would add to the law another section saying in part that, "Whoever imports, prints, publishes, sells or distributes a book, knowing it to contain language which, when considered in connection with its entire context and theme, is indecent or impure" shall be punished by imprisonment for two years or by a fine of not more than $1000 or both.

Attorney Henry L. Burnham of Boston, introduced by Galen W. Hill of Quincy, president of the Library Club, handled the case for the proponents, characterizing the present law as a "legal curiosity" in that it allowed a finding of guilty on the language used in any one part of a book without considering the complete text.

There was much questioning of Attorney Burnham by members of the committee, during which a Supreme Court decision on the present law was read and the attorney refused to accept the opinion of the questioner that the court had approved the law. Mr. Burnham agreed with Representative M. E. S. Clemons of Wakefield, House chairman of the committee, that "writers who wave a flag or utter a godly phrase at the conclusion of a book to 'get by' should be condemned."

Several of the speakers reiterated the statements of last year that the present law would, if literally enforced, cause the removal of such books as the Bible, Shakespeare, and Byron from library shelves.

"Under the present law it is enough to convict if language in the book is impure, which is a weak word," Attorney Burnham argued. "Under the present law a person may even be guilty if the language 'tends to corrupt the morals of youth.' On a sober, controversial subject the complainant in such a case may be just as likely to be on the wrong side as the defendant. It is a dragnet statute."

Asks for

Henry Springfield three men ed legisla question I law is go as it is ca "I hope in the lib favor the are as det of young I would not bars. The after a tw lution for out a diss Mr. Wel there neve the word tory. Wha size is that for morals book be cor passages al that a bool is the rule States. Ou sage. More that Hawt bitterly ass it is consid dren. In r think the bo be considere said, ought that practic and he was Ward Socie fore condem Edward A Monthly, re lishers was for an indec the house d said, and, m seldom pay.

"I am not objectionable but will say attending the have paid. I position in w present statu like the ant who, if now wholesale arr

Weed Glad to

Charles F. president of Boston, said t principle of t Harvard who On the list fo was banned b "I bootleg myself," said fine and who ever read and read a book ba can Tragedy." Harold Will sending the B ton Bookseller, fending or try books. The l the language should be judg are about 10.0 year. Most of perhaps a half be impossible for everyone through whose hands they pass to read each book. If complaint is made, perhaps by a 'crank,' there is not enough profit in any one book to fight the case and the book is withdrawn."

"Boston has been at the head of the country in the book business," he remarked, "and her influence has extended all over the country. It would be a shame to have that influence minimized."

Mr. Williams read a statement made a year ago by the Watch and Ward Society's president to the effect that it is not the policy of the society to ban books for single passages. The change suggested, he said, was an attempt to carry out more completely and sanely the spirit of the law.

Professor Robert E. Rogers of Massachusetts Institute of Technology, in favor of the bill, defined an immoral book as one which paints vice in such terms as to make it attractive to the reader. It would be foolish, he went on, to place in this category books which deal with important questions of living, questions which are being discussed by people of intelligence everywhere.

On the other hand, Professor Rogers went on, vulgar, sensational, glamorous books are being fed to the public from "corner" lending libraries which "continually harp upon crime and vice."

THE CENSORSHIP IN BOSTON

There have been only two Boston prosecutions in recent years, and these were test cases based on publications which had already been withdrawn from sale before any legal decision. Of these, one was brought into court by the publishers of "The American Tragedy," resulting in a conviction which has been appealed; and the other by H. L. Mencken, editor of the American Mercury, who sold a banned number containing a story, "Hatrack." He secured not only an acquittal, but also a federal temporary injunction restraining the Watch and Ward Society from boycotting his magazine (later dismissed without prejudice for lack of prosecution.)

Practically all the withdrawals of publications from sale have been due to the mere threat or fear of prosecution without any trial whatever. Most of the banned books have never been legally passed on and condemned by judge and jury.

Another singular fact about the Boston situation is that it is confined almost wholly to Boston. Books withdrawn there under threat of prosecution are freely sold in adjoining cities, with occasional exceptions in Cambridge. Yet publications which are criminal under Massachusetts law in one city must be so in another. The explanation is doubtless that the chief market for books is in Boston, and the police authorities there have come to regard control of books as one of their normal activities. The Boston booksellers are organized as an association responsive as one man to threats and have developed and accepted the policy of censorship.

They respond to threats from any quarter. Sometimes it is the police superintendent who warns them, sometimes the Watch and Ward Society, sometimes private individuals. In most instances it is private agencies, though the Watch and Ward Society figures less than is commonly reported. Only 11 of the 65 books withdrawn from 1927 to '29 were on its complaint. But that was because of a change of policy following the "American Mercury" case. The court in that case in 1926 scored as illegal the system of pressure of private agencies on the booksellers. The booksellers themselves then set up their own censorship. It was on their own decision that some of the 65 books were withdrawn.

THE WATCH AND WARD

To the Editor of The Herald:
The opposition of the Watch and Ward Society to the book bill reported to the Legislature by the committee on legal affairs, so far as that opposition is disclosed by the society's circular, reported in your issue of this date, turns upon the argument of innovation. This is a strange argument coming from that society, because two years ago, before the Legislature of 1928, the society advocated a book bill then known as the booksellers' bill, which represented an extreme innovation in this same matter, very different from the very moderate change which is proposed by the advocates of the bill reported by the committee on legal affairs. The booksellers' bill would have established an entirely new proceeding in equity relating to books, or at least without analogy in the law since the abolition of the court of star chamber in 1641. The argument based on innovation is one which has been made many times in the course of the recent discussion between speakers representing the Watch and Ward Society and speakers representing the Massachusetts booksellers for the revision of the book law of 1880. We believe, however, that the society's opposition is based on fact that the law which is proposed is not comparable in any other state is untrue, in the first place, unless it refers to the mere words of the statute. By judicial construction in New York, the law is interpreted in accordance with the proposed legislation, and decisions to the same effect exist in other jurisdictions, though, of course, there are decisions to the contrary. The argument that no other state has adopted such legislation is without significance, because when the occasion for new legislation arises, as it does in this case, it is most appropriate that Massachusetts, where the matter has taken its most acute form, and more experience has accumulated than anywhere else, should take the lead in legislation. If it does so by the adoption of the present proposal, it will occupy an honorable place at the head of a movement, and will be initiated instead of being an object of derision at the rear of the procession. The necessary change cannot be made by the imitation of existing laws, because these laws, in the United States at least, are all practically of two types, both of which have been fully discussed in dealing with the present proposal. Those laws differ very little between themselves, except in the variation of the epithets used to indicate the kind of books which are to be condemned. The present proposal is a real attempt to introduce the product of some thought into legislation, and to secure thereby the necessary discrimination between good books and bad books. HENRY L. BURNHAM.
Boston, March 6.

THE CENSORSHIP IN BOSTON

The history of the conflict between booksellers and their censors is interesting. The beginning of censorship dates from 1880, when the law was changed to its present form. At first it was applied only to pornographic matter, but later the Society in its zeal began to attack the classics. The booksellers attempted to get the law repealed, but without success. They then made a truce with the Watch and Ward, entering into an agreement by which all questionable books should be submitted to a committee of six persons, three from the Society, three from the book sellers. When a book was found to be obscene by this committee, the book sellers were notified by one of the committee members, and its sale was discontinued.

This worked smoothly until one fine day when the police arrested two women for selling a book which the committee had passed! The Watch and Ward Society had to appear in court to defend a book which the police declared obscene! Thereafter the police and district attorney joined the censors under an agreement not to make an arrest without first putting the case to the committee.

This worked until 1927, when the police broke the agreement by arresting two men for selling the "Plastic Age," a novel by Percy Marks, which had been passed as O. K. by the censorship committee three years before. The charge was later withdrawn, but the publicity stirred up over it aroused scores of complaints against books. Relations between booksellers and the District Attorney and police became strained. The booksellers have since done some censoring of their own, and have also withdrawn from sale all books about which complaint was made.

The most numerous complaints in recent years have come from one Rev. Paul Sterling, an insistent person who takes his "bad" books to the police when the Watch and Ward turns him down. And the Boston police are eager censors. In 1925, for instance the Literary Digest number of the Harvard Lampoon was confiscated on Boston newsstands by order of the Superintendent of Police because of "improper pictures," which were merely comic versions of well known paintings, and newsdealers were warned not to sell it. It was permitted to be distributed

Librarians Ask Relief in Book Banning

More Sane Statute Is Argued
to Curb "Obscene"
Literature

Spirit of Law Good

Watch and Ward Society Fears
Changes Suggested Would
Mean Harm

By Forrest P. Hull

During the last two years sixty-five books of country-wide circulation were withdrawn from the shelves of Boston booksellers because of action or suggestion by the public authorities. Publishers, booksellers, librarians and representatives of other interests immediately raised a cry that Boston had become the "laughing-stock of the world." Today that sentiment was reiterated before the legislative committee on legal affairs when a petition by the Massachusetts Library Club, Inc., seeking a change in the law relative to obscene literature, was heard.

One of the largest hearing rooms in the State House was filled with friends of the measure who came from all sections of the State, and as many persons desired to speak, the hearing was continued during the afternoon. The only person who responded to the call for the opposition was Rev. Raymond Calkins, D. D., of Cambridge, president of the New England Watch and Ward Society, and he admitted that he should not be considered as an opponent. What he desired to do was to warn the committee that the suggested changes in the law might lead to trouble of serious nature.

Changes Suggested

The proposed legislation would eliminate from the present law the word "book" and would add to the law another section saying in part that, "Whoever imports, prints, publishes, sells or distributes a book, knowing it to contain language which, when considered in connection with its entire context and theme, is indecent or impure" shall be punished by imprisonment for two years or by a fine of not more than $1000 or both.

Attorney Henry L. Burnham of Boston, introduced by Galen W. Hill of Quincy, president of the Library Club, handled the case for the proponents, characterizing the present law as a "legal curiosity" in that it allowed a finding of guilty on the language used in any one part of a book without considering the complete text.

There was much questioning of Attorney Burnham by members of the committee, during which a Supreme Court decision on the present law was read and the attorney refused to accept the opinion of the questioner that the court had approved the law. Mr. Burnham agreed with Representative M. E. S. Clemons of Wakefield, House chairman of the committee, that "writers who wave a flag or utter a godly phrase at the conclusion of a book to get by" should be condemned.

Several of the speakers reiterated the statements of last year that the present law would, if literally enforced, cause the removal of such books as the Bible, Shakespeare, and Byron from library shelves.

"Under the present law it is enough to convict if language in the book is impure, which is a weak word," Attorney Burnham argued. "Under the present law a person may even be guilty if the language 'tends to corrupt the morals of youth.' On a sober, controversial subject the complainant in such a case may be just as likely to be on the wrong side as the defendant. It is a dragnet statute."

Asks for

Henry C. Springfield, three men, ed. legisla. question b. law is good as it is car. "I hope. In the lib. favor the a. are as dee. of young p. would not. bars. They. after a two. lution for. out a dise. Mr. Well. there never. the word. tory. What. size is that. for morals. book be con. passages at. that a book. is the rule. States. Our. sage. More. that Hawth. bitterly assa. It is consid. dren. In re. think the bo. be considere. said, ought. that practic. and he was. Ward Socie. fore condem. Edward A. Monthly, ren. lishers were. for an indec. the house d. said, and, m. seldom pay. "I am not. objectionable. but will say. attending the. have paid. E. position in w. present statu. like the anti. who, if now. wholesale arr.

Weed Glad to

Charles F. president of t. Boston, said t. principle of t. Harvard who. On the list fo. was banned fr. "I bootleggi. myself," said. fine and who. ever read and. read a book be. can Tragedy." Harold Will. senting the B. ton Bookseller. tending or try. books. The l. the language. should be judg. are about 10.0. year. Most of. perhaps a half. be impossible. for everyone through. whose hands they pass to read each. book. If complaint is made, perhaps by. a 'crank,' there is not enough profit in. any one book to fight the case and the. book is withdrawn."

"Boston has been at the head of the country in the book business," he remarked, "and her influence has extended all over the country. It would be a shame to have that influence minimized."

Mr. Williams read a statement made a year ago by the Watch and Ward Society's president to the effect that it is not the policy of the society to ban books for single passages. The change suggested, he said, was an attempt to carry out more completely and sanely the spirit of the law.

Professor Robert E. Rogers of Massachusetts Institute of Technology, in favor of the bill, defined an immoral book as one which paints vice in such terms as to make it attractive to the reader. It would be foolish, he went on, to place in this category books which deal with important questions of living, questions which are being discussed by people of intelligence everywhere.

On the other hand, Professor Rogers went on, vulgar, sensational, glamorous books are being fed to the public from "corner" lending libraries which "continually harp upon crime and vice."

THE CENSORSHIP IN BOSTON

later with the objectionable pictures blocked out. Similar action was taken in Cambridge.

Since J. Frank Chase, the agent of the Watch and Ward, died the situation has become much worse. Many more books have been banned each year than in his lifetime. The police have been much more easily shocked than was he.

The booksellers in 1928 went to the Legislature for relief. They caused a bill to be introduced, requiring a warning from the police that a book is objectionable before its sale becomes a crime, and providing for a proceeding in equity in the Superior Court instead of a criminal prosecution. Another bill, introduced independently, required that the entire theme of a book, not isolated passages, be made the basis of criminality. Both bills failed.

In 1929 the fight for relief was joined by the Massachusetts Library Club, composed of public librarians. A bill was introduced covering the same features as the former bills, with the exception of the proceeding in equity. It proposed that a seller can be held liable only if he "knowingly" distributes a book containing language which is indecent when considered in connection with its entire context and theme. Books were separated from other printed matter, which was untouched.

Although the bill had wide support and very little opposition, it was defeated by a few votes when it came before the State Senate.

CENSORSHIP OF THE THEATER

The Mayor of Boston grants licenses to theaters for the theatrical season; but a board consisting of the Mayor, the Police Commissioner, and the Chief Justice of the Municipal Court may by a majority vote revoke or suspend any such license "at their pleasure." Thus they can close a theater if a play which they think indecent is performed notwithstanding an intimation of their view to the manager. It used to be said of a former mayor that he journeyed to New York to enjoy dramas that were exciting comment, and then as a result of his observations banned them in Boston.

THE WATCH AND WARD

To the Editor of The Herald:
The opposition of the Watch and Ward Society to the book bill reported to the Legislature by the committee on legal affairs, so far as that opposition is disclosed by the society's circular, reported in your issue of this date, turns upon the argument of innovation. This is a strange argument coming from that society, because two years ago, before the Legislature of 1928, the society advocated a book bill then known as the booksellers' bill, which represented an extreme innovation in this same matter, very different from the very moderate change which is proposed by the advocates of the bill reported by the committee on legal affairs. The booksellers' bill would have established an entirely new proceeding in equity relating to books, or at least without analogy in the law since the abolition of the court of star chamber in 1641. The argument based on innovation is one which has been made many times in the course of the recent discussion between speakers representing the Watch and Ward Society and speakers representing the Massachusetts booksellers for the revision of the law relative to obscene literature, and has been answered successfully. The alleged fact that the law which is proposed is not considered as any other statute is untrue in the first place, unless it refers to the new words of the statute. By judicial construction in New York, the law is interpreted in accordance with the proposed legislation, and decisions to the same effect exist in other jurisdictions, though, of course, there are decisions to the contrary. The argument that no other state has adopted such legislation is without significance, because when the occasion for new legislation arises, as it does in this case, it is most appropriate that Massachusetts, where the matter has taken its most acute form, and more experience has accumulated than anywhere else, should take the lead in legislation. If it does so by the adoption of the present proposal, it will occupy an honorable place at the head of a movement, and will be imitated instead of being an object of derision at the rear of the procession. The necessary change cannot be made by the initiation of existing laws, because these laws, in the United States at least, are all practically of two types, both of which have been fully discussed in dealing with the present proposal. Those laws differ very little between themselves, except in the variation of the epithets used to indicate the kind of books which are to be condemned. The present proposal is a real attempt to introduce the product of some thought into legislation, and to secure thereby the necessary discrimination between good books and bad books.
HENRY L. BURNHAM.
Boston, March 8.

THE CENSORSHIP IN BOSTON

This censorship of the theater is far less active than the censorship of books, which rests on less direct interference. And it is less active than in former years, due to more tolerant public standards. It is directed primarily to serious plays, not to burlesque or leg-shows, which have been for years as broad in Boston as elsewhere.

Four plays in recent years have been banned entirely,—the "Gods of the Lightning" based on the Sacco-Vanzetti case, "Fiesta" a Harvard Dramatic Club play written by Michael Gold, which was produced in Cambridge without interference, "Desire under the Elms" by Eugene O'Neill, and the "Strange Interlude" by the same author. Several others have been cleansed of profanity or "obscenity" before showing or after one performance,—notably "Porgy", "What Price Glory", and "Jarnegan", produced by Richard Bennett.

The Boston scheme for theatrical regulation has some advantages for managers over the common law method, which would render them liable to prosecution without warning after they had gone to great expense in the production of a play. If some kind of dramatic censorship is desirable, this scheme of board control is better than the English censor, whose absurdities have long been a target for George Bernard Shaw. A single censor is liable to become unduly preoccupied with questions of morality, while the three Boston officials have other things to think about.

Nevertheless, the Boston scheme has dangers which deserve consideration. The difficulty is not merely that the Mayor, the Police Commissioner, and the Chief Justice of the Municipal Court are not put into office because of their qualifications for dealing with the rightness and wrongness of abstract ideas. Objections would still exist if this power to censor the drama were entrusted to a board consisting of the Presidents of Boston University, Boston College, Harvard, and Tufts, the Episcopal Bishop, the Roman Catholic Cardinal, a Jewish rabbi, and the editors of the "Transcript" and the "American." The question is, whether even these persons could safely be entrusted with the arbitrary power to control the drama, or whether it would be better to allow the producers to make their own decisions on

Librarians Ask Relief in Book Banning

More Sane Statute Is Argued
to Curb "Obscene"
Literature

Spirit of Law Good

Watch and Ward Society Fears
Changes Suggested Would
Mean Harm

By Forrest P. Hull

During the last two years sixty-five books of country-wide circulation were withdrawn from the shelves of Boston booksellers because of action or suggestion by the public authorities. Publishers, booksellers, librarians and representatives of other interests immediately raised a cry that Boston had become the "laughing-stock of the world." Today that sentiment was reiterated before the legislative Committee on Legal Affairs when a petition by the Massachusetts Library Club, Inc., seeking a change in the law relative to obscene literature, was heard.

One of the largest hearing rooms in the State House was filled with friends of the measure who came from all sections of the State, and as many persons desired to speak, the hearing was continued during the afternoon. The only person who responded to the call for the opposition was Rev. Raymond Calkins, D. D., of Cambridge, president of the New England Watch and Ward Society, and he admitted that he should not be considered as an opponent. What he desired to do was to warn the committee that the suggested changes in the law might lead to trouble of serious nature.

Changes Suggested

The proposed legislation would eliminate from the present law the word "book" and would add to the law another section saying in part that, "Whoever imports, prints, publishes, sells or distributes a book, knowing it to contain language which, when considered in connection with its entire context and theme, is indecent or impure" shall be punished by imprisonment for two years or by a fine of not more than $1000 or both.

Attorney Henry L. Burnham of Boston, introduced by Galen W. Hill of Quincy, president of the Library Club, handled the case for the proponents, characterizing the present law as a "legal curiosity" in that it allowed a finding of guilty on the language used in any one part of a book without considering the complete text.

There was much questioning of Attorney Burnham by members of the committee, during which a Supreme Court decision on the present law was read and the attorney refused to accept the opinion of the questioner that the court had approved the law. Mr. Burnham agreed with Representative M. E. S. Clemons of Wakefield, House chairman of the committee, that "writers who wave a flag or utter a godly phrase at the conclusion of a book to 'get by' should be condemned."

Several of the speakers reiterated the statements of last year that the present law would, if literally enforced, cause the removal of such books as the Bible, Shakespeare, and Byron from library shelves.

"Under the present law it is enough to convict if language in the book is impure, which is a weak word," Attorney Burnham argued. "Under the present law a person may even be guilty if the language 'tends to corrupt the morals of youth.' On a sober, controversial subject the complainant in such a case may be just as likely to be on the wrong side as the defendant. It is a drag-net statute."

Asks for

Henry Springfield three me ed legis question law is g as it is ci "I hope in the ill favor the as a s d of young would no bars. Th after a tv lution for out a dis Mr. We there novi the word tory. Wh size is the for moral: book be co passages a that a boi is the rul States. O sage. Mor that Hawt Mitterly ass it is consi dren. In i think the b be consider said, ought that pract and he wa Ward Socie fore conder Edward / Monthly, re lishers were for a inde the house said, and, n seldom pay. "I am no objectionab but will sex attending th have paid. position in v present stati like the an who, if now wholesale an

Edward / Monthly, re lishers were for a inde the house said, and, n seldom pay. "I am no objectionab but will sex attending th have paid. position in v present stati like the an who, if now wholesale an

Edward / Monthly, re lishers were for a inde the house said, and, n seldom pay. "I am no objectionab but will sex attending th have paid. position in v present stati like the an who, if now wholesale an

Edward / Monthly, re lishers were for a inde the house said, and, n seldom pay. "I am no objectionab but will sex attending th have paid. position in v present stati like the an who, if now wholesale an

Weed Glad t

Charles F. president of Boston, said principle of Harvard who On the list f was banned I "I bootlegg myself," said fine and whi ever read am read a book be can Tragedy."

Harold Wil sending the E ton Bookseller tending or try books. The the language should be jud are about 10, year. Most of perhaps a hall be impossible whose hands they pass to read each book. If complaint is made, perhaps by a 'crank,' there is not enough profit in any one book to fight the case and the book is withdrawn."

"Boston has been at the head of the country in the book business," he remarked, "and her influence has extended all over the country. It would be a shame to have that influence minimized."

Mr. Williams read a statement made a year ago by the Watch and Ward Society's president to the effect that it is not the policy of the society to ban books for single passages. The change suggested, he said, was an attempt to carry out more completely and sanely the spirit of the law.

Professor Robert E. Rogers of Massachusetts Institute of Technology, in favor of the bill, defined an immoral book as one which paints vice in such terms as to make it attractive to the reader. It would be foolish, he went on, to place in this category books which deal with important questions of living, questions which are being discussed by people of intelligence everywhere.

On the other hand, Professor Rogers went on, vulgar, sensational, glamorous books are being fed to the public from "corner" lending libraries which "continually harp upon crime and vice"

THE CENSORSHIP IN BOSTON

their plays, at risk of being punished after conviction before a jury.

In the latter way, if a crime is committed, it can be severely dealt with. The present method is more than a power to punish crime. It is a power by which, it is true, crime may be headed off, but on the other hand the threat of revocation of a theatre license may deprive the public of a play which would be approved by a jury merely because this board of officials—or the most influential member thereof—happens to be opposed to its subject matter. The problem still remains, whether any human being is good enough to be a censor.

It may be asked in what respect control of plays by jury verdicts is better than control by censors, since in either case the decision is made by human beings. Unless we are to have absolutely unrestricted drama, we can not eliminate the risk of human caprice either before or after production. The answer is, that the censor is in danger of becoming professionalized and out of touch with public standards of tolerance, while the jury comes to the issue of decency fresh from ordinary occupations, represents the views of twelve persons instead of one or three, and on the whole brings in the opinion of the mass of playgoers upon the question of what they want to see and hear. The difficulty that the jury ordinarily sits after the harm is done and punishes the producer without warning, might be met, if really important, by the New York device of calling a jury when the play is first put on, as was done in Quincy.

No solution of the problems of indecent dramas, books, and periodicals is entirely satisfactory. Still, the most outrageous can easily be stamped out by prosecution, and I sometimes wonder if we are not overanxious to get rid of the others by operation of the law. The situation may prove its own best corrective. Nothing nauseates so quickly as a surfeit of licentiousness. Audacious ballets once shocked some and allured others, but of late years they have reduced the public to the state of mind of the London bus driver who ejaculated to the coyly descending damsel, "Step lively, Madam, legs ain't no treat to me."

It should be noted that no censorship of motion pictures exists in Massachusetts. A proposal to establish a state censor-

THE WATCH AND WARD

To the Editor of The Herald:
The opposition of the Watch and Ward Society to the book bill reported to the Legislature by the committee on legal affairs, so far as that opposition is disclosed by the society's circular, reported in your issue of this date, turns upon the argument of innovation. This is a strange argument coming from that society because two years ago, before the Legislature of 1928, the society advocated a book bill then known as the booksellers' bill, which represented an extreme innovation in this same matter, very different from the very moderate change which is proposed by the advocates of the bill reported by the committee on legal affairs. The booksellers' bill would have established an entirely new proceeding in equity relating to books, or at least without analogy in the law since the abolition of the court of star chamber in 1611. The argument based on innovation is one which has been made many times in the course of the recent discussion between speakers representing the Watch and Ward Society and speakers representing the Massachusetts committee for the revision of the laws relating to obscene literature. The alleged fact that the law which is proposed is not contained in any other state is untrue, in the first place, unless it refers to the mere words of the statute. By judicial construction in New York, the law is interpreted in accordance with the proposed legislation, and decisions to the same effect exist in other jurisdictions, though, of course, there are decisions to the contrary. The argument that no other state has adopted such legislation is without significance, because when the occasion for new legislation arises, as it does in this case, it is most appropriate that Massachusetts, where the matter has taken its most acute form, and more experience has accumulated than anywhere else, should take the lead in legislation. If it does so by the adoption of the present proposal, it will occupy an honorable place at the head of a movement, and will be limited instead of being an object of derision at the rear of the procession. The necessary change cannot be made by the imitation of existing laws, because those laws, in the United States at least, are all practically of two types, both of which have been fully discussed in dealing with the present proposal. These laws differ very little between themselves, except in the variation of the epithets used to indicate the kind of books which are to be condemned. The present proposal is a real attempt to introduce the product of some thought into legislation, and to secure thereby the necessary discrimination between good books and bad books.
HENRY L. BURNHAM.
Boston, March 8.

THE CENSORSHIP IN BOSTON

ship was voted down overwhelmingly at the polls in 1924. But even in the absence of a state censorship, no case has arisen of serious interference by Boston authorities with any film—at least none which has attracted public attention. Apparently the industry's own censorship has been strict enough to satisfy even Boston.

THE CONTROL OF MEETINGS IN LICENSED HALLS

Every public hall in Boston is licensed annually by the Mayor. That is a regulation common to most cities. Licenses may be revoked by him at any time under authority of a state law for unsatisfactory structural conditions and for that reason alone. His action is subject to approval by a large board of men familiar with building construction.

The Mayor has no authority to withhold or revoke a license because of his objection to any use to which a hall may be put. Criminal proceedings alone furnish the only legal control over the misuse of a public hall.

Yet in practice the Mayor controls meetings in public halls by a threat to revoke the licenses for "unsatisfactory structural conditions" if any meeting he opposes is held. No hall-owner dares disobey such a threat. It is only too easy in the maze of building regulations to find some structural defect.

Probably no hall-owners have ever had their licenses revoked for holding a meeting forbidden by the Mayor, because none has openly defied him and only a few took a chance by not consulting the Mayor's office in advance on a doubtful meeting. That means in effect closing all public meeting places in Boston to any favorable discussion of birth control—the chief topic at which the restriction is now aimed. Nor has the Ku Klux Klan been able to hold meetings either in public or on private property behind closed doors. The Mayor's threat alone was sufficient during the Curley regime to ban all such meetings. No Klan cases have arisen under Mayor Nichols.

When a hall-owner is doubtful of the Mayor's attitude, he calls up the License Commissioner's office. The business is not done in writing. The License Commissioner either expresses

Librarians Ask Relief in Book Banning

More Sane Statute Is Argued to Curb "Obscene" Literature

Spirit of Law Good

Watch and Ward Society Fears Changes Suggested Would Mean Harm

By Forrest P. Hull

During the last two years sixty-five books of country-wide circulation were withdrawn from the shelves of Boston booksellers because of action or suggestion by the public authorities. Publishers, booksellers, librarians and representatives of other interests immediately raised a cry that Boston had become the "laughing-stock of the world." Today that sentiment was reiterated before the legislative Committee on Legal Affairs when a petition by the Massachusetts Library Club, Inc., seeking a change in the law relative to obscene literature, was heard.

One of the largest hearing rooms in the State House was filled with friends of the measure who came from all sections of the State, and, as many persons desired to speak, the hearing was continued during the afternoon. The only person who responded to the call for the opposition was Rev. Raymond Calkins, D. D., of Cambridge, president of the Massachusetts Watch and Ward Society, and he admitted that the subject was considered as an opponent. What he desired to do was to warn the committee that the suggested changes in the law might lead to trouble of serious nature.

Changes Suggested

The proposed legislation would eliminate from the present law the word "book" and would add to the law another section saying in part that, "Whoever imports, prints, publishes, sells or distributes a book, knowing it to contain language which, when considered in connection with its entire context and theme, is indecent or impure" shall be punished by imprisonment for two years or by a fine of not more than $1000 or both.

Attorney Henry L. Burnham of Boston, introduced by Galen W. Hill of Quincy, president of the Library Club, handled the case for the proponents, characterizing the present law as a "legal curiosity" in that it allowed a finding of guilty on the language used in any one part of a book without considering the complete text.

There was much questioning of Attorney Burnham by members of the committee, during which a Supreme Court decision on the present law was read and the attorney refused to accept the opinion of the questioner that the court had approved the law. Mr. Burnham agreed with Representative M. E. S. Cannon, of Illinois, who was chairman of the committee, that "writers who wave a flag or utter a godly phrase at the conclusion of a book to 'get by' should be condemned."

Several of the speakers reiterated the statements of last year that the present law would, if literally enforced, cause the removal of such books as the Bible, Shakspeare, and Byron from library shelves.

"Under the present law it is enough to convict if language in the book is impure, which is a weak word," Attorney Burnham argued. "Under the present law a person may even be guilty if the language 'tends to corrupt the morals of youth.' On a sober, controversial subject the complainant in such a case may be just as likely to be on the wrong side as the defendant. It is a dragnet statute."

Asks for

Henry three m ed legis
question
law is l
"I hot
in the l favor th
are as d
of young
the w bars. Th after a t
lution fo
out a di
Mr. W
the next the word
tory. W size is th
book be c
for mora that a be
is the ru States. C sage. Mo that Haw
as a per is it cons
dren. In think the
be consid
aid, ou
the fac
and the ward Soc
fore conde
Edward
rlished w
for an ind
the house
said, and,
seldom pay
at objec tionab
but will s attending
t have pa
position in the statu
like, I an who, if no
wholesale a

Weed Glad

Charles F. president of Boston, said principle of Harvard wh. On the list 1 was banned. "I bootleg, myself," said fine and wh ever read a book b can Tragedy. Harold W. sending the 1 ton Bookseller: fending or tr books. The the language should be jud are about 10, year. Most of perhaps a hal be impossible.

whose hands they pass to read each book. If complaint is made, perhaps by a 'crank,' there is not enough profit in any one book to fight the case and the book is withdrawn."

"Boston has been at the head of the country in the book business," he remarked, "and her influence has extended all over the country. It would be a

Mr. Williams read a statement made a year ago by the Watch and Ward Society's president to the effect that it is not the policy of the society to ban books for single passages. The change suggested, he said, was an attempt to carry out more completely and sanely the spirit of the society's constitution.

Professor Robert E. Rogers of Massachusetts Institute of Technology, in favor of the bill, defined an immoral book as one which paints vice in such terms as to make it attractive to the reader. It would be foolish, he went on, to place in this category books which deal with important questions of living, questions which are being discussed by people of intelligence everywhere.

On the other hand, Professor Rogers went on, vulgar, sensational, glamorous books are being fed to the public from "corner" lending libraries which "continually harp upon crime and vice" and what he knows to be the Mayor's view, or he inquires of the Mayor—and his decision is conveyed to the obliging hall-owner. The License Commissioner, John J. Casey, who has been in office for many years under many mayors, is referred to by hall-owners as their "czar," though he is said to be a most agreeable fellow. His personal views doubtless carry weight with the mayors, but he has only advisory powers.

THE CENSORSHIP IN BOSTON

MAYOR CURLEY ON FREE SPEECH

Occasionally the Mayor makes public announcement of his position, and in plain language for obvious political effect. Mayor James M. Curley expressed himself thus on birth control meetings, in a letter in March, 1925, to Mr. John S. Codman, Boston representative of the American Civil Liberties Union:

"You can have no difficulty in arriving at a very clear knowledge of my opinions and my attitude towards this pernicious doctrine, the campaign for its exploitation, and the campaigners; and there is not the slightest chance that I will change my views, or cease to exercise my legitimate power and authority to arrest the progress of this infamous cult.

"You and your allies call this crime against civilization and the race, 'Birth Control,' a pleasant sounding euphemism for 'Birth Prevention,' which is merely the crime banned in all lands among all peoples, by all the codes, secular and sacred, under the ugly name of 'Abortion'; and which is abhorrent to sane, normal, decent humanity no matter how sweetly disguised in terminology and no matter how skillfully hidden in the Trojan Horse you term freedom of speech and assembly.

"When you point out to me the instance of a person who gave an address in Franklin Union Hall entitled 'The Case Against Birth Control, an Answer to Margaret Sanger' and assume by implication that my tolerance and restraint open the door to general advocacy of this crime, you misunderstand me as signally as you demonstrate your own lack of the faculties of reason and logic. You might just as well seek to convince me that the Christian churches which warn their congregations

MAYOR NICHOLS ON FREE SPEECH

When Mayor Curley was succeeded by Mayor Nichols, it was expected that there would be a change in policy. Instead of that, early in Mayor Nichols' administration, the Boston authori-

THE WATCH AND WARD

To the Editor of The Herald:

The opposition of the Watch and Ward Society to the book bill reported to the Legislature by the committee on legal affairs is so far as that opposition is disclosed by the society's circular, repeated in your issue of this date, turns upon its issue of innovation. This is a strange argument, inasmuch as the society, because two years ago, before the Legislature of 1926, the society advocated the adoption of such a bill as the bookellers' bill, which represented an extreme innovation in this same matter very different from the very moderate change which is proposed by the advocates of the bill reported to the committee on legal affairs. The bookellers' bill would have established an entirely new standard in equity relating to books, or at least would have changed the law since the abolition of the court of star chamber in 1641. The argument that the bookellers' bill was a bad one has been made many times since the day of the recent discussion between speakers representing the Watch and Ward Society and speakers representing the Association of American Publishers, but it has been answered successfully. The whole is so obvious that the which is proposed is not a "bad" one. The State is unwise, in the first place, unless it refers to the mere words of the bill, to find fault with it. In New York, the law is interpreted in accordance with the proposed legislation, and decisions to the same effect come from other jurisdictions, though, of course, there is no binding authority. The argument that no other state has adopted such legislation is an occasion for legal discussion, but it does in this case, it is most appropriate that Massachusetts, where the law is taken in its most acute form, and more experienced in the matter than anywhere else, should take the lead in legislation. If it does so by the adoption of the present proposal, it will occupy an honorable position in the movement, and will be limited instead of being an object of derision at the hands of the procession. The necessary change cannot be made without modification of existing laws, because those laws, in the United States at least, both of which have been mentioned in dealing with the present proposal. Those laws differ very little because of the fact that the variation of the epithets which are used in the kind of books which are to be condemned. The present proposal is a real one thought into legislation, and to secure thereby the necessary discrimination between good books and bad books.

HEAVY L. BURNHAM,
Boston, March 8.

Librarians Ask Relief in Book Banning

More Sane Statute Is Argued
to Curb "Obscene"
Literature

Spirit of Law Good

Watch and Ward Society Fears
Changes Suggested Would
Mean Harm

By Forrest P. Hull

During the last two years sixty-five books of country-wide circulation were withdrawn from the shelves of Boston booksellers because of action or suggestion by the public authorities. Publishers, booksellers, librarians and representatives of other interests immediately raised a cry that Boston had become the "laughing-stock of the world." Today that sentiment was reiterated before the legislative Committee on Legal Affairs when a petition by the Massachusetts Library Club, Inc., seeking a change in the law relative to obscene literature, was heard.

One of the largest hearing rooms in the State House was filled with friends of the measure who came from all sections of the State, and, as many persons desired to speak, the hearing was continued during the afternoon. The only person who responded to the call for the opposition was Rev. Raymond Calkins, D. D., of Cambridge, president of the New England Watch and Ward Society, and he admitted that he should not be considered as an opponent. What he desired to do was to warn the committee that the suggested changes in the law might lead to trouble of serious nature.

Changes Suggested

The proposed legislation would eliminate from the present law the word "book" and would add to the law another section saying in part that, "Whoever imports, prints, publishes, sells or distributes a book, knowing it to contain language which, when considered in connection with its entire context and theme, is indecent or impure" shall be punished by imprisonment for two years or by a fine of not more than $1000 or both.

Attorney Henry L. Burnham of Boston, introduced by Galen W. Hill of Quincy, president of the Library Club, handled the case for the proponents, characterizing the present law as a "legal curiosity" in that it allowed a finding of guilty on the language used in any one part of a book without considering the complete text.

There was much questioning of Attorney Burnham by members of the committee, during which a Supreme Court decision on the present law was read and the attorney refused to accept the opinion of the questioner that the court had approved the law. Mr. Burnham agreed with Representative M. E. S. Clemons of Wakefield, House chairman of the committee, that "writers who wave a flag or utter a godly phrase at the conclusion of a book to 'get by' should be condemned."

Several of the speakers reiterated the statements of last year that the present law would, if literally enforced, cause the removal of such books as the Bible, Shakespeare, and Byron from library shelves.

"Under the present law it is enough to convict if language in the book is impure, which is a weak word," Attorney Burnham argued. "Under the present law a person may even be guilty if the language tends to corrupt the morals of youth." On a sober, controversial subject the complainant in such a case may be just as likely to be on the wrong side as the defendant. It is a dragnet statute."

Asks if Hent
Spring
three ed led ous to law is as it is
"I he
in the favor it are as of your would i bars. I after a lution f
out a d
Mr. v
there ne
the wor
tory. W size is ti
for more book be passages that a b is in the States. sage. M that Hav bitterly
it is con
dren. In think the
be consid
said, oug
that prac
and he w
Ward Soc
fore cond
Edward
Monthly, i shers we
for an ind
the house
said, and
seldom pay
"I am n
objectionat
but will se attending t
have paid.
position in present sta
like the ai
who, if no
wholesale a

Weed Glad

Charles I.
president of Boston, said
principle of Harvard wh
On the list
was banned
"I bootleg myself," said
fine and wh
ever read at read a book b can Tragedy.
Harold Wi
senting the l ton Bookselle
fending or tr
books. The
the language
should be jud
are about 10
year. Most o perhaps a hal
be impossi
whose hands
they pass to
read each book. If complant is made, perhaps by a 'crank,' there is not enough profit in any one book to fight the case and the book is withdrawn."

"Boston has been at the head of the country in the book business," he remarked, "and her influence has extended all over the country. It would be a shame to have that influence minimized."

Mr. Williams read a statement made a year ago by the Watch and Ward Society's president to the effect that it is not the policy of the society to ban books for single passages. The change suggested, he said, was an attempt to carry out more completely and sanely the spirit of the law.

Professor Robert E. Rogers of Massachusetts Institute of Technology, in favor of the bill, defined an immoral book as one which paints vice in such terms as to make it attractive to the reader. It would be foolish, he went on, to place in this category books which deal with important questions of living, questions which are being discussed by people of intelligence everywhere.

On the other hand, Professor Rogers went on, vulgar, sensational, glamorous books are being fed to the public from "corner" lending libraries which "continually harp upon crime and vice" and ties prohibited public meetings to aid in the defense of Anthony Bimba, who had been prosecuted for "blasphemy and sedition" for a speech made in Brockton. Thereupon a committee of Boston citizens, headed by Moorfield Storey, former Governor Eugene N. Foss, James P. Munroe, George R. Nutter, Richard W. Hale, Rev. Paul Revere Frothingham, the Rev. Samuel McCord Crothers, George W. Coleman and others, addressed a protest to Mayor Nichols, in which they said:

THE CENSORSHIP IN BOSTON

"Within the last few years a practice has grown up among city officials of preventing proposed public meetings in Boston which, because of the supposed purpose or their sponsors, have not met with official approval. Prevention has been accomplished, either by threats to revoke the license of any hall-owner harboring such meetings, or by closing the halls in which the meetings were to be held on the pretext that fire, health or building regulations affecting the premises had not been complied with.

"We had assumed that when you became Mayor this arbitrary interference with free speech and free assembly would cease. We have, therefore, been surprised and disturbed that, during your recent absence in New York City, other cases of interference with public meetings by city officials have occurred....

"Unlawful actions or utterances at meetings should of course receive the attention of the police, but to assume in advance that unlawful actions or utterances are intended at a meeting or that the attempt to hold a meeting is of itself unlawful, merely because of the supposed views of its sponsors, is a gross violation of civil rights and a direct attack upon one of our most cherished institutions. To prevent meetings by such methods as threatening hall-owners, or by deliberately hunting for technical violations of the building code, etc. as a pretext for closing a hall, is neither fair nor straightforward and does great injury to the reputation of the city."

Two months later Mayor Nichols replied:

"Let me say at once that I am as deeply interested as anybody can be in the subject of free speech and public assemblage in the City of Boston, but I do not believe and cannot think that any who signed the letter of April 13 believes that the slightest

THE WATCH AND WARD

To the Editor of The Herald:
The opposition of the Watch and Ward Society to the book bill reported to the Legislature by the committee on legal affairs, so far as that opposition is disclosed by the society's circular, reported in your issue of this date, turns upon the argument of innovation. This is a strange argument coming from that society, because two years ago, before the Legislature of 1928, the society advocated a book bill then known as the booksellers' bill, which represented an extreme innovation in this same matter, very different from the very moderate change which is proposed by the advocates of the bill reported by the committee on legal affairs. The booksellers' bill would have established an entirely new proceeding in equity relating to books, or at least without analogy in the law since the abolition of the court of star chamber in 1641. The argument based on innovation is one which has been made many times in the course of the recent discussion between speakers representing the Watch and Ward Society and speakers representing the Massachusetts department for the revision of laws here and at the same time, been answered successfully. The alleged fact that the law which is proposed is not contained in any other State is unique in the first place, unless it refers to the mere words of the statute. By judicial construction in New York, the law is interpreted in accordance with the proposed legislation, and decisions to the same effect exist in other jurisdictions, though, of course, there are decisions to the contrary. The argument that no other State has adopted such legislation is without significance, because when the occasion for new legislation arises, as it does in this case, it is most appropriate that Massachusetts, where the matter has taken its most acute form, and more experience has accumulated than anywhere else, should take the lead in legislation. If it does so by the adoption of the present proposal, it will occupy an honorable place at the head of a movement, and will be initiated instead of being an object of derision at the rear of the procession. The necessary change cannot be made by the abolition of existing laws, because those laws, in the United States at least, are all practically of two types, both of which have been fully discussed in dealing with the present proposal. Those laws differ very little between themselves, except in the variation of the epithets used to indicate the kind of books which are to be condemned. The present proposal is a real attempt to introduce the product of some thought into legislation, and to secure thereby the necessary discrimination between good books and bad books.
HENRY L. BURNHAM.
Boston, March 8.

THE CENSORSHIP IN BOSTON

encouragement should be given to persons who, under cover of free speech and public assemblage, indulge in artful language directed against our free institutions and in seditious talks advocating the overthrow of our government....

"Since the war we have had a continuation of seditious propaganda, financed in part from foreign sources, and actively or passively countenanced by people who may be well intentioned but do not realize what the propaganda really means. We have, moreover, an epidemic of indecency in various publications and on the stage which constitutes a most perplexing problem, and one which cannot be ignored. Here, too, as in the case of public meetings, it is not always possible for the Mayor of Boston to go on the theory that he has no responsibility until something indecent or seditious has been said or done. It is difficult to draw the line and mistakes are bound to occur; but the line must be drawn somewhere, and I shall endeavor to the best of my ability to draw it as long as I am Mayor of Boston...."

In accordance with these sentiments, Mayor Nichols has continued the ban on birth control meetings, at least those favorable to a repeal of the Massachusetts law which forbids the dissemination of birth control information. So far as is known, the Ku Klux Klan has not attempted to hold a meeting under Mayor Nichols' administration.

THE RECORD OF MEETINGS BANNED

Birth control is the continuing chief issue around which the hall censorship revolves. Meetings opposing it are freely held without interference, for the reasons given by Mayor Curley. The ban has been directed particularly to Mrs. Margaret Sanger, who has been unable to speak at any public meeting in Boston since 1920. Meetings arranged for her in 1923, 1924 and 1925 were prohibited by Mayor Curley, and in 1929 by Mayor Nichols. The Community Church finally put her on their Sunday morning program in Symphony Hall in May, 1929. The authorities claimed they had no jurisdiction over religious meetings, and did not interfere. Her only other Boston appearances were at a Ford Hall burlesque in the spring of 1929 to which she came with a gag

Librarians Ask Relief in Book Banning

More Sane Statute Is Argued
to Curb "Obscene"
Literature

Spirit of Law Good

Watch and Ward Society Fears
Changes Suggested Would
Mean Harm

By Forrest P. Hull

During the last two years sixty-five books of country-wide circulation were withdrawn from the shelves of Boston booksellers because of action or suggestion by the public authorities. Publishers, booksellers, librarians and representatives of other interests immediately raised a cry that Boston had become the "laughing-stock of the world." Today that sentiment was reiterated before the legislative Committee on Legal Affairs when a petition by the Massachusetts Library Club, Inc., seeking a change in the law relative to obscene literature, was heard.

One of the largest hearing rooms in the State House was filled with friends of the measure who came from all sections of the State, and, as many persons desired to speak, the hearing was continued during the afternoon. The only person who responded to the call for the opposition was Rev. Raymond Calkins, D. D., of Cambridge, president of the New England Watch and Ward Society, and he admitted that he should not be considered as an opponent. What he desired to do was to warn the committee that the suggested changes in the law might lead to trouble of serious nature.

Changes Suggested

The proposed legislation would eliminate from the present law the word "book" and would add to the law another section saying in part that, "Whoever imports, prints, publishes, sells or distributes a book, knowing it to contain language which, when considered in connection with its entire context and theme, is indecent or impure" shall be punished by imprisonment for two years or by a fine of not more than $1000 or both.

Attorney Henry L. Burnham of Boston, introduced by Galen W. Hill of Quincy, president of the Library Club, handled the case for the proponents, characterizing the present law as a "legal curiosity" in that it allowed a finding of guilty on the language used in any one part of a book without considering the complete text.

There was much questioning of Attorney Burnham by members of the committee, during which a Supreme Court decision on the present law was read and the attorney refused to accept the opinion of the questioner that the court had approved the law. Mr. Burnham agreed with Representative M. E. S. Clemons of Wakefield, House chairman of the committee, that "writers who wave a flag or utter a godly phrase at the conclusion of a book to get by" should be condemned.

Several of the speakers reiterated the statements of last year that the present law would, if literally enforced, cause the removal of such books as the Bible, Shakespeare, and Byron from library shelves.

Asks for

Henry

Springfield

three met

ed legis lation law

is g as it is c ut hoy

in the II

favor the

are as d

of young

would ne

bars. Ti

after a ti

lution for out a dis

Mr. W

there new

the word

tory. W

size is th

for moral book he c

passages

that a bo

is the ru

States. C

sage. Mo

that Haw

bitterly as it is cons

dren. In

think the

he conside

said, ough

that pract

and he wa

Ward Seel

for conde

Edward

Monthly, r

lishers wer

for an ind

the house

said, and

seldom pay

"I am ne

objectionab

but will sa

attending G

have paid.

position in

present sta

like the ar

who, if no

wholesale at

Weed Glad

Charles E

president of

Boston, said

principle of

Harvard wh

On the list

was banned

"I bootleg

myself," sai

fine and wh

ever read a

read a book t

can Tragedy

Harold W.

senting the

ton Booksell

fending or ti

books. The

the languag

should be ju

are about 10

year. Most

perhaps a ha

be impossible for everyone through

whose hands

they pass to

read each

book. If compl

ant is made,

perhaps by

a "crank,"

there is not enough profit

in any one book to fight

the case and the book is withdrawn."

"Boston has been at the head of the country in the book business,"

he remarked,

"and her influence

has extended

all over the country. It would be a shame to have that influence

minimized."

Mr. Williams

read a statement

made a year ago by the Watch and

Ward Society's

president to the effect that it is not the policy of the society to ban

books for single passages.

The change

suggested, he said, was an attempt to carry out

more completely

and sanely

the spirit of the law.

Professor Robert

E. Rogers of Massachusetts

Institute of Technology, in favor of the bill,

defined an immoral book

as one which paints vice

in such terms

as

Under the present law it is enough to convict if language in the book is impure, which is a weak word," Attorney Burnham argued. "Under the present law a person may even be guilty if the language 'tends to corrupt the morals of youth.' On a sober, controversial subject, the complaint in such a case may be just as likely to be on the wrong side as the defendant. It is a dragnet statute."

On the other hand, Professor Rogers went on, vulgar, sensational, glamorous books are being fed to the public from "corner" lending libraries which "continually harp upon crime and vice"

THE CENSORSHIP IN BOSTON

on her mouth, and at a birth control committee dinner this autumn at the Hotel Statler.

The Klan attempted to hold private meetings in 1923 and 1924. One was scheduled for a licensed hall and the other for a hotel room. In both cases representatives of the Mayor's office found structural defects with the property which prevented the meetings from being held. The Mayor showed no anxiety about building conditions in halls where meetings on his own side were held, although it would seem much more important to protect one's friends from fire and collapsing floors rather than one's enemies.

Interference with other than birth control or Klan meetings has been only occasional. One hall-owner said he would not think it necessary to inquire of the Mayor's office on any other issue, "except possibly a Sacco-Vanzetti meeting." He was sure "Tom Hefflin could not speak in Boston" and he figured it would be useless to inquire. The only other meetings that have been prohibited in recent years were meetings for raising defense funds for Anthony Bimba. Notable among those was a mass meeting scheduled for the Tom Paine Memorial Hall,—of all places,—with Scott Nearing as speaker, on the recognition of Russia. The meeting was broken up for fear it would turn into a defense of Bimba, and Nearing was arrested when he attempted to speak on the street.

At the time of the execution of Sacco and Vanzetti in 1927, it was impossible for those who wished to protest the execution to secure any licensed hall in Boston, save one, which was found after a long search. Even a year later on the first anniversary of their execution, it was possible to get only this one hall to take the risk of running foul of the Mayor's office. On both occasions the police were present. Following the second meeting one of the speakers, Prof. Horace M. Kallen of New York, was charged with blasphemy, but the warrant was later withdrawn.

Even two years after the execution the committee arranging a memorial meeting was unable to secure any hall in Boston seating over a few hundred persons. They therefore transferred their meeting to New York City, whither the Boston speakers journeyed. The Old South Meeting House, historic forum of

THE BOSTON HERALD

THE BOSTON HERALD

THE BOSTON HERALD.

MONDAY, MARCH 10, 1930

THE WATCH AND WARD

To the Editor of The Herald:

The opposition of the Watch and Ward Society to the book bill reported to the Legislature by the committee on legal affairs, so far as that opposition is disclosed by the society's circular, reported in your issue of this date, turns upon the argument of innovation. This is a strange argument coming from that society, because two years ago, before the Legislature of 1928, the society advocated a book bill then known as the booksellers' bill, which represented an extreme innovation in this same matter, very different from the very moderate change which is proposed by the advocates of the bill reported by the committee on legal affairs. The booksellers' bill would have established an entirely new proceeding in equity relating to books, or at least without analogy in the law since the abolition of the court of star chamber in 1641. The argument based on innovation is one which has been made many times in the course of the recent discussion between speakers representing the Watch and Ward Society and speakers representing the Massachusetts committee for the revision of the laws of the state. The alleged fact that the law which is proposed is not contained in any other state is untrue, in the first place, unless it refers to the mere words of the statute. By judicial construction in New York, the law is interpreted in accordance with the proposed legislation, and decisions to the same effect exist in other jurisdictions, though, of course, there are decisions to the contrary. The argument that no other state has adopted such legislation is without significance, because when the occasion for new legislation arises, as it does in this case, it is most appropriate that Massachusetts, where the matter has taken its most acute form, and more experience has accumulated than anywhere else, should take the lead in legislation. If it does so by the adoption of the present proposal, it will occupy an honorable place at the head of a movement, and will be imitated instead of being an object of derision at the rear of the procession. The necessary change cannot be made by the limitation of existing laws, because those laws, in the United States at least, are all practically of two types, both of which have been fully discussed in dealing with the present proposal. Those laws differ very little between themselves, except in the variation of the epithets used to indicate the kind of books which are to be condemned. The present proposal is a real attempt to introduce the product of some thought into legislation, and to secure thereby the necessary discrimination between good books and bad books.

HENRY L. BURNHAM.
Boston, March 8.

THE CENSORSHIP IN BOSTON

free speech in Boston, refused to permit a Sacco-Vanzetti memorial meeting within its walls, although agreeing to its use by the same committee to protest against other halls closing their doors to them!

If a speaker in a Boston public hall utters indecencies, or advocates crimes such as the overthrow of the government by violence, he can be punished after conviction by a jury. If the speeches break no law, nobody should be punished. Each man should be responsible to the limit of the law for his own crime. The prohibition of meetings in advance is not a power to punish crime. It is a power which, under the guise of heading off crime, may suppress any discussion to which the Mayor happens to be opposed, even though no jury would ever convict for it. It is just as much a censorship of oral discussion as his power to suppress a newspaper for distasteful editorials would create a censorship of written discussion.

RESTRICTIONS ON BOSTON COMMON

Even if the Mayor and his associates abandoned their assertion of power over public halls, there are many speakers who have not the funds to hire a building, and yet have views which they ardently desire to express, and which perhaps it is for the advantage of citizens to be able to hear. For such men there exists in the center of Boston an open forum, an open-air forum, the Common. On Sunday afternoons particularly, it has been the custom for years to hold meetings there. A half dozen small gatherings are usually held on fair Sundays, attended by an average total of a thousand people. The organizations using the Common more or less regularly are either religious or radical—notably the Socialist and Communist parties.

But here again municipal censorship exists, this time with the express sanction of the law. An ordinance provides: "No person shall, in any of the public grounds, make a public address... except in accordance with a permit from the mayor." The validity of this ordinance, under the free speech and personal liberty clauses in the state and federal Constitutions, has been sustained by the supreme courts of the Commonwealth and the

Librarians Ask Relief in Book Banning

More Sane Statute Is Argued
to Curb "Obscene"
Literature

Spirit of Law Good

Watch and Ward Society Fears
Changes Suggested Would
Mean Harm

By Forrest P. Hill

During the last two years sixty-five books of country-wide circulation were withdrawn from the shelves of Boston booksellers because of action or suggestion by the public authorities. Publishers, booksellers, librarians and representatives of other interests immediately raised a cry that Boston had become the "laughing-stock of the world." Today that sentiment was reiterated before the legislative Committee on Legal Affairs when a petition by the Massachusetts Library Club, Inc., seeking a change in the law relative to obscene literature, was heard.

One of the largest hearing rooms in the State House was filled with friends of the measure who came from all sections of the State, and, as many persons desired to speak, the hearing was continued during the afternoon. The only person who responded to the call for the opposition was Rev. Raymond Calkins, D. D., of Cambridge, president of the New England Watch and Ward Society, and he admitted that he should not be considered as an opponent. What he desired to do was to warn the committee that the suggested changes in the law might lead to trouble of serious nature.

Changes Suggested

The proposed legislation would eliminate from the present law the word "book" and would add to the law another section saying in part that, "Whoever imports, prints, publishes, sells or distributes a book, knowing it to contain language which, when considered in connection with its entire context and theme, is indecent or impure" shall be punished by imprisonment for two years or by a fine of not more than $1000 or both.

Attorney Henry L. Burnham of Boston, introduced by Galen W. Hill of Quincy, president of the Library Club, handled the case for the proponents, characterizing the present law as a "legal curiosity" in that it allowed a finding of guilty on the language used in any one part of a book without considering the complete text.

There was much questioning of Attorney Burnham by members of the committee, during which a Supreme Court decision on the present law was read and the attorney refused to accept the opinion of the questioner that the court had approved the law. Mr. Burnham agreed with Representative M. E. S. Clemons of Wakefield, House chairman of the committee, that "writers who wave a flag or utter a glib phrase at the conclusion of a book to 'get by' should be condemned."

Several of the speakers reiterated the statements of last year that the present law would, if literally enforced, cause the removal of such books as the Bible, Shakespeare, and Byron from library shelves.

"Under the present law it is enough to convict if language in the book is impure, which is a weak word," Attorney Burnham argued. "Under the present law a person may even be guilty if the language tends to corrupt the morals of youth." On a sober, controversial subject the complaint in such a case may be just as likely to be on the wrong side as the defendant. It is a dragnet statute."

Asks for

Henry

Springfield

three in ed legit

question

law is a

as it is a

"I hope

In the l

favor th

are as c

of young

would n

bars. T

after a t

lution fo

out a di

Mr. W

there nee

the wor

tory. W

size is th

for mora

book be c

passages

that a be

is the ru

States.

sage. Mo

that Haw

bitingly as

It is cons

dered. In think the l

be consid

said, ough

that prac

and he w

Ward Soc

fore conde

Edward

Monthly, r

lishers wer

for an ind

the house

said, and,

seldom pay

"I am n

objectionab

but will sa

attending t

have paid.

position in

present sta

like the as

who, if no

wholesale a

Edward

Monthly, r

lishers wer

for an ind

the house

said, and,

seldom pay

"I am n

objectionab

but will sa

attending t

have paid.

position in

present sta

like the as

who, if no

wholesale a

Edward

Monthly, r

lishers wer

for an ind

the house

said, and,

seldom pay

"I am n

objectionab

but will sa

attending t

have paid.

position in

present sta

like the as

to make it attractive to the reader. It would be foolish, he went on, to place in this category books which deal with important questions of living, questions which are being discussed by people of intelligence everywhere.

On the other hand, Professor Rogers went on, vulgar, sensational, glamorous books are being fed to the public from "corner" lending libraries which "continually harp upon crime and vice."

United States. Without such a permit the speaker can be arrested for a crime, and the permit can be refused in the uncontrolled discretion of the Mayor; or he may issue a conditional permit which is revocable if the condition be violated.

This power has existed for many years, and I assume that for the most part permits have been issued as a matter of course. Before the war the police were very tolerant. The Boston authorities pursued the same wise policy of avoiding violence by letting the agitators blow off steam in the open air that was followed by Arthur Woods when he became Police Commissioner of New York City in the unemployment of 1914, after a series of suppressed outdoor anarchistic meetings had produced a very dangerous tension. Instead, he ordered that meetings in Union Square and other parks should be left alone unless an actual disturbance took place, but that plenty of police should be kept in readiness to suppress a disturbance if it occurred. Consequently, the atmosphere immediately cleared up.

THE SACCO-VANZETTI MEETINGS

An entirely different policy was adopted in August, 1927, when Boston Common was made unavailable to speakers who wished to protest against the execution of Sacco and Vanzetti. On the first Sunday after the Governor had refused to alter the death sentences (August 7), when speakers with permits assailed the courts and the state's witnesses, the Superintendent of Police ordered the meeting to disperse. There was no general disorder, but the crowd fell back slowly; altercations followed, and several arrests were made. Permits to Socialists and Communists were thereupon revoked on the ground that the courts had been criticized and the Governor abusively denounced. The following Sunday, the announcement of an effort to meet without a permit attracted a crowd of two or three thousand. A score of uniformed police and as many plain-clothesmen were on hand, and after the arrest of the unlicensed speaker, Powers Hapgood, a hundred patrolmen and several mounted police were on the Common. The last Sunday before the execution, the Common was closed to all meetings. The police said they feared addresses might lead to

THE WATCH AND WARD

To the Editor of The Herald

The opposition of the Watch and Ward Society to the book bill reported to the Legislature by the committee on legal affairs, so far as that opposition is disclosed by the society's circular, reported in your issue of this date, turns upon the argument of innovation. This is a strange argument coming from that society, because two years ago, before the Legislature of 1928, the society advocated a book bill then known as the booksellers' bill, which represented an extreme innovation in this same matter,

very different from the very moderate change which is proposed by the advocates of the bill reported by the committee on legal affairs. The booksellers' bill would have established an entirely new proceeding in equity relating to books, or at least without analogy in the law since the abolition of the court of star chamber in 1641. The argument based on innovation is one which has been made many times in the course of the recent discussion between speakers representing the Watch and Ward

Society and speakers representing the Massachusetts committee for the revision of the law. It is a weak argument, and has been successfully. The allleged fact that the law which is proposed is not contained in any other law is untrue, in the first place, unless it refers to the mere words of the statute. By judicial construction in

New York, the law is interpreted in accordance with the proposed legislation, and decisions to the same effect exist in other jurisdictions, though, of course, there are decisions to the contrary. The argument that no other state has adopted such legislation is without significance, because when the occasion for new legislation arises, as it does in this case, it is most appropriate that Massachusetts, where the matter has taken its most acute form, and more experience has accumulated than anywhere else, should take the lead in legislation. If it does so by the adoption of the present proposal, it will occupy an honorable place at the head of a movement, and will be imitated instead of being an object of derision at the rear of the procession. The necessary change cannot be made by the imitation of existing laws, because those laws, in the United States at least, are all practically of two types,

both of which have been fully discussed in dealing with the present proposal. Those laws differ very little between themselves, except in the variation of the epithets used to indicate the kind of books which are to be condemned. The present proposal is a real attempt to introduce the product of some thought into legislation, and to secure thereby the necessary discrimination between good books and bad books.

HENRY L. BURNHAM.

Boston, March 8.

arguments and thus to rioting. The New York Times remarked, "As a result of the occurrences on the Common, public tension was heightened."

It seems probable that the crowd came to see the arrests rather than to listen to the speakers, and that if the usual permits had been issued and no interruptions made by the police, the situation could have been easily handled. It is significant that on each Sunday the disturbances appear to have followed and not preceded police interference. Of course, the authorities of Boston had a duty to prevent a riot, and it may be that the state of feeling was such that their action in closing the Common was a justifiable precaution. However, one ground of objection to the speakers deserves attention, that the courts should not be unfavorably discussed. In a democracy no elective and no appointive official should be kept beyond the reach of public opinion.

It may be argued that after Governor Fuller had made his final decision, there was no further value in public discussion of the Sacco-Vanzetti case, so that nothing was lost when speaking on the Common was forbidden. On the contrary, if the case were shown to reveal defects in the judicial system of Massachusetts, steps to remedy these ought to be taken for the common good. The formation of public opinion on changes in criminal procedure could best have been accomplished while all men's minds were focused on the matter, for in ordinary circumstances few people are interested in law reform.

But even more unwarranted than these arrests in 1927 was the action of the police two years later in arresting two speakers on the Common at Sacco-Vanzetti memorial meetings. The police may conceivably have had some justification in 1927 for their fear of disorder at such meetings. No such justification could possibly excuse their conduct in 1929 in arresting Alfred Baker Lewis, secretary of the Socialist Party, because, contrary to arbitrary and unlawful police instructions, he mentioned the names of Sacco and Vanzetti. Lewis had a permit which was revoked during his speech! His arrest followed. A Communist speaker at a similar meeting nearby, also holding a permit, was arrested when he criticised the police. Both men, tried for speaking without a permit, were discharged in court, Judge Carr of

Librarians Ask Relief in Book Banning

More Sane Statute Is Argued
to Curb "Obscene"
Literature

Spirit of Law Good

Watch and Ward Society Fears
Changes Suggested Would
Mean Harm

By Forrest P. Hall

During the last two years sixty-five books of country-wide circulation were withdrawn from the shelves of Boston booksellers because of action or suggestion by the public authorities. Publishers, booksellers, librarians and representatives of other interests immediately raised a cry that Boston had become the "laughing-stock of the world." Today that sentiment was reiterated before the legislative Committee on Legal Affairs when a petition by the Massachusetts Library Club, Inc., seeking a change in the law relative to obscene literature, was heard.

One of the largest hearing rooms in the State House was filled with friends of the measure who came from all sections of the State, and, as many persons desired to speak, the hearing was continued during the afternoon. The only person who responded to the call for the opposition was Rev. Raymond Calkins, D. D., of Cambridge, president of the New England Watch and Ward Society, and he admitted that he should not be considered as an opponent. What he desired to do was to warn the committee that the suggested changes in the law might lead to trouble of serious nature.

Changes Suggested

The proposed legislation would eliminate from the present law the word "book" and would add to the law another section saying in part that, "Whoever imports, prints, publishes, sells or distributes a book, knowing it to contain language which, when considered in connection with its entire context and theme, is indecent or impure" shall be punished by imprisonment for two years or by a fine of not more than $1000 or both.

Attorney Henry L. Burnham of Boston, introduced by Galen W. Hill of Quincy, president of the Library Club, handled the case for the proponents, characterizing the present law as a "legal curiosity" in that it allowed a finding of guilt on the language used in any one part of a book without considering the complete text.

There was much questioning of Attorney Burnham by members of the committee, during which a Supreme Court decision on the present law was read and the attorney refused to accept the opinion of the questioner that the court had approved the law. Mr. Burnham agreed with Representative M. E. S. Clemons of Wakefield, House chairman of the committee, that "writers who wave a flag or utter a godly phrase at the conclusion of a book to 'get by' should be condemned."

Several of the speakers reiterated the statements of last year that the present law would, if literally enforced, cause the removal of such books as the Bible, Shakespeare, and Byron from library shelves.

Asks If

Henry Springs three red led question law is as it is

"I hope in the favor th are as of young would bars. T after a l lution fe out a di

Mr. W there ne the wor tory. W size is tr for men book be c passages that a be is the rt States t sage. Mc that Hav bitterly a it is cons dren. In think the be consid said, oug that prac and he w Ward Soc fore conde

Edward Monthly, i fishers wei for an ind the house said, and, seldom pay "I am n objectionab but will s attending t have paid. position in present sta like the ai who, if no wholesale a

Weed Glad Charles I president of Boston, said principle of Harvard wh On the list was banned "I bootleg myself," said fine and w ever read ai read a book t can Tragedy.

Harold W. senting the ton Bookselle fending or tr books. The the language should be ju are about 10 year. Most c perhaps a ha be impossibl whose hands they pass to read each book. If complaint is made, perhaps by a 'crank,' there is not enough profit in any one book to fight the case and the book is withdrawn."

"Boston has been at the head of the country in the book business," he remarked, "and her influence has extended all over the country. It would be a shame to have that influence minimized."

Mr. Williams read a statement made a year ago by the Watch and Ward Society's president to the effect that it is not the policy of the society to ban books for single passages. The change suggested, he said, was an attempt to carry out more completely and sanely the spirit of the law.

Professor Robert E. Rogers of Massachusetts Institute of Technology, in favor of the bill, defined an immoral book as one which paints vice in such terms as to make it attractive to the reader. It would be foolish, he went on, to place in this category books which deal with important questions of living, questions which are being discussed by people of intelligence everywhere.

On the other hand, Professor Rogers went on, vulgar, sensational, glamorous books are being fed to the public from "corner" lending libraries which "continually harp upon crime and vice"

to make it attractive to the reader. It would be foolish, he went on, to place in this category books which deal with important questions of living, questions which are being discussed by people of intelligence everywhere.

On the other hand, Professor Rogers went on, vulgar, sensational, glamorous books are being fed to the public from "corner" lending libraries which "continually harp upon crime and vice"

THE CENSORSHIP IN BOSTON

the Municipal Court delivering an opinion sustaining the principle of free speech. The judge said:

"... In their zeal to protect our institutions, the police must not forget that free speech is an American institution; that in time of peace the right is reserved to people to bring about reforms by public discussion of their affairs even if such discussion involves some criticism in their representatives in the executive, legislative or judicial branches of the government....

"As a matter of policy, however, it should be remembered that out of door oratory is often a safety-valve for persons whose opinions we condemn. Prosecuted, they become heroes. Let alone, if they have no worthy cause, they generally attract little attention and without publicity find slight incentive to continue."

HYDE PARK

In contrast to the requirements of permits from the Mayor for speakers on Boston Common is the system adopted in a much greater park and a much larger city, Hyde Park in London. There, a man may get up and address a meeting or gather a crowd of listeners as he talks, without any previous formalities. That is the point—without any previous formalities. No permit whatever is necessary. He is absolutely free to talk, subject of course to being arrested if he says anything in violation of law. The police may, if they choose, close the gates of Hyde Park and exclude all persons, soap-box orators and the wealthy paraders in Rolls-Royces alike; but so long as the gates remain open, any one can speak without any official license. For many years this plan has been in operation, and only once has there been disorder; that was the day in 1866 when the police closed the gates and the crowd leaned against the fence till it fell down. As for its value, hear Charles E. Hughes: "Hyde Park meetings and soap-box oratory constitute the most efficient safety-valve against resort by the discontented to physical force."

I believe that the time is ripe to endeavor to make Boston Common like Hyde Park. It is not only abuses of the Mayor's present power as to the Common that call for change, but also the existence of the power, which may some day make abuse possible.

THE WATCH AND WARD

To the Editor of The Herald

The opposition of the Watch and Ward Society to the book bill reported to the Legislature by the committee on legal affairs, so far as that opposition is disclosed by the society's circular, reported in your issue of this date, turns upon the argument of innovation. This is a strange argument coming from that society, because two years ago, before the Legislature of 1928, the society advocated a book bill then known as the booksellers' bill, which represented an extreme invasion in this same matter, very different from the very moderate change which is proposed by the advocates of the bill reported by the committee on legal affairs. The booksellers' bill would have established an entirely new proceeding in equity relating to books, or at least without analogy in the law since the abolition of the court of star chamber in 1641. The argument based on innovation is one which has been made many times in the course of the recent discussion between speakers representing the Watch and Ward Society and speakers representing the Massachusetts committee for the revision of laws, and it was invariably been answered successfully. The alleged fact that the law which is proposed is not compared to any other such is untrue, in the first place, unless it refers to the mere words of the statute. By judicial construction in New York, the law is interpreted in accordance with the proposed legislation, and decisions to the same effect exist in other jurisdictions, though, of course, there are decisions to the contrary. The argument that no other state has adopted such legislation is without significance, because when the occasion for new legislation arises, as it does in this case, it is most appropriate that Massachusetts, where the matter has taken its most acute form, and more experience has accumulated than anywhere else, should take the lead in legislation. If it does so by the adoption of the present proposal, it will occupy an honorable place at the head of a movement, and will be imitated instead of being an object of derision at the rear of the procession. The necessary change cannot be made by the imitation of existing laws, because those laws, in the United States at least, are all practically of two types, both of which have been fully discussed in dealing with the present proposal. Those laws differ very little between themselves, except in the variation of the epithets used to indicate the kind of books which are to be condemned. The present proposal is a real attempt to introduce the product of some thought into legislation, and to secure thereby the necessary discrimination between good books and bad books.

HENRY L. BURNHAM.

Boston, March 8.

THE CENSORSHIP IN BOSTON

21

There are abundant instances of cities where the requirement of a permit existed, where during a strike the Mayor refused permits to any person presenting the strikers' cause to the public, so that their side of the controversy had no chance to be heard. All sorts of controversies might arise where the Mayor at that time might be prejudiced and deny a hearing for a legitimate cause, and from his decision, be it remembered, there is absolutely no appeal.

My contention is that speakers should be free to talk without any previous permission from anybody, but that they should be held fully responsible for what they say.

If it be thought there is danger in Boston that without the permit the police would not know of the speech so as to be on hand in case of trouble, it would be practicable to adopt a plan which works well in France. The prospective speaker does not apply for a permit; he merely notifies the city authorities that he is going to speak. They then send him a receipt, which they can be legally compelled by him to do if they will not send it voluntarily. This receipt can be shown to any policeman as evidence that the meeting is legal. His notice serves as a warning to the city to have as many police on hand as seem desirable under the circumstances. Notice that under this system there is no censorship, no control by officials. Any man is free to speak. No permission in advance is necessary. And the public safety is amply protected.

Z. CHAFEE, JR.

WHAT TO DO?

The remedies for those varied and unique censorships in Boston lie either in legislation or in proceedings in the courts.

1. For the book censorship, the remedies are primarily legislative. But a strongly organized public opinion is essential to any legislative relief. The bills directed to that end have failed twice in the Legislature. The bill introduced by the Massachusetts Library Club should be pushed again. It requires a jury in a criminal proceeding to take into consideration the entire book at issue and not isolated parts, and provides in effect for advance

Librarians Ask Relief in Book Banning

More Sane Statute Is Argued
to Curb "Obscene"
Literature

Spirit of Law Good

Watch and Ward Society Fears
Changes Suggested Would
Mean Harm

By Forrest P. Hill

During the last two years sixty-five books of country-wide circulation were withdrawn from the shelves of Boston booksellers because of action or suggestion by the public authorities. Publishers, booksellers, librarians and representatives of other interests immediately raised a cry that Boston had become the "laughing-stock of the world." Today that sentiment was reiterated before the legislative committee on legal affairs when a petition by the Massachusetts Library Club, Inc., seeking a change in the law relative to obscene literature, was heard.

One of the largest hearing rooms in the State House was filled with friends of the measure who came from all sections of the State, and, as many persons desired to speak, the hearing was continued during the afternoon. The only person who responded to the call for the opposition was Rev. Raymond Calkins, D. D., of Cambridge, president of the New England Watch and Ward Society, and he admitted that he should not be considered as an opponent. What he desired to do was to warn the committee that the suggested changes in the law might lead to trouble of serious nature.

Changes Suggested

The proposed legislation would eliminate from the present law the word "book" and would add to the law another section saying in part that, "Whoever imports, prints, publishes, sells or distributes a book, knowing it to contain language which, when considered in connection with its entire context and theme, is indecent or impure" shall be punished by imprisonment for two years or by a fine of not more than $1000 or both.

Attorney Henry L. Burnham of Boston, introduced by Galen W. Hill of Quincy, president of the Library Club, handled the case for the proponents, characterizing the present law as a "legal curiosity" in that it allowed a finding of guilt on the language used in any one part of a book without considering the complete text.

There was much questioning of Attorney Burnham by members of the committee, during which a Supreme Court decision on the present law was read and the attorney refused to accept the opinion of the questioner that the court had approved the law. Mr. Burnham agreed with Representative M. E. S. Clemons of Wakefield, House chairman of the committee, that "writers who wave a flag or utter a godly phrase at the conclusion of a book to 'get by' should be condemned."

Several of the speakers reiterated the statements of last year that the present law would, if literally enforced, cause the removal of such books as the Bible, Shakespeare, and Byron from library shelves.

"Under the present law it is enough to convict if language in the book is impure, which is a weak word," Attorney Burnham argued. "Under the present law a person may even be guilty if the language tends to corrupt the morals of youth." On a sober, controversial subject the complainant in such a case may be just as likely to be on the wrong side as the defendant. It is a dragnet statute.

to make it attractive to the reader. It would be foolish, he went on, to place in this category books which deal with important questions of living, questions which are being discussed by people of intelligence everywhere.

On the other hand, Professor Rogers went on, vulgar, sensational, glamorous books are being fed to the public from "corner" lending libraries which "continually harp upon crime and street

THE CENSORSHIP IN BOSTON

notice by the police or prosecuting authorities that a book is objectionable before its sale can be made a crime.

2. So far as the censorship of the theater is concerned, it will be necessary to repeal the law under which the Mayor and board can revoke theater licenses "at their pleasure." Particular grounds for revocation should be specified, and should have nothing to do with the performance on the stage. Dramas should be subject, like books, to criminal proceedings in the courts as they are in other cities, and to that control alone.

3. Concerning licensed halls, it will be possible to break down that lawless censorship only by getting the issue into the courts by one form of suit or another. But to do so requires the co-operation of some hall-owner who is willing to take the risk. That is obviously difficult. On the single issue of a discussion of repealing the Massachusetts statute on prohibiting the dissemination of birth control information, it has been proposed to hold a public meeting in Faneuil Hall, owned by the city of Boston, and in case the Mayor's office refuses a permit, to go into the courts with a suit to compel it to be granted. That would raise the issue of the Mayor's discretionary power in prohibiting discussion of this subject.

4. Concerning Boston Common, the requirements for permits should be abolished. Meetings there should be as free as they are in Hyde Park, London, or in the streets of New York and many other cities. No permits are required. Notice is merely given the police so that traffic may be handled. Speakers who break the laws are subject to prosecution. No other control is needed. If space needs to be regulated or meetings protected, a notice to the police of the time of meeting should result in designating the place and giving needed police protection.

5. Last, but not least, of course the old blasphemy act, under which three ridiculous prosecutions have been brought in Massachusetts, should be repealed.

To do all this requires organized effort. A committee has been organized—The Civil Liberties Committee of Massachusetts, with headquarters at 6 Byron St., Boston. Its sponsors appear on the back page of this pamphlet. All those who are in sympathy with its objects are urged to join.

Asks
Hen Spring
three ed leg quently
law is
as it is
"I h
in the favor are ad
of you would bars.
after a lution out a Mr.
there
the wo
tory.
size is for mo book be passage that a is the States. sage. M
that H
bitterly
it is co dren. I think be consi
said, ou
that pri
and he Ward S
fore con
Edwan
Monthly fishers w
for an it
the hous
said, and seldom p
"I am objection
but will attending
have paid
position in present s like the who, if r wholesale

Weed Gla
Charles president
Boston, an principle
Harvard
On the li was banne
"I boot myself," s fine and ever read read a book
can Trage
Harold
senting the ton Bookse fending or books. Th
the langua should be are about year. Most perhaps a be impossi
whose hands
they pass to read each book. If com plaint is made
perhaps by
a 'crank,' there is not enough profit in any one book to fight the case and the book is with drawn."

"Boston has been at the head of the country in the book business," he remarked, "and her influence has extended all over the country. It would be a shame to have that influence minimized."

Mr. Williams read a statement made a year ago by the Watch and Ward Society's president to the effect that it is not the policy of the society to ban books for single passages. The change suggested, he said, was an attempt to carry out more completely and sanely the spirit of the law.

Professor Robert E. Rogers of Massachusetts Institute of Technology, in favor of the bill, defined an immoral book as one which paints vice in such terms as

THE WATCH AND WARD

To the Editor of The Herald:
The opposition of the Watch and Ward Society to the book bill reported to the Legislature by the committee on legal affairs, so far as that opposition is disclosed by the society's circular, reported in your issue of this date, turns upon the argument of innovation. This is a strange argument coming from that society, because two years ago, before the Legislature of 1928, the society advocated a book bill then known as the booksellers' bill, which represented an extreme innovation in this same matter, very different from the very moderate change which is proposed by the advocates of the bill reported by the committee on legal affairs. The booksellers' bill would have established an entirely new proceeding in equity relating to books, or at least without analogy in the law since the abolition of the court of star chamber in 1641. The argument based on innovation is one which has been made many times in the course of the recent discussion between speakers representing the Watch and Ward Society and speakers representing the Massachusetts committee on legal affairs. The alleged fact that the law which is proposed is not contained in any other state is untrue, in the first place, unless it refers to the mere words of the statute. By judicial construction in New York, the law is interpreted in accordance with the proposed legislation, and decisions to the same effect exist in other jurisdictions, though, of course, there are decisions to the contrary. The argument that no other state has adopted such legislation is without significance, because when the occasion for new legislation arises, as it does in this case, it is most appropriate that Massachusetts, where the matter has taken its most acute form, and more experience has accumulated than anywhere else, should take the lead in legislation. If it does so by the adoption of the present proposal, it will occupy an honorable place at the head of a movement, and will be initiated instead of being an object of derision at the rear of the procession. The necessary change cannot be made by the invitation of existing laws, because those laws, in the United States at least, are all practically of two types, both of which have been fully disapproved in dealing with the present proposal. Those laws differ very little between themselves, except in the variation of the epithets used to indicate the kind of books which are to be condemned. The present proposal is a real attempt to introduce the product of some thought into legislation, and to secure thereby the necessary discrimination between good books and bad books. HENRY L. BURNHAM.
Boston, March 8.

APPENDIX

The list of books below contains the majority of those that have been suppressed during the current Boston frenzy of censorship. The booksellers decline for their own tactical reasons to give out the current list vouched for by them—the list containing those which have been on ban for a time and which now have returned to grace and those which stand taboo at the moment. The list below is a fair and accurate sample of the books that have been banned during the past five years and which set the standard by which no end of similar books may be banned during the next indefinite period in Boston.

TITLE	AUTHOR	TITLE	AUTHOR
Dark Laughter	Sherwood Anderson	The Captive	Bourdett
The Wayward Man	St. John Ervine	Crazy Payments	Beverly Nichols
High Winds	Arthur Train	Young Men in Love	Michael Arlen
Blue Vagabond	Conrad Aiken	On Such a Night	Babette Deutsch
The Irishman	St. John Ervine	The Starling	Doris Leslie
What I Believe	Bertrand Russell	Pretty Creatures	William Gerhardt
Circus Parade	Jim Tully	The Madonna of the Sleeping Car	Dekobra
The American Caravan
More Over	E. Pettit	Dream's End	Thorne Smith
Oil	Upton Sinclair	Tamok the Sculptor	Eden Phillpotts
From Man to Man	Olive Schreiner	The Plastic Age	Percy Marks
Mosquitoes	William Faulkner	The Hard Boiled Virgin	F. Newman
Pilgrims	Edith Mannin	The Rebel Bird	D. Patrick
Horizon	Robert Corse	The Butcher Shop	J. Devening
The Sorrows of Elsie	Andre Savignon	The Ancient Hunger	E. Greenberg
Nigger Heaven	Carl Van Vechten	Antennae	Herbert Footner
Power	Leon Feuchtwanger	The Marriage Bed	E. Roscoe
Twilight	Count Keyserling	The Boudle	P. Smith
Black April	Julia Peterkin	As It Was	H. L.
An American Tragedy	Theodore Dreiser	Elmer Gantry	Sinclair Lewis
The World of William Glissol
	H. G. Wells	The Sun Also Rises	Ernest Hemingway
Wine, Women and War		Blended Kings	Kessel & Iswolsky
Manhattan Transfer	John Dos Passos	Spreed Circles	Ward
The Fruit of Eden	Gerard Little	Pilchers	I. Glenn
Count Bruen	Ben Hecht	Master of the Microbe	Service
Kink	Brook Evelyn Grainger		C. F. Hummel
Red Pavilion	John Gunther	Cleopatra's Diary	Thompson
Ariane	Claude Anet	The Allingham	May Sinclair

Librarians Ask Relief in Book Banning

More Sane Statute Is Argued
to Curb "Obscene"
Literature

Spirit of Law Good

Watch and Ward Society Fears
Changes Suggested Would
Mean Harm

By Forrest P. Hull

During the last two years sixty-five books of country-wide circulation were withdrawn from the shelves of Boston booksellers because of action or suggestion by the public authorities. Publishers, booksellers, librarians and representatives of other interests immediately raised a cry that Boston had become the "laughing-stock of the world." Today that sentiment was reiterated before the legislative Committee on Legal Affairs when a petition by the Massachusetts Library Club, Inc., seeking a change in the law relative to obscene literature, was heard.

One of the largest hearing rooms in the State House was filled with friends of the measure who came from all sections of the State, and, as many persons desired to speak, the hearing was continued during the afternoon. The only person who responded to the call for the opposition was Rev. Raymond Calkins, D. D., of Cambridge, president of the New England Watch and Ward Society, and he admitted that he should not be considered as an opponent. What he desired to do was to warn the committee that the suggested changes in the law might lead to trouble of serious nature.

Changes Suggested

The proposed legislation would eliminate from the present law the word "book" and would add to the law another section saying in part that, "Whoever imports, prints, publishes, sells or distributes a book, knowing it to contain language which, when considered in connection with its entire context and theme, is indecent or impure" shall be punished by imprisonment for two years or by a fine of not more than $1000 or both.

Attorney Henry L. Burnham of Boston, introduced by Galen W. Hill of Quincy, president of the Library Club, handled the case for the proponents, characterizing the present law as a "legal curiosity" in that it allowed a finding of guilt on the language used in any one part of a book without considering the complete text.

There was much questioning of Attorney Burnham by members of the committee, during which a Supreme Court decision on the present law was read and the attorney refused to accept the opinion of the questioner that the court had approved the law. Mr. Burnham agreed with Representative M. E. S. Clemons of Wakefield, House chairman of the committee, that "writers who wave a flag or utter a godly phrase at the conclusion of a book to 'get by' should be condemned."

Several of the speakers reiterated the statements of last year that the present law would, if literally enforced, cause the removal of such books as the Bible, Shakespeare, and Byron from library shelves.

"Under the present law it is enough to convict if language in the book is impure, which is a weak word," Attorney Burnham argued. "Under the present law a person may even be guilty if the language tends to corrupt the morals of youth." On a sober, controversial subject the complainant in such a case may be just as likely to be on the wrong side as the defendant. It is a dragnet statute."

to make it attractive to the reader. It would be foolish, he went on, to place in this category books which deal with important questions of living, questions which are being discussed by people of intelligence everywhere. On the other hand, Professor Rogers went on, vulgar, sensational, glamorous books are being fed to the public from "corner" lending libraries which "continually harp upon crime and vice."

Civil Liberties Committee of Massachusetts

6 BYRON STREET, BOSTON

Haymarket 6063

Advisory Committee

JUDGE GEORGE W. ANDERSON
MRS. ROLAND M. BAKER
ALICE STONE BLACKWELL
MARY W. CALKINS
MRS. E. A. CODMAN
FRANCES G. CURTIS
PROF. ZECHARIAH CHAFEE, JR.
DR. HILBERT F. DAY
ROBERT C. DEXTER
HAROLD K. ESTABROOK
ROBERT FECHNER
PROF. FELIX FRANKFURTER
L. O. HARTMAN
ELLEN HAYES
HECTOR M. HOLMES
EDWARD INGRAHAM
PROF. J. M. LANDIS
JOSEPH LEE

JOHN F. MOORS
DR. ABRAHAM MYERSON
CORNELIA STRATTON PARKER
MRS. WENONA O. PINKHAM
MRS. A. E. PHOUTRIDES
MRS. WILLIAM Z. RIPLEY
GEORGE E. ROEWER
PROF. ARTHUR M. SCHLESINGER VIDA D. SCUDDER
PROF. CLARENCE R. SKINNER
W. L. STODDARD
MRS. MARY GORDON THOMPSON
WILLIAM G. THOMPSON
JOHN VAN VAERENNEWYCK
H. P. WHITNEY
PROF. MARY E. WOOLEY,
Mt. Holyoke College.

Executive Committee

JOHN S. CODMAN, Temporary Chairman
WILLIAM G. TAUSSIG, Treasurer
DOROTHY KIRCHWEY BROWN
SMITH O. DEXTER
HERBERT B. EHLMANN
MRS. ELIZABETH G. EVANS
FRANCIS G. GOODALE
CATHARINE S. HUNTINGTON

Mrs. CERISE JACK
GARDNER JACKSON
REV. ROBERT W. JONES
REUBEN L. LURIE
FLORENCE LUSCOMB
PROF. S. E. MORISON
DAVID K. NILES
MRS. ARTHUR G. ROTCH
GERTRUDE L. WINSLOW

HAROLD L. ROTZEL, Executive Secretary

be responsible for everyone through whose hands they pass to read each book. If complaint is made, perhaps by a 'crank,' there is not enough profit in any one book to fight the case and the book is withdrawn."

"Boston has been at the head of the country in the book business," he remarked, "and her influence has extended all over the country. It would be a shame to have that influence minimized." Mr. Williams read a statement made a year ago by the Watch and Ward Society's president to the effect that it is not the policy of the society to ban books for single passages. The change suggested, he said, was an attempt to carry out more completely and sanely the spirit of the law.

Professor Robert E. Rogers of Massachusetts Institute of Technology, in favor of the bill, defined an immoral book as one which paints vice in such terms as

THE BOSTON HERALD

SUNDAY, MARCH 2, 1930

MOVIE CENSORSHIP

Patrons of Sunday movies in Massachusetts cities and towns who have for years enjoyed the performances all unconscious of the fact that their entertainment had been benevolently censored by the State Department of Public Safety have recently become aware that somebody must have been tinkering with the films. This realization has been coincident with the coming of the talking pictures, for some of the "talkies" are not so easily "cut" as the old silent plays. The films which operate with a "sound track" adjoining the miniature pictures are comparatively simple, for offending sections of the film can be easily removed and the audience is not likely to notice the hiatus. But the Vitaphone films, the sound device of which centres in a phonograph disc, present a more difficult problem. The usual solution is simply to turn off the sound when the censored lines are reached. It is this sudden silence, while the pictures themselves continue, which Sunday audiences have noticed.

But, aside from these purely mechanical difficulties, the development of the "talkies" provokes questions of logic and ethics. The "revised regulations governing approval of entertainments to be held on the Lord's Day," for instance, forbid dancing in any form on the stage. Yet it is perfectly legal on the screen. Actors must not appear in costume other than ordinary street dress on the stage, while any costume, as long as it decently covers the body, is permitted on the screen. The layman may ask why it is wrong for the public to see a beautifully dressed chorus prancing on the stage of a Sunday night, while it is right to see and hear a beautifully dressed chorus prancing on the screen. The censors at the State House will reply simply, and correctly: "It's the law."

The Department of Public Safety, in its own little theatre, sees and hears every picture (excepting the news reels), before it is exhibited in public. It flatly rules out a few films, as totally unfit for Sunday presentation. Others it endorses as entirely pure. Still others it permits to be shown with certain specified "cuts." These proscribed portions contain scenes in which profanity, nudity, suggestive words or acts, sacrilege, gambling, suicide, premeditated murder, use of narcotics, and similar indecent or morally questionable episodes occur. The word "damn" is considered profanity. Therefore George Arliss can conclude "The Green Goddess" with the philosophical line, "Well, she would probably have been a damn nuisance," on Monday, Tuesday, Wednesday, Thursday, Friday and Saturday. But people who see the film on Sunday will never know what the last line of the play is—that is, not unless they are so sacrilegious as to read Mr. Arliss's lips.

All censorship must necessarily in principle be a compromise between what some people consider moral and others consider immoral. In practice it is usually arbitrary, and very often it is ridiculous.

THE BOSTON HERALD

MONDAY, MARCH 10, 1930

THE CENSORSHIP BILL

Neither of the objections brought against the Censorship Bill by the Watch and Ward Society has substance. The Society objects to the all-important phrase "considered as a whole" and wants to have the provision for mandatory jail sentences retained. The Society objects to the phrase in question while admitting in the circular which it is distributing that the existing law is "criticized and perhaps justified" because it "requires the courts to disregard the book and to convict on a chapter, a paragraph, or even a phrase."

Precisely; that is the point of the indictment against the law as it stands. The great purpose of the advocates of the proposed legislation is to prevent the banning of a book or a pamphlet on account of a single word or sentence or paragraph or page and to compel the consideration of the context in making a judgment. The proposed modification does not eliminate the very important provision in the law as it stands about any manifest tendency to corrupt the morals of youth. It is hard to see how a better formula could be drawn than the one now offered, which has the support of a large number of the most competent and high-minded citizens of the State.

As to the mandatory sentence. The bill provides for punishment "by imprisonment for not more than two years or by a fine of not less than $100 nor more than $1000 or both." The Watch and Ward would have nothing but a mandatory jail sentence. That idea is directly at variance with the spirit and practice of the courts of the Commonwealth. The subject was debated at length when a Baumes law for Massachusetts was proposed, a law making it mandatory upon a judge to impose a life sentence after a fourth conviction. We should not withdraw from our courts the discretion they now enjoy. Our judges are of life tenure, removed from political influences, and immune from the temptation to impose sentences on any grounds save those of justice and the general welfare.

The Watch and Ward Society is a private detecting agency. It has brought ridicule and abuse on the city. It is suspected and discredited in most quarters. It is desired to mention it has been an object of criticism by even such as Dist. Atty. Bushnell, Judge Parker and former Atty. Gen. Herbert Parker. Although it includes in its membership some excellent men, unfortunately they have not the force for it. The most significant episode in the recent history of the Society was to be explained. We refer to the resignation of Dr. David D. Scannell, which preceded and was apparently not directly related to the Dunster Book Shop case. Why does the Watch and Ward Society refuse to make public his letter of resignation?

THE BOSTON HERALD

MONDAY, MARCH 10, 1930

THE WATCH AND WARD

To the Editor of The Herald:
The opposition of the Watch and Ward Society to the book bill reported to the Legislature by the committee on legal affairs, so far as that opposition is disclosed by the society's circular, reported in your issue of this date, turns upon the argument of innovation. This is a strange argument coming from that society, because two years ago, before the Legislature of 1928, the society advocated a book bill then known as the booksellers' bill, which represented an extreme innovation in this same matter, very different from the very moderate change which is proposed by the advocates of the bill reported by the committee on legal affairs. The booksellers' bill would have established an entirely new proceeding in equity relating to books, or at least without analogy in the law since the abolition of the court of star chamber in 1641. The argument based on innovation is one which has been made many times in the course of the recent discussion between speakers representing the Watch and Ward Society and speakers representing the Massachusetts booksellers for the revision of the law. If, as we believe, been considered successfully. The alleged fact that the law which is proposed is not compared in any other state is untrue. In the first place, unless it refers to the mere words of the statute. By judicial construction in New York, the law is interpreted in accordance with the proposed legislation, and decisions to the same effect exist in other jurisdictions, though, of course, there are decisions to the contrary. The argument that no other state has adopted such legislation is without significance, because when the occasion for new legislation arises, as it does in this case, it is most appropriate that Massachusetts, where the matter has taken its most acute form, and more experience has accumulated than anywhere else, should take the lead in legislation. If it does so by the adoption of the present proposal, it will occupy an honorable place at the head of a movement, and will be imitated instead of being an object of derision at the rear of the procession. The necessary change cannot be made by the limitation of existing laws, because these laws, in the United States at least, are all practically of two types, both of which have been fully discussed in dealing with the present proposal. Those laws differ very little between themselves, except in the variation of the epithets used to indicate the kind of books which are to be condemned. The present proposal is a real attempt to introduce the product of some thought into legislation, and to secure thereby the necessary discrimination between good books and bad books. HENRY L. BURNHAM.
Boston, March 8.

For Open-Eyed Censorship

Opponents of the bill to improve the Massachusetts book censorship express great concern over the revision of law recommended by the General Court's committee on legal affairs. The remonstrants seem to believe that five or six words of change in the existing statute will have consequences immense and devastating. Writers will have "almost complete freedom in the use of indecent language," they argue, and the literary morality of this old and well-established Commonwealth will in a twinkling be as completely overwhelmed as though the Atlantic Ocean should flood the State from Cape Cod to the Berkshire hills. The idea is conjured forth that once a jury is allowed to hear evidence concerning the general purport and total content of a protested book, the twelve good men and true will of a sudden be cut loose from all their normal sound and decent qualities of judgment, as well as their common sense, and will be left powerless to report a verdict against the offending volume.

The remonstrants' great fear seems to result, in the first instance, from a misconception of the meaning of the words, "as a whole." They contend that no book "considered as a whole" could be adjudged objectionable, "because it would be hard to prove the entire book obscene." Most certainly the words "as a whole" have no such vastly inclusive meaning as that. No prosecutor will ever be bound to show, when opposing a book, that its every line and chapter is objectionable. But after he has pointed out the passages to which he objects, defense counsel will at least be allowed—as they are not now allowed—to give the jury some general idea what the book is all about, so that they may have a normal basis for judgment.

Once such a basis is provided, the people of Massachusetts need have no doubt that their judges and juries will then proceed to apply normal and competent standards of decency in forming their judgments. The book in a recent Cambridge case which the defense admitted was "a vile product" will be just as instantaneously banned under the amended law as under the old law. It simply is not true that five or six words of change in a statute-book can sweep away the common sense and the moral standards of the law courts and the people of a well-established and self-respecting community. But it is true that the slight change proposed will bring about a change in existing rules of practice so that hereafter when a Massachusetts jury enters a verdict against any book in the future, the jury will know, with open eyes, what it is doing, and will not be acting with three-fourths of its normal sight blindfolded. The sooner such a censorship is provided, the better for the good name of Massachusetts.

Plain Facts of the Censorship Legislation

A furious attack may sometimes be admirable, but too often it risks fatal weakness. In the excitement of fervid battle, it tends to ignore many plain facts. It makes extreme statements unsupported by the available record. Thus, the same censorship bill passed last week by the State Senate is attacked this morning by our usually sound neighbor, The Post, as a bill "admittedly framed for the purpose of making a conviction for the sale of obscene literature as difficult as possible." Who, may we ask, makes any such admission? Are we to accept the preposterous view that the Massachusetts Library Club, one of the first and strongest sponsors of the movement for censorship reform, had this low object in mind? The charge cannot stand for one moment among any who know the librarians of Massachusetts for what they are—a group markedly conscientious, thoroughly devoted to what is good in literature and actively hostile to all that is bad.

Again, are we to assume that the 631 delegates to the January convention of the Massachusetts Federation of Women's Clubs who voted, after careful argument, to support the present bill, with only 79 votes opposed, gave such overwhelming endorsement to a measure "admittedly framed for the purpose of making" the sale of obscene books as easy as possible? This idea of course is also preposterous, and any suggestion that there is truth in it would amount to an unconscionable insult against the womanhood of Massachusetts.

The needless confusion of facts runs deeper still when, in the extreme attack made this morning, it is argued that the "particular book" which recently figured in the Dunster House Bookshop case "is the sort of a book that the proponents of this legislation evidently consider fit to be sold." On what possible warrant is this statement made? We know of not one voice which has been raised in this community in support of such a book as "Lady Chatterly's Lover." The method employed by the Watch and Ward Society in bringing about the sale of a copy were indeed under sharp fire. But the Superior Court judge who rebuked these methods, the district attorney who assailed them and even the defense counsel who exonerated them were all equally positive in condemning the book itself.

The plain truth is that the recent widespread movement for reform of the Massachusetts censorship law not only did not derive from even a remote disposition to approve such books as "Lady Chatterly's Lover," but came into existence before this book had ever been heard of. The book which supplies the true basis for the present reform movement is Dreiser's "An American Tragedy." When it was learned that this novel had been banned, hundreds of sound-minded, conscientious and thinking citizens of Massachusetts for the first time found their interest engaged in the campaign for reform which previously they had ignored or made light of, despite the fact that many eminent leaders of thought throughout the United States had for some months been protesting against the prevailing narrow-mindedness of our self-appointed censors, and a great part of the country was laughing aloud at the State's backwardness in submitting to such restrictive tyranny.

But conscientious citizens in Massachusetts did not form their views merely by listening to the echoes of a nation's laughter. They sat down and read "An American Tragedy" from cover to cover. And what did they find it was? Not, to be sure, a "great masterpiece" as many enthusiastic critics have touted it. They did not find it even a very interesting or absorbing book, but rather a dreary and tedious book. Any father might be quite proud of a son or daughter who would show the intellectual persistence and force of application to read it through. But more especially might the father or mother of such a youth be sure—thoughtful Massachusetts readers found—that the son or daughter who finished the book would gain from it certain very positive moral values. In an age when jazz and glitter abound, youth would be led to see—from this literal report of an actual case in New York State—what fearful consequences follow upon weakness and levity. At a time when mediocre standards of conduct are only too readily accepted in many quarters, the reader of "An American Tragedy" is brought face to face with a realization that mediocre moral standards are extremely dangerous to those who hold them.

Yet this was a book which, under Massachusetts law as it now stands, a Massachusetts jury was allowed to judge only through the reading of a few isolated passages, without the slightest information, or even argument, regarding the trend of the book as a whole! That is the underlying wrong which has led to the present movement for reform of the censorship statute, and there is no other cause. Furious attackers may be reassured. No decent citizen in Massachusetts, and no jury of twelve good men and true in the Bay State, will ever let down the bars against obscene books in this State. But a great body of citizens does demand that when such novels as "An American Tragedy" are put under ban, those who protest against them shall be at least required to give the jury the facts about the books in question, and not merely cite a few scattered passages on a basis which, if used regarding the Bible, would certainly lead to the banning in Massachusetts even of Holy Writ.

Filthy Books

The Shattuck Bill Offers NO Help to the Man Who Sells Them

FIRST on the orders of the day, members of the House of Representatives tomorrow will find the Shattuck, or so-called "bad books" bill.

This is a bill which would so amend the existing statute as to make it necessary to consider book, pamphlet or ballad AS A WHOLE, before determining it to be obscene or indecent and punishing the vendor accordingly.

The measure already has been passed by the Senate, a roll call there showing 23 Senators favorable, 11 opposed.

Members of the House who wish to be fair, whose inclination is to align themselves with the liberals, and who are anything but ashamed of the stand Massachusetts has taken against the indiscriminate sale of literature of the sewage school, might safely place their trust in the eminent citizens who have urged the change.

Among the 200 petitioners were clergymen, educators, lawyers and librarians.

The name of the late Bishop Slattery headed the list. Other signers were Charles F. D. Belden, Boston's city librarian; President Mary E. Woolley of Mount Holyoke, Principal Alfred Stearns of Phillips Andover Academy, Grafton D. Cushing of the Children's Society and Ellery Sedgwick of the Atlantic Monthly.

Support like this could never have been enlisted for a movement to lower the bars to obscenity.

The House should join the Senate in passing the Shattuck amendment.

Bushnell Predicts Book Law Will Be Liberalized

Article Declares "Banned in Boston" Best Sales Slogan Publishers Have—Reviews Watch and Ward Activities

Robert T. Bushnell, district attorney of Middlesex, forecasts the liberalization of the book law "eventually if not this year," in a trenchantly phrased article entitled, "Banned in Boston," that appears in the North American Review for May.

Summing up some widely prevalent views that people about the country entertain of New England and Massachusetts and their blue laws, he asks somewhat satirically: "Isn't it a fact that 'Banned in Boston' is the best sales slogan for a book on which the publishers have been losing money?"

It is difficult, he observes, for many to believe that a majority of New Englanders are not descendants of Cotton Mather, praying for the damnation of the unrighteous. The article bristles with entertaining Bushnellisms.

CENSORS DISLUCKED

He quotes the statute, the verbiage of which he characterizes pithily as the "single passage" law. This law, he says, contains no provision for censors, any more than the common law. "The idea of a censor," he says, "is as repugnant to the people of Massachusetts as was the stamp act of King George."

He goes on to say: "The only censors of books recognized by the laws of Massachusetts have been the juries. If a defendant does not care to have a jury, he may now waive that privilege and appoint a single judge as his censor."

"Banned in Boston" did not arise from the verdicts of juries considering the book as entities. The trouble was that the juries, representing cross-sections of the public, seldom had anything to do with the cases. Most of the banned books were outlawed by an informal system of censorship, entirely foreign to the law."

This system he described as "devised in the city of Boston, whereby a representative of the prosecutor's office, the police commissioner and an organization with the benevolent title of 'The

BOOKS WORTH BUYING

Congress now has the opportunity to buy for the nation an unusual, marvelous set of books. The price seems high, $1,500,000, but the bargain is there, nevertheless, because of the value of the goods. At the top of the list is a copy of the most valuable of all printed books, a Gutenberg Bible printed on vellum. Of this work there are three copies in existence, one in the British Museum, one in the Bibliotheque Nationale in Paris, and the one in the collection of Dr. Otto H. F. Vollbehr of Berlin now offered the United States for the Library of Congress. This copy is perfect and it is unique, as containing three volumes instead of two as in the Paris and London copies. Its authenticity is beyond question. It has had three owners, Johann Fust, the partner of Gutenberg; the Benedictine monks, first in Paris, then in the Black Forest whence they fled in the time of the Napoleonic wars to a monastery in Carinthia; and finally Dr. Vollbehr. Such men as A. Edward Newton, the collector, and Dr. Rosenbach, the dealer, say that a million would be a reasonable price for it. Even the Gutenberg on paper in the Yale Library cost Mr. Harkness $123,000.

There are 3000 books in all in the collection. All are incunabula, "cradle books," so called because they belong to the era of the beginning of printing and bear dates earlier than 1500. There are 200 volumes which are unique in the literal sense of the term; 100 were printed between 1455 and 1470; 300 are early classics; 20 are concerned with the great feat of Columbus; there are 100 works in Italian, 52 in German dialects, 48 in Spanish, 17 in French, 10 in Hebrew, eight in English. All the famous early printers are represented and many of the early centres of learning. The collection is described as a cross section of the thought and culture of the people of the fifteenth century, the era of the invention of printing, the revival of learning, the Reformation, the discovery of America, one of the great expansion periods of the world's history. Small wonder that historians, librarians, scholars in general, are intensely interested in this proposal that the United States acquire for the Library of Congress this wonderful collection. Such an opportunity is not likely to occur again. It would make our national library, already one of the largest in the world, one of the most distinguished as well. The Gutenberg Bible alone is enough to set a great library up in business.

It is proposed to name this collection for Dr. Herbert Putnam, the present librarian of Congress, who for five years was the Boston librarian. In his comprehensive statement in advocacy of its purchase, Representative Collins of Mississippi recalled the instances in which opportunities for the acquisition of valuable books for the nation have been allowed to escape, among them the failure years ago to purchase Washington's Library, a collection which "finally was bought by 70 patriotic citizens of Boston, Cambridge and Salem for the Boston Athenaeum." Here is a chance to place the Congressional Library at a single stroke on a plane of parity at least with its only rivals in the world. We should make the most of it. As Elihu Root has said: "The possession of such a collection would give distinction to our library and it ought not to be treated as a second-class institution."

THE BOSTON HERALD

FRIDAY, MAY 2, 1930

"BANNED IN BOSTON"

Robert T. Bushnell, the district attorney who made some pointed and well-remembered remarks about the Watch and Ward Society at the trial of the Dunster Book Shop case, states his views on censorship in general and the Watch and Ward in particular in the current issue of the North American Review. He holds that New England is not nearly so bad as it is painted, that we have a cosmopolitan population who constitute one of the most tolerant communities in the country. The "idea of a censor is as repugnant to the people of Massachusetts as was the stamp tax of King George," but we are determined and have been for three hundred years "to prevent the corruption of youth by pornographic literature."

How shall it be done? To that question the district attorney devotes the major portion of his article. He goes back to the common law and traces the origin of the present Massachusetts statute. He shows that there is no provision in the common law or in the statute for censors, that our only censor is the jury, unless a defendant prefers to waive the jury and accept the judge. He shows how the former "Gentlemen's Agreement" came into existence, so that banned books were outlawed by an informal system of censorship entirely foreign to the law. Booksellers could not afford to go to trial when passages standing alone in a book would oblige the judge to instruct a jury to convict. So questionable books were submitted to representatives of the district attorney, the police commissioner and the Watch and Ward, and the booksellers accepted their opinions. The committee had no power to ban, and this small group of individuals only had the authority of private arrangement and usage.

Having outlined the recent Dunster Book Shop case, the district attorney has his say about the Watch and Ward. The directors "for the most part have been genuinely sincere men with little practical experience. . . . Many have been high-minded clergymen, possessed of knowledge of criminal investigation as naive as that of a child of four." For secretary the directors "have selected clergymen whose success in their calling has been at least open to question." The directors "have had little or nothing to do with the actual work of the society. One of them . . . did not even know he was a director." The results were "such as might have been expected from such a system."

One good thing is going to come out of the Dunster case. Mr. Bushnell expects the present single-passage law to be liberalized. The indirect effect of the case was to marshal public attention upon the whole subject of pernicious literature. The "inevitable consequence" must be to allow a book "to be considered as a whole in criminal prosecutions." Mr. Bushnell does not allude to the change lately made in the law, but he says that, irrespective of what action may be taken at once, "the law of Massachusetts eventually will be brought into accord with common sense, for the simple reason that a majority of the people of Massachusetts believe in common sense."

THE BOSTON HERALD

WEDNESDAY, MAY 14, 1930

CHICAGO PITIES BOSTON

Now that a drive on books has failed in Chicago because the Illinois Vigilance Association resorted to "entrapment" methods, the Chicago Tribune moralizes on the low estate of Boston. We are "provincial." We have laid a blight of ignorance and censorship on cultural life and literary production. We are in the clutch of despotism and inquisitions. We are "intellectually dead." We are culturally "stagnant and uninspiring." "There is no hope in Boston." It is good to know that Chicago journalists, in the intervals of hopping out of the way of Chicago pineapples and evading the gunmen, are so solicitous of our welfare.

It all has a familiar sound. Our critics seem to love to compare the Bostons of the past and the present, strongly emphasizing the finest features of the older city and the least creditable aspects and untypical of the present. Actually, a ridiculously small number of unrepresentative citizens has been able heretofore to have its way in the supervision of literature.

Whatever the outcome of the Dunster Book Shop case and the report which a well known Boston lawyer is to make on the activities of the Watch and Ward Society, the situation here now is more satisfactory than for many years. Thanks to a candid judge, a bold district attorney and a former attorney-general to whom increasing honors come with the years, the professional snoopers have begun to learn something and to remain quiet. The censorship law passed by the Legislature is a great improvement on what we have had heretofore. And as a matter of fact, the application of literary censorship has not kept the censored books from the people. Cambridge sells them and they may be brought in by mail. The censorship movement was silly and harmful, but it did not seriously affect that Boston culture which our friends of the West seem to value so highly.

"Chicago has its faults," says our contemporary, "but lives eagerly and with a liberal hope." As we read of the activities of the aspiring gangsters and racketeers of the Windy city, we wonder whether hope is not a misprint for "hop."

THE BOSTON HERALD

WEDNESDAY, MAY 28, 1930

Must Serve Term

JAMES A. DELACEY

TO SERVE TERM FOR BOOK SALE

Supreme Court Upholds
Verdict Against Dunster
Shop Manager

PUBLISHER MUST PAY FINE OF $300

The famed Dunster Book Shop case was closed yesterday with a decision by the full bench of the supreme court sustaining the verdict of Judge Foedick that James A. Delacey, manager of the store, was guilty of selling "a book containing obscene, indecent, or impure language and tending to corrupt the morals of youth." The court overruled Delacey's exceptions and ordered the fine of $300 be paid, and the sentence of one month in the house of correction be served.

Co-incident was the decision of the bench overruling the exceptions taken by Donald S. Friede, New York publisher, to the verdict of Judge Hays that Friede was guilty of the same offense in selling a copy of "An American Tragedy" to Lt. Hines of the Boston police. Friede must pay a fine of $300.

"ENTRAPPED" HE CLAIMED
Delacey contended he was entitled to a verdict of not guilty because, he claimed, he was entrapped by an agent of the Watch and Ward Society. Throughout the trial, the book, "Lady Chatterley's Lover," was referred to as "the book in question."

The opinion of the full bench, written by Judge Pierce, says in part: "The conclusion we have reached upon a full reading of the book is in accordance with that of the trial judge, which he formulates as follows: 'The book read as a whole, having regard to its significance as an entity, not merely parts of it viewed separately, is obscene, indecent and impure, and manifestly tends to corrupt the morals of youth.'"

Friede's appeal on exceptions was on the ground of the refusal of Judge Hays to allow the contents of the two volumes of the work read to the jury, instead of certain passages.

This decision, written by Judge Pierce, says in part:

The commonwealth offered in evidence passages from the books, which were read to the jury. A careful reading of this compact book of more than 800 pages, which is a part of the record, affords a demonstration that it would have been impracticable to have tried the case had the defendant been permitted to read this long novel to the jury, and makes evident that even assuming great literary excellence, artistic work and an compelling moral lesson in the story, there is nothing essential to the history of the life of its principal character that would be lost if these passages were omitted which the jury found were obscene, indecent, and manifestly tending to corrupt the morals of youth.

It is evident the court in the exercise of its discretion, had the authority to exclude the oral evidence of the theme of the story contained in "An American Tragedy." The seller of the book which contains passages offensive to the statute has no right to assume that children to whom the book might come would not read the obnoxious passages, or if they should read them would continue to read on until the evil effects of the obscene passages were weakened or dissipated with the tragic denouement of the tale.

Delacey was found guilty of selling a copy of "Lady Chatterley's Lover" to a Watch and Ward agent, on Nov. 24, by Judge Stone in Cambridge court. The justice at that time denounced men who sold such literature as "in the same class as men who prostitute women." He termed the "book in question" the vilest he had seen in his 25 years on the bench. The trial of the case was notable for the short shrift and verbal lashings given the Watch and Ward by the prosecuting attorney, Robert T. Bushnell.

The sale of "An American Tragedy" was made by Friede in a test case of the Boston book ban on April 16, 1927. He was convicted by a jury in Suffolk superior court two years later and fined $300. Judge Hays refused to grant the prosecution's plea for a jail sentence. Clarence Darrow, noted criminal lawyer, pleaded portions of the case and Friede appealed the fine.

Boston Transcript

324 WASHINGTON STREET, BOSTON, MASS.

(Entered at the Post Office, Boston, Mass., as Second Class Mail Matter)

WEDNESDAY, MAY 28, 1930

The Book Cases

One thing stands out clearly in the Supreme Court's decision of the "An American Tragedy" case and that is that it was a wise move on the part of those opposed to censorship to make their recent fight before the Legislature on the grounds that it is impossible to judge a book by isolated parts. For Judge Pierce's decision reveals that, although only certain passages were offered in evidence, the Supreme Court, in order to reach a finding upholding the trial judge, was forced to "a careful reading of this compact book of more than 800 pages, which was a part of the record" but which the jury never saw and which the Supreme Court now finds would have been "impracticable" for the jury to have seen. Again in the Dunster House case the Supreme Court reaches its conclusions "upon a full reading of the book." If the supreme tribunal must read the entire book to come to its decisions, why should not the jury and the trial judge be so required? Undoubtedly the amended law passed this year, which forbids the sale of any book "which is obscene, etc.," will necessitate such a decision when it is tested before the high court. Both of the defendants in these cases were found guilty under a law now no longer on the statute books.

It is evident that the belief of the public is that a book should be judged as a whole and not by isolated parts, else the present amendment would not have been passed. Because of this and because of the fact that public opinion has endorsed the condemnation of the methods of prosecution as publicly made by the trial judge, the district attorney, and the attorney for the defense, would it not be the wise and generous thing for Governor Allen to exercise his executive powers and grant clemency to James A. Delacey, who is faced with the odium of a term in jail? We hold no brief for the book, which was admittedly obscene even before so found by the court, but a high sense of justice would seem to admit that Mr. Delacey should not go to jail.

Watch and Ward Methods Upheld by Supreme Court

Finds No Evidence of Entrapment and Reaffirms Sentence of Delacey, Dunster House Proprietor—Society Issues Proctor Report—"American Tragedy" Found Obscene

THE long awaited statement of defense of its methods in the Dunster House Book case came today from the Watch and Ward Society, closely on the heels of the decision of the Supreme Court reaffirming the sentence and fine which James A. Delacey, proprietor of the bookshop, received for selling a copy of "Lady Chatterley's Lover" to an agent of the society. The report was prepared by Thomas W. Proctor, as paid counsel for the society. In this report strong defense is made of the society's method, based upon the decision of the Supreme Court, in which denial that Delacey was entrapped by agents of the society is made. The Watch and Ward, in its statement, says that the unanimous decision of the court, "effectively disposes of the widespread criticism directed against the methods of the Watch and Ward in procuring evidence upon which Mr. Delacey was convicted."

Not only did the Supreme Court find Delacey guilty, but it also found that Donald S. Friede of New York, who sold a copy of "An American Tragedy" to Lieutenant Hines of the Boston police, was guilty of selling an obscene book. Friede had appealed the finding of Judge Hayes in Superior Court. He was fined $100 for his offense. Delacey was fined $500 and sentenced to a month's imprisonment.

Watch and Ward Statement
The statement of the Watch and Ward Society in defense of its actions in prosecuting Delacey follows in full:
"In its decision the facts in the case so far as they affect the society are stated by the court in the following language:
"An investigator for the Watch and Ward Society, a private association, on Oct. 29 went to the book shop of this defendant, its manager, to ascertain if a copy or copies of the book in question were there kept for sale and, if such were the fact, to procure a copy for the purpose of prosecution. He was told by the clerk who waited upon him that the book which he described was not carried in stock; that they did not consider it advisable to carry it in stock, but that, if he wanted it, they would try to get it if he would give an order and that the price would be $15. The next day the investigator returned to the shop and told the clerk he would be willing to order the book; he there saw the defendant who said to the clerk, 'Take his name and address and we will try to get it for him.' He gave as his name his first and middle names. He did not give his full name because he didn't want them to know or tie him up with the Watch and Ward Society. He concealed his connection with the society so that the clerk and the manager would go through with the sale."

Defendant Not an Agent
"The talk of the investigator at the first interview with the clerk was to the effect that he was interested in books—he intended to intimate that he was a book buyer and was in that store as an ordinary person really interested in books. He was in fact interested in prohibited literature with an intent to find out whether the clerk and the manager would sell him the prohibited book.
"Later in the same month the investigator learned by telephone from the manager that he had received the book and on Oct. 30, 1929, the book was delivered to him by the clerk on the payment of $15. It is the contention of the defendant that on the facts disclosed in the bill of exceptions there was no sale of the book; that is, that the defendant acted as an agent in procuring it for the investigator. This contention does not merit serious consideration. The contentions upon which the defendant most earnestly relies are found in his requests for rulings numbered 1A and 2A. These requests sought a ruling that the defendant is not guilty because he was entrapped by the agents of the Watch and Ward Society. After citing authorities relied upon by the defendant the court proceeds:

Desired Gain; Not Entrapped
"Assuming that the doctrine of entrapment, as above stated, is not limited to cases where the entrapment is done or procured to be done by public officers, we feel that the facts in this case do not show that the defendant, within the principle decided, was not one who prior to the defense charged had never conceived any intention of committing the offense prosecuted or any such offense in violation of G. L., ch. 272, sec. 28. Indeed the evidence of the defendant himself that he had procured and sold on five different occasions to five different individuals a copy of the book in question warranted the trial judge in finding that the defendant had the intention to do what he did do without the allurements of any thing beyond the desire of gain from the sale of the book in question and other sale of the book that he was not entrapped to books and that he was not entrapped to sell this book by any decoys or false allurements of the agent of the Watch and Ward Society.
"At the trial of this case in the Superior Court, the issue of paramount importance was not the guilt or innocence of the principal defendant but the propriety of the activities of the Watch and Ward Society in procuring evidence in such cases. The defendant was denounced not only by eminent counsel for the defense but by the district attorney himself. Although the issue of entrapment was the only issue in the case as argued before the Supreme Court, it is of significance that it was not mentioned in the printed brief of the district attorney and that the case was not argued orally by the district attorney.

Society Claims Vindication
"The Watch and Ward Society has had no way to protect itself against these attacks. It could not be represented by counsel in the Superior or in the Supreme Court because it was not a party to the case. On advice of counsel, its directors have refrained from public comment on the evidence so long as the case was pending in the courts.
"Its vindication by the Supreme Court is therefore a matter of gratification to its directors.

"This decision confirms the opinion submitted to the directors by Thomas W. Proctor, Esquire, who was employed to examine the record and all available evidence for the purpose of making an impartial fact finding report to the directors on all aspects of the case affecting the society and its directors. Mr. Proctor was instructed to examine all evidence available from every source touching on all of the activities of the society and of its agents in connection with this case. His attention was especially called to persons that the book in question had been planted in the Dunster Book Shop, directly or indirectly, by employees of the society prior to its purchase by agents of the society. The instructions closed with the statement that 'the directors do not want a whitewashing report from you. They want the actual facts and all the facts as you find them.'

Praises Proctor's Report
"The society considers itself fortunate to have secured the services of Mr.

Proctor. He is recognized as one of the leaders of the bar. He is a past president of both the Boston and Massachusetts Bar Associations. He is chairman of the committee of the Boston Bar Association appointed to assist the attorney general in the Garrett inquiry. Mr. Proctor's long professional experience is believed to have especially qualified him for this inquiry. During the years of his earlier practice he was an assistant counsel of the city of Boston. As a successful trial attorney with long experience, he is believed to have exceptional qualifications for analyzing evidence and passing on the credibility of witnesses.
"Mr. Proctor's report was submitted in writing March 24. It was considered and accepted by the directors at a special meeting held March 31, and is now made public in accordance with previous announcement."

Statement of Counsel for Watch and Ward

The report of Thomas W. Proctor, who was retained by the Watch and Ward Society to study the facts in the so-called Dunster Book Shop case, is as follows:
"I was asked some time ago to examine the facts in the recent case tried in the Superior Court in Cambridge for the violation by the defendants of General Laws, Chapter 272, Section 28, and to make a report to you concerning such facts."

"Preliminary to such statement of facts it would seem under the circumstances to be not unimportant to state certain settled principles of the law of Massachusetts bearing upon the subject.
"In the first place it has long been the law of Massachusetts, speaking generally, that any person whatever (at least competent to be a witness) is a potential complainant in a criminal case. That is, any such person may lodge a complaint in the proper court against any other person, that the latter has committed an offense against the law. There has never been any requirement that a complainant must be a peace officer or policeman.
"It has also been the law for seventy-five years, as the reported cases uniformly show, that a person may apply to another to break the law, for the sole purpose of making complaint against no intention at the least to bear in mind the name of the witness for the prosecution, if by any chance the book afterward should be offered to the defendants, there was no occasion whatever to take his name and address. That is, what would have been done if the intention was to fill the order, as the witness for the prosecution claimed, was done. Then both the clerk and the principal defendant testify to the actual sale.
"The examination of the principal defendant on this point by the District Attorney was:

Q.—After all, you did at least through your clerk sell this book to the witness for the prosecution, did you not?
A.—Do you call that a sale?
Q.—Just let's trace it down. He gave you $15?
A.—Yes.
Q.—Previous to that the book was yours, wasn't it?
A.—Yes.
Q.—You handed the book to him?
A.—Yes.
Q.—In exchange for his $15 he got the book?
A.—Yes.
Q.—And he walked out with it?
A.—Yes.
"The clerk testified: 'Around the first of November I was in the office working at the time and I heard some one come in and it was the witness for the prosecution. He was alone. I greeted him and asked him if I could help him and he said yes, that he had come for the book in question. I said, 'I told you that we didn't have the book,' and he said, 'Yes, but I have been talking to the principal defendant and he has gotten a copy of the book for me.' So I said, 'Just a minute' and I went into the office and I told the principal defendant that this old man was out there and seemed to think he had a copy of the book for him; and the principal defendant says 'I have,' and got out of the chair and took the book from a drawer or a shelf in the office. I don't know where, and walked out and handed it to the witness for the prosecution and then he went into the other room. (The witness for the prosecution) was looking through the book in question and he asked me if I had read it, and I told him 'No' and after glancing through it he said it was the book he wanted. So I asked him if I could wrap it up for him and he said 'Yes,' so he handed me the book and $15 and I went in the office and he followed me into the office, and while I was wrapping it up he asked me if he could have a receipt for it and I couldn't give him a receipt for it and we didn't give a receipt for cash sales; so he didn't press the matter any further, but just thanked me and walked out with the package."

"In August, 1929, as he said, he had procured for persons who had asked him to do so, five copies of the book in question which were shipped to him C. O. D. paying for the five the sum of $25. He was then familiar, he said, with the reviews of the book, so that he knew the substance of it. He testified that he could not defend the stuff within the covers of the book. He said, he said, these five copies to five different persons for $15 apiece, making a profit of $10 on each book. This amount of profit, he said, he did not make on ordinary books.

"About October 11, 1929, the secretary of the New England Watch and Ward Society received a communication from the secretary of the New York Society for the Suppression of Vice, to the effect that the principal defendant's book shop had bought five copies of the book in question. The secretary consulted with the directors and was instructed to have an investigation made. He also consulted counsel on the subject. Consequently on October 15, 1929, agents of the society proceeded to the store of the principal defendant. A sale of the book in question was made to the witness for the prosecution for $15 on Oct. 30, 1929.
"In considering this part of the matter there are two questions. The first is whether an offense was committed. All three, the witness for the prosecution, the clerk and the principal defendant agree that the principal defendant said, 'Take his name and address.' The witness for the prosecution said, the principal defendant added, 'We will try and get it for him.' This is denied by the other two.
"It is clear, however, that if there were on the part of the defendants no intention to try to procure the book, or no intention at the least to bear in mind the name of the witness for the prosecution, if by any chance the book afterward should be offered to the defendants, there was no occasion whatever to take his name and address. That is, what would have been done if the intention was to fill the order, as the witness for the prosecution claimed, was done. Then both the clerk and the principal defendant testify to the actual sale.
"The examination of the principal defendant on this point by the District Attorney was:

Q.—After all, you did at least through your clerk sell this book to the witness for the prosecution, did you not?
A.—Do you call that a sale?
Q.—Just let's trace it down. He gave you $15?
A.—Yes.
Q.—Previous to that the book was yours, wasn't it?
A.—Yes.
Q.—You handed the book to him?
A.—Yes.
Q.—In exchange for his $15 he got the book?
A.—Yes.
Q.—And he walked out with it?
A.—Yes.
"The clerk testified: 'Around the first of November I was in the office working at the time and I heard some one come in and it was the witness for the prosecution. He was alone. I greeted him and asked him if I could help him and he said yes, that he had come for the book in question. I said, 'I told you that we didn't have the book,' and he said, 'Yes, but I have been talking to the principal defendant and he has gotten a copy of the book for me.' So I said, 'Just a minute' and I went into the office and I told the principal defendant that this old man was out there and seemed to think he had a copy of the book for him; and the principal defendant says 'I have,' and got out of the chair and took the book from a drawer or a shelf in the office. I don't know where, and walked out and handed it to the witness for the prosecution and then he went into the other room. (The witness for the prosecution) was looking through the book in question

Nature of Book Admitted

"The character of the book—that was the subject of the inquiry—was conceded on all hands plainly to be within the prohibition of the statute against the sale of obscene publication.
"The principal defendant as appeared from his testimony was a man of over forty years of age; he had been from 1915 to 1920 assistant manager of a book store in another State and the manager of the same store from 1920 to July, 1927, when he came to Cambridge and undertook the management of a book store in that place, where he had remained, dealing, as he testified, with the faculty, with book collectors and other literary persons.

"In August, 1929, as he said, he had procured for persons who had asked him to do so, five copies of the book in question which were shipped to him C. O. D. paying for the five the sum of $25. He was then familiar, he said, with the reviews of the book, so that he knew the substance of it. He testified that he could not defend the stuff within the covers of the book. He said, he said, these five copies to five different persons for $15 apiece, making a profit of $10 on each book. This amount of profit, he said, he did not make on ordinary books.

"About October 11, 1929, the secretary of the New England Watch and Ward Society received a communication from the secretary of the New York Society for the Suppression of Vice, to the effect that the principal defendant's book shop had bought five copies of the book in question. The secretary consulted with the directors and was instructed to have an investigation made. He also consulted counsel on the subject. Consequently on October 15, 1929, agents of the society proceeded to the store of the principal defendant. A sale of the book in question was made to the witness for the prosecution for $15 on Oct. 30, 1929.

"In considering this part of the matter there are two questions. The first is whether an offense was committed. All three, the witness for the prosecution, the clerk and the principal defendant agree that the principal defendant said, 'Take his name and address.' The witness for the prosecution said, the principal defendant added, 'We will try and get it for him.' This is denied by the other two.
"It is clear, however, that if there were on the part of the defendants no intention to try to procure the book, or no intention at the least to bear in mind the name of the witness for the prosecution, if by any chance the book afterward should be offered to the defendants, there was no occasion whatever to take his name and address. That is, what would have been done if the intention was to fill the order, as the witness for the prosecution claimed, was done. Then both the clerk and the principal defendant testify to the actual sale.
"The examination of the principal defendant on this point by the District Attorney was:

Q.—After all, you did at least through your clerk sell this book to the witness for the prosecution, did you not?
A.—Do you call that a sale?
Q.—Just let's trace it down. He gave you $15?
A.—Yes.
Q.—Previous to that the book was yours, wasn't it?
A.—Yes.
Q.—You handed the book to him?
A.—Yes.
Q.—In exchange for his $15 he got the book?
A.—Yes.
Q.—And he walked out with it?
A.—Yes.
"The clerk testified: 'Around the first of November I was in the office working at the time and I heard some one come in and it was the witness for the prosecution. He was alone. I greeted him and asked him if I could help him and he said yes, that he had come for the book in question. I said, 'I told you that we didn't have the book,' and he said, 'Yes, but I have been talking to the principal defendant and he has gotten a copy of the book for me.' So I said, 'Just a minute' and I went into the office and I told the principal defendant that this old man was out there and seemed to think he had a copy of the book for him; and the principal defendant says 'I have,' and got out of the chair and took the book from a drawer or a shelf in the office. I don't know where, and walked out and handed it to the witness for the prosecution and then he went into the other room. (The witness for the prosecution) was looking through the book in question

and he asked me if I had read it, and I told him 'No' and after glancing through it he said it was the book he wanted. So I asked him if I could wrap it up for him and he said 'Yes,' so he handed me the book and $15 and I went in the office and he followed me into the office, and while I was wrapping it up he asked me if he could have a receipt for it and I couldn't give him a receipt for it and we didn't give a receipt for cash sales; so he didn't press the matter any further, but just thanked me and walked out with the package."

"In August, 1929, as he said, he had procured for persons who had asked him to do so, five copies of the book in question which were shipped to him C. O. D. paying for the five the sum of $25. He was then familiar, he said, with the reviews of the book, so that he knew the substance of it. He testified that he could not defend the stuff within the covers of the book. He said, he said, these five copies to five different persons for $15 apiece, making a profit of $10 on each book. This amount of profit, he said, he did not make on ordinary books.

"About October 11, 1929, the secretary of the New England Watch and Ward Society received a communication from the secretary of the New York Society for the Suppression of Vice, to the effect that the principal defendant's book shop had bought five copies of the book in question. The secretary consulted with the directors and was instructed to have an investigation made. He also consulted counsel on the subject. Consequently on October 15, 1929, agents of the society proceeded to the store of the principal defendant. A sale of the book in question was made to the witness for the prosecution for $15 on Oct. 30, 1929.
"In considering this part of the matter there are two questions. The first is whether an offense was committed. All three, the witness for the prosecution, the clerk and the principal defendant agree that the principal defendant said, 'Take his name and address.' The witness for the prosecution said, the principal defendant added, 'We will try and get it for him.' This is denied by the other two.
"It is clear, however, that if there were on the part of the defendants no intention to try to procure the book, or no intention at the least to bear in mind the name of the witness for the prosecution, if by any chance the book afterward should be offered to the defendants, there was no occasion whatever to take his name and address. That is, what would have been done if the intention was to fill the order, as the witness for the prosecution claimed, was done. Then both the clerk and the principal defendant testify to the actual sale.
"The examination of the principal defendant on this point by the District Attorney was:

Q.—After all, you did at least through your clerk sell this book to the witness for the prosecution, did you not?
A.—Do you call that a sale?
Q.—Just let's trace it down. He gave you $15?
A.—Yes.
Q.—Previous to that the book was yours, wasn't it?
A.—Yes.
Q.—You handed the book to him?
A.—Yes.
Q.—In exchange for his $15 he got the book?
A.—Yes.
Q.—And he walked out with it?
A.—Yes.
"The clerk testified: 'Around the first of November I was in the office working at the time and I heard some one come in and it was the witness for the prosecution. He was alone. I greeted him and asked him if I could help him and he said yes, that he had come for the book in question. I said, 'I told you that we didn't have the book,' and he said, 'Yes, but I have been talking to the principal defendant and he has gotten a copy of the book for me.' So I said, 'Just a minute' and I went into the office and I told the principal defendant that this old man was out there and seemed to think he had a copy of the book for him; and the principal defendant says 'I have,' and got out of the chair and took the book from a drawer or a shelf in the office. I don't know where, and walked out and handed it to the witness for the prosecution and then he went into the other room. (The witness for the prosecution) was looking through the book in question

and he asked me if I had read it, and I told him 'No' and after glancing through it he said it was the book he wanted. So I asked him if I could wrap it up for him and he said 'Yes,' so he handed me the book and $15 and I went in the office and he followed me into the office, and while I was wrapping it up he asked me if he could have a receipt for it and I couldn't give him a receipt for it and we didn't give a receipt for cash sales; so he didn't press the matter any further, but just thanked me and walked out with the package."

"In August, 1929, as he said, he had procured for persons who had asked him to do so, five copies of the book in question which were shipped to him C. O. D. paying for the five the sum of $25. He was then familiar, he said, with the reviews of the book, so that he knew the substance of it. He testified that he could not defend the stuff within the covers of the book. He said, he said, these five copies to five different persons for $15 apiece, making a profit of $10 on each book. This amount of profit, he said, he did not make on ordinary books.

"About October 11, 1929, the secretary of the New England Watch and Ward Society received a communication from the secretary of the New York Society for the Suppression of Vice, to the effect that the principal defendant's book shop had bought five copies of the book in question. The secretary consulted with the directors and was instructed to have an investigation made. He also consulted counsel on the subject. Consequently on October 15, 1929, agents of the society proceeded to the store of the principal defendant. A sale of the book in question was made to the witness for the prosecution for $15 on Oct. 30, 1929.

"In considering this part of the matter there are two questions. The first is whether an offense was committed. All three, the witness for the prosecution, the clerk and the principal defendant agree that the principal defendant said, 'Take his name and address.' The witness for the prosecution said, the principal defendant added, 'We will try and get it for him.' This is denied by the other two.
"It is clear, however, that if there were on the part of the defendants no intention to try to procure the book, or no intention at the least to bear in mind the name of the witness for the prosecution, if by any chance the book afterward should be offered to the defendants, there was no occasion whatever to take his name and address. That is, what would have been done if the intention was to fill the order, as the witness for the prosecution claimed, was done. Then both the clerk and the principal defendant testify to the actual sale.
"The examination of the principal defendant on this point by the District Attorney was:

Q.—After all, you did at least through your clerk sell this book to the witness for the prosecution, did you not?
A.—Do you call that a sale?
Q.—Just let's trace it down. He gave you $15?
A.—Yes.
Q.—Previous to that the book was yours, wasn't it?
A.—Yes.
Q.—You handed the book to him?
A.—Yes.
Q.—In exchange for his $15 he got the book?
A.—Yes.
Q.—And he walked out with it?
A.—Yes.
"The clerk testified: 'Around the first of November I was in the office working at the time and I heard some one come in and it was the witness for the prosecution. He was alone. I greeted him and asked him if I could help him and he said yes, that he had come for the book in question. I said, 'I told you that we didn't have the book,' and he said, 'Yes, but I have been talking to the principal defendant and he has gotten a copy of the book for me.' So I said, 'Just a minute' and I went into the office and I told the principal defendant that this old man was out there and seemed to think he had a copy of the book for him; and the principal defendant says 'I have,' and got out of the chair and took the book from a drawer or a shelf in the office. I don't know where, and walked out and handed it to the witness for the prosecution and then he went into the other room. (The witness for the prosecution) was looking through the book in question

and he asked me if I had read it, and I told him 'No' and after glancing through it he said it was the book he wanted. So I asked him if I could wrap it up for him and he said 'Yes,' so he handed me the book and $15 and I went in the office and he followed me into the office, and while I was wrapping it up he asked me if he could have a receipt for it and I couldn't give him a receipt for it and we didn't give a receipt for cash sales; so he didn't press the matter any further, but just thanked me and walked out with the package."

"In August, 1929, as he said, he had procured for persons who had asked him to do so, five copies of the book in question which were shipped to him C. O. D. paying for the five the sum of $25. He was then familiar, he said, with the reviews of the book, so that he knew the substance of it. He testified that he could not defend the stuff within the covers of the book. He said, he said, these five copies to five different persons for $15 apiece, making a profit of $10 on each book. This amount of profit, he said, he did not make on ordinary books.

"About October 11, 1929, the secretary of the New England Watch and Ward Society received a communication from the secretary of the New York Society for the Suppression of Vice, to the effect that the principal defendant's book shop had bought five copies of the book in question. The secretary consulted with the directors and was instructed to have an investigation made. He also consulted counsel on the subject. Consequently on October 15, 1929, agents of the society proceeded to the store of the principal defendant. A sale of the book in question was made to the witness for the prosecution for $15 on Oct. 30, 1929.
"In considering this part of the matter there are two questions. The first is whether an offense was committed. All three, the witness for the prosecution, the clerk and the principal defendant agree that the principal defendant said, 'Take his name and address.' The witness for the prosecution said, the principal defendant added, 'We will try and get it for him.' This is denied by the other two.
"It is clear, however, that if there were on the part of the defendants no intention to try to procure the book, or no intention at the least to bear in mind the name of the witness for the prosecution, if by any chance the book afterward should be offered to the defendants, there was no occasion whatever to take his name and address. That is, what would have been done if the intention was to fill the order, as the witness for the prosecution claimed, was done. Then both the clerk and the principal defendant testify to the actual sale.
"The examination of the principal defendant on this point by the District Attorney was:

Q.—After all, you did at least through your clerk sell this book to the witness for the prosecution, did you not?
A.—Do you call that a sale?
Q.—Just let's trace it down. He gave you $15?
A.—Yes.
Q.—Previous to that the book was yours, wasn't it?
A.—Yes.
Q.—You handed the book to him?
A.—Yes.
Q.—In exchange for his $15 he got the book?
A.—Yes.
Q.—And he walked out with it?
A.—Yes.
"The clerk testified: 'Around the first of November I was in the office working at the time and I heard some one come in and it was the witness for the prosecution. He was alone. I greeted him and asked him if I could help him and he said yes, that he had come for the book in question. I said, 'I told you that we didn't have the book,' and he said, 'Yes, but I have been talking to the principal defendant and he has gotten a copy of the book for me.' So I said, 'Just a minute' and I went into the office and I told the principal defendant that this old man was out there and seemed to think he had a copy of the book for him; and the principal defendant says 'I have,' and got out of the chair and took the book from a drawer or a shelf in the office. I don't know where, and walked out and handed it to the witness for the prosecution and then he went into the other room. (The witness for the prosecution) was looking through the book in question

and he asked me if I had read it, and I told him 'No' and after glancing through it he said it was the book he wanted. So I asked him if I could wrap it up for him and he said 'Yes,' so he handed me the book and $15 and I went in the office and he followed me into the office, and while I was wrapping it up he asked me if he could have a receipt for it and I couldn't give him a receipt for it and we didn't give a receipt for cash sales; so he didn't press the matter any further, but just thanked me and walked out with the package."

"In August, 1929, as he said, he had procured for persons who had asked him to do so, five copies of the book in question which were shipped to him C. O. D. paying for the five the sum of $25. He was then familiar, he said, with the reviews of the book, so that he knew the substance of it. He testified that he could not defend the stuff within the covers of the book. He said, he said, these five copies to five different persons for $15 apiece, making a profit of $10 on each book. This amount of profit, he said, he did not make on ordinary books.

"About October 11, 1929, the secretary of the New England Watch and Ward Society received a communication from the secretary of the New York Society for the Suppression of Vice, to the effect that the principal defendant's book shop had bought five copies of the book in question. The secretary consulted with the directors and was instructed to have an investigation made. He also consulted counsel on the subject. Consequently on October 15, 1929, agents of the society proceeded to the store of the principal defendant. A sale of the book in question was made to the witness for the prosecution for $15 on Oct. 30, 1929.

"In considering this part of the matter there are two questions. The first is whether an offense was committed. All three, the witness for the prosecution, the clerk and the principal defendant agree that the principal defendant said, 'Take his name and address.' The witness for the prosecution said, the principal defendant added, 'We will try and get it for him.' This is denied by the other two.
"It is clear, however, that if there were on the part of the defendants no intention to try to procure the book, or no intention at the least to bear in mind the name of the witness for the prosecution, if by any chance the book afterward should be offered to the defendants, there was no occasion whatever to take his name and address. That is, what would have been done if the intention was to fill the order, as the witness for the prosecution claimed, was done. Then both the clerk and the principal defendant testify to the actual sale.
"The examination of the principal defendant on this point by the District Attorney was:

Q.—After all, you did at least through your clerk sell this book to the witness for the prosecution, did you not?
A.—Do you call that a sale?
Q.—Just let's trace it down. He gave you $15?
A.—Yes.
Q.—Previous to that the book was yours, wasn't it?
A.—Yes.
Q.—You handed the book to him?
A.—Yes.
Q.—In exchange for his $15 he got the book?
A.—Yes.
Q.—And he walked out with it?
A.—Yes.
"The clerk testified: 'Around the first of November I was in the office working at the time and I heard some one come in and it was the witness for the prosecution. He was alone. I greeted him and asked him if I could help him and he said yes, that he had come for the book in question. I said, 'I told you that we didn't have the book,' and he said, 'Yes, but I have been talking to the principal defendant and he has gotten a copy of the book for me.' So I said, 'Just a minute' and I went into the office and I told the principal defendant that this old man was out there and seemed to think he had a copy of the book for him; and the principal defendant says 'I have,' and got out of the chair and took the book from a drawer or a shelf in the office. I don't know where, and walked out and handed it to the witness for the prosecution and then he went into the other room. (The witness for the prosecution) was looking through the book in question

and he asked me if I had read it, and I told him 'No' and after glancing through it he said it was the book he wanted. So I asked him if I could wrap it up for him and he said 'Yes,' so he handed me the book and $15 and I went in the office and he followed me into the office, and while I was wrapping it up he asked me if he could have a receipt for it and I couldn't give him a receipt for it and we didn't give a receipt for cash sales; so he didn't press the matter any further, but just thanked me and walked out with the package."

"In August, 1929, as he said, he had procured for persons who had asked him to do so, five copies of the book in question which were shipped to him C. O. D. paying for the five the sum of $25. He was then familiar, he said, with the reviews of the book, so that he knew the substance of it. He testified that he could not defend the stuff within the covers of the book. He said, he said, these five copies to five different persons for $15 apiece, making a profit of $10 on each book. This amount of profit, he said, he did not make on ordinary books.

"About October 11, 1929, the secretary of the New England Watch and Ward Society received a communication from the secretary of the New York Society for the Suppression of Vice, to the effect that the principal defendant's book shop had bought five copies of the book in question. The secretary consulted with the directors and was instructed to have an investigation made. He also consulted counsel on the subject. Consequently on October 15, 1929, agents of the society proceeded to the store of the principal defendant. A sale of the book in question was made to the witness for the prosecution for $15 on Oct. 30, 1929.

"In considering this part of the matter there are two questions. The first is whether an offense was committed. All three, the witness for the prosecution, the clerk and the principal defendant agree that the principal defendant said, 'Take his name and address.' The witness for the prosecution said, the principal defendant added, 'We will try and get it for him.' This is denied by the other two.
"It is clear, however, that if there were on the part of the defendants no intention to try to procure the book, or no intention at the least to bear in mind the name of the witness for the prosecution, if by any chance the book afterward should be offered to the defendants, there was no occasion whatever to take his name and address. That is, what would have been done if the intention was to fill the order, as the witness for the prosecution claimed, was done. Then both the clerk and the principal defendant testify to the actual sale.
"The examination of the principal defendant on this point by the District Attorney was:

Q.—After all, you did at least through your clerk sell this book to the witness for the prosecution, did you not?
A.—Do you call that a sale?
Q.—Just let's trace it down. He gave you $15?
A.—Yes.
Q.—Previous to that the book was yours, wasn't it?
A.—Yes.
Q.—You handed the book to him?
A.—Yes.
Q.—In exchange for his $15 he got the book?
A.—Yes.
Q.—And he walked out with it?
A.—Yes.
"The clerk testified: 'Around the first of November I was in the office working at the time and I heard some one come in and it was the witness for the prosecution. He was alone. I greeted him and asked him if I could help him and he said yes, that he had come for the book in question. I said, 'I told you that we didn't have the book,' and he said, 'Yes, but I have been talking to the principal defendant and he has gotten a copy of the book for me.' So I said, 'Just a minute' and I went into the office and I told the principal defendant that this old man was out there and seemed to think he had a copy of the book for him; and the principal defendant says 'I have,' and got out of the chair and took the book from a drawer or a shelf in the office. I don't know where, and walked out and handed it to the witness for the prosecution and then he went into the other room. (The witness for the prosecution) was looking through the book in question

and he asked me if I had read it, and I told him 'No' and after glancing through it he said it was the book he wanted. So I asked him if I could wrap it up for him and he said 'Yes,' so he handed me the book and $15 and I went in the office and he followed me into the office, and while I was wrapping it up he asked me if he could have a receipt for it and I couldn't give him a receipt for it and we didn't give a receipt for cash sales; so he didn't press the matter any further, but just thanked me and walked out with the package."

"In August, 1929, as he said, he had procured for persons who had asked him to do so, five copies of the book in question which were shipped to him C. O. D. paying for the five the sum of $25. He was then familiar, he said, with the reviews of the book, so that he knew the substance of it. He testified that he could not defend the stuff within the covers of the book. He said, he said, these five copies to five different persons for $15 apiece, making a profit of $10 on each book. This amount of profit, he said, he did not make on ordinary books.

"About October 11, 1929, the secretary of the New England Watch and Ward Society received a communication from the secretary of the New York Society for the Suppression of Vice, to the effect that the principal defendant's book shop had bought five copies of the book in question. The secretary consulted with the directors and was instructed to have an investigation made. He also consulted counsel on the subject. Consequently on October 15, 1929, agents of the society proceeded to the store of the principal defendant. A sale of the book in question was made to the witness for the prosecution for $15 on Oct. 30, 1929.

"In considering this part of the matter there are two questions. The first is whether an offense was committed. All three, the witness for the prosecution, the clerk and the principal defendant agree that the principal defendant said, 'Take his name and address.' The witness for the prosecution said, the principal defendant added, 'We will try and get it for him.' This is denied by the other two.
"It is clear, however, that if there were on the part of the defendants no intention to try to procure the book, or no intention at the least to bear in mind the name of the witness for the prosecution, if by any chance the book afterward should be offered to the defendants, there was no occasion whatever to take his name and address. That is, what would have been done if the intention was to fill the order, as the witness for the prosecution claimed, was done. Then both the clerk and the principal defendant testify to the actual sale.
"The examination of the principal defendant on this point by the District Attorney was:

Q.—After all, you did at least through your clerk sell this book to the witness for the prosecution, did you not?
A.—Do you call that a sale?
Q.—Just let's trace it down. He gave you $15?
A.—Yes.
Q.—Previous to that the book was yours, wasn't it?
A.—Yes.
Q.—You handed the book to him?
A.—Yes.
Q.—In exchange for his $15 he got the book?
A.—Yes.
Q.—And he walked out with it?
A.—Yes.
"The clerk testified: 'Around the first of November I was in the office working at the time and I heard some one come in and it was the witness for the prosecution. He was alone. I greeted him and asked him if I could help him and he said yes, that he had come for the book in question. I said, 'I told you that we didn't have the book,' and he said, 'Yes, but I have been talking to the principal defendant and he has gotten a copy of the book for me.' So I said, 'Just a minute' and I went into the office and I told the principal defendant that this old man was out there and seemed to think he had a copy of the book for him; and the principal defendant says 'I have,' and got out of the chair and took the book from a drawer or a shelf in the office. I don't know where, and walked out and handed it to the witness for the prosecution and then he went into the other room. (The witness for the prosecution)

THE BOSTON HERALD

FRIDAY, JUNE 6, 1930

THE WATCH AND WARD

In following the recommendation of Dist. Atty. Bushnell and revoking the sentence imposed on James A. DeLacey, Judge James H. Sisk of the superior court had a sympathetic, although invisible, brother on the bench. Judge Frederick W. Fosdick of the superior court, who had already reduced the sentence passed in a lower court, authorized the district attorney to quote him to Judge Sisk as favoring the revocation. So, we have a district attorney and two superior court judges participating in a decision which fair men will read with the greatest satisfaction. Mr. DeLacey will pay a fine, as he should. He will stay out of jail, as he should.

This is the conclusion of a case which may well be the ultimate undoing of the Watch and Ward Society, a development which would not send decent men into mourning. The tactics employed in the Dunster book shop case are typical of those used in other instances—tactics which right-minded men condemn instinctively. Once again it may be suggested that, as the Watch and Ward Society has made public Thomas W. Proctor's report, the public should now be favored by the society with the letter of resignation of Dr. David D. Scannell. As an active director of the society, he had full opportunity to see the work of its agents at first hand. Why did he resign? Why is his letter withheld?

Mr. Bushnell has done the public a real service. He has lived up to the highest ideals of a district attorney, which prescribe that his first obligation is not to obtain convictions indiscriminately but to have justice dispensed evenly. The public is fortunate in having such citizens as he, Judges Fosdick and Sisk, and ex-Atty-Gen. Parker, who defended Mr. DeLacey. Here we have prosecution, administration of justice, and private performance of duty at their very best.

THE BOSTON HERALD.

FRIDAY, JUNE 6, 1930

DE LACEY JAIL TERM REVOKED; BUSHNELL FLAYS WATCH, WARD

Declares Statement on High Court Decision 'Brazen Effrontery'

BOOK SHOP MANAGER TRAPPED INTO SALE

'Not Criminal in Usual Sense'—Released on Payment of Fine

Again denouncing the Watch and Ward Society, this time for what he termed its "brazen effrontery," Dist. Atty. Bushnell of Middlesex county yesterday afternoon in superior criminal court at East Cambridge, brought about revocation of the jail sentence imposed on James A. DeLacey last winter in the noted Dunster House book shop case. Sitting quietly within the bar enclosure, former Atty-Gen. Herbert

Parker, of counsel for DeLacey, listened to Mr. Bushnell with keen attention. Later he said that he considered the district attorney's stand in the matter one of the most courageous and honest ever taken by a prosecuting officer in Massachusetts. Referring to the Watch and Ward Society, Mr. Parker said: "I never considered it as anything except something to kick out of the road as one is going by."

The proceedings required barely five minutes, and no one in the courtroom except counsel had the slightest inkling as to what was coming. DeLacey, manager of Dunster House book shop in Cambridge, which has a large patronage among Harvard faculty and students, was tried before Judge Frederick W. Fosdick last December for selling a copy of an obscene book, "Lady Chatterley's Lover." He was found guilty and sentenced to one month in the house of correction and to pay a fine of $500.

SOCIETY DENOUNCED
In imposing sentence, however, Judge Fosdick took occasion to condemn the

Frees DeLacey

JUDGE JAMES H. SISK

methods employed by the Watch and Ward Society in bringing about DeLacey's predicament. "I do think," said Judge Fosdick at the time, "that the way in which the defendant was induced to sell the book calls for every part of the condemnation that has been placed on it by counsel for either side."

Mr. Bushnell, in prosecuting the case, declared: "The more I consider this case, the more I feel that it is an excellent illustration, the best I have seen, of the futility of the existence of private snooping societies." The district attorney added that if the society ever came into Middlesex county again with such tactics, he would proceed against it for criminal conspiracy.

Counsel for DeLacey carried the case to the supreme court, which recently overruled the appeal taken. This decision left DeLacey facing a month in jail, as well as the fine, and the case came before Judge James H. Sisk yesterday afternoon for disposition. Present with Mr. Parker as counsel for DeLacey was Richard C. Everts, while Mr. Bushnell appeared for the state. DeLacey and his wife were seated on one of the spectators' benches in the big room, which was packed at the time by a sea of the arraignment of many defendants recently indicted.

BRAZEN EFFRONTERY
When his case was called DeLacey stepped forward, and Dist. Atty. Bushnell addressed the court, saying:

This defendant was sentenced on Dec. 20, 1929, execution being stayed pending the exceptions before the supreme court. The exceptions were overruled on May 26, 1930. The case was on for disposition Monday, June 2, and continued to today at the request of and for the convenience of counsel for the defendant.

The decision of the supreme court

Every lawyer familiar with the facts and issues involved knew that the exceptions would be overruled, because it was admitted that this defendant did sell an obscene book. The able attorney for the defendant had but a forlorn hope if there was any validity to the exceptions to Judge Fosdick's ruling.

When the supreme court decision came down, the Watch and Ward Society issued a statement proclaiming that the opinion vindicated their solicitation to this young man to commit a crime. This is the most brazen piece of effrontery that has yet appeared in these proceedings. Every lawyer and most laymen know that the supreme court decides legal issues and was not at all concerned with the Watch and Ward Society. Yet these people have not had the decency, the manliness or the courage to come forward and acknowledge that they made a mistake. If they had done this, those members of the public who are just as much interested in keeping pornographic literature out of the hands of their children as are any members of the Watch and Ward, might well have taken a more charitable view toward this organization.

FELL INTO TRAP

The question before us, however, is whether the public interest requires a jail sentence. I feel that it does not and have so felt from the start. Legally, this defendant stands on no different footing than any other first offender.

If this defendant had been found guilty of selling the book in question to young people or to a youthful person, I should unhesitatingly recommend a jail sentence. There is not the slightest evidence of this, however, and the facts are quite the contrary. He was managing a reputable bookshop, with a legitimate trade, patronized by members of a college faculty.

The Watch and Ward Society purposely sent a mature man to procure the sale. This proved that they knew the defendant would not sell to a youthful customer.

We have been impressed by the defendant's conduct since the trial. If he had been the type who needed imprisonment as correctional treatment, he would have made a martyr out of himself. He has had plenty of opportunities. He has steadfastly rejected the attempts of others to project himself into the limelight. Instead, he has maintained a dignified demeanor and has gone quietly about his work.

The defendant did sell this book after repeated solicitations by the Watch and Ward Society. He made a mistake, but he is not a criminal in the usual sense of the word. He is entirely without any previous contact with the courts. There is not the slightest ground for believing that he will offend again.

Taking all the circumstances of this case into consideration, the manner in which the defendant was pursued by the Watch and Ward until he had committed this crime and his previous good record, I feel that the ends of justice do not require the imposition of a jail sentence. I therefore recommend that that portion of the sentence calling for confinement in the house of correction be remitted.

I would have hesitated taking this action lest it be construed as an implied criticism of one of the finest judges in Massachusetts. Yesterday, however, I talked with Judge Fosdick and I am authorized by him to state to your honor that such a disposition meets with his full approval.

Without comment Judge Sisk immediately accepted the recommendation made by Mr. Bushnell. DeLacey was released on payment of the fine, and the last chapter of the Dunster House book case had been recorded.

THE BOSTON HERALD

THURSDAY, JUNE 12, 1930

OUR MAIL BAG

ANSWER TO MR. ROTHWELL
To the Editor of The Herald:

Certain rhetorical questions in Mr. Bernard Rothwell's letter dated July 9 challenge analysis, and certain implications therein should be immediately refuted in the interest of truth. For although the case of the Commonwealth vs. De Lacey of the Dunster House bookshop is now a cause jure, unfortunately the case of the People vs. the Watch and Ward Society is not.

Mr. Rothwell asks: "Did the district attorney not know that the defendant before Judge Stone denied under oath ever having sold a copy of the unspeakably obscene book complained of?" Mr. Bushnell did not know this, nor does Mr. Rothwell, nor does anybody else. Mr. De Lacey made no such denial.

Mr. Rothwell asks, concerning five copies sold by Mr. De Lacey: "Did the district attorney not know that the defendant paid $5 for each one of these five copies and sold them to five different persons at $15 apiece?" Mr. Bushnell did know this admitted fact and specifically referred to it in his closing address to Judge Sisk.

Mr. Bushnell also knew that of the five copies three were sold to officers of instruction in Harvard University, one to a respected member of the Massachusetts bar and one to a collector of first editions of D. H. Lawrence. Mr. Bushnell knew, in other words, that all were sold to mature and responsible persons, and not for the "corruption of youth" within the meaning of the statute. Mr. Bushnell was also at pains to assure himself, by means of personal letters from each purchaser to Mr. De Lacey's counsel, that each copy was still in the possession of its purchaser and had not been passed on for general circulation.

Mr. Bushnell, in short, as prosecuting attorney went to far more pains to get at the "watchdog" of the case than did the complainant. The Watch and Ward Society, and very obviously, the more it unfolded itself, the greater became its disgust, not with the defendant, but with the complainant.

Mr. Rothwell, referring to the testimony as to the sale of a final copy to the elderly agent provocateur of the Watch and Ward Society, asks: "Did the district attorney believe that surprising tale or expect that it would be believed by the public?" Obviously Mr. Bushnell did believe it. Mr. Rothwell has, apparently, no better case for the defense or his society than to try to make Mr. De Lacey out a liar. Mr. Bushnell had every opportunity during the two trials to judge whether or not Mr. De Lacey's testimony was credible. So had Judge Fosdick during the second trial, who approved of the district attorney's request for a remission of the jail sentence. And it is incredible that Judge Sisk would have decided as he did had there been the slightest evidence of perjury. It remains for a director of the Watch and Ward Society, after the case has been judged, to throw out such an implication.

A defence of the society in terms like these can only add to the disgust its methods have aroused in the mind of the public at large. If Mr. Rothwell will reread attentively the list published last week of the subscribers to the defence fund for Mr. De Lacey, and will realize that the subscription of each one is a protest against the methods of his society (not necessarily against its aims, he may be unwilling again to come to their defence by using the very methods which have caused that disgust.

P. de C. la Rose.
Cambridge, June 10.

THE BOSTON HERALD

THURSDAY, MAY 29, 1930

NOT A VINDICATION

The Watch and Ward Society in a formal statement affirm the "gratification" of their directors in the "vindication" they now have received from the supreme judicial court in the decision handed down on Tuesday in the Dunster Book Shop case.

The decision does not "vindicate" the society. The supreme judges were not passing upon the merits or demerits or the moral implications of the methods used by the society in obtaining the sale of the book by the shop manager as a transaction on which to base his prosecution and ultimate conviction under the censorship law. The court was passing on the legal issues involved in the manager's appeal.

Neither directly nor indirectly does the court pass any such judgment or express any such opinion as may fairly be held to "vindicate" the society. Society in general abhors the methods used by this society in particular. The court had no occasion to comment upon the views expressed by some of the ablest and most high-minded of our citizens when the case was before the superior court.

The court finds that the defendant, the Dunster Shop manager, knew the book was "not fit for publication or circulation," and that he had already sold five copies at $15 which had cost him $5 each before the sale was made to the Watch and Ward "investigator." The court states that on a full reading of the book the judges find it both as a whole and in certain passages "obscene, indecent, impure, and manifestly tending to corrupt the morals of youth." The court says the manager "knew the substance of the book" and "did not consider it fit to sell," that he "knew what he was putting out and could not defend the book." Yet he sold five copies and then one more, and the sixth was his undoing.

The court then reviews the familiar story of the Watch and Ward "investigator." The manager in his appeal cited various federal cases of entrapment in an effort to show that he would not have violated the law had he not been induced to do so by the Watch and Ward "investigator." The court does not agree to this contention. It is not the case of a man who, through entrapment, commits a crime which he never had committed before. His motive in the sixth sale was "a desire for gain." He was "not induced to sell this book by any decoys or false allurements of the agent of the Watch and Ward Society." His act cannot be defended on the ground of the use of "decoys." That, stripped of legal verbiage, is the exact meaning of the portion of the decision which is cited by the Watch and Ward as a "vindication."

It is nothing of the kind. The court simply, and so clearly that the meaning of the learned judges cannot be misunderstood, holds that the defendant cannot go free on the ground that he was "entrapped" into the sale of the book. The judges express no opinions whatever as to the methods used by the society. We have a notion that their views on that matter coincide pretty completely with the public's.

We have failed to find anything new or valuable in the report which Thomas W. Proctor, a lawyer of high standing, has made to the society in accordance with its instructions to determine whether the methods of its agents in the Dunster case were "illegal, improper or unethical." Mr. Proctor says, in brief, that a private agent has the same right as a police officer to lodge a complaint and, like a policeman, may with impunity violate the law in order to obtain evidence. He then reviews the history of the case, which he investigated, but he did not talk with the defendant. Apart from his statements that the Watch and Ward agents had the legal right to act as they acted, he does not discuss the broad questions of propriety and ethics and the wisdom of having a private agency exercise police functions. There is nothing in his memorandum which would cause Judge Fosdick, Atty-Gen. Bushnell or former Atty-Gen. Parker to modify their well known opinions of the society.

The final paragraph of Mr. Proctor's findings is that he has seen nothing detrimental to the public in the society's activities in the Dunster case, and that "in view of the established facts it is obvious that this work done by the society is work that should be continued." What established facts? Mr. Proctor cites none. He has come to a general conclusion, as far as on the basis of his examination of one case. But, on the basis of facts seen and learned at first hand, Dr. David D. Scannell resigned as director in a letter which the Watch and Ward Society still refrains from making public. As between Mr. Proctor and the Watch and Ward on one hand, and Messrs. Fosdick, Bushnell, Parker and Scannell on the other, the probability is that the public prefers the views of the latter group.

THE BOSTON HERALD

SUNDAY, DECEMBER 14, 1930

"CENSORSHIP TO DATE"

To the Editor of The Herald:
A recent Herald editorial, "Censorship to Date," which was based on an article written by us for the current issue of the Boston University Law Review, has caused some comment in the Mall Bag. In our article we contended that the changes in the statute will not alter the local censorship situation very much. We are still of that opinion.

One of the purposes of the change from a fine "and" imprisonment to a fine "or" imprisonment was to give reputable booksellers the opportunity to fight back when the sale of a worthwhile book was threatened. Many people claimed that under the old law a convicted person would have had to pay a fine and go to jail because of its mandatory provisions. We pointed out, however, that only one of the penalties was imposed, usually a fine. The prior act did not deter Mr. Mencken from fighting the Watch and Ward ban on the American Mercury in April, 1926. Nor did it frighten Upton Sinclair when "Oil" was barred. (Mr. Richard F. Fuller, in this connection, is object when he says that the clerk was found guilty by Judge Sisk. The writer of The Herald editorial was not at fault because he evidently relied on our third article for this assertion. The clerk was found guilty by Judge Sisk in the municipal court of the city of Boston. This was stated correctly in our first article "Massachusetts and Censorship," 19 B. U. L. Rev. 46. See the New York Times, June 1, 1927, p. 29, col. 3, which we referred to in a footnote; also The Boston Herald of the same date. However, this does not detract from our contention as the seller of the book did not receive both penalties.) We are unable to recall an important case in recent years where a reputable bookseller paid a fine and actually served a jail sentence.

Another reason why the change from "and" to "or" was important may be found in General Laws, Ch. 275, Sec. 11, which Martha N. Brookings evidently had in mind when she wrote her letter. This act permits the court to use discretion in all criminal cases (except one relative to pharmacists) punishable by fine and imprisonment. If the convicted person shows to the satisfaction of the judge that he has not been found guilty of a similar crime.

We differ with Mr. Fuller in his opinion on the value of the change from "containing language..." to "which is obscene." Mr. Fuller apparently overlooks the maxim of "stare decisis." If the supreme judicial court in a series of decisions decides that under the new law a book must be "considered as a whole," it cannot later interpret the same law to mean that a book may be judged by isolated passages, regardless of the prevailing opinion of the particular generation. At this point the power of the court ceases, and the duty of the Legislature begins. We merely stated that the phrase, "which is obscene," requires a test case before its exact meaning will be known.

We welcome even the slightest liberal change in the law. The members of the committee, The Herald and Transcript deserve commendation for their persistent efforts in effecting this change. But their work is not done. We are not alone in the opinion that there is much more to do. Mr. Bernard Devoto, in the September, 1930, number of The Harvard Graduates Magazine, says that "the efforts of the large committee formed to change the law under which Mr. Delaney was prosecuted came to little or nothing... Nor does the amendment change in any way the system of espionage, multiple censorship and extra legal coercion..." Mr. Morris L. Ernst, the well known New York lawyer, author and specialist on censorship, told us the same thing.

It is our opinion that the narrow standard of obscenity adopted by our court must be changed. This test goes back to a rule propounded by Lord Cockburn in a Victorian era. It starves the normal, adult reading population to prevent the possibility of corrupting one neurotic adolescent or a single depraved moron. Before the lawmakers determine the punishment of one charged with committing a crime, it seems to us that they ought to consider what constitutes a crime.

SIDNEY S. GRANT,
S. E. ANGOFF.
Boston, Dec. 8.

THE BOSTON HERALD

TUESDAY, JUNE 10, 1930

OUR MAIL BAG

FROM WATCH AND WARD DIRECTOR

To the Editor of The Herald:

Robert T. Bushnell, district-attorney for the county of Middlesex in his conduct of the case of Commonwealth vs. De Lacey, widely known as "The Dunster Bookshop Case," has, I believe, exhibited "the insolence of office" to an extent meriting public attention. He has, in my judgment, shown throughout scant regard for the dignity of his office; the decency with which it should be conducted; fairness toward those not on trial and having no opportunity to refute in open court his vicious accusations. As to the final disposition of this case, no question arises; the court undoubtedly acted wisely in accordance with its best judgment.

While in this communication I speak for myself alone and not as a director of the Watch and Ward Society, I can state positively that from first to last the society expressed no opinion as to penalty—its directors never even discussed it. In possession of the facts as disclosed at the first trial the district-attorney declared his intention to prosecute vigorously. The society, after that first trial and conviction, had no further connection with the case.

Why at that initial stage did the district-attorney fail to unearth the "hoax" of "conspiracy"? Why did he not then indict those who later, in court, he dramatically threatened with punishment? If evidence of conspiracy existed, why did he then or why does he now hesitate to make good his threat?

When did the spectre of "entrapment" loom up? The supreme court decided there had been no entrapment.

At what stage did his righteous indignation against the complainant reach the boiling point, and the phial of his wrath explode?

How account for this remarkable right-about-face? Was it the clamor of the "intelligentsia" which forms no inconsiderable percentage of his constituency—those ardent upholders of the constitution and exponents of unrestricted "liberty," regarded as "license" by those outside the cult?

Was it an urge by that other and more numerous group which, some time ago, according to press reports, he publicly referred to as "yokels without education and spirit"?

Did the district-attorney not know that the defendant, before Judge Stone, denied under oath having ever before sold a copy of the unspeakably obscene book complained of?

Did the district-attorney not know that the defendant only admitted having sold five copies of the book within five weeks previous to the sale to the complainant, after being confronted with his own receipt to the express company for them?

Did the district-attorney not know that the defendant paid $5 for each of these five copies and sold them to five different persons for $15 apiece? Did the district-attorney believe that the defendant, being in touch with so profitable a base of supply, waited some time without ordering the book and then bought it for $15 from "a young man whom he did not know" who just happened in, and later sold it to a stranger for just what it cost?

Did the district-attorney, himself, believe that surprising tale or expect that it would be believed by the "intelligentsia," the "yokels" or by the public at large?

Was the district-attorney seeking a wider stage for the display of his histrionic and vituperative capacity with its attendant publicity?

Why did the district-attorney have been as zealous in seeking to exonerate the defendant had the latter been an inconspicuous shopkeeper, remote from Harvard?

In so far as this case was concerned, Dr. Bushnell erect the flimsy structure of his first trial as it may, does not his conduct throughout this case, as revealed by the stenographic report of the trial, before Judge Fosdick, his brief and supplemental memorandum to the supreme court and his final vitriolic outburst before Judge Sisk create some doubt as to his sincerity, as well as to his conception of both the obligations and the justifiable limitations of his position? His arguments—rather his tirades—were marked by erroneous interpretation, misrepresentation, and vilification of the officers and directors of the Watch and Ward Society, men who neither covet his praise nor fear his censure.

Before charging these men with "brazen effrontery" in their interpretation of the decision of the supreme court, Mr. Bushnell would do well to read that decision more carefully. He will find then that it denies practically all of his allegations, and that if any "brazen effrontery" was shown, it was by himself and not by those whom he wantonly traduced.

The supreme court said plainly and unmistakably: That there had been no entrapment and that the defendant was not induced to sell this book by any decoys or false alluresments of the agents of the Watch and Ward Society; that the defendant had previously committed the same offence; that he knew the character of the book; that he traded it for purpose of gain.

As Dist. Atty. Bushnell apparently undertakes to interpret the decision of the supreme court of the commonwealth entirely contrary to its self-evident declaration may it not well be asked: "On what meat has this our Caesar fed that he has grown so great?"

BERNARD J. ROTHWELL.

Boston, June 9.

THE BOSTON HERALD

FRIDAY, AUGUST 8, 1930

THE WATCH AND WARD

Has the Watch and Ward Society magnanimously forgiven Judges Fosdick and Sisk of the superior court? We find no indication of them in the society's tidy little treatise of vituperation and misrepresentation regarding the Dunster House Book Shop case. The newspapers, "notably The Herald" and Daily Atty. Bushnell are assailed. There is a reference to the "sensational methods" of ex-Atty. Gen. Herbert Parker, although he is not mentioned by name. But why the discrimination in favor of the two members of the bench? Judge Fosdick had some interesting things to say about the society, and Judge Sisk revoked the sentence of Mr. De Lacey. If the pamphlet goes into a second edition, the omission should be rectified for the sake of completeness.

The "venomous" bias, prejudice, garbling, misrepresentation, absence of justice, lack of fair play, etc., of which the directors accuse the newspapers seem to have consisted of publishing facts which reflected on the organization. There was one incorrect report, however, it should be said in justice to the society. Dr. David D. Scannell did not resign because of the Dunster House Book Shop case. He withdrew, it is understood, because of other duties.

Not widely known, which made it impossible for him to retain simultaneously membership and his self-respect. Inasmuch as the society refused to make his letter public, and the resignation came at the time of the Dunster House case, the reporters inferred naturally that there was a connection. They did not realize that the Dunster House snooping was a more or less typical case of Watch and Ward procedure.

SUNDAY, MAY 18, 1930.

A UNIQUE LUNCHEON CLUB IN LIBRARY OF CONGRESS

Brought Together by Herbert Putnam, Librarian, It Has Many Famous Members in Far Places

By LYMAN BEECHER STOWE.

THE American Library Association, and various other groups, celebrated last year the thirtieth anniversary of Herbert Putnam's appointment as Librarian of Congress. In the articles and speeches made apropos of this occasion, and more particularly in a memorial book presented to him by a group of his fellow librarians, almost every phase of his work was described. No one, however, so far as I know, has done more than mention casually the unique and interesting group for which he is responsible, and that is the Round Table—his lunch table at the Library of Congress in Washington.

When Dr. Putnam was appointed Librarian by President McKinley in 1899 he found in the palatial new library building, which had then been in use only two years, a well-equipped cafeteria in which all the workers lunched except the Librarian, who was supposed to lunch in solitary grandeur in a private room set apart for him. To Dr. Putnam, with his social instincts and his active acquisitive and constructive mind, this seemed both a bore and a wasteful arrangement.

He promptly rebelled and started a luncheon table known as the Round Table, in his previously lonely upper chamber. The original members were, very naturally, certain of the leading men of the library staff; but gradually to this number were added choice spirits from among the scientists, scholars, authors and other intellectual leaders of Washington. Soon many of the most distinguished men of letters, of science, of art, of diplomacy and of statesmanship came as guests to this table, which combines to a notable extent "plain living with high thinking." And gradually many of them became entitled to the privileges of visiting it on their own initiative, and to bring guests. And when such men from abroad came to Washington they were perhaps a little surer to turn up at the Round Table than anywhere else.

Some Distinguished Members.

Among the men who enjoyed this privilege were Thomas Nelson Page, William W. Rockhill, John W. Foster, Henry White, Edward Everett Hale, Simon Newcomb, Ambassador Bryce, Charles D. Walcott, Carroll D. Wright, Jeremiah Jenks, Maurice Francis Egan and Theodore E. Burton. Among those who still enjoy it are James Garfield, Gifford Pinchot, Oliver Wendell Holmes, Robert Lansing, Stephen Bonsal, Herbert Knox Smith, Henry S. Pritchett, Franklin D. Roosevelt, Edward Channing, Max Farrand and Norman Hapgood, together with the former Ambassador David Jayne Hill and Jules Jusserand. The latter so valued his privileges as a "member" that he was resentful when he failed to receive a bill from the cafeteria.

Others who have been guests of the Round Table include: Owen Wister, Calvin Coolidge, Count von Zeppelin, Sir Frederick Pollock, George Arliss, Augustus St. Gaudens, Susan B. Anthony, Sir William Osler, Julia Marlowe, William Howard Taft, Thomas Wentworth Higginson, Ernest Thompson Seton, Frank R. Stockton, John Bigelow, Alton B. Parker, Lord Ellenborough and Lord Charnwood.

The writer became an early "member" through the accident of kinship with the presiding genius. I happened to be present when H. G. Wells lunched there on his flying visit to America twenty-five years ago. In a subsequent book on America, in speaking of this luncheon, he said: "Here I found at last a little group of men who could talk." I remember well his own brilliant conversation on that occasion.

Some one asked him what had interested him most in America. He replied: "Your President and the great east side of New York." And of the east side he added: "The only part of your metropolis that thinks."

Of President Roosevelt he further commented: "An extraordinary case of arrested adolescence. Over 40 and at the top, and yet he keeps on thinking! We don't permit that in England!"

A Group of Gentle "Scoffers."

During the second term of the Roosevelt Administration I went to Washington almost every month in behalf of The Outlook and when free to do so lunched at the Round Table. I became at this time a member of a little informal group of scoffers who remained behind after the others had left the room, for the shameless purpose of gossiping about the celebrated guest of the day.

Perhaps the leading spirit in this group was the late Mr. Chaplin, a well-known lawyer of Boston. He was a Yankee wit of the purest vintage. One day, as we settled down to discuss over our cigars the famous European man of letters who had been the guest of honor of the day, one of us turned to Mr. Chaplin and asked: "How do you size him up, Chaplin?"

"Well, I'll tell you. I'd say he was a feller of sufficient calibre to be principal of the high school at West Dedham, but he'd never do for Dedham Centre."

At another time I sat at the Round Table next to Dr. Andrew D. White, the former president of Cornell University and once Ambassador to Germany. In the midst of a long and absorbingly interesting reminiscence the old gentleman lit his cigar at the wrong end and then had a hard breathless struggle to keep it alight and keep on talking. While I was trying to decide whether it would be proper for so young and obscure a man as myself to point out to so old and famous a man as he the cause of his difficulty, the situation was saved by one of the gentlemen offering him one of his cigars, which he accepted, and lighted, fortunately, at the right end.

On another occasion I was present when no less than thirteen nations were represented at the Round Table. It was at that time that it first occurred to me what an advantage it must be to Dr. Putnam to have these leading citizens—"members" or guests of his Round Table—throughout the world to whom he could turn for friendly advice or assistance when he needed data, books, manuscripts or prints in their several countries.

Many Famous Names.

In looking over the "guest books," what first impresses one among the names is the great number of diplomats; a single such volume, including Ambassadors and Ministers from practically every country of Europe, as also China and Japan. There were also foreign statesmen of eminence—Lord Grey, André Tardieu; a large representation of educators, among them presidents of American

THE CLUB FOUNDER

Dr. Herbert Putnam

universities, including Andrew D. White, James B. Angell, J. G. Schurman; historians, including Henry Adams, James Ford Rhodes, Ferrero and Prothero; among our own statesmen and men of affairs, Horace Porter, Newton D. Baker, Henry L. Higginson, Seth Low; among men of letters, Richard Watson Gilder, James Lane Allen, Henry Watterson, Horace White; numerous artists and architects, Millet, Hopkinson Smith, Howard Pyle, Herbert Adams, Charles F. McKim and others; and among others of divers interests, Josiah Royce, Carl Lummholtz, Lyman Abbott, A. T. Mahan, Roald Amundsen, Sir Wilfred Grenfell, E. H. Sothern and Sir Johnston Forbes-Robertson.

In 1908, after his American tour, André Tardieu, the present Premier of France, thus described the Round Table in a book entitled "Notes on the United States": "... as political life brings to it [Washington] many distinguished minds, one meets in Washington interesting groups. One of the most original is the one called the Round Table. That table is set up daily at 1 o'clock in the afternoon on the top floor of that admirable palace called the Library of Congress, opposite the Capitol. The members of the group are functionaries of the Congress, men of science and letters, scientific men like Dr. Newcomb, the great astronomer, members of the institute, travelers and important heads of departments. It was there that I met Mr. Herbert Knox Smith, the very active head of the Corporations Bureau, the very one whose investigations brought upon the Standard Oil Company a $20,000,000 fine. The guests, all remarkable or interesting men in this way or that, take pleasure in exchanging ideas, in sharing what they know. In truth they make an intellectual centre, and the hour they spend together two or three times every week is profitable to all of them."

A Visit of Orientals.

A picturesque page of the guest books includes the autographs of Governor Tong, Prince Tsai Fu, and some of their associates of the delegation which brought to Washington the thanks of the Chinese Government for the remission of the first Boxer indemnity and, incidentally, brought as a gift to the library a copy of the great Chinese encyclopedia in more than 4,000 volumes.

One of the most interesting historical occasions at the Round Table was when Wayne MacVeagh happened to be lunching there just fifty years after he heard Abraham Lincoln deliver his address at Gettysburg. He described in detail, to those fortunate enough to be present, his recollections of that great historic occasion.

Only recently Sir Michael Sadler, the great English educator who is master of University College, Oxford, lunched there. He had a particular interest in visiting our national library because, as he explained, while he is not a member of the commission charged with the duty of expanding the Bodleian Library, he had been asked by his friends on the commission to obtain for them such pertinent information as he could in this country. This unofficial duty he took very seriously and made careful notes of many matters, from the distance between the aisles in the stacks and dimensions of the tunnel which connects the library building with the Capitol, to matters of large importance. The Round Table enabled him to obtain all his information at the same time and place under the most friendly and informal conditions. The new Bodleian Library will undoubtedly profit by this particular luncheon.

Herbert Putnam is a born host. He believes that one should not be confined to conversing with those next whom one is seated, no matter how entertaining or interesting they may be. He therefore encourages the custom of changing seats toward the close of the meal. This not only gives every one a wider range of conversational opportunity, but adds to the ease and informality of the occasion.

While the Round Table was established and is maintained for pleasure rather than utility, nevertheless its usefulness is obvious. The influence and connections of the library are world-wide and so are those of the Round Table. Should the library need information, books, documents, manuscripts or anything conceivable in any part of the world, there would probably be available a one-time guest or even "member" of the Round Table, only too anxious to use his good offices in behalf of the library.

This delightful and unpretentious table has undoubtedly played a not inconsiderable rôle in helping its host and his associates to develop the Library of Congress into not only a great national library, but an institution of culture of world-wide connections and influence.

LIBRARY BANS PUPILS DOING CLASS WORK

Books and Reference Rooms Are for General Public and Research, Statement Says.

DAMAGE TO VOLUMES CITED

Colleges Asked to Help Enforce New Rule—Depression Swells Number of Readers.

College and high school students are barred from doing classroom work in the reading rooms of the New York Public Library reference department and no longer will receive books for class study purposes, Harry M. Lydenberg, head of the reference department, declared yesterday. Although emphasizing that the library exists only to serve the public and that an increase in the number of readers is regarded by the staff as an advance in usefulness, Mr. Lydenberg said the reference department could not properly fulfill its main purpose unless students doing ordinary classroom work were barred.

Overcrowding and damage to irreplaceable volumes have made this newly revealed policy imperative, Mr. Lydenberg said. Accordingly, the library has recently had printed and is distributing to students a slip which reads as follows:

"The library does not provide translations, textbooks, or other works required for the preparation of classroom work. On account of increasing pressure upon its facilities and also on account of damage to its books, the library cannot undertake to provide books that should be obtained by students from the libraries of the schools and colleges they attend."

"Many other books in the library cannot be issued for general use because of their value of rarity. They are available only to readers engaged in advanced studies."

Hopes Colleges Will Help.

The reference department is in communication with college authorities at Hunter, New York University, City College and Columbia, and arrangements are being made to publish the above notice and a more complete explanation of the need for the new policy in student publications. The college officials have been asked to aid in explaining the new rule and it is expected that they will cooperate, it was said.

The reference department, with more than 2,000,000 books on sixty-seven miles of shelves, occupies the major part of the Central Library building at Forty-second Street and Fifth Avenue. There are 768 seats in its two main reading rooms and it maintains a staff geared to distribute a book every six seconds.

It is not unusual on Saturdays or holidays, Mr. Lydenberg said, to have every seat taken early in the morning and to see several hundred more persons leaning against the shelves or sitting on the floor to read. Although no accurate figures could be given, it was said that ordinarily 25 per cent and sometimes more of these readers were high school and college students engaged in classroom work.

He pointed out also that, while the library buys textbooks and modern translations of the classics, it buys only a few and is not prepared to supply large groups of students.

Valuable Old Books Used.

"As an example," he said, "we have no school text of Horace available, but we do have a number of Eighteenth Century editions which the student decides will do as well. He sends down a slip for one of these and we must either permit him and hundreds of others with the same purpose to use, and sometimes misuse, an irreplaceable book or else must adopt a steadfast policy of refusal. It seems to us that books for class study should be provided by the school they attend."

The move revealed yesterday is one of a number of attempts to alleviate overcrowding. For some years it has been found necessary to forbid students to bring their class books into the reference department reading rooms. This year, with idleness increasing the general use of the library reading rooms to an unprecedented degree, the new ruling is considered a necessity.

The library's books have been selected, its catalogue planned and its staff organized to make its collections readily servicable to the general reader and the specialist, Mr. Lydenberg said.

"Consequently," he continued, "undergraduate students coming to the reference department find a collection that was not selected for them, a staff that is not organized to aid them and a catalogue that is not planned for them."

He pointed out that the library as it is run at present costs $1,500,000 a year. It could be run as a student's library for one-third of that, but would fall far short of its present efficiency.

Herald - December 6, 1930

MORE ON CENSORSHIP

To the Editor of The Herald: Your editorial "Censorship to Date" in The Herald for Dec. 2 is of special interest to me as a member of the committee on legal affairs, which heard the obscene book bill last winter. There seems to be some misunderstanding about the penalties and enforcement of the old law, which apparently required both fine and imprisonment.

There is another section of our general laws (my books are not at hand so that I cannot give you the exact reference), which applies to all offences which in the statute read so as to make both fine and imprisonment mandatory, and this special section says that for a first offence in any of these cases it shall be discretionary. Those instances cited in your editorial were of course first offences and only one penalty was imposed by the judge, acting under this general provision of our laws.

For this reason it was unnecessary to make any change in the obscene book law in order to take care of the transgressor caught for the first time, for he was already protected. It seemed to me 'wise to make it discretionary in all cases, as the Legislature has done, for such liberalizing of the law may prove to be a loophole for old offenders, selling indecent pictures and pamphlets to our young. People interested in books as literature sometimes forget that all forms of obscenity are included in this one law.

MARTHA N. BROOKINGS.

(16th Essex House district).

Gloucester, Dec. 3.

"CENSORSHIP TO DATE"

To the Editor of The Herald:

Your editorial "Censorship to Date" (Dec. 2, 1930), states that "an obscure bookseller was sent to jail for six months, without fine, for selling a copy of 'Oil,' by Upton Sinclair." This is incorrect in two places. First, he did not go to jail at all. Second, if he had, he would not have been obscure. Your reporters would have seen to that.

May I be allowed to give a different opinion than Messrs. Grant and Angoff on what the change in the law has accomplished?

Obscenity is a matter of opinion. It cannot be denied. Each generation must interpret obscenity according to the standards of that generation. It is a mistake for any generation to attempt to interpret obscenity for future generations.

The old law which said that a book was obscene if it "contained obscene language" was placed on the statute books some 70 years ago. No doubt it correctly interpreted obscenity according to the standards of that generation. But we have seen what a mess it has made for the generations which came after. It absolutely tied the hands of the supreme judicial court in the "American Tragedy" case. It was a foregone conclusion that the higher court would uphold the decision of the lower court. It could not do otherwise, for even a most liberal-minded person will admit that the "American Tragedy" did contain some obscene language, no matter how little and no matter that the book itself was a masterpiece.

Ideally the work of the supreme judicial court is to interpret the laws in accordance with the will of the people and the standards of that generation, and it will do so if the laws are worded in a way which allows the court the right to interpret. This it could not do under the old law, nor could a future supreme judicial court if the law had been changed to "considered as a whole."

Undoubtedly "considered as a whole" is the interpretation of this generation of the reading public, but it may not be the interpretation of future generations. Times, customs and standards change, and it is easily conceivable that a future generation may have standards much different than ours. Past history proves this. For purpose of argument let us assume that the standards of some future generation are the same as the generation that believed that a book was obscene if it contained obscene language. They would have as hard a time under "considered as a whole" as we have had under "containing obscene language."

The wording of the present law (a book which is obscene, etc.) does not bind the supreme judicial court either way. It will, in my opinion, allow the whole book to be considered for this generation. If the pendulum swings further than it now is, it will be under the present law, within the power of the supreme judicial court to decide that the whole book must be obscene before action can be taken against it. If the pendulum swings the other way it will be in the power of the supreme judicial court to decide that a book is obscene if it contains obscene language.

Any attempt to define the undefinable always results in disaster, and therefore, in my opinion, the Legislature was very wise in rewording the law so that it can be interpreted according to the standards of each generation. We must place our faith in something, and it seems safe to believe that the supreme judicial court will live up to the ideal of interpreting the law according to the customs, manners and standards of the generation in which they live and exert their power.

RICHARD P. FULLER.

Boston, Dec. 3.

Boston Transcript

SATURDAY, DECEMBER 27, 1930

Students and the Public Library

The New York Public Library will hereafter not permit school and college students to do class-room work in the reference department of the library, nor will they be allowed to take books from the shelves for class-study purposes. The reference-librarian holds that while the library exists only to serve the public and that an increase in readers is evidence of its usefulness, "it cannot properly fulfill its main purpose unless students doing ordinary class-room work are barred."

One imperative reason for this ruling is that there is great overcrowding of the reading-room and its tables. "On Saturdays or holidays," says the librarian, "it is not unusual to have every seat taken early in the morning and to see several hundred more persons leaning against the shelves or sitting on the floor to read," and of these it is believed that about a quarter are students doing class-room work. Then, too, it is impossible to provide the number of books of the kind consulted by students for all who call for them. The library does not attempt to keep on its shelves textbooks, students' translations, "ponies" and other works of a similar character which are not literature in themselves but only guides and handbooks to literature. They should be kept in the libraries of the different schools and colleges where the students can freely consult them. The library's books have been selected, its catalogue planned and its staff organized to make its collections readily servicable to the general reader and the specialist, a catalogue that was not selected for them, a staff that is not organized to aid them and a catalogue that is not planned for them."

ferent schools and colleges where the students can freely consult them. The library's books have been selected, its catalogue planned and its staff organized to make its collections readily servicable to the general reader and the specialist, "and undergraduate students coming to the reference department find a collection of books that was not selected for them, a catalogue that was not planned for them and a staff that is not organized to aid them."

We suspect that the officers of the library will find it easier to announce such a ruling than to enforce it, for we see no reason why a student should be denied the privileges of the institution because he is a student. We doubt whether any such restriction would be contemplated in Boston. But, granting so much, it is quite proper for a public library to decline to load its shelves with school and college textbooks. If a library goes into that sort of thing at all, it must carry scores of copies of many books solely for the accommodation of students. On the other hand, there are hundreds of books not in the textbook category which students need to consult again and again—anthologies, encyclopedias, dictionaries. A public library that should refuse to permit a student access to the Groves and Ford Dictionary, which few public-school libraries have the funds to possess, would really fail in its function of a public library, "devoted to the advancement of learning."

THE recent publication of Dr. Abraham Flexner's "Universities—American, English and German" seems to have exploded an educational bomb that has set many university administrators and professors to examining the cause of the explosion. Few educators will deny the truth of many of Dr. Flexner's charges of "innovations," "loss of a sense of values," and "bargain-counter education," as applied to the correspondence and home study courses in many of our great universities. They are too true to be denied and should not be ignored.

So far, as Dr. Flexner pleads for a maintenance of high standards and relative values in a general college course, no one who is at all jealous of the future of American culture can disagree. It is undoubtedly true that in our effort "to sell education at a profit" to one hundred and twenty-two million Americans, we have, as Dr. Flexner charges, "needlessly cheapened, vulgarized and mechanized" many of our universities and colleges.

It came as a distinct surprise, however, to have the "Professorship of Books" at Rollins College, Winter Park, Florida, included in Dr. Flexner's condemnation. In his list of educational crimes he lists the "Professorship of Books" as "only one remove from the 'Professorship of Police Administration' at the University of Chicago. While a course in 'Police Administration' may lack somewhat in cultural value, and therefore should not be credited toward a Bachelor of Arts degree, yet I am sure that anyone who has read the recent headlines in the 'World's Greatest Newspaper,' will recognize what might rightly be called 'a crying need' for such a course conveniently offered in Chicago."

If Dr. Flexner's general charge is, as it seems to be, that our colleges and universities are conceding too much to industry, and the demands of our present-day economic life, then Emerson's suggestion that we should have a "Professorship of Books" is a most timely one. The other, by Frederick

A Professorship of Books

A Plea for Their Place in a College Curriculum

By Edwin O. Grover

Professor of Books in Rollins College

Rollins two-year conference plan, the first hour in this course is usually devoted to collective reading and discussion. After a brief intermission the students select books from a thousand volumes in open cases about the room, and spend the second hour in individual reading. Several students have read and reported on more than one hundred books in this course in "recreational reading." None of the reading is prescribed, and reader interest is the aim sought, although an effort is naturally made to interest the students in better and more worthwhile books. Until the reading habit is well established, however, it is reader interest which decides whether a book shall be read aloud to the class. In the course of a week, the students thus get five hours of collective reading, and five hours of individual reading. One student described the course as "a painless process of cultural development that overtakes the student unaware." Courses in "recreational reading" are no longer "novelties" since a number of colleges have already introduced them solely for their cultural value.

The third course offered by the "Professor of Books" at Rollins is a course in "Literary Personalities," in which the lives of some of the great writers of English and American literature are studied to discover to what extent their personalities are revealed in their work. This course is analogous to the courses in biography offered by Dr. A. W. Vernon, Professor of Biology at Dartmouth, who also came under Dr. Flexner's condemnation.

In large universities, other courses in Books would naturally suggest themselves, courses which would help to enrich the student's mind and enable them in later life to think more interesting thoughts, in which President Dwight of Yale said lies the secret of happiness.

Surely such courses as these cannot come under Dr. Flexner's general condemnation of courses that have "needlessly cheapened, vulgarized and mechanized" many of our colleges and universities.

There are many extra-curricular activities in which a "Professor of Books" would naturally participate. Some of those at Rollins that have resulted from his work are the establishment of an undergraduate literary magazine called The Flamingo, now in its fifth volume. This bookish little magazine in brilliant orange cover reminds one of The Chap Book of blessed memory. The editors have chosen to attempt to do a little thing well, and they seem to have succeeded, for the director of the New York Public Library referred to it as "the best and most attractive undergraduate literary magazine that comes to the library."

Another enterprise fostered by him was the establishment of the first book store in town called "The Bookery—The Flamingo Bookshop," which is decorated in orange, black and white. This bookish little shop has become the downtown club and meeting place for many of the college students and has already done much to encourage reading and make the student body and the community book-minded.

Having spent many years in the publishing business in Boston, New York and Chicago, this particular "Professor of Books" naturally could not keep his fingers out of printer's ink, so he established four years ago a private press, and over the imprint of The Angel Alley Press, he has published an anthology of the work of twenty-two college students under the title, "The Rollins Book of Verse," which has been praised by competent critics as the best undergraduate book of verse yet issued in this country. Over the same imprint three Rollins undergraduates have issued tiny volumes of their own verse. Frank Doucet, who is now a senior at Rollins, published last summer through Longmans, Green & Co. a critical study called "Dipped in Sky," and Christy MacKay, who was a junior at Rollins last year, will bring out a volume of poems through Harper & Brothers next spring. The Angel Alley Press has stimulated creative work and given the students the encouragement which comes from seeing one's work in print. This private press is also used as a laboratory for the course in the "History of the Book."

It is significant that Sinclair Lewis in his recent speech of acceptance of the Nobel Prize, after criticizing the divorce of Intellectual life in America from all standards of importance, and really, placed Rollins College first among only four American colleges and universities whose faculty has shown, in his opinion, a genuine interest in encouraging creative writing among its undergraduates.

These are only a few of the extra-curricular activities which naturally come within the scope of the Rollins "Professor of Books." Two years ago he was appointed Director of the College Library, which has been completely reorganized and greatly enlarged under his direction. A modest endowment fund has been accumulated and several valuable special collections have been built up, notably the William Sloane Kennedy collection of cause in the case of many of our great universities they have gone after the false gods of vocational courses in order to enable their graduates to make quick money with which to endow their Alma Mater? The experiment here at Rollins—of a "Professorship of Books" that is five years old can be called an experiment—is no longer a "novelty" to those who have watched its evolution. It has filled an unoccupied place in the college curriculum, and utilized material of distinct cultural value that was not included in any other course.

Three courses are now being offered by the "Professor of Books" at Rollins. Perhaps the most unique of the three is the course on "The History of the Book," which traces the evolution of the alphabet, from the picture writing of the Sumerians in Southern Babylonia, to the phonetic alphabet of the Phoenicians, and its final adoption by the Romans who gave it their name. The growth of the book itself is studied from the clay tablets of five thousand years ago to the round papyrus books of Egypt, the illuminated parchment missals of the Middle Ages, the hand-carved "Block Books" of the Netherlands, to the tragic story of John Gutenberg and his great invention of movable type. Then follows the dispersal of printing through the sacking of the city of Mayence in 1462, and a study of the work of the great printers of Italy, France, Switzerland, the Netherlands, England and the United States, concluding with a study of types, papers, decorations, bindings and all that goes to make "the book beautiful."

It will be evident to anyone that such a course is rich in cultural value, correlating as it does, the social, religious, industrial, and political history of the times, and providing a sort of golden thread upon which to trace the historic facts of their courses in ancient and medieval history, as well as in their studies of religion, sociology and literature.

A knowledge of the romance that has surrounded the evolution of the book from

DECEMBER 31, 1930

John Rylands Incunabula

A "Catalogue of the English Incunabula in the John Rylands Library at Manchester, 1475-1500" has been published by the Manchester University Press of Manchester, England, and is one of the most important bibliographical contributions of recent years. It represents the first installment of "The Catalogue of Books printed in England, Scotland and Ireland and of English Books printed abroad between the years 1475 and 1640 in the John Rylands Library, Manchester." Under the direction of the librarian, Dr. Henry Guppy, a splendid folio volume of some 150 pages has been prepared, with chronological index, indexes of printers and stationers and subjects, and sixteen facsimiles. The work was started as long ago as 1910, but the delay has been of advantage as it has allowed the inclusion of the titles of 1200 additional books printed before 1640 which have been acquired in the interval. This first installment of the great catalogue is complete by itself, and while the collection is not large as compared with the whole of the books before 1640, the extreme rarity of some of these 154 items makes it of surpassing importance. Of these works 132 formed a part of the library of George John, the second Earl Spencer, which was acquired by Mrs. John Rylands in 1892. Its foundations were laid in 1790, when Lord Spencer acquired the collection of Count Reviczky, but for thirty years after Lord Spencer's retirement from office in 1807 he secured Europe in search of rare and fine books, with Dr. Dibdin as his librarian, and enriched it from the Roxburghe, the Mason, the White Knights, the Merly, the Alchorne and other sales. In an introductory note by Dr. Guppy he states that "The Caxtons, which if we include the four fragments number sixty-two, comprise more than half the works known to have been issued by that printer. Of these, if we include the 'Blanchardyn and Eglantine' of which only a single leaf in the British Museum and another leaf in Melbourne are otherwise known, six are known only from the copies here described, and of three others only one other copy has survived. Of books printed by Wynken de Worde, Caxton's successor, there are thirty-six, of which six are known only by the John Rylands copy. Of the productions of the press of Richard Pynson there are twenty-two examples, of which eight are the only copies at present recorded. Of the Oxford Press there are twelve items, while William de Machlinia and the unidentified schoolmaster-printer of St. Albans are also well represented."

The present catalogue is alphabetical according to the name of the author or whatever heading takes the place of the author's name. Every work is described with full details, regardless of whether or not it has been described elsewhere, as many of these works of fifteenth century presses have a distinct individuality. Thus the work becomes, in view of the extent of the collection described, a very valuable reference book on the subject of British Incunabula. The fulness and accuracy of the descriptions, the references to bibliographical authorities, the valuable appendices and the admirable

Washington Star
March 29, 1931

Collapses

DR. HERBERT PUTNAM FAINTS
ON STREET.

DR. HERBERT PUTNAM.

Seized with a sudden fainting spell, Dr. Herbert Putnam, librarian of Congress, collapsed on the street yesterday afternoon as he was about to enter the Cosmos Club at H street and Madison place after returning from his office at the Library of Congress.

Dr. Putnam was in the company of Dr. Dewalt O'Hara of Boston, Mass., a friend, at the time. Dr. O'Hara called a taxicab and took Dr. Putnam to Emergency Hospital. He was in a semi-conscious condition when he was admitted and after receiving attention by a staff physician was placed in a private room.

Dr. Robert W. Baker, the librarian's personal physician, summoned immediately after Dr. Putnam was admitted to the hospital, announced that his patient was suffering only from slight weakness which followed the fainting spell. Dr. Baker said that Dr. Putnam also suffered a slight attack of nausea, but that his condition was not serious. The attending physician said Dr. Putnam would be confined to the hospital a few days for rest and observation.

Dr. Putnam, who is 70 years old, lives at the Marlborough apartment house, 917 Eighteenth street. His daughter in New York was communicated with by Dr. O'Hara, who assured her that there was no need for anxiety.

EN REGISTER, SUNDAY, APRIL 12, 1931

He looked down at her as she fitted the key in the lock, smiling somewhat sardonically as she thanked him for the evening.

"Good night, Claire. I hope I haven't upset you. Sleep well—and I'll see you in the morning." He lifted his hat formally and kept smiling that way at her.

(To Be Continued)

(Copyright, 1931, by The Bell Syndicate, Inc.)

Lamar Stringfield, composer of the first American opera with an American theme, has presented his work for the first time at the University of North Carolina.

Young boys at Lake Jovita, Fla., have formed a club for the purpose of protecting the village against forest fires.

Wisconsin has 2,245 cheese factories. Seven of its counties have more than 100 each.

At 67 Mrs. M. S. Watson of Liberty, Ky., took her first train ride, visiting her son at Cincinnati.

Boston Boasts
Lady Smoke-Eater

NEA Boston Bureau

Attendance at fires in Boston probably will be increased from now on. For smiling Eleanor Hawkins, 19, has become a full-fledged member of the city's fire department. The only woman firefighter in New England is shown here in uniform after she had been presented with her official badge.

WIN $5

Sunday's Contest

MAD MARRIAGE

by LAURA LOU BROOKMAN Author of "HEART HUNGRY," etc.

Gypsy said she was eager to see the flowers. They followed a flagstone path to the arched gateway. Crimson rambling roses festooned the entire arch. Within was a formal garden at the center of which was a fountain with two childish figures molded in bronze. Paths led to either side and toward the fountain. Bordering the walks and arranged in regular groups were shrubs and bushes loaded with fragrant blossoms. There were red roses, pink ones, white ones. Massed about the central fountain were tall bushes bearing great crimson roses. In two smaller groups on each side exotic tea roses shading from pink to clear yellow nodded gently in the breeze. Old-fashioned garden flowers mingled with the roses but their scent was lost in the predominating fragrance. There seemed to be roses everywhere.

Men and women in groups strolled about the paths. Gypsy was amazed and delighted. She had never seen so many flowers. It was 5:30 when they finally returned to the tea pavilion.

Now the crowd was thinning out. Gypsy surveyed her neighbors. There were on or two whom she had met earlier in the afternoon. Ellen Wallace and Marcia were not in sight. She followed Abbie to a table where they were joined presently by two older women. The conversation was chiefly about what a great success the fete had been. It had all been because of the weather. The committee was assured of funds enough to buy the hospital linen. Gypsy only half heard what they were saying. At last she and Abbie rose and said goodby.

It was a home where Gypsy arrived there. For some reason that evening she could not bring herself to tell him she had met Marcia. She spoke of the rose garden, mentioned others she had talked with, but all the while Gypsy herself was thinking about Marcia Phillips. She was thinking how beautiful Marcia had looked.

Less than 24 hours were to pass before the two girls met again. Gypsy was returning from a trip to buy the day's supplies. Pat trotted on ahead on his leash. As they turned a corner Gypsy saw a slender girl in a gray knitted suit coming toward her. It was Marcia, hatless, with nothing to conceal the glory of her sleekly golden hair. Marcia was walking slowly. At once she recognized Gypsy.

"Good morning," she said, smiling. "I think we met yesterday at the garden party. I'm Marcia Phillips."

"Yes," Gypsy answered. "I remember you. It's a beautiful morning to be walking."

"Isn't it? May I join you? Aunt Ellen insists I must get out for exercise but I've always hated doing things because they're good for me. You live near here, don't you?"

Gypsy nodded toward the Wallace house half way down the block. "The fourth house down," she said.

There was no sign from Marcia that she recognized the place. "Then we're neighbors," Marcia drawled. "You know I'm spending the Summer with Aunt Ellen Wallace. I hope I'll see a great deal of you. It's only two years since I've lived in Forest City but I've scarcely any friends left. So far I've seen no one except my lawyer."

Was there a quick, feline flash in those blue-gray eyes or did Gypsy imagine it?

"I would have come to call," Gypsy said, "but I didn't think you'd care to see strangers."

Marcia nodded. There was both sadness and martyrdom in her face. "I haven't wanted to see anyone," she said. "But I feel now that I should make the effort. It's—not easy."

Certainly there was nothing to criticize in the young widow's voice or expression. Why did that persistent inner voice keep whispering to Gypsy: "It's a pose! She doesn't mean it?"

The inner voice would not be still. "Won't you come in?" Gypsy asked when they reached the brick walk. "I'd like you to see my garden."

Marcia smiled. "Another time perhaps. I must be getting on. Aunt Ellen expects me. Goodby." She turned and Gypsy and Pat went up the walk toward the house. Gypsy walked slowly as though she were thinking.

At 3 o'clock that afternoon Jim Wallace rang the bell before his aunt's cottage. Marcia Phillips answered the ring.

"Come in," she said, smiling "I'm glad you're early."

She led the way to the living room. Shades had been lowered to keep out the sun. There was a bowl of fragrant white flowers on a table near the davenport. Marcia motioned the young man to a chair.

"Sit here," she said. "It's cooler."

She was wearing a sleeveless frock of pale blue. It was not exactly a tea gown, nor an afternoon dress. It was draped gracefully, elaborately trimmed with lace dyed to match the fragile fabric. The dress was flattering.

"Thanks," Jim said. Marcia had dropped to the davenport and was leaning back against its cushions.

"Where's Aunt Ellen?" he asked. "She went to some church affair."

"Now about those papers you said you've received—"

Marcia interrupted. The gay blue eyes looked out at him from between curling lashes. The lashes were (as Gypsy had suspected) expertly made up. "I didn't get those papers," Marcia said quietly.

"You didn't get them?"

The girl's eyes lowered. A moment later they met Jim's. There was challenge, something more, in their depths. "No," Marcia said. "I didn't get them. I asked you to come here today, Jim, because I want to talk to you."

(To Be Continued)

THE CHEERFUL CHERUB

I'd rather be mean
to a person
Than mean to a dog
or a cat,
For people can tell
a policeman
And animals cannot do that.

PREMIER CROSS-WORD PUZZLE

1	2	3	4	5	6	7	8	9	10	11	12	13	14	15	16
		17					18		19		20
21	22		23				24		25		26				27
28		29		30			31			32				33
34			35		36			37		38				39
40				41		42			43				44
45					46			47					48
		49					50				51		52

DECEMBER 31, 1930

John Rylands Incunabula

A catalogue of the English Incunabula in the John Rylands Library at Manchester, 1474-1500. By James H. Sneyd.

The most important of the English Incunabula in the John Rylands Library at Manchester, 1474-1500. By James H. Sneyd.

The most important of the English Incunabula in the John Rylands Library at Manchester, 1474-1500. By James H. Sneyd.

The most important of the English Incunabula in the John Rylands Library at Manchester, 1474-1500. By James H. Sneyd.

The most important of the English Incunabula in the John Rylands Library at Manchester, 1474-1500. By James H. Sneyd.

The most important of the English Incunabula in the John Rylands Library at Manchester, 1474-1500. By James H. Sneyd.

The most important of the English Incunabula in the John Rylands Library at Manchester, 1474-1500. By James H. Sneyd.

The most important of the English Incunabula in the John Rylands Library at Manchester, 1474-1500. By James H. Sneyd.

The most important of the English Incunabula in the John Rylands Library at Manchester, 1474-1500. By James H. Sneyd.

The most important of the English Incunabula in the John Rylands Library at Manchester, 1474-1500. By James H. Sneyd.

The most important of the English Incunabula in the John Rylands Library at Manchester, 1474-1500. By James H. Sneyd.

The most important of the English Incunabula in the John Rylands Library at Manchester, 1474-1500. By James H. Sneyd.

The most important of the English Incunabula in the John Rylands Library at Manchester, 1474-1500. By James H. Sneyd.

The most important of the English Incunabula in the John Rylands Library at Manchester, 1474-1500. By James H. Sneyd.

The most important of the English Incunabula in the John Rylands Library at Manchester, 1474-1500. By James H. Sneyd.

Washington Star

March 29, 1931

Collapses

NEW HAVEN REGISTER, SUNDAY, APRIL 12, 1931

PAGE FIVE

Sterling Memorial Library Marvel Of Architecture, Engineering, Art

$7,000,000 Structure, Largest in World, Is to Dominate Yale Campus

MARVEL of architectural skill, artistry, engineering and efficiency is Yale's Sterling Memorial Library which cost more than $7,000,000, has a future capacity of 4,000,000 volumes and in which 2,000 people can be seated at one time. Librarians, educators, artists and students from all sections of the United States gathered yesterday in the library, the largest of its kind in the world, to attend the dedication ceremonies and to exclaim over the massive beauty of this great modern gothic structure which, when the present building plan of the university is completed, will dominate the Yale Campus.

BEAUTIFUL, EFFICIENT

The Sterling Memorial Library is more than a massive and beautiful building in which the University's huge measure of books is housed. It is a serene and fitting memorial to John W. Sterling, who left his large estate to his university and thereby made possible not only this library but a number of other buildings which bear his name. It is a beautiful gothic structure, perfect in its combination of the charm and artistry of that period and of modern architectural and engineering methods, and third it is a library which through its mechanical equipment is as efficient as the most modern of factories.

The heart of a library is the book-stack, tier upon tier of self-supporting shelves with long aisles of windows lighting narrow aisles. In the evolution of the modern library it has become almost a matter of course to treat this structure as something to be subordinated in the exterior design and not infrequently the bookstack becomes a real facade, obscured behind a screen of monumental rooms.

In the design of the Sterling Memorial Library, however, one of the first principles was the placing of the stack in the most accessible and important position on the site and its direct expression as the outstanding feature of the facade.

BOOK TOWER IMPRESSIVE

Accordingly the great 150 foot book tower is the first glimpse one gets of the library from any approach. It is so placed that it will be the terminating feature of the cross-campus when the Berkeley Oval is gone. The external expression of the functional core of the building thus gives the library a structural dignity and a direct symbolism in keeping with the tradition of the great monuments of the past.

The site selected, one which is as nearly as possible the center of the University, gives the library a dominant position in a group of new buildings similar in style and material. The placing of the book tower on the plot determined the disposition of the other elements. The great Reading Room adjoins the stack on the South and faces the central court of the Sterling Quadrangle.

At the base of the tower and in front of it, the main hall provides a dignified entrance and impresses upon the visitor the memorial character of the building. At the end of the hall and in convenient relation to the catalogue room at the side is the delivery desk, the central control and distributing point on the ground floor.

Additional reading rooms occupy flanking wings in High Street while the Wall Street side is largely given over to exhibition, lecture and study severely of the mass bespeak a Gothic which is distinctly of the present day but which relies where possible upon the principles of true stone arch construction of the past.

The book tower which is built upon a steel framework frankly belies its medieval character by the flatness of its buttressing and emerges a superb piece of modern Gothic design, hall tower and half building. The scale and simplicity of the detail gives breadth and power to the mass and the decoration which on the structural walls is

Where literary browsing is a luxurious pleasure—the Landon and Butcher Room in which are stored the collections of the old debating societies

Sterling beauty of design is nowhere better shown than in the arched entrance and iron gates in the Rare Book Room

Replica of the Yale Library with the original books—one of the least conspicuous but most interesting collections

Cathedral-like qualities of the majestic arches and delicate carving is beautifully shown in this photograph of the screen at the north end of the Crossing

Main Reading Room with its large tracery windows and decorative oak bookcases woodcuts, in printers' ornaments, or in the tooling on fine bindings.

SYMBOLIC FIGURES

The main entrance on High Street is symbolic of the ancient civilizations and includes early written records. The winged bull of Babylon, the Ptolemaean eagle, the Athenian owl, the Roman wolf, the Mayan serpent, occupy two panels and eight others have inscriptions of different periods or in different languages.

The buttresses on the High Street facade are of the medieval rubber composition debating societies, and a large number of 20,000 books and a large number of what are designated as "rare books" are a "browsing room."

In accordance with the character of its contents, the reading room is attractively in the style of a great private library. A series of six alcoves, comfortable and equipped with large paneled bookcases, are a cheerful atmosphere.

In a wing similar to that occupied by Landon and Butcher on the opposite side of the main entrance is the

Angell Presented With Library Keys

President James Rowland Angell receives the key to the greatest gift of Yale's greatest benefactor from John Anson Garver, counsel for the trustees of the estate of John W. Sterling, Yale, 1864. From left to right: Andrew Keogh, university librarian and Sterling professor of bibliography; Mr. Garver, President Angell, Herbert Putnam, librarian of Congress; and Rev. Dr. Henry Sloane Coffin, fellow of the Yale Corporation. (For interior views of library see Section V, Page Five.)

Sterling Eulogized At Library Dedication

Associates See Youthful Dream of Yale's Benefactor To Do Something Great for Alma Mater Realized — Building Seen As Fitting Memorial

With the slanting rays of the afternoon sun sending shafts of light through the tall arched windows of the main entrance hall of the Sterling Memorial Library to create an atmosphere reminiscent of a Gothic cathedral, President James Rowland Angell of Yale University received the key to the greatest gift of Yale's greatest benefactor from John Anson Garver, counsel for the trustees of the estate of John W. Sterling, Yale 1864, before an assemblage of 500 invited guests yesterday afternoon at the dedication ceremonies.

Thus the largest university library in the world, completed after almost 20 years of labor at a cost of more than $7,000,000, designed, built and given by Yale men for the greater glory of their Alma Mater, formally entered upon its career of usefulness.

With the acceptance of the Memorial Library Yale has now received gifts valued at more than $29,000,000 from the estate of Mr. Sterling.

Congressional Librarian Prentiss Speaker, at yesterday's exercises besides President Angell and Mr. Garver included Herbert Putnam, librarian of Congress, and Andrew Keogh, University Librarian and Sterling professor of bibliography. Rev. Dr. Henry Sloane Coffin, fellow of the Yale Corporation, pronounced the benediction.

In their addresses, all emphasized that the object of the new library is not only to be a storehouse for books, it contains more than two million, among them some of the rarest and most valuable, but that the beauty of its modern Gothic architecture is intended to provide the student with a challenge and an inspiration.

Fitting Memorial

According to the terms of his will, it was the intention of Mr. Sterling, who died in 1918, that "at least one enduring, useful and architecturally beautiful edifice be erected, which will constitute a fitting memorial of my gratitude to and my affection for my Alma Mater."

Mr. Sterling's love for his university dates probably from his youth, for his maternal grandfather, David Plant, graduated from Yale in 1804.

Sterling was born in Stratford on May 12, 1844. His father was a famous sea captain and his paternal grandfather had held a captain's commission in the Revolution.

Phi Beta Kappa Student

Young Sterling prepared for Yale at the Stratford Academy. At college he distinguished himself by winning a Phi Beta Kappa key, third prize in declamation his Sophomore year, a Townsend premium his Senior year and speaking appointments at commencement.

(Continued on Page Two)

His Estate Brings Yale $29,000,000

John W. Sterling, Yale 1864, in whose memory the Sterling Memorial Library, which cost more than $7,000,000, was dedicated yesterday. When Mr. Sterling died in 1918 his will revealed that Yale was to receive his entire residuary estate, then estimated at $20,000,000, which has since increased to $25,000,000. Of this the University has already received $29,000,000. Almost $10,000,000 has been used to establish professorships, research fellowships and scholarships. The remainder has been used for the erection of buildings.

ment and at Junior Exhibition. He was also president of the Brothers in Unity Society.

Following graduation he devoted himself to a course in general reading in the Graduate School for one year and then entered the Columbia Law School from which he was graduated as valedictorian, in 1867.

President Porter, characterizing him as a student, said that he had "soundness and judgment, accuracy, reliability, indomitable perseverance and integrity," and from his record we may well believe this.

Garver Partner

Following a year in the law office of David and Dudley Field in New York, he became managing clerk. Later in the office of James K. Hill. Later he branched out for himself, his partner being John A. Garver, who made the presentation to the University yesterday.

Sterling's life-long ambition was to leave a fortune to Yale which would endure in the University's permanent enrichment, and the magnificent new library is a fitting memorial to the scholarly man who aimed to benefit his fellow men.

Desire Fulfilled

The desire of Sterling to have a fitting memorial erected has been fulfilled. In accepting the gifts from the trustees yesterday, President Angell said that "here indeed is an enduring, useful and architecturally beautiful edifice constituting a fitting memorial of Mr. Sterling's gratitude to and affection for Yale."

The President continued: "Peculiarly fitting is it that the noblest of all Yale's buildings should be dedicated to her books, which are in fact the deep foundations upon which she was built. Time can never wholly dim the romance of the story, and it is in reverent memory that we recall the familiar tale of that little band of ministers gathered at Branford in the year of Grace 1700 to present the books which gave the College corporate life. And now, after many years of restless wandering, we hope that here those books, and all the myriad others which have been joined unto them, may find a peaceful haven for centuries of service undisturbed."

"Here toiling side by side, the librarian, the architect, the builder, have conjured up a dream of surpassing majesty and then translated it into innumerable ingenious and graceful forms whereby the casual reader in search of transient intellectual diversion, not less than the serious scholar embarked on explorations far-flung and recondite, may both be well and promptly served. Here are devices of shrewd intelligence and skill for preserving all those arts whereby the treasures of the place may be protected and preserved, while yet available to those who properly require them. As with the great cathedrals, unmeasured thought and care and sheer devotion have been lavished on this pile, whose beauty everywhere leaps out to meet the eye."

"It is, in truth, a very temple of the mind which here we dedicate today, a fane wherein are marshalled the greatest souls of human history, and on the altars of its inner sanctuary will always burn the sacred lamp of learning and the holy torch of truth. Here is incarnate the intellectual and spiritual life of Yale."

Garver Makes Presentation

Mr. Garver made the presentation on behalf of the trustees of the Sterling estate, who were present. They are Percy Rockefeller and George H. Church of New York and George B. Countess of Huntington, L. I.

After telling of the terms of the Sterling will by which the residuary estate was left to Yale, Mr. Garver told of how the fund, which is now set at $35,000,000 due to accretion and interest, has been used.

Almost ten million dollars has been received by the University for the maintenance of professorships, fellowships and scholarships. For buildings and their necessary maintenance fund, almost twenty millions have been given. These buildings include not only the Memorial Library, but also the Sterling Hall of Medicine, the Sterling Chemistry Laboratory and two wings of the Sterling Quadrangle. Additional buildings now under construction are the Sterling Law buildings and those of the Graduate School. Those for which plans are being drawn include the Divinity School and the Sterling House for the Sheffield Scientific School.

Mr. Garver then in part concluded: "It was a cardinal principle of the will that the workman should be allowed

New Library Has Much to Interest Art Lovers

Many carvings are utilized in the expression of art in the new Sterling Memorial Library at Yale University, and its doors will find much to interest them both outside and inside the great Gothic structure. At the top are reproductions of three of the most famous Japanese carvings depicted in a window at the top of the main entrance. In the center is a famous Japanese carving of a Buddhist figure in the Lion's Den, and at the top of the main entrance are carved panels between the tortoise and the hare. Below is one of the carved panels in the main hall, the first of the series of the new library.

STERLING LIBRARY IS MARVEL OF ART

(Continued From Page 5 This Section)

through two feeders in the form of direct current at about 220 volts.

MECHANICAL FEATURES

The building has six elevators and two dumb waiters all driven by electric power. A pneumatic tube system, was installed to carry slips, messages, etc., between the delivery desk, the call slip file, the attendants' desks in the reading room and the attendants' stations in the stacks. The carriers are small and of the closed type and are moved by exhausting the air from the system by two motor driven exhausters. The heating and ventilating apparatus for the building was designed to meet local climatic conditions and three fundamental requirements; first, books and their preservation, second, the occupants of the building, both the employees and students and their comfort and third equipment that is simple and durable and at the same time as inexpensive to operate as possible. The apparatus was installed so that there is sufficient direct radiation to keep the temperature in the building at 70 degrees F. The air for ventilating is delivered at room temperature.

YALE'S BENEFACTOR

The Sterling Memorial Library was designed by James Gamble Rogers, New York architect and was started in 1928. It is a memorial to John W. Sterling who graduated from Yale in 1864 and who died in 1918 leaving his estate of approximately $20,000,000 to the University.

In addition to the library, Yale has also received from the estate the Sterling Chemistry Laboratories, Sterling Hall of Medicine, the Sterling Dormitories, the Sterling Law buildings now under construction also the Sterling buildings of the Graduate School which are under construction. Plans have been prepared for the Divinity School Quadrangle and the Sheffield Scientific School Tower which will be built from this fund.

Mr. Sterling also gave Yale several million dollars for professorships and fellowships including scholarships for New Haven boys. Fifteen Connecticut High School students receive Sterling scholarships and there are eight Sterling Memorial New Haven Scholarships which give free tuition for a full four-year undergraduate course to eight residents of the City.

Andrew Keogh, the librarian has served in this capacity since 1916. He received his M. A. degree from Yale in 1904 and from 1899 to 1904 was librarian of Lincolnton and Brothers. He was reference librarian from 1904 to 1916 when he became librarian.

BOOKS AND THINGS

(Continued From Page 7 This Section)

to take care of his long legs. She tells of the rustle and creeping and crawling that would start about and within her jungle home the instant darkness de-

Avoid Head Colds and Sore Throat This Winter

CATARRH

Opens Up Stuffed Nostrils in 3 Minutes

Opex keeps nostrils and throat free from mucus — Buzzing in ears when caused by Catarrh is lessened — no more mucus in throat to hawk up in the morning — Get it at the Carroll Co. or any drug store that keeps up with modern medical discoveries — use for 30 days — if not joyfully satisfied — money back.

People who are subject to sore throat and speakers and singers who suffer from hoarseness should spray with Opex night and morning — its delightful to use because of its delicious fragrance — a $1.00 bottle lasts 7 weeks — Keep your nostrils as clean as your teeth.

The Opex Co., 11 W. 30th St., New York.

OPEX

Boston Transcript

THURSDAY, MAY 7, 1931

Curley Honors Mrs. Putnam on His Departure

Takes Fruit to Tercentenary Leader Who Is Ill at Her Beacon Street Home

Numerous acts of kindness were performed by Mayor Curley today, during his struggle with the odds and ends of city business to clear his desk before leaving on a six weeks' vacation abroad, but the outstanding act of courtesy was that of visiting Mrs. William Lowell Putnam, sister of President Lowell of Harvard University, and presenting her with a basket of fruit.

Mrs. Putnam performed an extraordinary service during the Tercentenary celebration last year as chairman of the committee on racial groups. The mayor paid her high compliment on the conclusion of her work. Since that time she has been ill at her home, 49 Beacon street, and among the many messages of sympathy which she has received have been those from the mayor. Today he declared that he could not leave Boston for so long a period without again expressing his esteem for "this wonderful woman who is honored and respected by all who know her."

The mayor left his office at 2:30 o'clock this afternoon to go home and finish packing for the journey. All day long he had bidden his friends farewell. No matter how busy he was, everybody who called at the outer gate was admitted to the office. Though he had addressed the city officials on Tuesday, he received practically all of them yesterday and today in private audience, conferring on a hundred and one different matters. There were final instructions for the City Hospital trustees, the Public Welfare Department, the Traffic Commission, the Street Commission, the Public Works and Park departments in particular.

Today, it was interesting to see Police Commissioner Eugene C. Hultman and Joseph A. Conry in the office together, as members of the Traffic Commission, and an hour later to see the three other members, Joseph A. Rourke, William P. Long and Thomas J. Hurley waiting for the final word from the mayor. It was positively stated that Mr. Curley did not ask Mr. Conry and Mr. Hultman to compose their differences.

Announcement was made by the mayor that he had appointed John L. Hall of the law firm of Choate, Hall & Stewart as trustee of the Boston Public Library to fill the vacancy caused by the voluntary retirement of Gordon Abbott; also, that he had approved the appointment of the architectural firm of Gray & Heffernan as architects of the transit department's administration building at the portal of the new East Boston tunnel.

One of the mayor's last official acts was the veto of the City Council's order restricting the noise from radios or other musical instruments between the hours of midnight and 7 A. M., to less than 100 feet from the building where the instruments are located. The mayor told the Council that if it would make two minor changes in the order, he would give his approval.

The mayor, accompanied by City Treasurer Edmund L. Dolan, his daughter Mary and her friend and classmate, Leretta Bremner of Chicago, were scheduled to leave Boston for New York on the Merchants' limited at five o'clock. They will leave New York at 3:30 tomorrow on the steamship France of the French line.

Boston Traveler

Vol. CV.—No. 143.

111 Tremont Street.

Established 1825.

SATURDAY, DECEMBER 21, 1929

The Watch and Ward Society

THREE distinguished citizens of Massachusetts, a judge, a district attorney and a defence attorney, have said words about the New England Watch and Ward Society that should interest every thoughtful resident of the New England states.

A book censorship case was before the Middlesex superior court. A Watch and Ward agent had persuaded a bookseller to procure for him a book which the court ruled to be obscene, indecent and impure. Atty. Herbert F. Parker, for the defence, pointing out the method used to induce the dealer to sell the book, referred to the society as "procurers, falsifiers and deceivers."

Dist.-Atty. Robert T. Bushnell, prosecuting the case against the bookseller, said:

"I want to serve warning on them (the Watch and Ward Society) that if ever again, as long as I am district attorney of this district, they go into a bookstore in this district and induce or procure a person to commit a crime, I will proceed against them for criminal conspiracy."

Judge Frederick W. Fosdick, hearing the case, said from the bench that he "entertains no cordiality toward the Watch and Ward Society."

The society, in its appeal for funds, informs the public that it has the good will of the courts and police. Yet we find that this is not the first time its agents have been rebuked by the courts. Judge Irwin and Judge Murray had occasion to offer criticism from the bench.

To protect the moral standard of the community, particularly of the young, is a laudable work but to us it appears to be a police function. The Watch and Ward Society urges the public to report all possible evils to the society. Why have we a police department?

The Watch and Ward Society is in a peculiarly strong position. If one attacks its methods the society may easily accuse such person of being in league with the forces of vice. There is no doubt that the society numbers among its members individuals whose sole interest is one of public service. The words of the three eminently respectable citizens in Middlesex county court yesterday will give the supporters of the society something to consider.

LIBRARY BANS PUPILS DOING CLASS WORK

Books and Reference Rooms Are for General Public and Research, Statement Says.

DAMAGE TO VOLUMES CITED

Colleges Asked to Help Enforce New Rule — Depression Swells
Number of Readers.

College and high school students are barred from doing classroom work in the reading rooms of the New York Public Library reference department and no longer will receive books for class study purposes, Harry M. Lydenberg, head of the reference department, declared yesterday. Although emphasizing that the library exists only to serve the public and that an increase in the number of readers is regarded by the staff as an advance in usefulness, Mr. Lydenberg said the reference department could not properly fulfill its main purpose unless students doing ordinary classroom work were barred.

Overcrowding and damage to irreplaceable volumes have made this newly revealed policy imperative, Mr. Lydenberg said. Accordingly, the library has recently had printed and is distributing to students a slip which reads as follows:

"The library does not provide translations, textbooks or other works required for the preparation of classroom work. On account of increasing pressure upon its facilities and also on account of damage to its books, the library cannot undertake to provide books that should be obtained by students from the libraries of the schools and colleges they attend."

"Many other books in the library cannot be issued for general use because of their value or rarity. They are available only to readers engaged in advanced studies."

Hopes Colleges Will Help.

The reference department is in communication with college authorities at Hunter, New York University, City College and Columbia, and arrangements are being made to publish the above notice and a more complete explanation of the need for the new policy in student publications. The college officials have been asked to aid in explaining the new rule and it is expected that they will cooperate, it was said.

The reference department, with more than 2,000,000 books on sixty-seven miles of shelves, occupies the major part of the Central Library building at Forty-second Street and Fifth Avenue. There are 768 seats in its two main reading rooms, and it maintains a staff geared to distribute a book every six seconds.

It is not unusual on Saturdays or holidays, Mr. Lydenberg said, to have every seat taken early in the morning and to see several hundred more persons leaning against the shelves or sitting on the floor to read. Although no accurate figures have been given, it was said that ordinarily 25 per cent and sometimes more of these readers were high school and college students engaged in classroom work.

He pointed out also that, while the library buys textbooks and modern translations of the classics, it buys only a few and is not prepared to supply large groups of students.

Valuable Old Books Used.

"As an example," he said, "we have no school text of Horace available, but we do have a number of eighteenth century editions which the student decides will do as well. He sends down a slip for one of these and we must either permit him and hundreds of others with the same purpose to use, and sometimes misuse, an irreplaceable book or else must adopt a steadfast policy of refusal. It seems to us that books for class study should be provided by the school they attend."

The move revealed yesterday is one of a number of attempts to alleviate overcrowding. For some years it has been found necessary to forbid students to bring their class books into the reference department reading rooms. This year, with idleness increasing the general use of the library reading rooms to an unprecedented degree, the new ruling is considered a necessity.

The library's books have been selected, its catalogue planned and its staff organized to make its collections readily serviceable to the general reader and the specialist, Mr. Lydenberg said.

"Consequently," he continued, "undergraduate students coming to the reference department find a collection that was not selected for them, a staff that is not organized to aid them and a catalogue that is not planned for them."

He pointed out that the library as it is run at present costs $1,500,000 a year. It could be run as a students' library for one-third of that, but would fall far short of its present efficiency.

$7,000,000 LIBRARY DEDICATED AT YALE

Dr. Angell Accepts the 16-Story Gothic Sterling Memorial as a "Temple of the Mind."

HAILED AS AMONG GREATEST

Structure for 3,000,000 Volumes Will Dominate for Ages, Notable Gathering Is Told.

PURPOSE TERMED 'SERVICE'

Dr. Putnam, Congress Librarian, Lauds Lack of Restrictions on the $29,000,000 Sterling Gifts.

Special to The New York Times.
NEW HAVEN, Conn., April 11.—
The Sterling Memorial Library, constructed during the past three years at a cost of nearly $7,000,000, passed formally into the possession of Yale University today, to be hailed by President Angell as a symbol of the intellectual and spiritual life of the institution.

Elaborate dedication ceremonies marked the acceptance of the building, a gift to Yale from the estate of John W. Sterling, a New York lawyer, and member of the class of '64, who left his entire fortune to the university when he died in 1918.
Presentation of the keys to the structure was made to President Angell
by John Anson Garver of New York City, as counsel to the trustees of the Sterling estate.

Formal addresses were made by
Mr. Garver, Professor John Keogh, Yale librarian, and Herbert Putnam, librarian of Congress. President Angell made a short speech of acceptance.

The ceremonies were attended by a large body of the Yale faculty and many prominent alumni of the university. Governor Cross, former dean of the Graduate School of Yale, represented Connecticut. Among other officials were Lieut. Gov. Samuel R.
Spencer and Mayor Thomas A. Tully of New Haven. Members of Mr. Ster-ling's family present included Mr.
and Mrs. Sterling H. Bunnell of Stratford and Dr. and Mrs. Frank
S. Bunnell of Norwich.

George H. Church, George B. Cortelyou, former Secretary of the Treasury, and John A. Garver, as trustees of the Sterling estate; James Gamble Rosen, the architect of the library;
Rogers and Robert L.

litz, the Bunnells, were also present.

Sixteen-Story Tower Dominates.

The building, which is in Gothic style, stands in the heart of the university section, occupying a square of about 350 feet. A sixteen-story tower, 150 feet in height, dominates
the lower buildings surrounding it.
The building has a shelf capacity of 3,000,000 volumes and has seats for 2,000 readers.

President Angell, holding in his hand the keys given to him by Mr.
Garver, said in accepting the library:
"On behalf of Yale University I have the honor gratefully to accept this noble memorial of her devoted son, John W. Sterling. Amid the many great buildings which bear his name, in mute testimony of his love for alma mater, this, above all others, will tell to generations yet unborn
the story of a precious vision long cherished and at last come true. Here indeed is 'an enduring, useful and architecturally beautiful edifice,' and beyond all peradventure it constitutes 'a fitting memorial' of Mr.
Sterling's 'gratitude to and affection for' Yale.

"Peculiarly fitting is it that the noblest of all Yale's buildings should be dedicated to her books, which are,
in fact, the deep foundations upon which she was built. Time can never wholly dim the romance of the story, and it is in reverent memory that we recall the familiar tale of that little band of ministers gathered at Branford in the year of grace 1700 to present the books which gave the college corporate life. And now, after many years of restless wandering, we hope that here those books and all the myriad others which have been joined unto them, may find a peaceful haven for centuries of service undisturbed.

"Here, toiling side by side, the librarian, the architect, the builder have conjured up a dream of surpassing majesty and then translated it into innumerable ingenious and gracious forms whereby the casual reader in search of transient intellectual diversion, not less than the serious scholar embarked on explorations far-flung and recondite, may both be well and promptly served.
Here are devices of shrewd intelligence and skill for prosecuting all those arts whereby the treasures of the place may be protected and preserved, while yet available to those who properly require them. As with the great cathedrals, unmeasured thought and care and sheer devotion have been lavished on this pile, whose beauty everywhere leaps out
to meet the eye.

Dedicated as "Temple of the Mind."

"It is, in truth, a very temple of the mind which here we dedicate today, a fane wherein are marshalled
the greatest souls of human history, and on the altars of its inner sanctuary will always burn the sacred lamp of learning and the holy torch of truth. Here is incarnate the intellectual and spiritual life of Yale."

Dr. Putnam in his address declared that the importance of the Sterling Library was that it tended to counteract the decentralization of university libraries into departmental collections.

"No such decentralization can be successful," he said, "for it involves a partition of literatures physically impracticable, inconsistent with their essential unities, and with the modern method of study and research, that, whatever the topic, draws variously upon them.

"But the effect of decentralization is in another particular disastrous.
It deprives the student body of the influence upon their understanding, their sentiment and their imagination of an impressive personality, not

$7,000,000 LIBRARY DEDICATED AT YALE

Continued from Page One.

a mere torso, but the embodiment in its integrity of all that man has done, has thought, has felt, has aspired to,
so far as he has consciously recorded it. In its very physical aspect such a record is both a lesson and an emotion. And the graduates of Yale who later exchange their comradeship
'No fuimus simul in Galandria' may well rejoice that among the grateful recollections which they can share will be not only that of the majesty and charm of this building, but of the majesty and inspiration of the presence within it."

Gifts Free of Restrictions Urged.

In speaking of libraries generally,
Dr. Putnam pleaded for unrestricted gifts to universities, pointing out that the restrictions sometimes placed on gifts were deadening.

"Create the memorial, but let it be a living one," he urged.

"In the recent development of American libraries," he said, "no phenomenon is more striking than the extraordinary development of the academic group. Excluding the two municipal libraries of Boston and New York, six endowed collections closely reserved, and the library of Congress, four-fifths of the books in this country of serious import to scholars are now concentrated in the libraries of our universities. That means a concentration at points not always centres of research in general or convenient to it; and in institutions whose prime interest is a special, limited constituency, and with no obligation, save as nobility obliges, to the public at large. The policy adopted by them and the organization which may make it effective are therefore matters of general concern."

He went on:
"In spirit, the existing policy is conspicuously liberal; indeed probably four-fifths of the so-called interlibrary loans in aid of scholars at a distance now issue from the libraries of our universities. But, so far as I am aware, no such library has within its organization an equipment or personnel especially designed to deal with them. If the service is to be recognized as a duty, it should have both."

"Is it not a duty, the duty incident to the possession of any resource for the enrichment of society, whose use can be extended without impairment of its value? Or suppose even the impairment. Books are not mere relics, they are agents whose service depends on use. That is the service of all other things in nature, including man himself; why should books be an exception? Permanence, yes; but the permanence that consists in an influence exerted that will pass on and down. 'Terar dum prosum,' let me be consumed so that I be of use.
Unfortunately if the book be consumed, or that copy of it, but better consumed in use than disintegrated in repose. No disrespect to the museums, nor to any section of the library analogous in its function; but it is the energetic part that I am considering."

"In point of fact, however, it is not usually apprehension of loss which limits the loans; it is some condition imposed upon the possession of the material. Such a condition limits to reference use the most valuable portion of the collections in the New York Public Library, some of the most important groups in the Boston Public, all of the material in the six cited endowed collections. In the case of the university libraries it is apt to apply to any group due to gift and that means to the groups of greatest distinction and interest to the scholar now in the possession of such libraries."

"They are due chiefly to the enthusiasm of alumni. The motive of the donors is perfect: loyalty, generosity and a legitimate wish to associate with the alma mater a memorial of their own particular tastes and talents. But in attaching conditions to the administration of them the donors too often frustrate the large benefits with their power to confer. If, without impertinence, I may venture a plea to future such donors among your alumni, it would be to commit the gift to the absolute discretion of the university authorities. That discretion is likely to be conservative; and where it proves liberal it will but invigorate the gift and enlarge its career of service.
Create the memorial, but let it be a living one."

Dependence on Librarians Asked.

"The inertness of other groups in our university libraries is due to the allotment of funds for purchase
among the several teaching faculties.
The motive is to apply to the selection the discriminate knowledge of the specialists in each field who have also a responsible concern with the resulting collections. The peril is that the more enterprising departments may secure an undue share of the funds, and, having got it, spend it recklessly to avoid any challenge-able surplus; or at least that an excessive proportion may go to highly specialized material, of momentary concern to a specialist in the faculty, not in his teaching but in his personal research. His interest passes; perhaps he himself passes; but the material remains, jutting out from the main organism like a dead branch upon a tree; or—substituting an analogy less disparaging—a frozen asset."

"Our university libraries possess many such groups. They are supposed to add prestige, but the price is high to pay and justified only by an administration of them in the largest interest; frozen assets, which only the breath of a scholar can again liquefy. He may be remote, in some isolated institution of learning or far-flung laboratory. He may not be able to come to them. In pity, let them go to him."

"The system of allotment which has created the condition is assumed to be in the interest of efficiency.
My prejudiced belief is that it isn't.
I am convinced that with the full authority in the librarian, and his certain disposition to avail himself of the competent advice available, every department would have its just recognition, and the collection as a whole would be more neatly organic. It is he, after all, who should be the architect of it; and in the institutions where he is allowed to be, the resulting collections are better balanced and far less encumbered with 'dead wood.'"

Story of Founding Is Told.

Recounting the story of the founding of Yale College and the Yale

Library in 1701 at Branford, Conn., when a group of Congregational ministers assembled at the home of the Rev. Samuel Russel and "agreed to give books from their own scanty library as the nucleus of college property," Dr. Keogh said:

"The first library endowment of $10, given by Jared Eliot in 1763, has been followed by a hundred others,
of a total still woefully inadequate,
but much greater than our predecessors would have dreamed necessary or even possible. The forty volumes given by the ministers have grown to 2,000,000. We now add as many books in a year as had been accumulated during the first century and a half of our history. But the number of volumes in a library means little more to a librarian than their cubage or their weight. It is appropriateness, it is quality that counts.

"The ideal library for the undergraduate is a sufficient number of the best books administered in the best way. The ideal library for the investigator knows no limit of number, or subject or language, or date, and places experts in charge of the various sections. In practice, no single library can collect everything.
There will always be national and special depositories to which the research worker must go to master his subject. But an individual may be unusually rich, may even be supreme, in one subject or in a hundred subjects, and it is distinction of this sort that attracts students and teachers."

"The librarians, the library committees, the professors, the curators, the graduates and other friends of Yale who have made this library what it is, have confidence that its future will be worthy of its past;
and the Yale Library Associates are determined that the contents of the building shall be as notable as the edifice is superb."

"A library is an instrument of learning and of power. It is an old instrument at Yale, as we have seen;
but its possibilities have been immensely increased by the princely provisions of the Sterling bequest.
Here our faculties and students and the scholarly minded of the community in which we live find facilities for study greater than Yale has ever known. Here the faith of the founders and of all who love Yale will be justified. Once more Yale's largest and finest structure enshrines its books."

Referring to Professor Keogh's historical sketch of the founding of Yale, Mr. Garver said:

"Nothing in its life has persisted so tenaciously through its two and a third centuries as Yale's library;
and in the absence of some overwhelming catastrophe to civilization itself, we may feel confident that this building will stand through centuries to come, with no fear of yielding to a greater rival."

Mr. Garver announced that Yale had received $29,133,091 from Mr.
Sterling's estate. Of this $9,960,957 has gone for professorships, fellowships and scholarships, and $19,172,- 331 for buildings, including the memorial library and maintenance funds.

The buildings include the Sterling
Chemistry Laboratory, the Sterling Hall of Medicine, two wings of the Sterling Quadrangle for undergraduates, the Sterling law buildings, the Sterling tower for the Sheffield Scientific School, and the quadrangles for the Graduate School and the Divinity School.

APR 19 1929 TO
SEPT 29 1931

J. F. FITZGERALD & CO.
 STATIONERS
 48 SUMMER STREET
 BOSTON

Job No. 14790
Duplicate this book by sending above number

INDEX

Abbey, Mrs. Edwin A., death of	168
Abbey paintings	35, 173, 177
Abbott, Gordon	19, 21, 152, 153
Abbott, Samuel A. B.	169
Accidents in the Library	35, 42, 59, 61-66, 170, 171
Adult Education	108
Advertising on bookmarks	21
Alice in Wonderland, exhibition of MS.	94
American Merchant Marine Library Association	53, 56, 119, 131, 165
Annual reports.
1929	104, 105
1930	172, 173, 175
Bacchante (MacMonnies)	6-7, 101, 141, 144
Bates Hall, service in	130
Beale-Morey, Mrs. Ellen	145
Belden, Charles F. D.	18, 19, 31, 36, 38, 40, 53, 56, 67, 84, 97, 98, 99, 107, 115, 121, 131, 133, 136, 164
Benton, Josiah	33
Benton will	110, 111
Better Homes Week	154, 155
Beverly Public Library, 75th anniversary	74-75
Birziska, Michael, visit of	145
Blaisdell, Frank C.	52-53
Books, lost	19, 170
Books, rare (MSS., etc.)	34, 35, 50, 85, 88, 89, 94, 100, 130, 152, 153
Books, selection of	31, 170
Books, stolen	18, 21, 28, 110, 170, 172
Books, use of	2, 19, 20, 54, 137, 166
Boston Libraries	30
Boylston Branch	180
Branch libraries	36, 37, 51, 57, 58, 59, 101, 102, 104, 106, 108, 109, 117, 118, 133, 167
Buckley, Pierce E.	53, 72, 166
Business aids	17, 18, 22, 54
Butterfield, David W.	4, 5
Buxton, Frank W.	93
Cartoons	114, 172, 180
Censorship	11, 21
Charleston Branch	155
Chase, Frank H.	27, 126, 127, 132, 136, 138
de Chavannes paintings	47, 155, 177
Child visitor	39
Children's Book Week	40, 41, 42, 46, 119, 122, 124
Children's books	172
Christmas decorations	51, 130
Cleaning	57, 166

Closing . . . . .	10, 119
Connolly, Rt. Rev. Msgr. Arthur T. . . . .	123, 124, 125
Copley Square building . . . . .	124
Courtyard "revels" scandal . . . . .	90-93, 97
Curley, Hon. James M. . . . .	36, 37, 38, 54, 106
Currier, Guy W. . . . .	21, 98-97, 109
Defoe Collection . . . . .	138, 139, 141, 152
Demchevsky, Margaret, visit of . . . . .	69
Development of Library facilities . . . . .	15
Dietrichson, Mrs. Mary W. . . . .	149
Dorchester Branch . . . . .	25, 145, 155
Employment of staff . . . . .	117, 162
Examining Committee . . . . .	36, 37
Exhibitions . . . . .	4, 8, 17, 19, 29, 32, 33, 47, 56, 67, 70 71, 82-83, 97, 98, 99, 101, 106, 109, 119, 123, 130, 132, 135, 136, 140, 143, 147, 148, 150, 163, 176
Faneuil Branch . . . . .	117, 155
Fazakas, Charles A. . . . .	111
Fires in the Library . . . . .	62, 64-66, 88-89, 137
Gibbs, Laura S. . . . .	123, 129
Goldstein, Fanny . . . . .	122, 128-9, 157, 158-9, 163
Gould, Kate A., gift of . . . . .	75
"Graingerizing" . . . . .	5
Hall, John L. . . . .	161
Haraszti, Zoltan . . . . .	46
Hart Memorial Library, Townsend, Massachusetts . . . . .	36, 38, 40
Hartzell, Mrs. Bertha V. . . . .	169
Hensley, Richard G. . . . .	168
"Home, Sweet Home", transfer of MS. of . . . . .	24
Hoyt Memorial Library, Merrimac, Massachusetts . . . . .	67, 68, 71
Humorous errors in requests for books . . . . .	111
Inter-library loans . . . . .	81
Jamaica Plain Branch . . . . .	155
Jeffries Point Branch . . . . .	37
Jewish Book Week . . . . .	10, 11, 16, 17, 76, 81, 151, 152, 154, 156 157, 158-9, 160, 161, 163, 164
Jordan, Alice M. . . . .	43, 146, 153, 168, 172
Kern sale . . . . .	5
Kirstein, Louis E. . . . .	44, 45, 73, 124, 128-9, 133-5, 150, 163, 166
Kirstein Branch (Business Branch and Third Floor) . . . . .	21, 22, 23, 41, 44, 45, 48, 86, 67, 71, 73, 76-81, 83, 89, 90, 98, 102, 113, 114, 116, 117, 123, 125, 126, 125, 127, 142, 146, 148, 150, 176
Le Galliene, Eva . . . . .	9

Lectures and concerts . . .	9, 29, 30, 32, 35, 42, 49, 57, 65, 66, 67, 68, 69, 75, 112, 116, 118, 121, 122, 130, 131, 132, 134, 135, 146, 147, 148, 149, 150, 154, 162, 163, 165, 178
"Leisure class" . . .	42
Lewisson Collection . . .	145
Locke, Gladys E. . . . .	109
McKim, Charles F. . . . .	60, 114, 142, 143, 144
Massachusetts Library Club . . . . .	74, 56, 116, 118, 119
Mattapan Branch . . . . .	171, 174
Memorials to past librarians . . . . .	168
More Books . . . . .	5, 18, 46, 50, 57, 85, 88, 105, 117, 141, 171
Mount Pleasant Branch . . . . .	47
Mutilation of library property . . . . .	138
Newspaper Room . . . . .	153
Old cook books . . . . .	15
Orient Heights Branch . . . . .	23, 37
Parker Hill Branch . . . . .	117, 127, 135, 168, 169, 171
Parker Hill Branch, exterior sculpture . . . . .	172, 174, 177, 178, 179, 180, 181
Parmenter, James P. . . . .	108
Periodical Department . . . . .	30, 34
Perry, Thomas Sargent, memorial tablet . . . . .	24
Phillips Brooks Branch . . . . .	168, 171
Plays . . . . .	49, 53
Prince Collection . . . . .	29
Printers, Society of . . . . .	85
Putnam, Herbert . . . . .	8, 17, 18, 19, 31, 42, 149
Readers' Advisor . . . . .	123, 129
Reconstruction . . . . .	8, 9, 10, 14, 28, 29, 30, 50, 51, 55, 149, 163, 172, 180
Religious weeklies . . . . .	177
Roxbury Crossing Branch . . . . .	175
Sargent paintings . . . . .	37, 40, 63, 172, 177
Sedgwick, Ellery . . . . .	96-98
Simmons College. Cooperative training of library students... . . . .	147
South End Branch . . . . .	67, 68, 113
Special Libraries Association . . . . .	36, 119, 120
"Stranger within our gates, A". . . . .	24
Students . . . . .	129
Sullivan, Lorraine A. . . . .	119
Summer privilege plan . . . . .	99, 101
Training Class . . . . .	169
Treasure Room (New) . . . . .	85-88
Trumpet of Krakow . . . . .	3, 8
Trustees . . . . .	53, 131, 153, 163

Twentieth Regiment Memorial . . . . .	167
Verses on the Library . . . . .	108, 139, 152
Washington Congressional Medal . . . . .	179
Washington exhibits . . . . .	189
"Well-read man", defined . . . . .	18
West End Branch . . . . .	41, 42, 51, 113, 124, 130, 132, 154
West Roxbury Branch . . . . .	137
World Congress of Librarians . . . . .	17, 18, 19, 36

Stanley Makes Brief Survey Of Public Library Business

3,899,286 Books Circulated in Year—Place Them End to End and They Would Reach to —Well Read It Yourself

By THE HERALD'S ROVING REPORTER

Statistical Stanley was also roving. We met in front of the Boston Public Library. He was departing hence, having made a brief, but complete survey of the business done in that institution during the year 1928. He was in a high fever of agitation over his findings. He used the term "devastating" in describing them. To prove to me how devastating they were he asked:

"Is it comprehensible to you that 3,899,286 books were circulated last year by this institution and its several branches throughout the city?"

The question left me breathless. "Do you possibly appreciate how many books that is?" he queried. "That many books, if laid flat end to end, would stretch in an unbroken line from the corner of Dartmouth and Boylston streets, right here, to the corner of Main and Pearl streets in Buffalo, New York. That's 492 miles and figuring the average book length at eight inches they would cover the ground. Now if you set them end to end, one on top of the other, they—"

"You couldn't set them that way; they'd fall down," I protested. "But if you could they—"

"But you couldn't," I insisted.

With an anathema of disgust he consulted his notebook for the next item.

18 ACRES IN MAGAZINES

"The magazines taken in at this building last year," he went on, numbered 19,104, counting 12 of each kind for the year and including weeklies. Now, say the average number of pages in a magazine is 100. That makes 50 sheets. We make the average size of a magazine sheet 120 square inches. We would thus have 796,000 square feet of magazine pages. They would spread out, close together, over 18 acres of land."

He turned to the next page in the notebook.

"The employees in this institution,"

He swept the building with a designating flourish. "There are 474 employees."

"You can't stand them up end to end, I broke in with delighted frustration.

"You could lay them prone, end to end," he gleefully declared.

"Not on a wet day like this," I declared.

"But if you waited until a dry day and they would be willing to be laid prone,

end to end, they would—averaging 5 feet

the year totalled 153,500. That's enough children to fill the Boston Garden to capacity eight times on a hockey game night, 10 times for a concert and—

"How many at a prize fight?"

Stanley scoffed at this.

"In Bates hall," he went on, "during the 12 months ending Jan. 1, 1929, there were 307,000 requests for books to be read at the tables or to take home. These requests must be written on slips of paper provided for the purpose. Therefore there were 307,000 of these slips written in Bates hall. On each slip you write an average of six words. In the grand total that makes 1,842,000 words. That's as many as there are in 37 full-length novels. There are 773,692 words in the Bible. The number of words written on those Bates hall slips last year is two and one-half times as many as are in the Bible."

"How about the pencils?" I offered.

"That's 307,000 pencils used, deducting duplications, of course, where some of them were borrowed."

Stanley was all excitement.

"An item I neglected," he said, regretfully. "What's the average thickness of graphite in a pencil?"

"I haven't the slightest idea," I answered, and that's only the half of it.

"But why, may I ask, are you leaving the library without taking out any books?"

"I've got a book," he replied, and was lost in the sidewalk traffic.

4 inches each—they would stretch from the spot marking the Boston Massacre at State near Devonshire to—well, to the city editor's desk in The Boston Herald office. That's 2523 feet and they'd make it."

"Wonderful," I cheered. "Does that include the janitors?"

He ignored this and skipped the next page in the note book.

"What's on that page?" I demanded.

"Oh, nothing much. Merely the kind of books read—you know, philosophy, fiction, travel, theology, science, and all that silly stuff. Not important."

"Of course it's important," I insisted.

"It shows the trend of public thinking; the intellectual progress of—"

"It does not," he replied snappily. "It merely shows how good were the advertising departments of the 'Book a Minute' clubs."

"Oh, well, go on."

"The number of children who visited the children's room in the library for

The Trumpet of Krakow on Exhibition in Boston

The Famous Instrument That Has Been Played Many Times During the Centuries of Polish History

WITH all the "go" of "Treasure Island" or "Prester John," so far as the boy of fifteen is concerned, "The Trumpet of Krakow," a tale of the fifteenth century Poland, merits adult applause not only for being the kind of book to put in the hands of a lad, but for the skillful manner in which the author, Professor Eric P. Kelly of Dartmouth College, brings in background for his adaptation of the old poetic legend which has taken as his theme. Readers who love the romance and color of medieval Middle Europe at the time of the Tartar raids and share the adventures and mystery which dog the heels of fifteen-year-old Joseph Charnetski will find in this tale of old Krakow by day and night a fascinating, fast-moving chronicle bearing the stamp of patient research and diligent study. In it the boy, by Mr. Kelly's retouching of medieval folklore, seeks sanctuary in the walled university city with his family after their home in the Ukraine was laid waste by the marauding Tartars, becomes trumpeter of the old Church of Our Lady Mary and carries on the tradition of the trumpeter of the eleventh century, who in sounding the hours also sounded upon the trumpet a hymn or hymn in honor of Our Lady, playing from the four windows of the high tower until pierced by an arrow of the foe sacking the besieged city.

Joseph's family joins the caravan to

Krakow, his father's interest centering in a pumpkin safely hidden in the wagon and, unknown to Joseph, concealing the Great Tartar Crystal, a jewel whose beauty and value has roused the greed and so bewitched all those who have seen it that sudden death is the price of its possession. Through Elzbieta, a girl of his own age, and the daughter of the alchemist and magician, Pan Kreutz, Joseph comes upon Black Art of that day, crystal razings and exorcisms and the alchemist's search for gold. Even hypnotism as practiced by the crafty student Johann Tring sets the stage for the amazing canvass of the Street of the Pigeons and the old market place, the old narrow houses of the university district, merchants from foreign lands, boisterous duelling students, desperate bands of professional beggars, gangs of cutthroats, all of whom cross the boy's path.

Through the month of the Siekls and the Month of Hemp Boating, into the Month of the Falling Leaves, one follows

Joseph and the mysterious attacks on the lad and his father by the cruel Bogdan Grozny, "Bogdan the Terrible," to the Poles, Peter of the Button Face—worth quotation to mark the graphic power of description of the author: Bogdan of the "dark, oval, wicked face, eyes greenish and narrow and the eyebrow line above them straight across the bridge of the nose, giving the effect of a monkey rather than a man. . . One cheek marked by the scar of the linton plague so common east of the Volga. . . ears lowset and ugly, the mouth like a slit in the pumpkins boys carry on the eve of Allhallow's."

Beyond the personal adventures of the boy, Professor Kelly has worked into his tapestry, accurately, the history of the day, the efforts of Moscow to form an alliance with the Tartar Khan, the great conflagration which charred the middle of the old town. Fittingly, he has illustrated his tale with drawings by a Polish artist whose line and color have the simplicity and charm of illuminated medieval manuscripts, a flavor and unconventionality marking them as Old World. He raises the story of the times which has more than transient appeal—rather permanent worth. It is a book a boy will start to read, his father take over and his uncle borrow, unless the boy be a rapid reader or allowed the boon of reading late into the night.

E. B. T.

Photographer of Lincoln, at 84, Still Hunting for Subjects Worthy of the Plate

David W. Butterfield and the Camera He Used for Big Pictures

(Transcript Photos by Frank E. Cobb)

IN these days of television it is a long way back to an apprentice master of the chemistry of the daguerrotype at Whipple & Black's portrait establishment, next door to the Transcript, in 1861. Yet David W. Butterfield, who lives in the old Bulfinch House, 183 Roxbury street, Roxbury, photographer of Presidents, and now 84 years old, is still about his business of photography "but is going to get out of it one of these days."

During the first two weeks in April, "Dave" Butterfield, as he is known to hundreds in Boston and Cambridge, held a one-man show of his photographs at the Boston Public Library. Inquiry as to how he had taken the large pictures brought the story of a remarkable camera, shown in the illustration above. Thirty years ago, when Mr. Butterfield was chasing around the country on commercial contracts, he had this camera constructed. It has an extension length of eleven feet, four inches, and the plate-holder carries plates forty by forty inches square, or thirty by forty, or twenty by forty. These plates had to be made especially for the box. Despite the work necessary to set the camera up, Mr. Butterfield used it recently to take two photographs for the Commonwealth: one of the Charles River basin from the Longfellow bridge and one of the basin from the Boston side.

Photography has taken Mr. Butterfield to many parts of the country. It was in 1864, after he had served four years with Whipple & Black polishing daguerrotype plates, that the young photographer went down to Washington with a letter of introduction from Benjamin the President, in the East Room of the White House. As he recalls Mr. Lincoln he found him a kindly, serious man, awkward and ungainly—"not very particular about his necktie and all that"—who sat for the laborious process of "wet plates" and talked with the Boston visitor about his son Robert at Harvard. Mr. Butterfield says Tad, Conkling to President Lincoln. For two days he took poses of Lincoln social but beneath his conversation was an undercurrent of care and anxiety.

In Every Niche of Fame

General Grant, when Mr. Butterfield went to take his picture, proved rebellious. He had no time, was going out of town. "I suggested tomorrow," said Mr. Butterfield. "Grant scratched his head and said he would be very busy tomorrow. I suggested staying over until the next week and Grant said, 'Be here at ten tomorrow.'"

McKinley, then Senator from Ohio and Senior Warden of the Grand Commandery of the Knight Templars when the triennial convocation was held in Boston in 1895, was more jovial when he sat for his photograph although it resembles the familiar picture of dignity and calm McKinley, coming up to the floor which the Sir Knights had rented in the Pierce Building at Copley Square, jokingly asked Mr. Butterfield if he didn't want to take him wearing all his regalia. He took off the Masonic decorations, however, and sat for the conventional picture.

Calvin Coolidge sat for Mr. Butterfield when he was Lieutenant Governor of Massachusetts. Other notables in his gallery include Andrew Carnegie, whom he photographed at a Commencement at West Point Military Academy in the '70s; Henry Wadsworth Longfellow; Thomas Alva Edison, who entertained the venerable photographer at his desk factory, where Mr. Butterfield was amazed at the thousands streaming from the gates at closing time; Henry Ford; Henry Cabot Lodge and Clarence W. Barron.

Mr. Butterfield after his four years at Whipple & Black's was in business for thirteen years at 646 Washington street, then at 573 Massachusetts avenue, Cambridge, for twenty-three years. He was in the Cambridge city government for three years and served on the Republican City Committee for seven years and was delegate to the State Convention.

"Nowadays . . ."

His mammoth camera went with him to Elgin, Ill., where it was assembled on a staging ninety feet high in order to take a panorama of the factory. Another panorama of which he is proud is that of the Boston Fire—a scene bounded by the Old South Meeting House over to the then Hollis Street Church, with many churches and buildings which have since disappeared. At Washington while with the Bureau of Engineering he made, with wet plates, a copy of the painting of Custer's Last Stand, a canvas thirty-eight feet long and twelve feet high in the Capitol building. In contrast are scenic panoramas which he made for the Boston and Maine Railroad of familiar mountain scenes in Maine. He photographed Alexander Graham Bell at Cape Breton. He photographed high bridges in Fairmont, Va., on a commercial trip which carried him 800 miles in 1887.

Out of his photographic ventures, Mr. Butterfield entered the publishing business and has sent to many schools and colleges copies of his official photograph of the Pilgrim Compact, made in 1891 for the World's Fair, and other educational documents.

"Nowadays," Mr. Butterfield says with something of a note of regret "anyone can buy a package of plates any school girl . . ."

Revere Beach, as Mr. Butterfield Found It in the Leg-of-Mutton Sleeves and Bicycle Days of the '90's

BOSTON EVENING TRANSCRIPT, WEDNESDAY, APRIL 24, 1929

More Books

"More Books," the bulletin of the Boston Public Library, has been checking up on the Kern sale to see what books the library possesses of the 1482 lots sold at the auction. The prices are given in these notes "not to emphasize the commercial aspects of these matters, but because these commercial aspects exist, to impart definite information about them. The general public has only vague notions about the nature and contents of the library's rare collections. These notes may lead the intelligent book lover to a better knowledge of our possessions." While in many cases no comparisons are possible, as the Kern sale included presentation of association copies where the library has only the first editions devoid of association interest, the result of the review has been highly satisfactory from the point of view of showing the financial value of the library's possessions. While the "intelligent book lover" will appreciate the library's perfect copy of Defoe's "Robinson Crusoe" the more because the Kern copy was sold for $17,500 is a question to be answered only by the book lover himself. The money lover certainly will appreciate it more.

THE BOSTON HERALD

TUESDAY, APRIL 30, 1929

CHILDREN'S DISRESPECT FOR BOOKS

To the Editor of The Herald:

We are hearing much about the disrespect of the younger generation, "apple-sauce," "holena," "why worry," etc. But how many realize that one phase of disrespect is being taught right in our public schools? And this to the ages of 7 and 8 years and up.

Not only these children themselves, but mothers, fathers and older brothers and sisters are aiding and abetting this nefarious business. This business—"Graingerizing," so-called, an old term and practice long since frowned upon and meaning the tearing from books, illustrations and title pages to illustrate other books or essays.

Hardly a day passes but some child or relative calls and wants a copy of some book in order to "tear out the pictures to illustrate an essay or theme at school."

If a dilapidated copy can be found there may, perhaps, be no objection, and, perhaps, no objection if confined within this limit. But it is human to want what you want, and to get what you want. An easy way is an excusable way. "It's only one picture taken at random from a valuable book, but doesn't it look great for my essay? Maybe I ought not to do it but I should worry."

If this abominable practice is taught and approved of right in our public schools with what respect will children treat books in any condition or subject? I once heard a lecture where pictures of this nature were used. A page was turned to show such an illustration. Oh, it was the rubber stamp of the Boston Public Library. Having been brought up to respect books of any nature, never to dog-ear nor mark; it made my blood boil. Under the circumstances I could say nothing. The owner and lecturer evidently felt guilty, for he made the lame excuse that he had looked everywhere to find what he wanted and, not being able to do so, had "taken" it from the book owned by the city of Boston.

I might go on multiplying such incidents, but I am in hopes that this will be sufficient to show where such a practice will lead if not stopped. Being a bookseller I suppose that it is bad policy to denounce any practice that will tend to make books scarce, but it is such an outrageous teaching and extending to such an extent that a stop should be put to it at once. Personally I do not cater in such trade and prefer not to sell for such purposes.

GUY A. JACKSON.
Boston, April 27.

Curious Adventures of Boston's Most Famous and Picturesque Statues

What Has Become of Public Garden Venus Who Used to Be Veiled Modestly in Shower of Spray Why Was MacMonnies "Bacchante" Barred From Public Library?

Shem Drown's Province House Indian, who used to fire off his arrow exactly at noon everyday and then go down to dinner! (Brayton photo.)

Province House, as it was, showing the famous copper Indian on top. (Courtesy of the Boston Public Library.)

Old wood cut, from "Sentry, or Beacon Hill," by William W. Wheelton, showing the three hills, which gave Boston the name of Trimount, and the way the water runs under the city, to spring out in fountains. And also on high the eagle who topped the old beacon shaft.

BY LEO RABBETTE

Where are the statues of yesteryear? A "Precious" few of them are gone "the way of all marble," and a few still hang on which called forth a most marvelous burst of denunciatory oratory from no less a champion than Wendell Phillips.

There was a Venus, in the Public Gardens, standing in a shell, noble and nude and antique, veiled modestly in a shower of spray. Her name even was veiled, she was called, "The Maid of the Mist." And by the mist, like Danae of old, she was undone.

One fine day she disappeared. Had some one fallen in love with her cold, white beauty and borne her away from Boston's "Fields of Enna," to pay homage to her in a rapt secrecy? Even the newspapers couldn't find out. But, alas, the gods, as some one so aptly said, seem to have feet of clay, and truth is not always poetry.

Now it can be told. The spray which was to conceal gracefully that ancient and ever-young goddess perfidiously wore her away. So she was judged and found wanting and carried to the home of New England antiquities. She was not there five minutes, however, before a great Harvard football player and a lover of Greek things rescued her and put her in his country estate, in a fair bower of greenery, far from the maddening crowd, and at such a distance and in so ingenuous a setting that she shone forth again quite as lovely appearing as the day she left the sculptor's chisel. And that's the solution of the mystery of the missing Miss Venus.

Fountain Stirs City

Then there was that ultra-curious anomaly, called the Cogswell Fountain. A Doctor of that name from San Francisco presented it to the city in 1884 and it was put up near the west gate of Boston Common, over more than vigorous protests.

The Paint and Clay Club vainly petitioned the City Council to have it taken away. And they initiated the idea of having a commission of art experts appointed to serve without pay who should pass on all sculptural and architectural ornamentation offered to adorn the city streets and public grounds, "in order to guard cally life size bronze, delightfully done. It was destined to stand in the fountain in the court of the Public Library.

But whether it was feared that such a terrifically enamoured vision—drunken at least with the dance and joy of life, if not with a something more material as symbolized by the "Grape"—would too actively stimulate the state of mind of Boston's students of literature—or whether some other subtle reason was presented—she was not put up in the court. But no bronze lady has dared to take her place, and to poets and artists and young students her spirit still dances there in the

The famous "Cogswell Fountain," as it appeared on Boston Common. Note the open-mouthed entwined Sea Monsters, out of whose mouth came ice-water for thirsty citizens. (Barton-Ticknor Collection, Boston Public Library.)

(Above)—Louisburg Square as it was in the "gay fifties," showing the fountain in the centre, long since vanished with the past. (Reproduced from an ancient Gleason's Drawing Room Companion.)

of the Old Providence House. Done in copper he was, by Deacon Shem Drown, who also made the Grass-hopper on Faneuil Hall.

His arrow was ever held to the bow, ready to shoot, the chosen emblem of the Royal Colony. Of hammered copper he was and he had glittering glass eyes. It was the local jest that on the precise stroke of twelve daily, not a minute before and not a minute after, he "fired the arrow and went down to dinner." Crowds of chil-

"Bacchante," by Frederick W. MacMonnies, which does not adorn the Public Library Fountain!

May 21, 1887, issue of Gleason's Pictorial Drawing Room Companion, published in Boston.

About That Fountain

As Allen Chamberlain says in his "Beacon Hill," Houghton Mifflin Company's "This drawing appeared a year and one month after the fountain had been ordered abolished. Probably the order was not carried out with dispatch. Most things were done with greater deliberation in those days. Possibly the publisher of Gleason's, having spent good money for the picture, felt dis-

Statue of Edward Everett, which Wendell Phillips said made that worthy gentleman seem to be crying. "This is the way to Brighton!"

"Maid of the Mist," whose mysterious disappearance is now revealed for the first time. (Photo Courtesy Society for the Preservation of N. E. Antiquities.)

some that he condemns most severely has received the approval of those who are looked upon as good judges, and by trained artists.

Jos. Quincy
Wendell Phillips
Hub statue orio

to Brighton?" pointing with lifted arm and widespread fingers to that centre of beef and the races. Story's friends say he never lifted that weary arm, but yielded to a committee's urging as no true artist should ever do. (He now stands in Everett square.)

A Bronze Pyramid?

"If this bronze pyramid on Boylston street be a cast made of staves, why is it set on human legs? And if it is really Summer, why do his chest and shoulders rise out of a barrel? Is it broadcloth new felt, too stiff for folds, or is he dressed in shoe-leather? That matters little, however. But no angry Southerner would have needed to suit those overfed cheeks, which may have faced many a snowstorm on the locomotive, or many a northeaster on our coast, but surely must have been far too innocent of thought and passion ever to anger senates or rouse nations to war.

"This heavy-moulded prize-fighter is the marvelous achievement of that wise committee which rejected Miss Whitney's 'matchless model' (as they confessed it to be) of the seated Senator, because no woman could make a statue."

Miss Whitney's model of Summer sits with marvelous ease; the chair almost unseen, the modern costume perfect, and so cleverly managed that one forgets it in the quiet, intellectual, level gaze of the listening senator; and we feel that this is the statue of a statesman, or, if the satanic elements of his day ever confronted him, their assault would be as vain as the giants' rebellion against Jove. (This statue is in Cambridge facing Harvard square.)

To come back to the present, it might be well to state that most of the statues referred to by Wendell Phillips were presented to the city through the mayor and city council, and some of them are really not so bad as the great orator paints them.

Gardens Memorial

Charles D. Maginnis, noted ecclesiastical architect of Boston and member of the art commission, graciously gave the Boston Sunday Post reporter some points about our local statues. "Some years ago," he said, "there was simply the Governor Cass statue in the heart of the Public Garden, with no formal or convincing relationship, so the Art Commission made a study and a scheme was devised for the placing of any memorials to be latterly received by the city."

"I believe it would be a good thing to inform the public," Mr. Maginnis said, "of the real significance of the figure of Edward Everett Hale near the Charles street entrance of the Public Gardens. Many citizens do not realize that the oblique relation of the figure to the path has reference to a monumental entrance to the Gardens which was proposed for this gate about 12 years ago but never put into execution. The paths were then to be re-cut and place for the erection of a companion statue for the other side of the new entrance."

"I thought you might be going to ask me about the statue of Adams, recently moved from the square bearing his name. It originally faced north, and the lighting on it was very bad. Now, in Hook Square, on the axis of Faneuil Hall, it faces west and, of course, his personality is excellently in keeping with the sentiment of the Cradle of Liberty."

"One thing I have noticed," went on Mr. Maginnis, "in relation to public statues, and that is the great importance of the background. Since the Motor Map, with its simple and distinguished architectural lines, has appeared in Park square, the statue of Lincoln and the slave has taken on a new dignity. Up till then what with the signboards and the discordant littleness of architecture behind it one scarcely ever really saw the statue at all."

"People come to the commission asking to erect statues and almost always they choose the busiest parts of the city. And it has frequently been necessary to point out to them that that is one good way to conceal them as it were. With the hum and bustle and confusion of pedestrians and hurrying taxicabs, people are anxious to hurry by and keep from being run over. And how is anybody going to stand near enough to see a statue and really study it in the midst of the modern traffic maelstrom?"

"A statue should have a restful environment. All statues should give a sense of repose."

"What do you think is the best memorial in Boston?" I asked.

"The Shaw Memorial, in front of the State House. Why? Because it is so intensely vital; it summarizes a whole epoch, it is a brilliant piece of imagination and so simple and direct in composition."

"One city work of art to stand forever with the Nike of Samothrace, with the Melian Venus."

THE BIBLIOGRAPHER

ON the completion of his thirty years as librarian of Congress there was presented to Herbert Putnam a remarkable tribute—a volume of essays prepared by many men interested in librarianship and in Mr. Putnam himself, prepared by William Warner Bishop and Andrew Keogh. These papers are, as the presentation preface says, "both a review of your own professional career and (in effect) a summary of much of contemporary opinion on matters of librarianship, with some historical contributions by no means foreign to the craft." They fill a handsome volume of 556 pages, of which 690 copies were printed by Carl Huntington Rollins of the Yale University Press.

On Friday noon, April 5, Mr. Putnam was surprised at the appearance in his office of Senator Fess, chairman of the Senate Library Committee, and H. R. Bowker, the dean of the American Librarians Association, who headed two-score or more of the leading library workers of America. This unique volume, which had been contributed to by sixty-two librarians and publicists, in a handsome binding, was presented to Mr. Putnam, who was taken completely by surprise. Mr. Bishop made the presentation address, to which Mr. Putnam responded. Later the Friends of Music in the Library of Congress, through Mrs. Walter Howe, presented to the librarian a check for $1000 for purchases for the Music Division of the Library. After a luncheon at which thirty of the contributors and others sat down, a delegation from the library staff, with Charles W. Coleman as a spokesman, presented another beautiful bound volume containing a tribute to their chief, autographed by 135 members of the immediate library staff who had been in service with Mr. Putnam for fifteen years or more—these being out of the staff of 450, not including the Copyright Office or auxiliary forces.

On Saturday the congratulatory exercises were continued with a luncheon given by the librarian, at which two-score or more members of the Round Table heard addresses by Senator Fess, Chairman Luce of the House Library Committee and Justice Stanford. Dr. Charles C. Moore, who presided, made another presentation in tribute to Dr. Putnam, of one of the three known copies of the Marquis de Montcalm's "Relation de la Prise d'Oswego." The brother of Dr. Putnam, George Haven Putnam, the veteran publisher, who at the age of eighty-five is still found at his desk, and who was a soldier in the Civil War when Herbert was a babe in arms, made one of the shortest after-dinner speeches on record, and one that finds a responsive echo in the heart of every true American—"Herbert, I am proud of you."

The Putnam Tribute

The volume presented to Mr. Putnam and which, like that given to Mr. Barnes by the bibliographers of America as their tribute to his personal worth and labors, is the work of many men, is a valuable one for anyone interested in books. Information is to be found here which can be found nowhere else. Naturally the earlier papers, like that of Senator Fess, the one on the occasion of the presentation of the volume, and the one on the occasion of the presentation of the volume, are of special interest. The volume is a valuable one for anyone interested in books. Information is to be found here which can be found nowhere else. Naturally the earlier papers, like that of Senator Fess, the one on the occasion of the presentation of the volume, and the one on the occasion of the presentation of the volume, are of special interest.

Other papers deal with Mr. Putnam's career. Gladys L. C. Countryman of the Minneapolis Public Library tells of Mr. Putnam's starting of the institution in 1889; Director Belden of the Boston Public Library reviews his long and useful service in this city and William Warner, Bishop of the University of Michigan, tells of the thirty years of the Library of Congress under Mr. Putnam's direction. Then there are many valuable papers on different phases of library service in this country; problems of library management; books and manuscripts and their preservation and use; and some papers of historical research. Like Max Farrand's interesting inside account of the relations of Nathan Matthews and the Huntington Library, with the title of "William H. Whitmore and the Early Printed Laws of Massachusetts"—an account which can be found nowhere else. The volume, in its conception, its execution and its contents is indeed a worthy tribute to America's foremost librarian.

WILL BEGIN SHOWING
KRAKOW TRUMPET

Boston Public Library to Receive Loan

The Boston Public Library on Thursday will begin exhibiting the trumpet which has been used for hundreds of years to sound the hymn, or hymn to the Virgin, from Our Lady Mary's Tower in the old city of Krakow, Poland.

The horn came to Boston through the courtesy of Prof. Eric P. Kelly of Dartmouth College, who received it as a loan from the city of Krakow in appreciation of his book, "The Trumpeter of Krakow," a story of life in 15th century Krakow.

It was while Prof. Kelly was teaching in the University of Krakow during the college year 1923-24 that the plot of his book grew out of the darkness of Polish winter nights, and it was because of his close association with the study of Polish history and literature that he was able to steep his mind with scientific Medieval data and fill his soul with impressions of ancient Polish lore.

The author has made the trumpet signal blown to the four winds from St. Mary's tower, a sort of musical leit-motiv. He uses as his central figure the trumpeter, watchman of the city, who takes a solemn oath to sound his trumpet toward the four quarters of the city every hour of the day and night.

One watchman did meet his death in keeping with his oath. In the year 1241, Tartars had taken the city and were besieging the tower, but the devoted trumpeter began to play his simple air, as his duty demanded. An arrow pierced his heart, and the trumpet fell from his lips, leaving the last phrase unfinished. Ever since, the hymn has been ended on the "broken note."

Prof. Kelly was born in Amesbury, and was graduated from Dartmouth College in 1906. In 1918, while with the army in France, he became interested in Poland, being associated with relief work in the Polish legions. He went back with them to Poland, serving in various capacities and traveling from city to city and from camp to camp, for about three years. During this period he was in Modlin, the old fortress outside Warsaw, for eight months; in the industrial districts at Dombrowa, and during the Bolshevik War of 1920 he was in charge of a supply train in the Lublin, Chelm and Bug River Districts.

'HOTEL AND TRAVEL NEWS

26 BOOKS LOST DAILY FROM PUBLIC LIBRARY;
HARD TO TRACE THIEF

The number of missing volumes from the shelves of the Boston Public Library has reached such alarming figures that the officials are baffled in their efforts to stop the leak. During the last year $661 books were either stolen or lost. Of this total 1807 were recovered, leaving 6254 missing.

Over the last 10-year period the value of missing books is placed at thousands of dollars. Some of the books are priceless, because it has been found impossible to obtain other copies from the publishers.

Officials are convinced that even a Sherlock Holmes or the best sleuth from Pinkerton, Burns, Scotland yard, Capt. Livingston's flying squadron, Superintendent Crowley's department or the secret service would soon find that it is a deep mystery as far as trying to establish what class purloins the volumes. The titles of the missing pages range from children's fairy tales to technical subjects.

HARD TO TRACE

Librarians point out that it would require the intelligence of supermen to trace what daily happens to the 3,000, 000 or more volumes in the building. Hundreds of men, women and children besiege portals every day. They are all classes and of all nationalities. There are business men and just plain working men. There are students and co-eds. Lawyers and doctors are prominent. Art students and literary people and the scientific bent go to make up the busy hive of readers.

The shelves with their treasure of knowledge and pleasure are open to all comers. They have been accessible to the reading public for 77 years. Going to the public library is just like walking over the Common or the Public Garden. No questions are asked. Like the seats in the public garden the books are here to be taken out, not to be stolen.

It would require an army to watch the array of men and women. It is the people's library. Sometimes for 15 minutes or an hour or two the patrons will stand at the book shelves, poring over the pages of Shakespeare or Browning or other favorites. Since they appear studious the attaches pay little or no attention to them.

Sometimes a carelessly-dressed person comes to the library and goes directly to a certain shelf. Others slowly raise their eyes and inwardly have fear for the book in this person's hand. But on inquiry one is told that the person is a well-known writer.

BOOK KLEPTOMANIACS

Because of the high rate of mortality among the books it is believed that there are many book kleptomaniacs abroad in Greater Boston. This type would rather starve than miss the contents of certain books. Should the book appeal to them they hate to return it.

During 1928, 1739 books were either lost or misplaced by card readers of the public. The volumes were lost at theatres, hotels, or on trains or street cars. Some of these readers reported to the library that the book was stolen from their homes. A total of 156 of these books were later returned. A total of 6322 were unaccounted for and checked as "missing" but during the ensuing months 1651 of this number turned up here and there about the library. Sometimes they were found on shelves or on tables. The final figure, however, shows over 6254 books still unaccounted for. This does not include the total missing from the 30 or more branch libraries in the city but officials believe that the total for the entire city would be well over the 10,000 mark.

Though the present system is proving costly to the taxpayers it is not expected that there will be any drastic changes. Should the red tape be increased it would work a hardship on the thousands of other readers and should the staff of the library be augmented it would mean more salaries and consequently further expenditure of the library funds.

"Why not forbid the taking of books from the library?"

"That plan has been inaugurated by the New York library on Fifth avenue," said Frank H. Chase, reference librarian. But he believes that the New York system will not be adopted here.

Five years ago a furore was created when it was discovered that nearly 100 books on business administration disappeared from the library shortly after the colleges were open for the fall term. Officials accused the "college boys" of taking the books. Many of these were later returned.

But until a better system of checking the books and the readers is adopted, a number of volumes will disappear daily. The present rate averages about 26 a day.

Boston Transcript

324 WASHINGTON STREET, BOSTON, MASS.

FRIDAY, MAY 10, 1929

Thrift Exhibition
at Public Library

An interesting exhibition of over two hundred thrift posters, designed and drawn by pupils of the Massachusetts schools, is being displayed on the top floor of the Boston Public Library under the auspices of the savings banks of Massachusetts. The exhibition opened Tuesday and will continue until a week from today.

From the diversified display one illustration will be picked by judges selected by the sponsoring organization to be used in a thrift advertising campaign. The judges will include a representative of an art school, one from a bank and one from an advertising house.

Some of the posters on exhibit cleverly depict the suggestion of thrift and are artistically executed. Among them is a picture of Calvin Coolidge with the legend "Thrift His Hobby—Why Not Yours?" Another shows a kitten Scotchman symbolic of the country "Where Economy Rules"; and another presents a modern dapper, holding the ace of hearts, bearing the slogan "This is the Age When Money Counts." There is also a series of parody sketches on familiar national advertising slogans. "What a Waste of a Difference Thrift Makes." "Let Your

BOSTON POST.

MAY 14, 1929

ASKS $100,000
FOR LIBRARY

Mayor Says Foundations
Need Repairs

The discovery that the piling of the central library building at Copley square has been impaired by the construction of the Boylston street tunnel and the water under the "made land" on which it stands led Mayor Nichols to request the City Council for approval of a $100,000 loan order to reconstruct the foundations.

The Council yesterday referred the loan order to its committee on finance. It was pointed out that the famous structure, designed by Stanford White, had settled somewhat since it was erected.

Recently a contract, "not exceeding $45,000," was let out without advertising to rebuild the foundations under the front steps forming a broad platform before the main entrance. In the course of their borings, engineers found that the foundations were in need of repair, and for this reason $100,000 more is now requested.

Boston Transcript

324 WASHINGTON STREET, BOSTON, MASS.

MONDAY, MAY 13, 1929

Asks $100,000 for Library Foundation

Mayor Nichols Tells Council
"Rotten Piling" Under Library Must Be Repaired

Acting on the ground that the situation is a "menace" Mayor Nichols today submitted at the meeting of the Boston city council a loan order for $100,000 for the purpose of repairing "rotten piling" under the front wall of the Boston Public Library. A letter signed by Gordon Abbott, vice president of the library board of trustees, was submitted with the loan order. In the letter Mr. Abbott emphasized the necessity for spending at least $100,000 to protect the foundation of the building, declaring that experimental work so far revealed conditions that needed to be remedied immediately.

Mr. Nichols also requested that the council make the salary of the traffic commissioner $7500 a year. William A. Fisher is the mayor's choice for the office of commissioner. The former order was referred to the committee on finance and the latter to the committee on ordinances.

JUNE 2, 1929

The Sunday Post
START WORK ON LIBRARY STEPS

Repair Work Expected to Take 10 Months

Surface work on the steps of the Boston Public Library started yesterday, under the direction of James Harrington of Charlestown, superintendent for Blakeslee Robbins Corporation of Boston, which was awarded the contract for the work after preliminary surveys had been made last week. It is estimated that 10 months will be required for completion.

The Boston Public Library is constructed on filled land, which necessitates the use of piles for foundations. The sinking of the sub-surface water level in Back Bay has exposed the tops of the piles to decay, with the result that the steps and basement flooring have sagged in several places.

Boston Transcript

324 WASHINGTON STREET, BOSTON, MASS.

(Entered at the Post Office, Boston, Mass., as Second Class Mail Matter)

SATURDAY, MAY 11, 1929

Eva Le Gallienne
to Speak Monday

Eva Le Gallienne will speak Monday afternoon at 4.30 in the Boston Public Library hall, under the auspices of the Community Service of Boston, on "The

Eva Le Gallienne

Appeal of Peter Pan." Joseph Lee, president of the Community Service, will preside and, presiding, Miss Le Gallienne's appearance, Joan J. Cronan will outline the Barrie story. The meeting is free to the public, and the doors will be open at four o'clock.

THE BOSTON HERALD

WEDNESDAY, MAY 22, 1929

FISHER APPROVED FOR TRAFFIC BOARD

Will Serve 4 Years at Annual Salary of $7500

Elliot H. Goodwin, state commissioner of civil service, yesterday announced the department's approval of the appointment of William A. Fisher as Boston traffic commissioner for a period of four years at a salary of $7500. The approval also was announced of the reappointment of the following Boston municipal officers:

Overseers of public welfare: Mrs. Eva W. White, Edward H. Willey, Tilton S. Ball.
Assessor: Horace B. Mann.
Sinking funds commission: Abraham E. Pinansky, Eliot Wadsworth.
City planning board: Frederic H. Fay, Stadistics trustee: Robert J. Dysart.
Election commission: Frank Seiberlich.
Penal institutions commission: Philip H. Chapman.
Library trustee: Louis E. Kirstein.

Back in Olden Days of Leisure the Cook-Book Taught Behavior, Too

Christianity and Good Manners Were Included—Nowadays We Have Only "Half Hours in the Kitchenette"

By Sarah Alison Maxwell

FEW subjects occupy so large a section in the card catalog of the Boston Public Library as that of cooking. Cook books have been provided for every contingency, as witness the seemingly paradoxical "Cookery Book for Fasting and Abstinence Days."

Not only are there a multiplicity of general cook books, but entire manuals have been devoted to such subjects as puddings, eggs and apples, as well as to more unusual edibles as mushrooms, peacans and oysters. On the premise that an orange a day is as salutary as the proverbial apple, there is a compendium of 365 orange recipes, compiled as might be expected, by a California housewife. Not all cook books, however, are as specialized as their titles indicate. For example, a volume with the intriguing designation, "Coffee and Waffles," contains chapters on subjects as far afield as "Maid and Manners" and "On Gardening."

Reprints from rare old manuscripts which disclose the culinary art of the Middle Ages down to compilations of the recipes of famous chefs of today are to be found in the library cookery collection. Doubtless in its time an ancient volume entitled "The Queen's Closet Opened" aroused the same kind of interest that is shown in the bills-of-fare of our Presidents which have been made public in a recent book, "Secrets of the White House."

From a geographical standpoint, too, the collection is very complete, the "how" of the cookery of every quarter of the globe being revealed. Cook books range from those treating of home recipes as found in "The Boston Cook Book" and "What We Cook on Cape Cod" to foreign dishes as in "With a Saucepan Over the Sea," and "Around-the-World Cook Book." For those who would like Chinese food at home there is a "Chinese Cook Book in Plain English."

Ten Dollars a Week in the '80's

Special cook books are provided for various classes of people, as "Motorists' Lunches," "Invalids' Tea Tray," "Statesmen's Dishes" and "A Bachelor's Cupboard, Containing Crumbs Culled from the Cupboards of the Great Unwedded." Then there are manuals particularly designed both for the experienced cook and for the amateur; as, for example, "Choice Recipes for Clever Cooks" and "The Post-Graduate Cookery Book," and on the other hand, "A B C of Cooking"

Mr. Eatingtown in the Act of Receiving an Invitation for 5 o'clock Very Precisely. (From "Apician Morsels; or, Tales of Table, Kitchen, and Larder; . . . Which Includes the Art of Never Breakfasting at Home, and Always Dining Abroad," by Dick Humelbergus Secundus, Printed in 1829 by J. & J. Harper, New York.)

Emperor Domitian Convoles the Roman Senate to Ask Their Opinion on How to Cook a Turbot, Too Large for Any Kettle in the Palace. The Emperor Vetoes Their Suggestion to Cut It Up, and It Was Decided to Have a Special Vessel Made, and That Thereafter a Group of Patrons Should Always Accompany the Emperor in His Travels. (From "Apician Morsels.")

"Distilling Oyle Out of Seedes," Reprinted from Baker's "Jewell of Health," 1576, in "The Still-Room," by Mrs. Charles Roundell and Harry Roberts, Published in 1903 by John Lane, London and New York. This Book Says: "Cider has gone out. . . with home-brewed ale and home-stilled cordials. . . One may well pray for a reaction, if indeed the art of housewifery is not past praying for."

and "A Primer of Cooking." Neither are the newlyweds overlooked, as instanced in such titles as "It's Two Cook Book," "A Table for Two" and "Just for Two."

"A book by a lady," as the title page condescendingly informs, is dedicated to "Economical Cooking for the Middle Classes." In fact, "a lady" is the pseudonym most frequently chosen by cook book authors of bygone days. "A Boston lady" writes a dessert book, a culinary manual is composed by "a lady of Philadelphia," and another entitled "The Improved Housewife" by "a married lady." "A gentlewoman" and "a housekeeper" also are favorite pseudonyms.

As indicated by numerous snappy titles, economy in cooking is the phrase most widely stressed. Many of these designations sound very much like advertising slogans, as, for instance, "Better Meals for Less Money," "Liberal Living Upon Narrow Means," "Dainty Dishes for Small Incomes," and "Daisy Dishes for Quiffy Budgeting are "Family Living on $500 a Year" and "Ten Dollars Enough," with the sub-caption, "Keeping House Well on Ten Dollars a Week; How It Has Been Done, How It Can Be Done Again." Unfortunately, though, as regards their present usefulness, these manuals were written in the '80s. And as a very important phase of economical cooking is the problem of "left-overs," sometimes in cook-book terminology called "fragments" and "remnants," there are many tomes devoted to their transformation into palatable dishes—for instance, "The Family Save-All," "A Cook Book of Left-Over," "Made-Over Dishes," and the more specialized "What to Do with Cold Mutton." Camouflage cookery is by no means a new wrinkle, as witness a recipe in one of the older cook books, "To Make Pig Taste as Lamb."

Moreover authors of cook books have designed manuals, to use phraseology of one of these works, "adapted to families of limited means but cultivated taste." Very succinctly has an English writer conveyed this viewpoint by designating his work, "The Younger Son's Cook Book." This idea as expressed in the title of a French book is "La Gourmandise d'un Bon Marché."

"Greedy Book" and "Second Helping"

But although frugality is the predominant note of the cuisine, there are also books for the epicure—"High Living," "Choice Cookery," "Culinary Gems," "Treasures of a Hundred Cooks," a Collection of Distinctive Recipes for the Lovers of Good Food," and the seemingly contradictory "Delicate Feasting." Also "Blue Book of Cookery" and "Real Cookery" would seem to cater to the discriminating taste. Then there is "The Greedy Book" and "A Second Helping" which suggest quantity rather than quality. Although many of the older cook books took into consideration the correlation of health and food as in "The Castles of Holthe," and the later "Miss Beecher's Housekeeper and Healthkeeper," which not only comprises cooking recipes but "many directions to securing health and happiness," it is the modern cookery which has transformed food preparation from an art into a science. And the scientific practice of measuring food values is evidenced in many of the titles of the newer books—"The Calorie Cook Book," "The Kalorie Kids" and "Eating Vitamines."

French Being Wins a Husband

The cult of the carrot had not dawned in 1828 when William A. Abbott wrote a cook book, for Mr. Abbott warns against the use of this vegetable except in very small quantities. The tomato, or love apple, he gives a very bad bill of health. However, he deplores the fact that "at the present time, especially among the fashionable, there is an increased tendency to regard the potatoes as somewhat vulgar." Read, he says, is sharing the same fate and will only be tolerated as a sort of penance. As Mr. Abbott mentions fish, oysters, hams, puddings, and cakes as ideal substitutes, it would hardly seem that the disrepute into which bread and potatoes had lapsed was in any way due to their fattening propensity.

To put over the message in the most pleasing guise, cook books were sometimes written in story form or as a collection of letters, as in "Letters to a Young Housekeeper." Among the cook books which reinforce the appeal of recipes by linking them up with a narrative, is one entitled "Gentle Breadwinners." The heroine passes through various stages of adventure in which she makes French being, Venetian cakes, mince meat, candied orange and lemon peel until, as the climax, she wins by means of her good cooking a home and husband.

It isn't necessary to consult the publisher's date of a cook book to discover which ones are old-timers. The titles themselves tell the story. "Every Lady's Cook Book," of course, was written prior to the advent of Everywoman. And bedeviled outside the home, cook books were designated "Woman's Kingdom," "The Queen of the Kitchen," "The Ladies' Best Companion," "The Good Hus-Wife's Jewell," "Treasures," "Counselor," "Guide," "Director," "Pocket-Book" and "The Family's Best Friend." Likewise emphasized in the titles of cookbooks is the pleasure to be had in their companionship, as "The True Gentlewoman's Delight," "Delights for Ladies" and "The Accomplished Ladies' Delight." Preserving, according to the title of a volume setting forth the mysteries of this art, is "A Delightful Daily Exercise for Ladies and Gentlewomen." Another volume, as it says, "delectable for ladies and gentlemen," is entitled, "The Whole Body of Cookery Dissected, Taught and Fully Manifested, Methodically, Artificially and according to the Best Traditions of the English, French, Italian and Dutch."

Encouraging Home-Brew

But although the older cookbooks seem to have been most generally designed for the use of "ladies and gentlemen," there are some which seek a more general clientele, one of these portending to be "pleasant and profitable for all sorts of people." Neither is there any indication of exclusiveness, save as to sex, in a marvelously comprehensive volume entitled "The Whole Duty of a Woman, or an Infallible Guide to the Fair Sex, Containing Rules, Directions and Observations for their Conduct and Behaviour through All Ages and Circumstances of Life as Virgins, Wives or Widows. With Directions How to Obtain All Useful and Fashionable Accomplishments Suitable to the Sex. In Which Are Comprised All Parts of Good Housewifery, Particularly Rules and Receipts in Every Kind of Cookery."

Many of the older cooking manuals contain sections devoted to home-brewing and the distilling of liqueurs, these tasks at the time being considered solely for ladies and gentlemen. "A Thousand Ways to Please a Husband" is an old-time compendium of cookery, and on the premise that the housewife is grateful for the means of thus attaining masculine favor, a cook book is entitled "A Present to My Wife." A cooking manual named for that whimsical haphazard of a repast, "The Dinner Bell," also bespeaks its antiquity.

The idea recently advanced by Henry Ford that proper eating as well as drinking is a matter of spiritual concern and that the churches should likewise preach the gospel of correct dietetics, is not new. Back in 1857 in a work entitled "Christianity in the Kitchen: a Physiological Cook Book," Mrs. Horace Mann expounds the theory of the correlation of food and morality, going as far as to call indigestible preparations "criminal." Says Mrs. Mann:

Today It's Neatness and Dispatch

"There is no more prolific—indeed, there is no such prolific cause of bad morals as abuses of diet—not merely by excessive drinking of injurious beverages, but by excessive eating of unwholesome food. Compounds, like wedding cake, snuff, plum-puddings, and rich turtle soup, are masses of indigestible material, which should never find their way to any Christian table. . . . If asked why I pronounce these and similar dishes unchristian, I answer, that health is one of the indispensable conditions of the highest morality and beneficence."

Furthermore Mrs. Mann would discourage the cosmopolitan food mart which provides edibles from every clime. Science, she believes, will bring us to the conclusion "that each climate and region produces those articles of food which it is most healthful to eat in their respective localities"—an argument for those who favor banning the banana through legislation in order that the population will consume in greater number the native apple.

In the nomenclature of the ultra-modern cook-book there is no suggestion of constant companionship, however delectable, but rather the idea of the utmost dispatch with which the culinary process can be accomplished. Some of these up-to-the-minute manuals are entitled: "Half Hours in the Kitchenette," "Cooking by the Clock," "The Busy Woman's Cook Book," "Plate Dinners for the Busy Woman," "Paper Bag Cooking," and "If You Must Cook," "One-Piece Dinners," as evidenced by a cook book with this title, have come into vogue along with one-piece dresses.

But after all, the modern woman may be the loser by thus curtailing time spent in the kitchen for, judging from cook-book nomenclature, inestimable qualities go hand in hand with culinary pursuits. Some of these successive names are: "Common Sense in the Kitchen," "Culture and Cooking," and "The Philosophy of House-Keeping." Also there is an esoteric and imaginative slide to cooking as shown in such books as "Artistic Cookery," "The Spirit of Cookery," "Cooking and Castle Building," and "Breakfast, Dinner and Tea, Viewed Classically, Poetically, and Practically." Moreover, even with hot weather at hand, it is possible, according to one of the newer manuals, to "Cook and Be Cool."

FRIDAY, MAY 24, 1929

Engineer Says All Back Bay Is Settling

Parts of Public Library Building Have Sunk Five to Six Inches

The entire Back Bay district is settling, according to George H. Frazer, engineer, who testified before the city council's committee on finance today relative to the $100,000 loan order for the purpose of repairing the rotten piling under the front of the Boston Public Library.

Asked by one of the committee members to what extent the district had actually settled, Mr. Frazer replied that he did not know. However, he said that certain parts of the library building had settled from five to six inches and that there were cracks in some of the rock facings. He made it plain to the committee that in his opinion the rotten piling, unless rectified immediately, constitutes a real menace to the building. He said that preliminary investigation showed that these piles were rotting away because the water level during the past twenty years or so had receded.

At this point Councilor Henry Parkman, Jr., a member of the committee, asked the witness:

"Isn't that rather serious? Shouldn't the water level be restored to the Back Bay?"

Mr. Frazer answered that a definite water level should certainly be maintained if possible and that this must be given serious consideration, intimating that other places than the Public Library in that neighborhood seem to be affected.

"What causes the water to recede?" asked Councilor Frederic Dowling.

Mr. Frazer replied that one cause anyway might be large sewers. He said that the water in the ground, if the sewers leaked, would be carried away by them.

Before Mr. Frazer addressed the committee Gordon Abbott, vice president of the board of trustees of the Boston Public Library, outlined in a general way why the trustees were asking for $100,000 at this time. He said that it was impossible to let any contract by bidding for the reason that nobody can tell "intelligently" how much work there is to be done.

Anticipating Mr. Frazer's testimony Mr. Abbott said that the engineers have found the tops of many piles rotting away and that indications were that piles yet to be explored along the front of the building are probably in a similarly dangerous condition.

"Poor piles menace the stability of the building," said Mr. Abbott, "and we look upon this $100,000 with which to begin work as an absolute necessity. In fact, gentlemen, it's an emergency."

When Mr. Frazer took the stand several of the committee members vainly tried to pin him down as to how much the work would cost. The witness, however, declined to name any hard and fast figure but he did mention $250,000 as a possible estimate.

"We can only tell what is wrong as we go along," he said.

After Mr. Frazer had been excused the Finance Committee took up the $200,000 order for improvements at Boston Airport. Park Commissioner Long emphasized that such a sum was needed at once if Boston is to keep pace in the development of commercial aviation.

MAY 25, 1929

MUST MEND SUPPORTS OF LIBRARY

Some Piles Found to Have Been Rotted by Water

Fifty-seven piles under foundations of the Boston Public Library, Copley square, have been found to have deteriorated, during the course of an investigation by engineers, architects and city officials, it was declared last night by Building Commissioner Louis K. Rourke.

These wooden piles represent about one per cent of the total number supporting Boston's famous library building, and were about half of the total supports which were uncovered during the preliminary examination. Settling of the granite platform, which extends about the building, has been noticed and work is at present being done to remedy that situation, he said, but no serious effects have been noticed in the main walls, which will have to be probed and re-supported with concrete, piecemeal.

ASKS $100,000 FOR REPAIRS

Some of the facts concerning the piling came to light yesterday when a request that the City Council pass a loan order of $100,000 to be used in repairs under the main wall was made yesterday by Gordon Abbott, vice-president of the public library trustees before the council's committee on finance. The request of Mr. Abbott was supported by the testimony of George H. Frazer, an engineer, who has made an examination of the underpinning. Engineer Frazer said that many of the piles are rotted seriously and that the work will have to be done in small sections.

Vice-president Abbott said that engineers have reported to the trustees that the piles have rotted from 15 to 18 inches near the surface. They will have to be shored up, cut off, recapped and encased in concrete. Mr. Abbott could not state whether the $100,000 order would be sufficient to cover the job.

"No Danger of Collapse"

The most serious immediate condition has been noted at the Dartmouth and Blagden streets corner, where some of the granite platform has sunk several inches. It was brought to my attention," Commissioner Rourke said last night, "that some of the front platform has sagged, joints letting in water. They were contemplating putting in a reinforced concrete platform. At the request of Mayor Nichols I made a survey of the situation. I found that the outer wall had moved a bit. Whether this was due to the failure of the piles or the backing against the wall was to be determined. So we had holes dug, and uncovered 112 piles. We found that 50 of them had deteriorated somewhat. The other 60 or more were found in good shape.

I want to impress upon the public and employees of the library that there is no immediate danger of collapse of the structure. The entire situation is being handled by a competent force of engineers and contractors. The platform in front has been shored up.

Blame Lowering of Water Level

Mr. Rourke and engineers explained yesterday that water level in the filled in sections of the Back Bay has been lowered, the building of the Charles River basin and construction of the Boylston street subway having been factors. Piles which 55 years ago were under water at all times, have had their tops exposed, with resultant decay and invasion by minute insects. "We are running across piles, which under water would have remained intact for an indefinite period, but now for a foot, 18 inches and in some cases two feet, they are rotted away. In the case of the library it will be necessary to work under the foundations, bit by bit, and the bad piles, saw them off, cap them and encase them in concrete," Building Commissioner Rourke stated.

Councilor Henry Parkman, at yesterday's hearing, after Engineer Frazer had stated that the entire district was settling, asked him if the old water level should not be restored. Mr. Frazer answered that a definite water level should be maintained if possible and that the question should be given serious consideration.

Record-Advertiser Saturday, May 25, 1929

HUB LIBRARY NEAR COLLAPSE, SAYS EXPERT

The Boston Public Library is in grave danger of collapse from rotted and weakened pilings, the commission on finance of the Boston city council was informed yesterday by George H. Frazer, an engineer.

Frazer, appearing at a hearing on a loan order for $100,000, sent to the council by Mayor Nichols for the purpose of repairing the piling, declared some parts of the library building have already settled five and six inches, and that there are cracks through many of the large facing stones.

The piling, especially along Dartmouth st., near the corner of Blagden st., is "very seriously gone," Frazer told the council.

The engineer attributed this condition to the vibration caused by the subway, and to the leaking of the sewer, and to the backing of the sewers had so rotted the piling, he explained, that the entire building was menaced.

THE LIBRARIAN

ANDREW CARNEGIE having given scores of millions for the building of American public libraries, it were well if some other philanthropist would now dedicate a fund to the task of steering people into the main tents of learning and away from the humbugging sideshows. What if the income of a fund of $100,000,000 should be spent for daily, monthly and weekly advertisements warning people that there is no way to learn French in nine lessons, or to acquire the culture of the ages from listening to a dozen phonograph records. All that the greatest minds on earth can do, in expounding a subject, is to make the substance clear. There is no way to make solid substance easy.

In addressing the American Library Association at Washington, D. C., Everett Dean Martin discussed the prevailing superficiality of popular thought. "American youth," he said, "has acquired its ideal of college life from the motion pictures. Athletics, fraternities and the automobile have tended to displace science and the classics. Shortcuts to education are being sought not only by college and university students, but by adults looking for methods whereby they can acquire the much sought after, so-called culture with the greatest possible ease. That anyone should seriously enter upon a course of study of the world's classics in order that he may impress people with his knowledge, appear genteel, make himself attractive to women or gain entrance to an exclusive social set is, I believe, a distinctly modern contribution to educational theory. Intelligence in this country makes a poor showing in competition with quackery."

On the other hand, Mr. Martin offered an unusually apt and humanizing understanding of the legitimate desire felt by men and women to gain larger learning, which leads them to the doors of readers' advisers in our public libraries today, and which helps to explain the wide popularity of the American Library Association's excellent series of book-lists called "Reading with a Purpose."

"There comes a time in the lives of many people when they say, 'I wish I had more education,'" Mr. Martin remarks. "Sometimes this wish is only an idle fancy. In thousands of cases, it is a very serious thing. People come to feel they have missed something, some secret of interpreting the daily facts of experience which would make their lives less colorless and insignificant, some knowledge which might give them better insight into the meaning of the world. They feel that somewhere there are things of beauty and truth, among which their minds might find refuge from monotony and sordidness. One of the encouraging signs just now is the fact that this hunger for something which is in itself and for its own sake worth knowing, is more widespread and more genuine than people suppose. It may contain the promise of a new America, less grasping and vulgar and superficial. It certainly offers the possibility of transforming the lives of many people. Its personalities, I think, should be viewed with a certain reverence and sense of duty."

A similar theme runs through "The Crowd, the Individual and the Library," an article by the very able Baltimore librarian, Joseph L. Wheeler, which is now being widely circulated by the publishers of the Atlantic Monthly.

"What intelligent people and good citizens often overlook," says Mr. Wheeler, "is that public opinion is not based on facts and on real weighing of values, but on appearances, on capitalized prejudices, on personal popularity, on what tends to become nothing more than mob psychology. The herd is not unaware of the guile between itself and the formally educated—in fact, it is sensitive to the difference in point of view. The library is an enticing task to build a bridge between the formally educated and the uneducated through the close co-operation of that valuable and inspiring and increasingly large body of the public, the self-educated. It is the self-educated who can bring the sympathies of the two extremes together, and at times, at least, create a common aim and a common good feeling. There are so many men and women self-educated who command the respect of the college-degree holders for their worth, and yet who hold equal ly the admiration and the affection of the uneducated for having persevered through the same struggles and the same handicaps that they now endure."

Mr. Wheeler then passes to consideration of a problem which has the more interest for the editor of this department because once, when the existence of this problem was recognized in this column, straightway the Librarian received scathing rebuke from the editor of the monthly magazine, Libraries, Miss Mary Eileen Ahearn. It was the extremity of ignorance, Miss Ahearn implied, to suggest the presence of any distinction between the prevailing ideal of librarianship in the United States and the prevailing ideal among German librarians. Mr. Wheeler seems to regard the matter as at least open to argument.

"This onslaught," he says, "makes question, 'this concerted plan to encourage thinking among the great mass of people as the chief product of reading—is it compatible with the idea of the increase of mass reading? Can we have two goals, on the one hand, the amount of reading of the greatest number of people, the other more intelligent reading on the part of all, or especially more intelligent and fruitful reading on the part of a smaller and more select number?' In other words, in library work can we have quality and quantity at the same time? Some librarians do not appear to think that these two purposes can be served at once. I believe these librarians are wrong. One of them has gone so far as to say, 'Mass reading is barren.' If 50,000 people read Pugin's Life and Letters, Cushing's Osler, or Baker's Life and Letters of Woodrow Wilson, or any other really worth-while book, would that reading be barren? Hardly so. It would have a notable effect on the attitude of the public."

A German librarian, Adolf Jurgens, visiting the Brownsville Children's Branch at Brooklyn, had the "discerning eye" for in that institution for very consumption of books, with lines of children often waiting at its doors for admission—in this whirlwind I saw also children sunk in thought, far removed from the world, children who were quite undisturbed by this raging, topsy-turvy world. In these pictures lies the contrast between the German and American library world; in Germany it looks to the highest development of a small group as its end and aim, in America it calls for development of the masses. But what this German did not realize is that of late our American public libraries have also directed their efforts to the service of the choicest, and that in the library of tomorrow the great goal will be to discover the promising individual among the mass, and call him across the social gulf by the bridge of intellectual democracy. Few university libraries are as well equipped for the advanced student as are some of our large public libraries."

The Baltimore librarian then offers vivid prophecy for the future of public libraries in America—resting, as the prophet will see, upon at least one very precise and significant ground of fact in actual current experience. "We may look in our library of tomorrow," he says, "to an enlargement of all of its services to a degree that we can hardly grasp. The circulation of some of our larger city libraries, now in figures of one or two million books per year, will in the next generation jump to figures of ten or fifteen million books. Reference work, now serving tens of thousands, will be serving hundreds of thousands. The intensive special services that we render in our subject departments, and at our readers' assistants' desks, where we now reach hundreds, will in another generation be reaching among many of our city libraries that the intensive type of personal service is being accepted and demanded in a degree that increases much more rapidly than does the mere circulation of books."

"Perhaps the only reason that I am bringing in this question of the compatibility of quantity and quality in our library aims and methods is a firm belief that the two must and do go together; that one is not done to the detriment of the other, and that neither can succeed without the other. It is to be regretted that a few librarians attempt to make a cleavage between the two purposes. We cannot lead people to better books unless we first get them to the library. That means more people encouraged to read, through our publicity methods. On the other hand, we must never secure the funds to do the specialized, individual work upon which depends the growth of rare and exceptional men and women until we have by more bulk impressed the legislative and appropriating bodies with the public demand for our services. Only money can cut the great majority of conscientious librarians loose from routine to give the skilful help of which so many are capable, but for which they now have little opportunity."

The typical library assistant in the United States is a woman with two years of college, professional library training, who, after eight years of library experience, is receiving $1597 a year. That is the upshot of a report of the A. L. A. committee on salaries, insurance and annuities. The figures are based upon replies to a questionnaire from 685 library assistants in ninety-eight public, university and college libraries in the United States. Of the 685 there are 327 college graduates and 339 library school graduates. The average budget of this typical library assistant is: Board and room $854; clothing, $231; laundry and dry cleaning, $42; health, $45; carfare, $52; recreation, including vacation, $96; books, magazines, theater and music, $47; benevolence, $53; savings, $186; life and accident insurance, $59; all other, $127. The individual items amount to $1644, slightly more than the average salary, but this is accounted for by the fact that 141 have an average income of $324 in addition to salary.

What practical value the Boston Public Library gains from the new "Weekly List" of United States Government documents, now bringing promptly to public libraries each week information concerning many useful publications which formerly used to be "lost in the shuffle," is well described by Miss Edith Guerrier in the March issue of the Weekly List. "Since July," says Miss Guerrier, "thirty-two copies of each issue of the Weekly List have been regularly received by the Boston Public Library and sent to our thirty-one branch libraries, with the result that 673 copies of Government books and pamphlets have been recommended at an approximate cost of 110."

"The list of subjects and the number of pamphlets on each may be of interest to those interested:

Aeronautics, 34; Animals (birds, game, etc.), 28; Army regulations, 20; Battle states, 8; Boy Scouts, 13; Business statistics, 9; Child labor, 24; City planning, 6; Civil service, 9; Coal, 1; Copyright, 1; Credit, 1; Customs, 1; Deaf, 1; Diet, 1; Disasters, 1; Education, 34; Foreign service, 7; Foreign trade, 1; Geography, 1; Health, 1; Immigration, 18; Income tax, 2; Indians, 1; International conference, 4; Irrigation, 3; Labor, 10; Lumber, 2; Meat, 2; Metals, 1; Navigation, 11; Oysters, 1; Panama Canal, 7; Ports, 4; Postal rules, 1; Poultry, 1; Railroads, 1; Safety codes, 3; School lunches, 12; Ships, 1; Solar wave-length, 3; Steam engines, 5; Tariffs, 1; Trade, 3; Treaties, 20; Unemployment, 1; Utility corporations, 2; Veterans, 1; War, 23; Water, 30; Weather bureau, 3; total, 673.

Often a five-cent pamphlet gives the information which cannot be found in a book costing fifty times that amount.

The smaller pamphlets are kept with other information material in our pamphlet files and the larger books are bound and placed on our shelves.

The branch librarians and the public are becoming acquainted with Uncle Sam's publishing activities and incidentally with Government affairs.

Here in Boston we are increasingly grateful to the chief of Government Printing Office and to Superintendent of Documents for the Weekly List which is indeed an invaluable reference tool.

We realize that the preparation of the list has placed an added burden on the already over-worked staff of the office of Superintendent of Documents and we, therefore, hesitate to express a wish that notes similar to those which appeared on the last page of the issues of July 11 and 18, August 1 and September 26, might be given whenever space is available. Several of the lists have had one completely blank page which might have been used for notes on publications projected or already issued, if it were possible for the Superintendent of Documents to spare some one for this work.

Before submitting the above notes for publication, I sent them to the Superintendent of Documents, Mr. A. P. Tisdell, and received from him a reply, containing the following:

"It is certainly pleasing to read that the Weekly List is supplying a long needed want of the libraries. Your statements 'often a five-cent pamphlet' confirms an impression I have entertained for some time, that is, many librarians have discarded Government publications and expended many times the cost of the Government pamphlet for less valuable publications."

The tabulation you have made is very interesting when you think that in 16 or 17 numbers of the list there is found such a variety of subjects.

There will be no repetition of the Weekly List going out with blank pages as did occur in several of the earlier numbers as, now there will always be notes of interest to fill the eight pages.

In the preparation of your article for Libraries, I should be glad to have you invite all librarians to apply for the list.

(Signed) Alton P. Tisdell Superintendent

The great pleasure and satisfaction we find in using the Weekly List in B. P. L.

Boston Daily Globe

SATURDAY, JUNE 15, 1929

LIBRARIANS IN ROME SESSION

Belden, Putnam and Others Hear Mussolini

ROME, June 15 (A. P.)—The world congress of librarians opened here today, with some of the most widely known librarians of the United States in attendance. Premier Mussolini delivered the inaugural address.

The congress will spend 10 busy days in discussions, interviews and visits, most of the delegates at various times being received by the Pope, who is himself one of the most learned librarians in the world. His holiness spent more than 20 years in the Ambrosian Library at Milan and at the Vatican Library in what is now Vatican City.

Tomorrow will be spent in visiting book collections in and around Rome, with the sessions of the various sections beginning Monday. The librarians will remain in session here until June 27, when they go to Venice, stopping en route for exhibitions at Naples, Florence, Modena, Genoa, Milan and Turin.

CHARLES F. D. BELDEN

Americans Who Are Present

Among the Americans here are Dr. Herbert Putnam, librarian of the Boston Public Library from 1895 to 1899, since then librarian of Congress, and a staff of his assistant librarians, Herman H. B. Meyer, Dr. E. C. Richardson and John T. Vance. Other Americans present are Charles F. D. Belden, director of the Public Library of Boston; William W. Bishop, librarian of the University of Michigan; Arthur Elmore Postwick, St. Louis; Miss Winifred Gregory, New York city; Andrew Keogh, president of the American Library Association and librarian of Yale University; Theodore Wesley Koch, Northwestern University; H. George Locke, Toronto, Ont.; Carl H. Milam, secretary of the American Library Association, Chicago; Miss Emily V. D. Miller, editor of publications, American Library Association, Chicago, and George Watson Cole, Pasadena, Calif.

Premier Mussolini, in inaugurating the Congress, welcomed the delegates to Italy and outlined briefly the program which had been prepared for them. This, he said, would afford a complete resume of the art of book making from ancient times to the Fascist regime, which, he said, was working with full cooperation with the best intellectual forces of the country.

Contrary to his usual custom of speaking French at international gatherings, the Premier used clear, distinct Italian. He was greeted with a salvo of applause as he familiarly bade his audience sit down. His reference to the Pope as "master of the book of knowledge" brought resounding cheers.

Boston Transcript

324 WASHINGTON STREET, BOSTON, MASS.

(Entered at the Post Office, Boston, Mass., as Second Class Mail Matter)

SATURDAY, JUNE 15, 1929

Librarians of the World at Rome Congress

Mussolini Welcomes Them and Tells of Program Prepared

Rome, June 15 (A. P.)—The World Congress of Librarians opened here today, with some of the most widely known librarians of the United States in attendance. Premier Mussolini delivered the inaugural address. The congress will spend ten busy days in discussions, interviews and visits, most of the delegates at various times being received by the Pope, himself one of the most learned librarians in the world. His holiness spent more than twenty years in the Ambrosian Library at Milan and at the Vatican Library in what is now Vatican City.

Tomorrow will be spent in visiting book collections in and around Rome, with the sessions of the various sections beginning Monday. The librarians will remain in session until June 27, when they go to Venice, stopping en route for exhibitions at Naples, Florence, Modena, Genoa, Milan and Turin.

Among the Americans here are Dr. Herbert Putnam, librarian of Congress, and a staff of assistant librarians, Herman H. B. Meyer, Dr. E. C. Richardson and John T. Vance. Others are Charles Belden, director of the Public Library of Boston; William W. Bishop, librarian of the University of Michigan; Arthur Elmore Postwick, St. Louis; Miss Winifred Gregory, New York city; Andrew Keogh, president of the American Library Association and librarian of Yale University; Theodore Wesley Koch, Northwestern University; H. George Locke, Toronto, Canada; Carl H. Milam, secretary of the American Library Association, Chicago; Miss Emily V. D. Miller, editor of publications, American Library Association, Chicago, and George Watson Cole, Pasadena, Calif.

Premier Mussolini, inaugurating the Congress, welcomed the delegates to Italy and outlined briefly the program prepared for them. This he said would afford a complete resume of the art of book making from ancient time to Fascist regime, which he said was working with full co-operation with the best intellectual forces of the country.

Contrary to his usual custom of speaking French at international gatherings the Premier used Italian. He was greeted with a salvo of applause as he familiarly bade his audience sit down. His reference to the Pope as "Master of the Book of Knowledge" brought resounding cheers.

Boston Transcript

WEDNESDAY, JUNE 12, 1929

THE LIBRARIAN

The Boston Public Library has prepared and published a very well considered book-list of works on "Retail Selling." The task was undertaken at the suggestion of the Retail Trade Board of the Boston Chamber of Commerce. In a foreword the library explains: "The titles have been selected from a great mass of similar material, and are those believed to be of the greatest value to persons engaged in retail merchandising, from cash girl and errand boy to buyer and personnel manager. To those who would like to follow a definite course of reading or study, the readers' adviser (at the Boston Public Library, Copley square) is prepared to render assistance in the choice of subjects, and in the making of reading lists of all kinds. For residents of Boston, it is also possible to see that each book is ready as it is needed. This service, in many cases, puts it within the power of one who is sufficiently in earnest to cover individually and without cost much the same ground as that of the average correspondence course."

The subject-headings of the "Retail Selling" reading-list cover "General Principles," Biography, Merchandising, Accounting and Control, Salesmanship, Advertising, Personnel, Merchandise, Personal Aspects.

Journal
Gardiner, Maine
August 29, 1929

The Boston Public Library and its branches lost last year by theft 12,000 volumes, half of them from the Copley Square main building.

Boston Transcript

WEDNESDAY, JUNE 26, 1929

THE LIBRARIAN

"What then is a well-read man?" Henry Seidel Canby asks in one of the papers included in a recent volume entitled, "American Estimates." "Certainly not a reader who reads only modern books. He has no background and no standards of comparison. He gets the milk of good books, but not the cream, and he is the ready dupe of every shallow imitator. No one disputes this. But the opposite is equally true. The man who reads no new books is not and cannot be well read. He may spend his nights with Addison and his days with 'The Divine Comedy.' He may read the 'Faery Queen' three times or work upon the Greek tragedians until barriers of language fall. He may be soundly based in all the great classics, but if he reads no modern books he is not well read."

Correct argument this is, which the editor of the Boston Public Library bulletin, "More Books," did well to single out for special attention among current notes in his new issue.

Boston Transcript

324 WASHINGTON STREET, BOSTON, MASS.

WEDNESDAY, JUNE 19, 1929

The Boston Public Library arranged an interesting exhibition in honor of the biennial convention of the National Federation of Music Clubs held here last week, and the items shown in the exhibit will remain on view at the main building in Copley square through Sunday, June 23. The collection comprises autograph manuscripts of musical scores, letters and signatures of famous musical composers. Among those represented are Carl P. E. Bach, Beethoven, Weber, Rubenstein, Bishop, Auber, Cesar Franck, Sir Arthur Sullivan and others. There are scores by the American composers Chadwick, Huck, Danleis, Converse, Foster, Gilbert, Macdowell, Hill, Mannerly, Mason, Stillman-Kelley and others. From unknown copyists of the fourteenth and fifteenth century, there are illuminated manuscripts. The invention of printing is indicated by some very early examples. Books containing music used by the colonists: the famous Bay Psalm Book; a Songbook engraved by Paul Revere; music printed by Benjamin Franklin's brother; full scores written up from the parts by Albert Bowers, the donor of the collection from which most of the examples are taken; scrap books of the musical activities in Boston; pictures of musicians and benefactors of the Music Library; all of which will be of interest to music lovers in general as revealing resources available to patrons of the library.

Among all the rich testimonials offered to Herbert Putnam on his thirtieth anniversary as Librarian of Congress, none can have more interest for Bostonians than the essay on Mr. Putnam's service during the four years when he was in charge of the Boston Public Library, which the present librarian, Charles F. D. Belden, wrote for the anniversary. Mr. Belden carefully summarizes the particular and concrete contributions which Herbert Putnam made to the Boston Public Library from 1895—the year in which the new Copley Square building was opened—until 1899 when the Boston Librarian was called to national service in Washington. And then, as reprinted in the new issue of "More Books," Mr. Belden makes this illuminating statement of Mr. Putnam's qualities as an executive leader:

"The extension of greater recognition to women in library work was a significant feature of Mr. Putnam's administration. Women were freely advanced or appointed to positions which, a few years previously, they were thought to be incapable of filling. It was the policy of the young and active administrator to place responsibility firmly on the shoulders of his staff. He encouraged the heads of departments in showing initiative. With frank but kindly criticism, he spurred his senior officers and other employees to their best efforts. Under his leadership no labor seemed too great, no obstacle too hard to be overcome. His moderation, fairness, and impersonality also contributed to Mr. Putnam's success in meeting the problems with which he was confronted. Freedom of opinion and the privilege of expressing it without prejudice proved a safeguard and corrective against those outbreaks of dissatisfaction which are always possible in a large staff made up of men and women of marked individuality. Not only his fellow officers on the staff of the institution, but the rank and file caught fire from his glowing enthusiasm and gave him unstinted homage and admiration. Such were the ability, industry, and persistence of Mr. Putnam, that those who worked under him still think of the experience as a 'liberal education'."

"The nation and all its librarians have profited greatly from the creative work done by Mr. Putnam as Librarian of Congress. The Public Library of the City of Boston takes pride in the thought that it gave him to the nation, and that his fruitful four years in Boston helped in training him for his great career of service in Washington."

Among the Americans attending the International Congress of Librarians now in session at Rome are Herbert Putnam, the Librarian of Congress; Charles F. D. Belden, director of the Boston Public Library; William W. Bishop, librarian of the University of Michigan; Arthur Elmore Postwick, of St. Louis; Miss Winifred Gregory, of New York City; Andrew Keogh, president of the American Library Association and librarian of Yale University; Theodore Wesley Koch of Northwestern University; H. George Locke of Toronto, Canada; Carl H. Milam, secretary of the American Library Association of Chicago; Miss Emily V. D. Miller, editor of Publications, the American Library Association of Chicago, and George Watson Cole of Pasadena, Cal.

Premier Mussolini welcomed the delegates on the opening day, and assured them that the Fascist regime was "working in full co-operation with the best intellectual forces of the country." It so happens that full co-operation between dictatorship and the best minds of a nation is finally impossible. Mussolini himself, for example, never would have had the slightest chance to develop his mental qualities of originality and individuality to the commanding point which he has attained, if he had been born in the days of Fascist dictatorship. It was the freedom of Italy which gave the blacksmith's son his free chance to develop. Now when intellectual freedom has been completely destroyed in Rome, it is small wonder that few Italian books of any importance are being written in Italy today, and almost no music has been composed which is worthy to take rank with the great Italian works of the past. Benedetto Croce, undoubtedly the best and truest philosopher among living Italians, has had all he could do to avoid bringing down upon himself ruinous official disfavor. But, strangely enough, whenever dictators at Moscow and Rome face an audience assembled from democratic lands, always they seem especially anxious to assure their hearers that the Government is working "in full co-operation with the best intellectual forces." These gentlemen, wielding a club in one hand, and brandishing an expurgated encyclopedia in the other, do protest too much.

Boston Transcript

324 WASHINGTON STREET, BOSTON, MASS.

SATURDAY, JUNE 22, 1929

Gordon Abbott Elected Head of Public Library Trustees

At the annual meeting of the Boston Public Library held Friday afternoon, Gordon Abbott was elected president; Frank W. Buxton vice president, and Della J. Deery, clerk, for the ensuing year.

THE BOSTON HERALD

MONDAY, JUNE 24, 1929

Wins Famous Medal

DR. HERBERT PUTNAM
Librarian of Congress who was awarded Roosevelt medal for distinguished service.

THE BOSTON HERALD

SUNDAY, AUGUST 4, 1929

LIBRARY TRUSTEES REPORT INCREASE

Also Reveal Various Needs—
6066 Books Missing

The 77th annual report of the trustees of the Boston Public Library, made public yesterday, revealed the need of a new granite platform in front of the building, the present platform being in weakened condition. There was reported the addition of 86,163 volumes to the libraries of the city, 2000 less than was acquired last year. There was an increase of more than 100,000 books issued for home use during the past year. Significant among statements made was the gift of Louis E. Kirstein of a 3 1/2-story library to be erected on a downtown site, a memorial to his father, Edward Kirstein. The gift was accepted by the trustees and will be erected on City Hall avenue.

It was reported that 6066 books were among the missing during the year 1928; that a new electrical wiring system had been installed; portions of the condensation roof renewed; the manuscript room remodeled providing a modern projection room for slides.

Demands of Public Library Patrons Plainly Reflect Fashions in Books

Non-Fiction Popular Now; Works on Science and Business Wanted

By WILFRED CARUTHERS

Whenever some big subject awakens public interest and becomes a field for inquiry or controversy, the Public Library serves as an index of human reaction.

Evolution, relativity, aerodynamics, trial marriage, the world court, prohibition, each in its turn caught the attention of a vigilant world and brought thousands of incredulous knowledge-seekers to the doors of our public libraries.

In a similar way, the craze for passing fads and fashions, a new game or ingenious puzzle, when given adequate publicity will result in unprecedented demands for books on such subjects and compel public library officials to work overtime.

CROSS-WORD PUZZLE CRAZE CAUSED GREATEST EXCITEMENT

"The greatest excitement over a passing craze was over the cross-word puzzle at the height of its popularity," said Frank H. Chase, reference librarian at the Boston Public Library. In the course of an interview dealing with some of the interesting problems that come up as part of his day's work at the helm of the city's vast treasure-house of knowledge.

"The search for a missing word or phrase had become a mania," continued Mr. Chase with a smile. "And this craving was frequently as insatiable as the desire for food or the thirst for strong drink."

"The demand for seats in the reference room increased daily and finally reached a point when 'Standing Room' only was the rule at all hours."

"These Cross-Word enthusiasts, in their eagerness to find a solution to their problems, as well as to frustrate others in their quest of the desired information, boldly tore out the pages from costly reference books or stood in the way of others who attempted to consult such works. Rabid groups congregated about the dictionaries and simultaneously devoured their contents."

ATTENDANTS RELIEVED

"When at last the happy day came that fans no longer suffered from photophobia from reading newspapers verbatim, and in other awkward ways, indicating that the Cross-Word fever had reached its climax and was on the wane, library attendants breathed a sigh of joyous relief. The craze was over."

"When Einstein, a few years ago, propounded his general theory of relativity, arousing world-wide interest and discussion, the library was hard pushed to furnish books on metaphysical inquiries concerning the nature of space and time and four-dimensional things. "But of all controversial subjects, none quite equals the Darwinian theory from the standpoint of longevity and popularity. Let some public speaker mention the name of Darwin, and it is safe to predict a great demand for the 'Origin of Species' at the library within a few hours."

"In such ways as these, the Public Library is often an efficient barometer of public interest. Fashions in books, however, are subject to incomprehensible laws, ever changing, ever uncertain, as fickle as the public mind itself. "The current interest in biography and travel, for instance, is at the moment tending to decrease, while our non-fiction circulation is larger than fiction. We make no attempt, of course, to cater on any large scale to the demand for current fiction, for this would mean that we would spend a great deal of money for books that would be dead within two to three months—the average life of the popular novel."

USING BOOKS FOR PROFIT

"An outstanding phenomenon of recent years is the tendency to use books for profit. The time is past when people are content with obtaining merely diversion from books. Your modern reader uses books as a source of information on how to get on in the world. "Books that teach 'how to do' things are in great demand and people are reading them because they are a definite means of increasing their efficiency and earning capacity.

Reading for profit at the Boston Public Library.

"Books on business, books on the trades, that answer the ever-recurring questions, 'How?' and 'Why?' are multiplying rapidly and now touch upon every branch of human endeavor, from raising potatoes, constructing an automobile or selling bonds, to the building of skyscrapers or promoting world-wide industries."

The modern tendency of mind is scientific. Today every man is from Missouri, and has to be shown: so a librarian of necessity must know "something about everything."

During his 18 years of experience at the Boston Public Library, Mr. Chase has had to answer questions on every subject under the sun. Requests for information come from all quarters of the globe, from all kinds of people who are in doubt about something and want to be shown. These people do not regard the public library merely as a collection of books, but, rather, as a bureau of information where any question may be asked and answered.

MANY LETTERS OF INQUIRY

"Letters of inquiry are frequently received from persons who are quite sure they are tremendously wealthy," continued Mr. Chase knowingly. "Others go a step farther, and claim descent from royalty. There is always one missing generation, however, to prevent them from claiming the throne of France or some other country."

"Miss Fannie Dubinsky, out in Oshkosh, writes in to know all the details regarding the life of Alfred Elmer Smith, tremendously wealthy man, who is supposed to have died without issue a generation ago. Miss Dubinsky would like to know whether there are any clues that would establish her as the rightful heir to this immense fortune. 'There are no clues,' is the answer, usually."

"Lawyers in their efforts to identify people who are heirs frequently consult the directories at the library, as well as persons who have lost track of missing relatives."

"I'd like to locate my brother Al," one man wrote in from Indiana. He settled in Lawrence in 1891, and then he moved to Charlestown. That was the last I ever heard of him. "But perhaps the strangest request we ever received was from a man in Billings, Mont., who wrote in to inquire about his missing wife. 'My wife left me two weeks ago for Boston,' the letter read. 'When you find out about her, wire me collect.' This man certainly had an exaggerated view of the kind of information kept at the library."

WANTED BOOK ON WORMS

"One day, a well dressed woman applied at the desk and, smiling graciously, inquired, 'Have you a book on the breeding of worms?' When I registered my amazement, she explained how a friend had told her that fish would not bait on the natural variety of worms, so she wanted a book that would enable her to cultivate worms at home suitable for bait."

"On another occasion, we received a request, in a woman's handwriting, asking for statistics to prove that the erotic fiction now being published is read largely by middle-aged women. Our reply was that we were unable to supply any figures on the subject since erotic fiction is not circulated from the library."

"All kinds of odd and curious questions are asked at the library. For instance, I was very puzzled one day when a young man, wearing horn-rimmed glasses, approached my desk and asked if I could furnish him with scenes of life on the planet Mars. 'I confess he had me guessing until he explained that he was a scenic artist, engaged by the Massachusetts Institute of Technology, to make scenery of Mars for one of their undergraduate shows.'"

"To assist them in the preparation of their manuscripts, well-known authors frequently consult the books in the library. William Howard Downes, well known art critic, Vida D. Scudder of Wellesley, Gamaliel Bradford, the biographer, and Lillian Whiting, author of 'Athens, the Violet Crowned,' are visitors of the library and do some of their work there."

MAGNET FOR TOURISTS

"The number of authors, however, who settle down in the public library to write has decreased within recent years. The modern trend is to take advantage of the facilities afforded by the model college libraries where special privileges are extended to graduate students, professors and members of the writers' craft, generally."

While the number of visitors to the library averages something like 3000 persons each day, no record is kept of the tourists and strangers who help at this season of the year to swell the daily total of attendance. Certain it is, however, that no visitor to Boston considers his trip complete without taking in one of the three great libraries of America, with its rare collections of books and rich paintings."

Of especial interest to visitors is the Exhibition Room, containing a great many odd and interesting books. While a few of these will appeal only to the discriminating eye of the specialist, the greater number are universally appreciated on account of their historical interest or as examples of the great works that have played their part in the world's history. Of the latter, there are on display at various times many specimens of the first products of the typographic art, first editions, Bibles, and other rare and interesting manuscripts."

The unique collection of Bibles includes a perfect copy of John Eliot's Indian Bible, being the first translation of the Bible in the Indian language and the first Bible to be printed in America. An unusual feature of the work is the Indian translation of the Psalms in meter."

The so-called Breches Bible always proves interesting to visitors because of its great antiquity and its amusing reference to the attire of the first dwellers of the Garden of Eden. Adam and Eve, according to the Breches Bible, made themselves breeches of fig leaves, thus challenging the popular notion that the first article of adornment was in the form of abbreviated aprons."

Another work to receive a great deal of attention is the Parterian Atlas for Mariners, showing the coasts of America as they were known in the latter part of the 14th century. The atlas bears evidence of great age and of having been put to practical use on voyages at sea in the early days of navigation. It was purchased in London at a cost of several thousand dollars."

In illustrated works and in works on the fine arts generally the library is very complete. At a cost of $150,000, the north wing of the upper floor has been set apart recently for rare books which are too precious for handling by everybody and steel stacks have been erected to protect them from loss or the hazards of fire."

The Boston Post

Established 1831
The Independent Democratic
Paper of New England

TUESDAY, JULY 2, 1929

MAGAZINE LOCKED UP IN LIBRARY

Trustees Follow Up Ban on Scribner's War Story

The trustees of the Boston Public Library ordered the May, June and July copies of Scribner's magazine, featuring Ernest Hemingway's "Farewell to Arms," a war novel, running serially, put under lock and key yesterday until it can be given further consideration.

This action was taken though a report of the trustees said that this magazine, banned by Superintendent of Police Crowley from the newsstands, could still be read in the periodical room at the library.

NOT KEPT OUT OF MAILS

The magazine has not been banned from the mails and subscribers are receiving their copies regularly despite the police ruling in Boston prohibiting it from the newsstands.

The trouble started, according to one of the librarians, when a reader picked up a copy of Scribner's from the library table and after reading an installment of the Hemingway novel, pointed out several passages to others as being offensive. He wrote a letter to the superintendent of police and the latter immediately sent out an order that the magazine should be removed from the stands.

Ernest Hemingway, called the leader of the American "sophisticated school of writing" in Paris, is also the author of another book which has been banned in Boston. This book is "The Sun Also Rises."

Just what further action the trustees will take as to "Farewell to Arms" could not be learned last night.

BOSTON EVENING TRANSCRIPT

WEDNESDAY, AUGUST 14, 1929

Boston Gets Unique Book

The annual report of the Boston Public Library chronicles among the year's accessions of rare books a copy of "The Young Secretary's Guide, or, a Speedy Help to Learning By R. W. Boston, printed by B. Green for Nicholas Topholp, 1708." This is one of the most interesting of early Boston imprints, and of the "short cuts to knowledge" which are now so extensively advertised. The copy secured by the Boston Public Library is the only one known of this edition of 1708. There was also an edition of 1707, a copy of which is also in the library. Another of the rare books acquired by the library from the income of the trust funds was Joshua Childrey's "Sylvestris Instauratum. Or, an Epitome of the Places and Aspects of the Planets as they respect the O as the year of the Incarnation of God 1653." This curious old work was printed in London by T. Mabb in 1653.

In illustrated works and in works on the fine arts generally the library is very complete. At a cost of $150,000, the north wing of the upper floor has been set apart recently for rare books which are too precious for handling by everybody and steel stacks have been erected to protect them from loss or the hazards of fire."

Boston Transcript

224 WASHINGTON STREET, BOSTON, MASS.

WEDNESDAY, JULY 10, 1929

THE LIBRARIAN

Mr. Gordon Abbott, of the Old Colony Trust Company, has been elected president of the board of trustees of the Boston Public Library, succeeding Louis E. Kirstein, whose term expired. Mr. Kirstein will continue to serve on the board. Which bit of news recalls to mind the beauty of the trustees' room, in the main building, where the board meets. The Librarian had the privilege of seeing it one day recently and marvelled at the rich panelling, the delicately curved renaissance mantel, and the empire furniture, all brought from France. In this room hangs Copley's great painting, "Charles the First Demanding the Surrender of the Five Members in the House of Commons," which was presented to the library by a group of citizens in 1859.

The Librarian well remembers when the system of distributing bookmarks, listing material concerning current films began in the Boston Public Library. Many an oldish lady who had hitherto considered the motion picture an irrelevant form of entertainment decided there must be something in it, after all, when the Boston Public Library recognized it. Distributing bookmarks is as far as our library has gone, the Librarian believes. Certainly there never was a committee which had the pleasure of passing on a film at a pre-showing. The whole idea of cooperation between these two great forces for recreation and education seems excellent. Theaters, libraries, booksellers and incidentally the public, all benefit from it.

BOSTON POST,

THURSDAY, AUGUST 29, 1929

LIBRARY THIEVES

It is hard to believe that there is a set of men or women so lost to all decent ideals as to rob a library supported by the city. Yet the Boston Public Library makes the announcement that from its main building 6000 books are stolen every year, while from the branches around town enough more are taken to swell the total to 12,000.

To prevent the looting of the most valuable books, new "Treasure Rooms" are being constructed; when they are finished, the cunning of the thieves will be severely tested. But the great bulk of books in Bates' Hall and other places where the public has ready access to them will remain at the mercy of that happily small group which is addicted to plain stealing.

The only way to prevent this sort of thing is to adopt the plan in vogue at the New York Public Library. There they compel every user to leave all bundles of whatever description in an outside room, and practically "frisk" each one on his exit from rooms where books are kept. That the trustees of the Boston Public Library will not do, and they are right.

Better employ vigilance in some other way, better even lose books, than to treat every frequenter of the library as a potential thief.

Boston Transcript

224 WASHINGTON STREET, BOSTON, MASS.

WEDNESDAY, JULY 17, 1929

Contract Let for Kirstein Library

Contract has been awarded to the Casper Ranger Construction Company of Boston, to build the Kirstein Business Library in City Hall avenue and Williams court, for Louis E. Kirstein, according to Brown's Letters. It will be of brick construction and three and a half stories high. The estimated cost is $150,000.

Old Station 2 Makes Way for New Library

Old Police Station 2 on City Hall avenue is rapidly disappearing under the blows of building wreckers to make way for the new $150,000 Edward Kirstein Memorial Library, a branch of the Boston Public Library, which will be a gift to the city by Louis E. Kirstein in memory of his father.

Exact data are not at hand, but architects estimate that the brick structure must have been erected somewhere near the time that Boston advanced into the grade of a municipality, in 1822. It was once called the Boston Watch House. It will take about a week to raze the old building and it is estimated that a year will be required to erect the new three-story structure which will closely resemble the red brick public library which stood on Arch street, designed by Bulfinch on Georgian lines.

The street and second floors of the new building will be given over to a reference library especially for business men and women, and the top floor is to contain a general reading room for the public. Mr. Kirstein paid the city $1.00 for the site, valued by the assessors at $21,700, and when the building has been completed and equipped at his expense he will turn it over to the city.

Boston Transcript

224 WASHINGTON STREET, BOSTON, MASS.

FRIDAY, AUGUST 2, 1929

Currier Heads Port Authority

At an organization meeting of the recently appointed Port Authority Board held today, Guy W. Currier was elected chairman and Richard Parkhurst was chosen secretary.

TUESDAY, JULY 16, 1929

WORKMEN BEGIN RAZING OLD POLICE STATION 2

On Site at Head of Pie Alley Will Rise the Edward Kirstein Memorial Library

Workmen began today the demolition of the doughty little City Hall-av structure at the head of Pi Alley, which four years ago lost its identity as Police Station 2. On this site eventually will stand the Edward Kirstein Memorial Library, a Public Library branch.

Within a week the last vestiges of this Station-2-that-was will have disappeared and the old establishment will finally have joined in the limbo of former buildings such departed neighbors as the old Courthouse, the old Sherman House that stood across Pi Alley, Joe Gridley's immortal beanyery, Ma Atkinson's, of fragrant memory, all of which stood nearby in days within the ken of men not yet turned 40. Old Station 2's structural cousin, which housed the late lamented Bell-in-Hand, probably the nearest oasis to a police station, in its day, to be found anywhere in the known world, still stands.

The library branch for businessmen, donated to the people of Boston by Vice Pres L. E. Kirstein of the Wm. Filene's Sons Company in memory of his father, Edward Kirstein, who used to stop at the Sherman House on his business trips from Rochester, N. Y., to Boston, will be completed within a year.

Mr. Kirstein paid the city $1 for the site, which is valued by the assessors at $121,700. He is to foot the construction cost of $100,000 and the equipment of the business section of it at extra expense, and then turn title to it over to the Public Library trustees, of which Mr. Kirstein has been a member now for nearly a decade.

The new structure is closely to resemble Boston's original red-brick Public Library which stood on Arch st., designed by Bulfinch on Georgian lines. The projected structure's street floor and second floor are to be given over to a reference library especially for business men and women, and the top floor is to contain a general reading room for the public.

If the Old Desk Could Speak

A peek inside the ancient door as workmen proceeded showed that the old police desk is still in place there, as are the stout oak doors leading to the guardroom and to the basement cellroom. What dark secrets, what tales of woe and wretchedness that old desk could tell had it the gift of speech!

The vanishing structure is intimately bound up with the history of the Boston Police Department, and technically this hoary building antedates the department itself. In the absence of exact data, architects estimated the building must have been erected some time just before or after Boston town flourished into a municipality, in 1522.

In that generation, the building was called the Boston Watch House, so that, essentially, it is the original police headquarters. Antiquarians say it stood on what was formerly the garden of Dr. John Warren, the Revolutionary Army's surgeon-in-chief, brother of Bunker Hills Joseph Warren. Dr. Warren's residence fronted School st.

With less than two-score "cops" covering the entire city, the "Watch" of the Boston of that day was formerly elevated to the dignity of "Police Department" about 1836, it appears. Nobody can be found to say whether Station 1 in Hanover st. is older than the doomed Station 2. A decade before the Civil War, these were Boston's only two lockups. Inasmuch as the Pi Alley site was perhaps the very heart of the colonial town, Station 2 may be among the very oldest landmarks in Boston.

Stood on Edge of Big Blaze

This structure to be pulled down has served as a Rock of Gibraltar against the stress and storm of the city's most turbulent times through a century.

The records that it held "a full house" on the night of the Boston Fire, Nov. 9, 1872. It stood right on the edge of the big blaze, so to speak, and its policemen were continually in through the night persons seen coming away from the fire zone with what was plainly loot.

From hence, on Sunday, June 11, 1857, marched a detail of police to help quell a riot in Broad st., when fire apparatus collided with "hacks" in a funeral passing through that thoroughfare to a cemetery. Two decades later its guardians of the law ran forth to put down the disorder out in Court sq. that attended the arrest and imprisonment in the old Courthouse of Anthony Burns, the escaped slave.

In those days a cop's wage was 90 or $1 a day. Police Headquarters in that day was in City Hall's basement, where Charlie Gaynor now holds forth at the Institutions Registration Department. Before the Pemberton-sq. Headquarters was abandoned the chief of police made his Headquarters in the Pi Alley hoosegow.

In those days such sturdy Yankees as Francis Turkey, William A. Ham, Maj. William K. Jones, Asa Morrill and William H. Pierce ran the Police Department, whereas now such names as Crowley, Murphy, Evans and Goode stand near the head of the police roster.

What middle-aged man who knows his Boston cannot recall the blue-glassed lamp which by night lighted the way into old Station 2? Few like it remain, but one of them is outside the B. A. A., on Exeter st.

OLD STATION 2 TO MAKE PLACE FOR KIRSTEIN LIBRARY

OLD POLICE STATION 2 COMING DOWN

Doomed like other famous buildings as the old Sherman House that stood across Pi Alley, Joe Gridley's immortal beanyery and the refreshing old Bell-in-Hand, the doughty little City Hall-av structure, that once was Station 2 of the Boston Police Department, was seized by workmen yesterday who started on the demolition that will eventually bring about, on this site, the Edward Kirstein Memorial Library, a branch of the Boston Public Library. This was made possible for the people of this city by the gift of L. E. Kirstein, who will foot the construction at a cost of $100,000 and turn the building over to the city in memory of his father.

Station 2! What memories the name awakens in the past generation. Remember the blue-glassed lamp out in front . . . the stout old desk that holds so many dark secrets and tales of woe and wretchedness . . . the night of Nov. 9, 1872, when it stood right on the edge of the Boston fire, so to speak, and its policemen were continually bringing in through the night persons seen coming away from the fire zone with what was plainly loot . . . the days when cops received 90 cents and $1 for a day's work.

In the absence of exact data, architects have estimated that this hoary building must have been erected some time just before or after Boston town flourished into a municipality, in 1522.

In that generation the building was called the Boston Watch House, so that, essentially, it is the original Police Headquarters. With less than two score patrolmen covering the entire city, the "Watch" of the Boston of that day was formerly elevated to the dignity of "Police Department" about 1836, it appears. Nobody can be found to say whether Station 1, in Hanover st., is older than the doomed Station 2.

The structure to be erected on this site is closely to resemble Boston's original red-brick Public Library which stood on Arch st., designed by Bulfinch on Georgian lines. The projected building's street floor and second floor are to be given over to a reference library especially for business men and women and the top floor is to contain a general reading room for the public. Mr. Kirstein paid the city $1 for the site, which is valued by the assessors at $121,700. He will bear the cost of construction and also the cost of equipment of the business section.

FRIDAY, JULY 19, 1929

KIRSTEIN MEMORIAL TO RESEMBLE FIRST LIBRARY BOSTON EVER HAD

City Hall Av Branch to Follow Lines of Bulfinch Structure That Once Stood in Franklin St.

BULFINCH'S FRANKLIN CRESCENT ARCHWAY

The new Edward Kirstein Memorial Branch of the Boston Public Library, to be constructed on the site of old Police Station 2, Court sq., is to be modeled architecturally, it is understood, on Boston's earliest library, "over the archway," in the first brick block ever constructed in Boston.

Until 1794 all Boston dwellings and business buildings were isolated one from another. In that year Charles Bulfinch, Boston's earliest architect, conceived the idea of transforming what is now Franklin st., then largely a region of marshland, stables and unpicturesque workshops, into a fashionable residential quarter.

Bulfinch Built Block

One result was the construction by Bulfinch, on the south side of the street, extending from Hawley st. to Devonshire st., of a crescent-shaped block of 3½-story red brick dwellings, all alike save the two end ones which were ornamented with pilasters, and which was pierced by three arches, one for passage of vehicles, the other two for pedestrians, to get from Franklin st. into Summer st. The street extending through the arch became known as Arch st.

Over the archway were two stories and an attic occupied for many years by the Boston Library and reading room, a private enterprise, members of which paid an initiation fee as well as annual dues.

In reproducing this old library building in Court sq., the open archways will be transformed, it is understood, into an arched doorway and two windows, a change that need make only slight difference in the appearance of the new structure.

Similar to State House

There is a marked similarity in the architectural appearance of the facade of Bulfinch's archway library building, to be reproduced in Court sq., and those of the first Federal Street Theatre, which he built about the same time, and the Bulfinch front of the State House, built three or four years later. This library facade is unmistakably suggestive of the State House, with its arches, pilasters, fan-shaped window-tops and its pediment surmounting all.

The fronts of the archway library building and the Federal Street Theatre are almost identically the same, save that the theatre has one story less than the library.

Crescent Demolished in 1858

The old Tontine Crescent, in Franklin st., of which the central detail was the archway library, was demolished in 1858, when a second wave of improvement transformed Franklin st. from a residential to a wholesale business thoroughfare to be entirely devastated by the great fire 14 years later.

When the block was demolished a beautiful green park in the middle of Franklin st. with a memorial urn to Benjamin Franklin disappeared with it. The archway library still exists at 114 Newbury st., but what became of Franklin's memorial has long been a debatable question.

In the new memorial library in Court sq., construction of which is expected to take about one year, the first and second floors are to be reference rooms for business men and women, the third floor a general reading room.

The cost of the building, about $150,000, is to be defrayed by E. L. Kirstein, president of the William Filene's Sons Company. The city already owned the land, the assessed valuation of which is $121,700.

FRIDAY, JULY 19, 1929

KIRSTEIN MEMORIAL TO RESEMBLE FIRST LIBRARY BOSTON EVER HAD

City Hall Av Branch to Follow Lines of Bulfinch Structure That Once Stood in Franklin St.

The new Edward Kirstein Memorial Branch of the Boston Public Library, to be constructed on the site of old Police Station 2, Court sq., is to be modeled architecturally, it is understood, on Boston's earliest library, "over the archway," in the first brick block ever constructed in Boston.

Until 1794 all Boston dwellings and business buildings were isolated one from another. In that year Charles Bulfinch, Boston's earliest architect, conceived the idea of transforming what is now Franklin st., then largely a region of marshland, stables and unpicturesque workshops, into a fashionable residential quarter.

Bulfinch Built Block

One result was the construction by Bulfinch, on the south side of the street, extending from Hawley st. to Devonshire st., of a crescent-shaped block of 3½-story red brick dwellings, all alike save the two end ones which were ornamented with pilasters, and which was pierced by three arches, one for passage of vehicles, the other two for pedestrians, to get from Franklin st. into Summer st. The street extending through the arch became known as Arch st.

Over the archway were two stories and an attic occupied for many years by the Boston Library and reading room, a private enterprise, members of which paid an initiation fee as well as annual dues.

In reproducing this old library building in Court sq., the open archways will be transformed, it is understood, into an arched doorway and two windows, a change that need make only slight difference in the appearance of the new structure.

Similar to State House

There is a marked similarity in the architectural appearance of the facade of Bulfinch's archway library building, to be reproduced in Court sq., and those of the first Federal Street Theatre, which he built about the same time, and the Bulfinch front of the State House, built three or four years later. This library facade is unmistakably suggestive of the State House, with its arches, pilasters, fan-shaped window-tops and its pediment surmounting all.

The fronts of the archway library building and the Federal Street Theatre are almost identically the same, save that the theatre has one story less than the library.

The Bulfinch front of the State House has arches, pilasters, fan-shaped window tops and a pediment notably similar to those in the earlier two Bulfinch structures.

Crescent Demolished in 1858

The old Tontine Crescent, in Franklin st., of which the central detail was the archway library, was demolished in 1858, when a second wave of improvement transformed Franklin st. from a residential to a wholesale business thoroughfare to be entirely devastated by the great fire 14 years later.

When the block was demolished a beautiful green park in the middle of Franklin st. with a memorial urn to Benjamin Franklin disappeared with it. The archway library still exists at 114 Newbury st., but what became of Franklin's memorial has long been a debatable question.

In the new memorial library in Court sq., construction of which is expected to take about one year, the first and second floors are to be reference rooms for business men and women, the third floor a general reading room.

The cost of the building, about $150,000, is to be defrayed by E. L. Kirstein, president of the William Filene's Sons Company. The city already owned the land, the assessed valuation of which is $121,700.

CHRISTIAN SCIENCE MONITOR, BOSTON

July 19, 1929

Library to Follow Old Bulfinch Lines

The new Edward Kirstein Memorial Branch of the Boston Public Library, to be erected in Court Square, will be modeled architecturally after Boston's first library.

The old library occupied the center building of the first brick block in Boston, and was the work of one of the greatest of early American architects, Charles Bulfinch. The first floor of the building was pierced by three archways, a large one for vehicles and two smaller ones on either side for pedestrians, permitting passage from Franklin Street through to Summer Street.

The facade of the two stories above the arches, with its pilasters, fan-topped windows and pediment, is strongly reminiscent of the Old State House. These lines will be followed closely in the new Memorial Library, but it is understood that the open archways will be transformed into an arched doorway and two win-

Boston Transcript

124 WASHINGTON STREET, BOSTON, MASS.

SATURDAY, JULY 20, 1929

"Home, Sweet Home" MS. to Washington

In Handwriting of the Author,
John Howard Payne

By Oliver McKee, Jr.

Special to the Transcript:

Washington, July 20.—A manuscript of great interest and value has been deposited in the Library of Congress by Leander McCormick-Goodhart, commercial secretary of the British Embassy. It is a manuscript of the verses of "Home, Sweet Home" by John Howard Payne, in the author's own handwriting. This alone would invest it with great interest, but its interest is extraordinarily heightened by the fact that it contains two additional verses, never printed by the author, nor intended for publication, but added by him, with a personal touch, when presenting an autograph text of the famous song to one of his friends, a lady in London. The added verses read:

To us, in despite of the absence of years,
How sweet the remembrance of home still appears!

From allurement abroad which but flatter the eye

The unsatisfied heart turns and says with a sigh

Home, home! sweet, sweet home!

There's no place like home!

There's no place like home!

Your exile is blest with all fate can bestow—

But mine has been chequered with many a woe!

Yet though different our fortunes, our thoughts are the same

And both as we dream of Columbia exclaim

Home, home! sweet, sweet home!

There's no place like home!

There's no place like home!

The lady to whom the manuscript, with this addition, was addressed, was Mrs. Joshua Bates (born Lucrécia Augusta Sturgis), wife of a celebrated banker in London, a partner in the house of Baring Brothers, but a native, as was also his wife, of Massachusetts. This explains the contrast so feelingly drawn in the final stanza, between the prosperous exile in London of Mrs. Bates and the vicissitudes that had marked the life of the poet ever since he left America in 1813.

Never Had a Real Home

A poignant fact in Payne's life was that after his early days of boyhood he never had a real home. The immortal song, better known perhaps than any other among English-speaking people, was written in Paris early in 1822, as one of the songs in the opera of Clari, of which Payne wrote the libretto. The opera was first performed on May 8, 1823, at the Covent Garden Theater, London, and the song was then first sung in public. The music, composed by Henry Bishop, director of music at that theater, was adapted from a Sicilian air which, according to Payne's own account, he had heard a peasant girl sing on a country road in Sicily. The manuscript which Mr. McCormick-Goodhart has deposited in the Library of Congress is dated Sept. 18, 1829, from 29 Arundel street, Strand, London, and is introduced by the following words:

I comply with your most complimentary request and write the words of "Sweet Home" in your valuable little book. I have added a few more words, addressed to you. It would have been more pleasing to me if I could have had time to contribute something worthier of my friendship for you, but what this trifle wants in poetry, you will do me the justice to believe is made up in truth.

In generously sharing this interesting treasure with the Library of Congress and those who frequent it, Mr. McCormick-Goodhart's purpose is that the sentiment which has so endeared the song to many millions of hearts may be brought forcefully to the minds of visitors. The Library will therefore keep the manuscript on exhibition in one of the most conspicuous places in the hall devoted to manuscript exhibits.

Library officials recall, in connection with this gift, that Joshua Bates, the Bostonian husband of the lady to whom it was addressed, made such large gifts to the Boston Public Library at its first organization that he has always been regarded as its principal founder. It is appropriate, too, that it should find at least a temporary home in Washington, where the body of John Howard Payne, brought here in 1883 from Tunis, his last place of homeless exile, lies buried in Oak Hill Cemetery.

Perry Tablet Hung at Public Library

A tablet has been hung on the north-west wall of the inner court of Boston Public Library, in memory of Thomas Sergeant Perry, who "enriched this library by his wise counsel and his rare learning during half a century." The tablet was presented to the library by a group of friends of the late Mr. Perry, headed by Mrs. John Heard of 433 Marlboro street, and including Professor William Lyon Phelps of Yale University.

J. Harleston Parker, chairman of Boston Art Commission, supervised the hanging. There was no ceremony.

Thomas Sergeant Perry was born at Newport, R. I., in 1845, lived nearly all his life in Boston and died last year. He was graduated from Harvard in 1865 and instructed at that university and in Japan for a number of years. He advised the library, as the memorial tablet records, for about fifty years, and was author of numerous books. On his father's side he was a grandson of Commodore Perry of Lake Erie fame; on his mother's, he was great-great-grandson of Benjamin Franklin.

Boston Transcript

TUESDAY, AUGUST 13, 1929

A STRANGER WITHIN OUR GATES

To the Editor of the Transcript:

I'm a young man who is hopelessly lost in Boston. Perhaps you will be so kind as to direct me on my way. I'm from a very strange city, an alien city of dizzy tempo and vast possibilities. New York has always given me employment, a small apartment to sleep in, and a promise for future increases in pay. But New York has given me nothing else at all. So I came to Boston, resigning my position in a brokerage office.

In Boston I have found an attractive place to live, on Beacon Hill, at a price far below what I paid for a renovated tenement in New York. Boston University offers me a promise for night study. Your library is the best I have been in. Infinitely better than New York's. I have taken in the concerts on the Esplanade. All about me are taste, possibilities for study and recreation, parks which are really country at my very door, and people I feel more akin to than my New Yorkers.

Indeed I feel that Boston is America and New York but a mushroom growth which puts Dante's Inferno to shame. Here your people have homes, go to bed before dawn, and put out their electric lights at late afternoon. Manhattan never puts out its lights, the sun never gets in by day, and I have lived years working long hours to pay for a "future." Being still a young man, I broke away to come here.

And Boston won't take me in! I am indeed the stranger within your gates. Yet I can point to all New England ancestors. I am a Mayflower descendant. An ancestor of mine founded one of your New England colleges. One was one of your portrait painters. My father, whose summer estate is in Vermont, was vice president of the New York Central Railroad, and builder of the Grand Central terminal. So I do not speak as a foreigner or as a man entirely without background.

I have had a good education, have had one book published, and have been in charge of an office in New York at a good salary. I am not a drifter.

Yet here, where I want to make my home for all time, I am unable to obtain even a bare livelihood, willing though I am to take anything.

I spent my savings looking for a place with some publishing house, or with a newspaper. Then I tried to get an office position. At last I tried to obtain a place as a laborer. Now, of late, I've cleared away dishes in a restaurant and have just been able to pay for my room.

Gladly would I take any place anyone would give me, just so long as I may remain here. Sometimes I doubt if even your jail would take me in. I've been near to wanting even that. I've thought of selling copies of Theodore Dreiser's "Genius," or of the current Scribner's, on a street corner so I would find myself locked in, securely a Bostonian, at least for a while.

Now I avoid your wonderful parks because I see myself one of those men forever sitting on a bench, and benches become anathema to my eyes.

Every time I climb Beacon Hill with a book from the library under my arm I wonder if I'll be climbing next night again. For back in New York my old job awaits me if I return. I have a letter here which came yesterday, telling me my place there is still open. A job still open in New York hardly enhances one's appetite over a hamburger sandwich in Boston.

The only inviting look cast my way was from a recruiting officer who stood beside a little billboard of pictures. I stopped and carefully examined those photographs. They were of army posts in Hawaii, Alaska—most everywhere. But none was Boston. And I was in the Army during the war!

Can't Boston make room for a willing worker somewhere in its offices? Perhaps I could sweep floors nights. If nothing better turns up I'll even run for governor on a New York ticket. I'll drag Tammany's influence in to help me, alien that I am.

Next week my address will be Boston Common. Then my New England ancestors will turn in their graves.

W. J. W.
Boston, Aug. 8.

JUL 28 1929

BABIES AND BOOKS SHARE ONE ROOM AS CLINIC OVERFLOWS INTO LIBRARY

Scrambling of These Two at Dorchester Municipal Building Fails to Upset Either One—Children Who Read There Are Accustomed To Infants at Home

A STUDY IN CONCENTRATION

AN EARLY ACQUAINTANCE WITH BOOKS

THE PARKING LINE

BABIES and books both begin with B, but scrambling them together is not always successful—at least from the standpoint of the books. However, the experiment is being tried out in the Dorchester Branch Library.

Here in the children's room on Tuesday and Thursday afternoons, anywhere from 30 to 40 babies in various stages of dress and undress can be seen clambering over library tables or trying to scale precipices of books. Children of 3 or 4, munching cookies, are perched on top of encyclopedias, while mothers compare the ages and weights of their babies.

Tumult Great at Times

But not always does the tumult allow conversation. When one baby sets up a wall, the entire crowd is likely to follow suit. Likewise example is a factor in the behavior of the preschool children, and mothers coax the youngsters into a state of quiet by such admonitory comments as, "You don't see that girl jumping around like you."

It is not that the mothers and infants have come to the library to imitate the Plerian Spring, but for matters of more material concern, like weighing the babies and getting proper diet formulas. As both the children's library and the well baby conference are housed on the first floor of the Dorchester Municipal Building, the superintendent of buildings recently hit upon the idea that the baby clinic might overflow into the library.

The fact is that the baby conference has been terribly cramped in the two small rooms assigned as its quarters. Mothers were often standing with babies in arms, sometimes with a row of small children alongside, whom necessarily they had to bring with them. Or perhaps the jam inside was so great that they had to wait without on the sidewalk amid the colorful assortment of baby carriages and go-carts with their gay afghans.

As many of the mothers and children have been crowded into the room where the physicians make their diagnoses, with only a screen for protection, the uproar has sometimes prevented the doctors from hearing a heart murmur. Small children, too, thought it was fun to run up and peek behind the screen, thus further contributing to the tumult. Therefore, when the superintendent of buildings decided that the library should serve as a parking place for the babies, the plan was welcomed by the nurses and doctors of the conference.

Compromise Is Effected

Not long ago when Miss Alice Jordan, supervisor of work with children of the Boston Public Library, visited the branch, she found babies sprawled all over the tables of the children's room, which, as may be supposed, greatly hampered the functioning of the library organization. But realizing the worthy purpose of the baby conference and the difficulties under which it was laboring, the library made a compromise.

The reference alcove was assigned on Tuesday and Thursday afternoons as a waiting and dressing room for the babies. On these occasions screens are set up to separate it from the main room. Not that these blockades are by any means impregnable, for the preschool children have at times dived out and been regaled by the library assistants with picture books and fairy tales. As the reference alcove now serves as a dressing room for the babies who are to be weighed, it not infrequently happens that bits of their wearing apparel are found back of the encyclopedias or tucked between reference books.

Be it said, however, in behalf of the babies, that the children who patronize the library are not greatly perturbed by the presence of the infantile intruders, as most of the youngsters are more or less accustomed to an atmosphere of babies at home. And if, as on occasion happens, a reference book is in demand, it is possible for the children's librarian to make her way through the maze of mothers, babies, bottles, infants' habiliments, and pre-school children, and abstract the desired volume.

So it is that quarters, which, once used by the District Court, were frequented by hardened criminals, have become the abode of the innocents, for here resort babies and books.—Sarah Allison Maxwell.

SUNDAY MORNING, AUGUST 4, 1929

Allen, Cox, Hammond, Babson, Goddard, Rogers Among Distinguished Authorities Who Answer Famous Edison Questions for Readers of the Boston Sunday Post

See If You Can Solve the Problems Which the Wizard of Menlo Park Put Before America's Brightest Boys Last Week--Do You Agree With Bay State Experts?

Here are the most interesting questions in the examination given to 49 high school graduates by Thomas A. Edison, last week, in his search for a genius to succeed him. They are answered by New England authorities.

BY J. R. MILNE

Mr Edison, when he compiled the questionnaire which gave boys from all over America brain fag last week, included in the list one question that has caused a lot of discussion and maybe some sweating.

It was this:
"If you were marooned alone on a tropical island in the South Pacific, without tools, how would you move a three-ton weight, such as a boulder, 100 feet horizontally and 15 feet vertically?"

The Sunday Post reporter, ordered to make eminent Bostonians wrestle with the Edison gems, tried this one on a number of well-known engineers. In some cases he was greeted with hems and haws, but it was different when he appealed to the Army.

An Army Game

At the Army Base the experts confessed themselves a little puzzled at first. Without tools. That, they said, implied that you couldn't have a lever. For you'd have to have an axe to cut down a tree. But one wise fellow up and said, "It doesn't say anything about moving the boulder whole, does it?"

It didn't. So he solved the problem thus:
"Light a fire under the boulder. Get it hot. Then put water on it. Split it."

This answer appears to be very sensible. However, the most sensible answer of all was that of the boy taking the examination, who replied, with the true instinct of genius:

"Why move the boulder?"
And now, having disposed of that stickler, let us go on to some of the other smart bits. Let us have the first question answered by Governor Allen:

His Excellency's Three

Outside of the field of religion, what three men not now living do you think particularly deserve your respect and admiration? What qualities do you admire in each?

Says Frank Gilman Allen, Governor of Massachusetts:
"George Washington, for his indomitable courage and extraordinary ability of leadership.

"Abraham Lincoln, who, in my opinion, exemplified in the highest degree true statesmanship and personified the best type of great American."

"William Shakspeare, whose power of expression in the English language has never been excelled."

Hammond of Gloucester

If you had been given a certain experiment to perform and had been informed that it could be done successfully, but had failed 10 times, what would you do?

Answered by John Hays Hammond, Jr., of Gloucester, one of the world's most famous inventors, celebrated for his wireless coast defense torpedo and other war devices; his radio system of control of ships; for piano and pipe organ inventions. Mr. Hammond has applied during his career for over 224 patents, and is prominent in America's outstanding radio corporations.

Mr. Hammond said:
"The fact that the experiment had already been done successfully by others would be sufficient to keep me from trying it. I never repeat an experiment. Throughout my life it has been my desire to start in where others have left off, and to bring to a successful conclusion an experiment that had never before been tried. I would go to Africa, to the Orient, or anywhere else in the world, and spend as much time as was necessary.

"Luckily, I have been able to work the way I thought best. Before the war I used to go to Germany every year, to keep myself abreast of the progress made there in radio."

"When I was working on the problem of radio control for boats I had, in my library, several books dealing with the subject, telling of achievements already made by others. Books, however, are apt not to go into sufficient detail; but I went abroad and talked with the men who had written them, and in that way got accurate and helpful technique."

"I cannot advise a man to repeat the experiments of others. It seems to me that life is too short; there is so much to do, and there is not time to waste in repetition."

Professor Goddard

If you were on the verge of an important discovery and found the one missing link in another's laboratory, what would you do? Why?

Answered by Professor Robert H. Goddard of Clark University, celebrated scientist, whose well-known rocket has carried his name around the world if not (as yet) quite to the moon:

"I would talk it over with the other man and arrange to give him credit for his contribution toward the discovery. This would be the natural procedure among scientific workers."

Ex-Governor Cox

Do invention and industry promote international agreement?

This question is answered by Channing H. Cox, ex-Governor of Massachusetts, vice-president of the First National Bank, and director of various corporations.

"Yes, surely. The inventor furnishes industry with products to sell, and the sellers of these products carry them to all parts of the world. Invention and industry therefore bring men of all nations face to face with each other in business, creating mutual understanding and respect."

Professor Rogers

What do you consider four of the most important qualifications necessary to success in any pursuit?

me from trying it. I never repeat an experiment. Throughout my life it has been my desire to start in where others have left off, and to bring to a successful conclusion an experiment that had never before been tried. I would go to Africa, to the Orient, or anywhere else in the world, and spend as much time as was necessary.

"Luckily, I have been able to work the way I thought best. Before the war I used to go to Germany every year, to keep myself abreast of the progress made there in radio."

"When I was working on the problem of radio control for boats I had, in my library, several books dealing with the subject, telling of achievements already made by others. Books, however, are apt not to go into sufficient detail; but I went abroad and talked with the men who had written them, and in that way got accurate and helpful technique."

"I cannot advise a man to repeat the experiments of others. It seems to me that life is too short; there is so much to do, and there is not time to waste in repetition."

"Luckily, I have been able to work the way I thought best. Before the war I used to go to Germany every year, to keep myself abreast of the progress made there in radio."

"When I was working on the problem of radio control for boats I had, in my library, several books dealing with the subject, telling of achievements already made by others. Books, however, are apt not to go into sufficient detail; but I went abroad and talked with the men who had written them, and in that way got accurate and helpful technique."

(Courtesy the New York World.)

Answered by Professor Robert E. Rogers of M. I. T., famous wherever telegraph wires go as the greatest authority on snobs:

"Integrity, energy, patience and ambition. Of all these I am inclined to think energy is the greatest."

Roger Babson's Idea

What new discovery or invention do you believe would be the greatest benefit to mankind?

In answer to this question, Roger Babson, famous Wellesley Hills statistician and expert on economics, said:

"An invention to harness spiritual power as we have harnessed physical and mental power."

Colonel Chase Signals

Two towns, on opposite sides of a river one mile wide, are cut off from communication with each other by any electrical means, due to a calamity. How would you attempt to establish relation between the two cities without the use of electricity? The river cannot be crossed by human beings.

Answered by Colonel Harry G. Chase, State Quartermaster, and during the war, head of A. E. F. Signal School, Shattellin-Sur-Seyne.

"Well, there is the kite, by means of which a string can be sent across. A rope can afterwards be sent over by means of this string, and messages can be transmitted very easily by the rope. A plain sound amplifier may do the trick, but this would depend on the wind conditions, as well as the kite method."

"The flag signal based on the continental code can also be used, but it is seldom employed during war, because the signaler is exposed as a target, and his signals may be learned by the wrong party. Another means would be the steam whistle, which the railroad engineers employ for locomotive signals. The continental code of dots and dashes which stands for various letters can be interpreted through this method.

"One of the most modern devices, however, is the Heliograph, which is simply a reflecting mirror. The dots and dashes of the continental code are written on the mirror and are thrown on the opposite side by the sunlight."

Father Corrigan, S. J.

When do you consider a lie permissible?

"Never," answered the Rev. James J. Corrigan, S. J., of Boston College. "A lie is a deliberate utterance of what one believes to be false and it can never be allowed morally."

"Suppose a person's life or health might be injured by the truth, isn't a lie permissible then?" he was asked.

"State what you mean."

"Let us say that a mother is seriously ill. Her son is suddenly killed in an accident. Fearing to aggravate the mother's malady she is informed that her son has been hurt."

"That is not a lie," said the Rev. Corrigan. "It was true that the son was hurt. It was not necessary to say that he was dead. That he had been in an accident was sufficient. A deliberate lie," he repeated, "is never permissible under any circumstances."

Our State Chemist

When you read the names of the following persons, what fact is immediately associated with them in your mind? Answer in one or two words in each case: Mendeleef, Davy, Perkin, Faraday, Curie, Priestley, Gay-Lussac, Dalton, Solvay, Ramsay, Lavoisier.

Answered by Herman C. Lythgoe, Massachusetts State chemist:
"Mendeleef—periodic system; Davy—miller's safety lamp; Perkin—synthetic dyes; Faraday—induced current; Curie—radioactivity; Priestley—oxygen; Gay-Lussac—vapor density; Dalton—atomic hypothesis; Solvay—caustic soda; Ramsay—argon, neon; Lavoisier—analytical balance."

Election Commissioner

If some acquaintance of yours unfairly accused you of cheating, what would you do?

Patrick H. O'Connor, election commissioner of Boston, in answering this question, said:
"A man must stand on his reputation for veracity, honor and general soundness of character. If the accuser were important enough I would face him and thresh the matter out. Usually this would bring out the fact that there had been a misunderstanding and some heated and poor judgment exercised. If the man were not important, I would merely ignore his charge and let our common acquaintances and friends judge as to the probable substance of his charges."

Librarian Chase

Which classes of books listed below do you most enjoy reading? Adventure, biography, history, mystery, stories, fiction, science, travel, invention, science?
Answered by Frank C. Chase, reference librarian in the Boston Public Library for the past 15 years and probably the widest read man in the State.

"I am interested in such a wide variety of books that it is difficult to select any of the classes mentioned as my favorite. I find an occasional detective story relaxing. Biography and history I like in small doses. In general, the reactions of other people, real or imaginary, to their experiences take little hold upon me, except in the field of art and literary criticism, in which I take a real delight."

"I greatly enjoy an occasional work of good historical fiction, but I find the greatest stimulus and refreshment in books of purposeful adventure—books like Martin Johnson's Lion or those descriptive of the attack on Mt. Everest or Powell's exploration of the Colorado River, or Lawrence's Revolt in the Desert. In these books one has the privilege of joining men of resource in their strenuous pursuit of a great object against obstacles, and of sharing in the joy of achievement through a series of steps in which resolution has been guided by imagination. Such books tell of enthusiasm, an enlargement of faith in the powers of man at his best, which add greatly to the zest of life. I get somewhat the same effect from works on astronomy and the other phases of science in which men are piercing the veils which narrow our vision, and finding new worlds beyond worlds. It is the story of successful exploration, in which a gifted mind, aided by adequate resources, has threaded its way to a clearly imagined but unseen goal, that I most enjoy reading."

Mrs. Tillinghast

If you could only read regularly four periodicals (any kind), which would you choose?

Mrs. Anna C. M. Tillinghast, United States Commissioner of Immigration for New England, answered the above question as follows:

"The Review of Reviews, the Golden Rule, the Saturday Evening Post and the Literary Digest."

From B. U.

Which one of the following would you be willing to sacrifice for the sake of being successful? Happiness, comfort, pride, honor, health, money, love?

"Comfort," said Mr. T. E. Fairchild, assistant to President Daniel Mariot of Boston University, "because to become successful means a struggle both of a physical and mental nature. It requires complete concentration of all the faculties and to reach the goal it is impossible if one spends some time considering his physical comfort. Comfort is at best superficial and when the all important subject 'success' is in the balance, then comfort had better be taken off to make that attainment faster and surer."

Mother of the Poor

If you were to inherit $1,000,000 within the next year, what would you do with it?

Mrs. Nellie Duncan, head of the Volunteers of America, has a novel, undreamed-of way of dispensing with her dream million. Without the slightest hesitation she answers the question.

"If I were to inherit such a large sum of money, I would use it for destitute children and old men and women, where everything essential to their happiness, health, education and growth would be considered."

"I would also establish an institution of a similar nature for men and women who are too old or physically incapable of doing strenuous labor. This home would be maintained on the principles of the one for children."

"The remaining amount I would invest in an ideal summer camp for city youngsters who without it would be forced to spend long, hot weeks in town. But, of course, this is only 'if.'"

Conductor Fiedler Says

What, if anything, does music mean to you, beyond the usual reaction which most persons have to rhythm and melody? There's a catch here.

I like it, celebrated Greater Boston musician and originator and conductor of the Charles River Basin Esplanade concerts, answers the above question to the best of his ability.

"There are two kinds of music—program music, which tells a story, and the highest type of music, which tells no story. The former is not music in its purest form. The reaction to the latter is in the beauty of its architecture. For example, Beethoven would take a theme and lay the foundation upon it. From this he would build up a cathedral of music. The most noted example of this is in his Fifth Symphony, in which he uses but four notes and builds up a whole symphony."

"People sentimentalize about some music, yet the higher type has nothing to do with sex or love affairs. Most give to me a renewal of spirit, a freshening of enthusiasm, an enlargement of faith in the powers of man at his best, which add greatly to the zest of life. I get somewhat the same effect from works on astronomy and the other phases of science in which men are piercing the veils which narrow our vision, and finding new worlds beyond worlds. It is the story of successful exploration, in which a gifted mind, aided by adequate resources, has threaded its way to a clearly imagined but unseen goal, that I most enjoy reading."

"Such music as the 'Wedding of the Painted Doll,' 'Kitten on the Keys' and 'Rhapsody in Blue,' although primarily jazz, is more lasting and more appealing. They contain the three elements of good popular music—they are spicy, subtle and sophisticated."

"Rhythm is the most important thing in music. It came into existence far earlier than melody. Some claim that rhythm was an outcome of the beating of one's heart or the continual tomtom noise made by the savage. Melody is believed to have come from imitating the noises of birds or from the cadence in one's speaking voice."

Chief of Airport

What, in your opinion, should be done to improve the airplane?

Captain Albert L. Edson, head of the East Boston Airport, zooms on this one. "The elimination of the propeller from the airplane would be a great improvement. A machine, something like Professor Goddard's Rocket, will be the next step in improving the present airplane."

"Putting the engine under one of the wings is a way that the propeller could be eliminated. They put the machinery of a steamer in the hull of the ship. Why can't they do the same thing in the airplane and put the engine under the wing?"

Autos of Future

What place in our daily lives do you think the automobile will have 100 years from now?

Answer by Charles S. Henshaw, president of Henshaw Motor Company, Boston:

"Automobiles are destined to remain an important factor in every-day living conditions. Today some people are predicting that aeroplanes will supplant motor vehicles as individual transportation. Whereas, to the contrary, I believe aeroplanes will supplant the steam train, although operated by the railroad, and automobiles a hundred years hence will be serving the public far more conveniently than they are today through electrically controlled new fuel contrivances and greater mechanical perfection."

"Cities honeycombed with underground parking space under and over traffic lanes, 100 miles an hour cross-country thoroughfares with perfect safety, will bring the advantages of remote and sparsely settled country areas into easy commuting distance of every centre."

THE LIBRARIAN

IMPORTANT rearrangements of various rooms in the central building of the Boston Public Library receive clear description in the annual report of the director, Charles F. D. Belden. Although well known to some friends of the library, the precise plan of the changes in progress will still come as news to many Bostonians. "The great need for the proper protection of the valuable possessions of the library is soon to be satisfied," Mr. Belden declares. "Under a special appropriation of $250,000 work is now in progress on the reconstruction of the northern portion of the third floor, where these collections have been located. The Music Room is to be transformed into a Treasure Room, where thousands of the library's choicest treasures will be protected and where some of them may be constantly exhibited under ideal conditions.

"The present Barton-Ticknor Room is to become the Music Room, in which, for the first time, all the music material in the library will be brought together and made easily accessible to both students and the general public. The Barton-Ticknor Division is to be moved into the North Gallery, so remodelled as to accommodate a larger number of books than in the past. In all of these rooms the shelving will be of steel construction. It is, perhaps, not too much to hope that this more adequate protection and enlarged possibility of usefulness will in itself attract the attention of prospective benefactors."

The Examining Committee, comprising twenty-five citizens, give an impressive categorical statement of various other works of repair and improvement which have been carried out during the past twelve months at the Boston Public Library. This is the list given:

1. A new electrical wiring system was installed, with a switchboard of modern type.
2. The stacks were provided with greatly improved lighting equipment.
3. Portions of the condensation roof were renewed.
4. The ridge cresting of the roof was replaced.
5. The old Manuscript Room and adjacent to the lecture hall was remodelled, providing a modern projection room for slides and moving pictures and a new work room for the Children's Department.

Despite these achievements, the trustees themselves say that "much remains to be done before the condition of the central library will be such as to enable the trustees to focus their attention upon other matters. The completion of work on the roof, the installation of additional precautions against fire, the further improvement of the illumination of the library, all require immediate attention. The granite platform in front of the building shows signs of weakness, and there should be no delay in providing for its thorough inspection with the possibility that this platform with the walls and vaults supporting it may require complete reconstruction." Unquestionably this last need is of vital concern.

Surveying Boston's public library system as a whole, the trustees find that "the year has seen an important extension of the facilities of two of the branch libraries, those at Doylston station and City Point; in each case increased circulation and greatly improved service have been the result. A number of other branch libraries are now seriously cramped by the lack of space or of proper facilities for carrying on their work. The districts served by the Allston, Mt. Bowdoin, Orient Heights and Parker Hill branches are now suffering by reason of the total inadequacy of the branch quarters, and the trustees regard the improvement of conditions at these branches as a primary need of the library system. Larger and better quarters are demanded at various other points where the public is ready to respond to the stimulus furnished by improved facilities; at these four branches, however, the work of the library is being definitely hampered and retarded by the character of the quarters in which it is at present carried on. It is the intention of the trustees to present at an early date a statement of the more pressing physical needs of the branch libraries in the order of their relative importance."

From this able statement of existing facts, the board then proceeds to the following announcement of policy regarding expansion of Boston's free book system: "Various sections of the city which are now without convenient library facilities have a fair claim to the establishment of new branches for their use. On the basis of a survey of the city recently completed under the supervision of the director, it will be possible to submit an extension program whenever the opportunity is presented. It is, however, the conviction of the board of trustees that the proper support of the work now established should take precedence of any further spread of the library system into parts of the city which, while they have a proper claim to more convenient service, can still obtain books as at present by going a little out of the way." Here is a policy, founded upon principles usually observed in Boston, which seems well advised.

NEWS, SALEM, MASS.

SEP 3 - 1929

BOOK STEALING

From its central library and its branches Boston loses about 12,000 books a year by theft. It naturally seeks a way to reduce these losses. In New York the public library has a system that makes the reader a suspected criminal the minute he goes into the building. He must leave all his bundles at the door and is just short of searched when he goes out. This is a poor atmosphere for reading but it has been compelled by that portion of the population which is always making trouble for the rest. There has long been a tradition that books and umbrellas are more or less common property. It has been encouraged by the literary essayists and the comedians alike, and it is about time it was done away with.

The books in the public libraries are paid for with taxpayers' money and it is just as much thieving to take them away as it is to pilfer from a cash register. It is a curious thing that the person who would blush at the very thought of lifting $2 in silver from someone's pocketbook will walk out of a library with a stolen book and not a tinge of shame. There was a case near here not so long ago in which a youth removed a dozen books on a mechanical subject from a public library and did not bring them back. He wanted to study a trade and he took the books by stealth. His father found the books and returned them to the librarian much embarrassed. The only saving grace was that the boy made good in the trade to which the books had helped him. But he could have had the books with full permission if he had only told the librarian and he needn't have shamed his father who found them and brought them back. Probably most of the 12,000 books in Boston are taken merely to read and to keep. Some no doubt are stolen to sell for a few pennies, but the profits of this traffic are so small as to be pitiful. It is a queer thing that in a country that makes books so accessible and so cheap a few people should abuse a privilege for which they ought to be thankful.

ROB BOSTON LIBRARY OF 6000 BOOKSThieves Take as Many More From Branches
About City

The "intellectual" book thieves of Boston who frequent the public libraries were responsible for the loss of over 6000 volumes from the shelves of the main building in Copley square last year. The number stolen from the 31 branches, which as yet can only be estimated, will easily swell the total to over 12,000 volumes.

HARD TO REPLACE

Not only is the number of volumes stolen alarming, over 30 daily over the entire city, but also it happens that the books taken are usually both difficult and expensive to replace, being for the most part either text books or technical works. The library officials also have to contend with vandals who tear out pages showing fashion plates and other designs. This latter form of depredation is more common to the Fine Arts and reference departments than to the open shelf rooms, several persons having been apprehended for using razor blades in this fashion. Boston social aspirants who think they should possess a coat of arms but apparently don't, have taken a great many pages out of the works on heraldry and genealogy. It is almost impossible to consult one of these valuable works of reference in Bates Hall without finding many pages missing. The bibliophiles who collect rare editions were, until a few years ago, a source of constant trouble to the vigilant guardians of the Barton-Ticknor library and other valuable collections at the main building in Copley square. At that time, people were allowed to read other volumes in the special rooms provided for these collections and were not required to sign a slip for the volumes to use there.

There is the case of the enterprising thief who several years ago stole a Shakespeare Quarto, worth in the neighborhood of $10,000. The theft was carefully timed, but did not escape the alertness of an employee, who followed the suspect in the Back Bay station, where he boarded a train for New York. The employee did likewise and had the thief arrested at the Grand Central terminal and recovered the volume. Just what disposition the thief would have made of the book is problematical, since great rarities and "incunabula," as a book published before 1500 is known, have been painstakingly examined by experts and are recorded in every large library and book mart in the world.

The rarity of some of the first issues of modern authors have led to a depletion of the library shelves. To illustrate, five years ago the library had seven or eight first edition copies of the works of Theodore Dreiser, all presentation copies, that is, given by the author, and ranging in value between $50 and $200. Today but four of these remain. The most valuable one, "Sister Carrie," has a space in the fly leaf vacant where one miscreant cut out the autograph and presentation lines of Dreiser.

With the present watchful system in vogue and after the removal of the library's treasures to the new Treasure Rooms, now under construction, thefts of the rarer books will be almost impossible, but the problem of watching the sneak thieves who take the less valuable books in the open shelf departments can, in the opinion of library officials, only be solved by constant police vigilance and restriction of the reading public, as is done in the New York Public Library and is also in force throughout other great metropolitan centers. This the trustees are loath to do, as it would work a great hardship on the many innocent people who use the library.

Boston Transcript

124 WASHINGTON STREET, BOSTON, MASS.

TUESDAY, SEPTEMBER 10, 1929

Picturesque Old France

on View at Library

"Picturesque Old France," in art photography, is one of the exhibitions now on view in the Public Library. The photographs are chiefly engravings from plates in the book of that name by Herbert B. Turner, recently published by Little Brown and Company. Mr. Turner has travelled extensively and his camera has won for him, among other distinctions, the medal of the Society of Arts and Crafts, of which he is a master craftsman.

Supplementing the photographic prints are plates from books in the division of the arts. A selection has been made from the series "L'Art Regional en France," showing the current trend in the domestic architecture of the French provinces, especially Normandy, Brittany and the Landes and Basque regions. Contrasting with this, views of chateaux and their gardens, from the Marquis de Girardin's "Maisons de Plaisance Francaises," show types of more formal French architecture, such as Villars-Camstra (Auteuil), Chateau d'Ermenonville (Oise), Chateau du Chesney (Seine-et-Oise) and L'Hotel L. Stern (Paris). Color plates from "Old Bridges of France," by William Emerson and Georges Gromort, are of interest not only for their subjects—views including the Pont-du-Gard, Pont-Marie, Pont de la Concorde, the curious old bridge at Carillon and the Bridge and City of Carcassonne—but because of the remarkable likeness of the reproductions, in both color and texture, to the original water colors by Pierre Vignal.

Of local interest are the unusual "Bruleprints" of Boston views, by John William Robbins. The tower of the Custom House is featured, with such prints as "Dawn in the Market Place," "Afterglow, Broad Street," "The Beacon," and "Sunrise Across the Basin."

These exhibits will remain on view through Sept. 15.

Boston Daily Globe

FRIDAY, SEPT 13, 1929

PHOTOGRAPH EXHIBIT
AT PUBLIC LIBRARY

A collection of prints and photographs illustrating many of the historic and picturesque places in France have been placed on exhibition in the art gallery of the Boston Public Library on Copley sq.

Many of the photographs are enlargements from plates by Herbert B. Turner, used in his recently-published book, "Picturesque Old France." He has a keen eye for the picturesque wherever he goes with his camera, and he thoroughly understands photography. In fact he is a master craftsman of the Boston Society of Arts and Crafts. Every one of his photographs is worth framing.

There is also a group from "L'Art Regional en France" showing the current trend in the domestic architecture in the French provinces, especially Normandy, Brittany and the Basque regions.

Next come views of famous Chateaux and their gardens including Chateau du Chesney, Chateau d'Ermenonville and the Villa Camstra.

There are a number of color plates showing some of the picturesque old bridges in France. There are reproductions from the original water colors by Pierre Vignal and are used in "Old Bridges of France," by William Emerson and Georges Gromort.

There is also a very interesting group of "Bruleprints," by John W. Robbins. These are views of Boston done by an original process, the invention of Mr. Robbins.

NEW BRANCH

Director Belden Tells What A Nice Library
Building Orient Hgts.
Will Have Nov. 1st

Director Charles F. D. Belden of the Boston Public Library has informed the Free Press what an excellent new building will house the Orient Heights Branch Library. As is now well known the site selected is ideal, located at the junction of Bayswater street, and Butler avenue. It will be bathed in sunlight and good air. A quiet place to browse among the books. And best news of all it will be ready about November 1st.

Director Belden has this to say about the new building: "The exterior of the Branch will be of red water-struck brick, with granite sandstone trimmings. It will be one story in height, set back from the street, and will ultimately have an attractive lawn and flower beds. The building will be exclusively for branch library purposes and the interior will be divided into an Adults' Room, Children's Room and Reference Room. These rooms will be attractively furnished and well supplied with books. It is expected that the Library will move from its present location at 1020 Bennington Street on or about November 1st."

Director Belden is certainly giving the people of Orient Heights an excellent building for their branch library. Everyone is enthusiastic about the location.

The Boston Post

Established 1831
The Independent Democratic
Paper of New England

THURSDAY, SEPTEMBER 19, 1929

Little Walks
About Boston

BY WILLIAM JUSTIN MANN

The Harvard Treasure Room has now on exhibition in one of its cases a very interesting old book. It once belonged to the New England Library, collected by Thomas Prince, and, like the precious Bradford Manuscript, it remained in the steeple chamber of the Old South Church through the Revolution. It was also, like the Bradford Manuscript, carried away to England, and like it came to the library of the Bishop of London, by whom it was given to the university.

This book, which is also a manuscript, is the work of Nathan Prince, a brother of Thomas Prince, and seems to be the "Dictionary of Authors," referred to in the Preface to the Catalogue of the Prince Library. Nathan Prince was a teacher in Harvard College, and it is eminently fitting that this book should be in its present custody. The main Prince collection is in the Boston Public Library.

Thomas Prince began to collect his library while he was a student at Harvard (1787) and he bequeathed it to the Old South Church. The long disappearance of the Bradford Manuscript, as well as of this minor one by Nathan Prince, and their final return from the library of the Bishop of London, is the outstanding romance of American literature.

In the same case with this Prince book are the only books remaining of John Harvard's library, a copy of Cotton Mather's Magnalia, and President Dunster's Hebrew and Greek Bible, printed in Antwerp, 1584, and used by him during his presidency, 1630-1654.

This book was presented in 1841 by the Misses Dunster, daughters of Rev. Isalah Dunster, a great-grandson of Henry Dunster, the first President of the College. Inserted in this book is a copy of the vote of thanks to the Misses Dunster passed by the Harvard Board, signed by Josiah Quincy, when President of the College.

In another case are autographed letters of George Washington, Benjamin Franklin, and Charles Darwin. In still a third case there remain on view some rare autographs, the gift of Miss Amy Lowell, including letters of Victor Hugo, Emile Zola, George Sand, and Jules Verne.

THE LIBRARY LECTURES

More than one hundred lectures and concerts will be given this winter under the auspices of the Boston Public Library, beginning Thursday evening, Oct. 3. The Library presents, in co-operation with organizations such as the Boston Ruskin Club, the Drama League and the Field and Forest Club, a series of lectures which will appeal to all classes of people. Through the generosity of Mrs. Elizabeth Sprague Coolidge, the Library is able to present the London String Quartet next Spring in three groups of four programs each. These concerts will be given in the South End Branch, in the City Point Branch and in the hall of the Central Library. These concerts, like all the other recitals and lectures will be free.

Of timely interest are the talks on the Massachusetts Bay Tercentenary during October, November and December by men who are intimately acquainted with the state's history and with its coming celebration. Among the speakers will be Prof. Albert Bushnell Hart, Herbert Parker, John J. Walsh and Michael J. Murray. Men and women who are interested in the Tercentenary, but are not quite certain what historic events will be commemorated and why—and the number of these persons is legion—should make it a point to attend these lectures. A complete program of all the lectures can, of course, be obtained at the Library or any of its branches.

The Sunday Post

SPECIAL LIBRARIES
ROOM NEARLY READY

The new Special Libraries room of the Boston Public Library, which will house the 5,000 choicer volumes of the special collections, is now over 90 per cent completed and it is expected that it will be ready for occupancy by Oct. 15.

Other construction work in the Library includes a replacement of the foundation piling, now over half finished, the relaying of a section in the marble floor of the main entrance hall, and the construction of a new pool in the center of the courtyard.

How many Everett residents, we wonder, are aware that they have within a few minutes from their city two of the largest libraries in the United States? The largest in the whole country is the misnamed Library of Congress at Washington, D. C., which ought to be called the National Library and which has in excess of 3,000,000 volumes. The New York Public Library and the Yale University Library come second and third respectively, the Widener Memorial Library at Harvard is fourth with 1,361,000 volumes and the Boston Public Library is a near fifth with 1,284,000. The last two are available to Everett citizens for reference work. Thousands of people throughout the nation would give a great deal to be located so near to them. Indeed hundreds of students come to Boston every year for no other reason. If these are not enough, we have within commuting distance from Everett the Athenaeum (292,000 volumes), the Massachusetts State Library (220,000), and numerous special libraries such as the Harvard Law School Library (212,000), or the collection of the New England Historical Genealogical Association, which, though small, cannot be duplicated anywhere else on earth. Nearly all of these can be consulted by Everett people without charge, and, in addition to that, the Shute and Parlin Memorial Libraries of this city will arrange to obtain books upon request from any other public library in the state. When you consider that Massachusetts has a total of 435 public libraries with a combined total of better than 15,000,000 books upon their shelves, that makes the reading and research resources of Everett pretty extensive, doesn't it? Certainly there is no excuse for any literate person in this city remaining uninformed upon any subject concerning which he really desires to obtain knowledge.

Boston Post
September 24, 21

♦ ♦ ♦ ♦ ♦
The periodical department of the Boston Public Library has been given a new floor covering, for a long time much needed.
The next floor to be covered will probably be that of the newspaper room, adjoining the periodical department.
While this work was going on, the crowds that frequent the place shifted to another room.
And crowds do frequent the periodical rooms.
Most of the best known magazines are kept there, both old and current, and, according to figures compiled by the library, as many as 6,819 persons last year made requests for periodicals.

♦ ♦ ♦ ♦ ♦

Boston Transcript

324 WASHINGTON STREET, BOSTON, MASS.

SATURDAY, SEPTEMBER 21, 1929

Notable Speakers in Library Course

For the thirty-first season of free lectures and concerts, the Boston Public Library announces a notable list of speakers and musicians. Many illustrations will be used and not a few of the lecturers will also be heard at the branch libraries throughout the city. Following is a list of the entire program:

Conley Club Singers and Entertainers, under the direction of Pauline Hammond Clark, 8 P.M., Thursday, Oct. 3.
John Brown, the Marching of his Soul, 8 P.M., Thursday, Oct. 3.
Henry J. Kilbourn, D.D., 8:30 P.M., Sunday, Oct. 6.
Music of the American Indian, Mabel F. Knight, 8 P.M., Sunday Oct. 6.
In the Wake of the Vikings: Iceland and its Scenery, Charles Ernest White, 8 P.M., Thursday, Oct. 10.
Some Comedies of Travel, John C. Bowker, M.D., 8:30 P.M., Sunday Oct. 13.
The Spirit of the New Wing of the Boston Museum of Fine Arts, M. Iris Pappo, B.A., Illustrated, 8 P.M., Sunday Oct. 13.
"China, wonderland of half-a-hundred centuries," Walter W. Allerton, 8 P.M., Thursday, Oct. 17.
Literary Mosaics, tales, folklore, and legends gathered abroad, James Frederick Hopkins, 8:30 P.M., Sunday Oct. 20.
"What I Saw and Heard in Palestine," Rosebelle Temple, Illustrated with slides lent by Mrs. William Carr, Gertrude Walker-Crowley, soloist, 8 P.M., Sunday Oct. 20.
"Colonus and his Voyages," Dr. Sarah E. Palmer, 8 P.M., Thursday Oct. 24.
"Glimpses of Literary London," Miss Caroline Ticknor, 8:30 P.M., Sunday Oct. 27.
The Average Man and Adult Education, Through Use of the Public Library, Hon. Roland D. Sawyer, 8 P.M., Sunday Oct. 27.
"Off the Beaten Track in Australia," Captain Kilroy Harris, 8 P.M., Thursday Oct. 31.
"William Shakespeare Thackeray, the Novelist and the Man," Dr. Francis Henry Wade, with illustrative reading, 8:30 P.M., Sunday Nov. 3.
"Readings from Shakespeare, with Associated Music," Laura Huxtable Porter, 8 P.M., Sunday Nov. 3.
The National Parks of Canada, Arthur H. Merritt, Illustrated with colored slides, 8 P.M., Thursday Nov. 7.
Early Glimpses of the American Theater, Frank W. C. Hersey, Harvard University, Illustrated, (Drama League Course) 8:30 P.M., Sunday Nov. 10.
Music's Power and Purpose, Margaret Anderson, Illustrated by stereopticon and piano, 8 P.M., Sunday Nov. 10.
Through the Colorful Canyons of the West, Rev. Charles W. Casson, (Field and Forest Club Course) 8 P.M., Thursday Nov. 14.
Goethe's Faust: an Interpretative Reading, Jessie Eldridge Southwick, 8:30 P.M., Sunday Nov. 17.
Concert, the Tokar String Quartet, 8 P.M., Sunday Nov. 17.
Trails and Tales of the Rockies, Col. Philip A. Moore, Contributed by the Bureau of Commercial Economics, Washington, D. C., 8 P.M., Thursday Nov. 21.
A Canyon Trilogy, Illustrated and set to music, Alice Howland Macomber, 8:30 P.M., Sunday Nov. 24.
Operatic and Italian Recital, Mme. Alice Bianchi and assisting artists, 8 P.M., Sunday Nov. 24.
Lecture Recital, Mr. and Mrs. M. H. Gulesian, 8:30 P.M., Sunday Dec. 1.
Mozart's "Bastien and Bastienne," Eleanor Brigham, 8 P.M., Sunday Dec. 1.
Recent Rambles in Greece, Alice Lawton, art critic of the Boston Post, 8 P.M., Thursday Dec. 5.
Two American Comedians, Jefferson and E. H. Sothorn, Robert H. Rogers, Associate Professor of English, Massachusetts Institute of Technology, (Drama League Course) 8:30 P.M., Sunday Dec. 8.
Before the Footlights and Behind the Scenes, Fannie Barnett Linsky, 8 P.M., Sunday Dec. 8.
Some Adirondack Trails, Russell M. L. Carson, Chairman Committee on Education, Publication and Information, Adirondack Mountain Club, (Field and Forest Club Course) 8 P.M., Thursday Dec. 12.
George Inness, Jr., Man and Artist, Followed by interpretations of his religious paintings, Mrs. Louis J. Richards, Illustrated, 8:30 P.M., Sunday Dec. 15.
Noël de France, A lecture recital by Mme. Jeanne Brondel Allen, 8 P.M., Sunday Dec. 15.
The Germany of Today, and Romantic Germany, John George Bucher, Films, Contributed by the Bureau of Commercial Economics, Washington, D. C., 8 P.M., Thursday Dec. 19.
When Dickens read the "Christmas Carol" in Boston on Christmas Eve, Edward F. Payne, President Boston Branch of the Dickens Fellowship, Illustrated, 8:30 P.M., Sunday Dec. 22.

"New Spirituals and Plantation Melodies," Concert, Lyric Male Quartet, 8 P.M., Sunday, Dec. 22.
To be announced, (American Poetry Association Course) 8:30 P.M., Sunday Dec. 29.
Unfrequent Trails in the Canadian Rockies, George H. Brown, founder of the Brown and Nichols School, Cambridge, Films, 8 P.M., Thursday Jan. 2.
Dramatic Reading of a Modern Play, Isabella Taylor, 8:30 P.M., Sunday Jan. 6.
Concert, Orchestra of the Lincoln House Association, Jacques Hoffman, conductor, 8 P.M., Sunday Jan. 6.
Older America the Newest Way, Henry Warren Poor, (Field and Forest Club Course) 8 P.M., Thursday Jan. 9.
The Theater in New England, Then and Now, Frank Chouteau Brown, Lecturer on Architecture, Boston University, Illustrated, (Drama League Course) 8:30 P.M., Sunday Jan. 12.
Folk Songs from Colorful Lands, Ellenor Cook, in costume, Camilla Edwards, accompanist, 8 P.M., Sunday Jan. 12.
Wild Flowers of New England, Franklin I. Jordan, 8 P.M., Thursday Jan. 16.
To be announced, (American Poetry Association Course) 8:30 P.M., Sunday Jan. 19.
Concert, Seventeenth Century Ensemble, 8 P.M., Sunday Jan. 19.
An Hour with American Sculptors, Marguerite Hand, 8 P.M., Thursday Jan. 23.
Clara Barton, Dr. P. H. Eder, 8:30 P.M., Sunday Jan. 26.
Concert, Wheaton College Glee Club, Herbert J. Jenny, conductor, 8 P.M., Sunday Jan. 26.
The Falcon and the Lady, The Studio Club, Under the direction of Helen Adelaide Shaw, 8 P.M., Thursday Jan. 29.
The Art of Florence, Mrs. Everett W. Varney, 8:30 P.M., Sunday Feb. 2.
A Message through Drama, Lucille Vandiver, Illustrated by a one-act play presented by the Studio Club, under her direction, 8 P.M., Sunday Feb. 2.
Egypt, Ancient and Modern, Its Art, Monuments and Mysticism, Mme. Beale Moray, With lantern slides, and music by members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, and chorus, 8 P.M., Thursday Feb. 6.
Mediocrity, the Palmy Days, Robert E. Rogers, (Drama League Course) 8:30 P.M., Sunday Feb. 9.
Hush, Hush, Land of Sheer Delight, Hush Wallace Smith, Illustrated, 8 P.M., Sunday Feb. 9.
Former president, Appalachian Club, (Field and Forest Club Course) 8 P.M., Thursday Feb. 13.
Switzerland, Peaks and People, Fletch Briggs, Illustrated, 8:30 P.M., Sunday Feb. 16.
Hans Reital, Elizabeth Siedorf, 8 P.M., Sunday Feb. 16.
History of English Gardens, Katherine Brooks Norcross, landscape architect, 8 P.M., Thursday Feb. 20.
Vachel Lindsay, Lynn H. Harris, (American Poetry Association Course) 8:30 P.M., Sunday Feb. 23.
Alexander Romanesque, of First National School of Violin, 8 P.M., Sunday Feb. 23.
Alaska, Dr. Charles A. Payne, 8 P.M., Thursday Feb. 27.
Alaska, Must Past and Present, Otto G. P. Straub, With musical illustrations, 8:30 P.M., Sunday March 2.
Concert, Boston Civic Symphony Orchestra, Joseph F. Wagner, conductor, 8 P.M., Sunday March 2.
How to Grow the Gladiolus, William E. Clarke, 8 P.M., Thursday March 6.
Important American Historical Pageants, Marie Ware Laughton, director, Out Door Play, Illustrated, (Drama League Course) 8:30 P.M., Thursday March 12.
Folk Songs and Ballads of Old France and New France, Costume recital by Berthe Herbert, contralto, and assistants, 8 P.M., Sunday March 9.
A Naturalist in the Canadian Rockies, Dan McCowan, (Field and Forest Club Course) 8 P.M., Thursday March 12.
Readings from Shakespeare, George Francis Pearson, 8:30 P.M., Sunday March 15.
Chamber Concert, London String Quartet, 8 P.M., Sunday March 15.
Cape Cod, Past, Present, Future, Edwin A. Freeman, Color illustrations and films, 8 P.M., Thursday March 20.
Progress and Plenty, William Trufant Foster, 8:30 P.M., Sunday March 23.
Chamber Concert, London String Quartet, 8 P.M., Sunday March 23.
From Village to Metropolis, Boston, 1630-1850, Rev. Henry Wilder Foote, 8 P.M., Thursday March 27.
An Afternoon with Flowers, B. F. Letson, 8:30 P.M., Sunday March 30.
Concert, German Singing Society, A.L.Y.P.S., Under the direction of Erdise T. Oedel, 8 P.M., Sunday March 30.
The Strolling Players under the direction of Helene Martha Boll in two one-act plays, 8 P.M., Thursday April 3.
Reading for Employment, John Macy, 8:30 P.M., Sunday April 6.
Chamber Concert, London String Quartet, 8 P.M., Sunday April 6.
The Bay Colony Circle, Rev. Lyman V. Rutledge, 8 P.M., Thursday April 10.
Neither Christian nor Pagan, Dorothy Adlow, Illustrated, 8:30 P.M., Sunday April 13.
Chamber Concert, London String Quartet, 8 P.M., Sunday April 13.
The Passion Play at Oberammergau, George L. Huntington, headmaster, Tilton School, Tilton, N. H., 8 P.M., Thursday April 17.

"The Recovered Wagon in American Folklore," Brooks Gulick, 8:30 P.M., Sunday, Dec. 20.
Music of the World, Mrs. Carolyn Hunt, Illustrated with vocal and instrumental, 8 P.M., Sunday April 20.
Happy Days in France, Mrs. Arthur Ropes, 8 P.M., Thursday April 24.
Three Kinds of Poetry, Robert E. (American Poetry Association Course) 8:30 P.M., Sunday April 27.
Concert, The Waltham Musical Club, Vannini, director, 8 P.M., Sunday April 27.

Twelve Chamber Music Concerts

Through the generosity of Mrs. Sprague Coolidge the Boston Public Library is enabled to announce a series of twelve concerts to be given in the London String Quartet. Four programs arranged to illustrate the history of string quartet music, will each be given three times as follows:

Saturday evenings at 8 in the Hall Municipal Building corner of Shawmut and West Brookline street (South End Library).
Sunday afternoons at 3:30 in the Hall Municipal Building on Broadway near South Boston, (City Point Branch Library).
Sunday evenings at 8 in the Hall of the Central Library, Copley Square.

The dates and tentative program are as follows:

Saturday, March 15 and Sunday, March 16, Haydn, Quartet in D major, Op. 64, Mozart, Quartet in C major, K. 478, Beethoven, Quartet in G major, Op. 157, Schubert, Quartet in E minor, Op. 147, Brahms, Quartet in C minor, Op. 68.
Saturday, March 22 and Sunday, March 23, Beethoven, Quartet in E minor, Op. 59, Schubert, Quartet in B flat, Op. 147, Schumann, Quartet in A major, Op. 41, Brahms, Quartet in C minor, Op. 68.
Saturday, April 5 and Sunday, April 6, Schubert, Quartet in E minor, Op. 147, Schumann, Quartet in A major, Op. 41, Brahms, Quartet in C minor, Op. 68.
Saturday, April 12 and Sunday, April 13, Dvorak, Quartet in F major, Op. 96, Brahms, Quartet in C minor, Op. 68, Hindemith, Quartet in F minor, Op. 41.

Seven Tercentenary Lectures

Commemorating the three hundred anniversary, in 1930, of the establishment by the Puritans of the Massachusetts Colony in New England and the setting up of Independent Civil Government in America; and the three hundredth anniversary of the founding of Boston.

"The Greatest Opportunity for Massachusetts in 300 Years," Albert Russell Hart, President, Harvard University, 8 P.M., Oct. 3.
The Significance of the Massachusetts Tercentenary, Hon. Herbert Parker, Director of the Tercentenary Commission, 8 P.M., Oct. 3.

"If it is a novel that deals in serious fashion with some particular historical period, its details must be correct: if the book has a mystery or detective element, it must be judged from that peculiar angle: if it deals with the seas, it must deal with it in true mariner fashion—in other words, the author must be able to box his compass as well as his character mariners and not make him give orders in a way that would cause a seaman to throw down the book in disgust."
"It is obvious, from the vast number of books published, that the librarian and his immediate assistants cannot take the time to read every one offered for their consideration. Therefore, these books are turned over to this volunteer committee of 'unknowns' who review and pass unofficial judgment upon them; a group who remain incognito, thoroughly cosmopolitan and non-sectarian."

Ruskin Club Course Mondays

The Ruskin Club meets regularly in the Lecture Hall, on the second floor Mondays of the month, at 8 P.M. These meetings are followed by free lectures, the following titles being announced subject to change:

"Mussolini," Lillian Whiting, Oct. 14.
"Red Letter Days in Europe," Mrs. Charles Hall, Illustrated, Oct. 28.
"A Winter Cruise through the West," Andrew Oliver, Illustrated, Nov. 18.
"The Ethical Implication of Modern Poetry," Joseph F. MacCarthy, Ph.D., D.D., Nov. 22.
"Christmas," William E. Gardner, D.D., Assistant rector, Trinity Church, Dec. 8.
"Mussolini," Alice Wentworth MacIntyre, Nov. 22.
"The Poets of the Ruskin Country," Herbert J. Gurney, former president, State Federation of Women's Clubs, Jan. 27.
"John Ruskin's birth anniversary," Prof. Knox Black, A.M., in memory of E. E. Black, LL.D., late professor of English Literature, Boston University, Feb. 10.
"England—The Home of John Ruskin," Arthur Dudley Ropes, president, Massachusetts Christian Temperance Union, Feb. 10.
"John Ruskin's Spiritual Message," Rev. Dr. Doremus, Gloucester, March 10.
"Ideals and Aims of Art in Massachusetts," E. Edward Newell, principal, Massachusetts School of Art, State Director of Art, March 24.
"Ruskin and the Rhythmic Life," Joseph Doremus, with music and illustrations, April 7.
"The Abundant Life—Ruskin's Day Course," Arthur W. Gilbert, Ph.D., Chairman of the Department of Agriculture of Massachusetts, April 28.

Committee of 'Unknowns' Picks Books for Public Library's Thirty-Mile Shelf

To Pass These Judges, a Volume Must Have Outstanding Appeal

By LOWELL AMES NORRIS

There's an interesting tale about the Boston Public Library that's never been told.

It concerns the whys and wherefores of the thousands of books that find their way to the 30-mile book-shelf at Copley square which houses products of the literary great, the semi-great and the near-great, as well as absorbing volumes of fiction that the public reads, discusses, and then forgets.

Agents all over the world are on the alert for unusual books to place upon this gigantic bookshelf, which could easily stretch from Boston to Lowell; others find their places through gifts and bequests; agents attend auctions and delve through attics for queer volumes; writers of sorts do their literary lobbying to land their brain children there, while a practically unknown committee of Bostonians works quietly in an unofficial capacity to help provide the thousands of readers with fiction that will stimulate, inform, and entertain.

EVERY BOOK MUST HAVE "SOME OUTSTANDING APPEAL"

"In other words," says a certain well-known library executive speaking for the ordering department, the official channel through which all books gain admittance to the library, "every book that is accepted and placed upon our shelves must have some outstanding appeal. It must be distinctive and have a peculiar value all its own."

"If it is a novel that deals in serious fashion with some particular historical period, its details must be correct: if the book has a mystery or detective element, it must be judged from that peculiar angle: if it deals with the seas, it must deal with it in true mariner fashion—in other words, the author must be able to box his compass as well as his character mariners and not make him give orders in a way that would cause a seaman to throw down the book in disgust."

"It is obvious, from the vast number of books published, that the librarian and his immediate assistants cannot take the time to read every one offered for their consideration. Therefore, these books are turned over to this volunteer committee of 'unknowns' who review and pass unofficial judgment upon them; a group who remain incognito, thoroughly cosmopolitan and non-sectarian."

"The committee includes several well-known members of Boston society, several professors of note, a writer or two with a not inconsiderable following. There is a criminologist, a naturalist, a physician, a politician, these conversant with the sea, and yet others who have the taste of the average reader. There is at least one Catholic, one Protestant and one Jew. Books dealing with religious questions are carefully and tolerantly considered by the religious group of the religion concerned. Opinions are sought from both religious and literary viewpoints."

"At the present time the committee includes some 25 representative men and women who read and render opinions on two or more books a week. Their verdicts are submitted in writing on special forms furnished by the library. Fiction recommended for acceptance is reported on a white form, all the books not so recommended are reported on a blue form. After noting on special forms recommended for acceptance, the reviewer indicates whether or not the story is cheerful or depressing, dull or entertaining, immoral or moralizing, sordid or stimulating, trashy, trivial or wholesome."

"The reviewer gives a brief estimate

Left to right, Charles F. D. Belden, librarian of the Boston Public Library; Dr. Herbert Putnam, librarian of the Congressional Library at Washington and former librarian at Boston.

of its literary value and whether it will have a popular, limited or displeasing appeal for all readers; adults, men, women or children. All pages containing objectionable passages are noted. The report closes with a brief plot synopsis together with the reasons for the decision of the reviewer. There are really no hard and fast rules. Any book that is outstanding in its appeal, either because of contents or author, and has been selected is usually recommended by other members of the committee and other opinions sought. Any book that has been rejected may again be recommended for consideration at any time."

This committee was first organized by Herbert Putnam, then librarian of Boston Public Library and now librarian of the Library of Congress, back in the late 90's, when literature began to break away from the influences of the Victorian period and authors started to act real devilish, calling "limbs" by their proper name of legs. Mr. Putnam clearly stated that they were creative fashion. They were an element in assisting library executives to make up their book selections, and their opinions were supplementary, and not to be regarded as final in any instance.

Sometimes the viewpoints of these unofficial readers vary. One may condemn a book as worthless and highly immoral; the next reader may recommend the book for acceptance in no uncertain terms. It is interesting to note that at one time all, or very nearly all, of Mrs. Edith Wharton's novels were on the library's banned list. One of her books back in 1913 were received rather doubtfully by the good members of the committee and a vote-immoral; the next reader may recommend the book for acceptance in no uncertain terms. It is interesting to note that at one time all, or very nearly all, of Mrs. Edith Wharton's novels were on the library's banned list. One of her books back in 1913 were received rather doubtfully by the good members of the committee and a vote-immoral; the next reader may recommend the book for acceptance in no uncertain terms. It is interesting to note that at one time all, or very nearly all, of Mrs. Edith Wharton's novels were on the library's banned list. One of her books back in 1913 were received rather doubtfully by the good members of the committee and a vote-immoral; the next reader may recommend the book for acceptance in no uncertain terms. It is interesting to note that at one time all, or very nearly all, of Mrs. Edith Wharton's novels were on the library's banned list. One of her books back in 1913 were received rather doubtfully by the good members of the committee and a vote-immoral; the next reader may recommend the book for acceptance in no uncertain terms. It is interesting to note that at one time all, or very nearly all, of Mrs. Edith Wharton's novels were on the library's banned list. One of her books back in 1913 were received rather doubtfully by the good members of the committee and a vote-immoral; the next reader may recommend the book for acceptance in no uncertain terms. It is interesting to note that at one time all, or very nearly all, of Mrs. Edith Wharton's novels were on the library's banned list. One of her books back in 1913 were received rather doubtfully by the good members of the committee and a vote-immoral; the next reader may recommend the book for acceptance in no uncertain terms. It is interesting to note that at one time all, or very nearly all, of Mrs. Edith Wharton's novels were on the library's banned list. One of her books back in 1913 were received rather doubtfully by the good members of the committee and a vote-immoral; the next reader may recommend the book for acceptance in no uncertain terms. It is interesting to note that at one time all, or very nearly all, of Mrs. Edith Wharton's novels were on the library's banned list. One of her books back in 1913 were received rather doubtfully by the good members of the committee and a vote-immoral; the next reader may recommend the book for acceptance in no uncertain terms. It is interesting to note that at one time all, or very nearly all, of Mrs. Edith Wharton's novels were on the library's banned list. One of her books back in 1913 were received rather doubtfully by the good members of the committee and a vote-immoral; the next reader may recommend the book for acceptance in no uncertain terms. It is interesting to note that at one time all, or very nearly all, of Mrs. Edith Wharton's novels were on the library's banned list. One of her books back in 1913 were received rather doubtfully by the good members of the committee and a vote-immoral; the next reader may recommend the book for acceptance in no uncertain terms. It is interesting to note that at one time all, or very nearly all, of Mrs. Edith Wharton's novels were on the library's banned list. One of her books back in 1913 were received rather doubtfully by the good members of the committee and a vote-immoral; the next reader may recommend the book for acceptance in no uncertain terms. It is interesting to note that at one time all, or very nearly all, of Mrs. Edith Wharton's novels were on the library's banned list. One of her books back in 1913 were received rather doubtfully by the good members of the committee and a vote-immoral; the next reader may recommend the book for acceptance in no uncertain terms. It is interesting to note that at one time all, or very nearly all, of Mrs. Edith Wharton's novels were on the library's banned list. One of her books back in 1913 were received rather doubtfully by the good members of the committee and a vote-immoral; the next reader may recommend the book for acceptance in no uncertain terms. It is interesting to note that at one time all, or very nearly all, of Mrs. Edith Wharton's novels were on the library's banned list. One of her books back in 1913 were received rather doubtfully by the good members of the committee and a vote-immoral; the next reader may recommend the book for acceptance in no uncertain terms. It is interesting to note that at one time all, or very nearly all, of Mrs. Edith Wharton's novels were on the library's banned list. One of her books back in 1913 were received rather doubtfully by the good members of the committee and a vote-immoral; the next reader may recommend the book for acceptance in no uncertain terms. It is interesting to note that at one time all, or very nearly all, of Mrs. Edith Wharton's novels were on the library's banned list. One of her books back in 1913 were received rather doubtfully by the good members of the committee and a vote-immoral; the next reader may recommend the book for acceptance in no uncertain terms. It is interesting to note that at one time all, or very nearly all, of Mrs. Edith Wharton's novels were on the library's banned list. One of her books back in 1913 were received rather doubtfully by the good members of the committee and a vote-immoral; the next reader may recommend the book for acceptance in no uncertain terms. It is interesting to note that at one time all, or very nearly all, of Mrs. Edith Wharton's novels were on the library's banned list. One of her books back in 1913 were received rather doubtfully by the good members of the committee and a vote-immoral; the next reader may recommend the book for acceptance in no uncertain terms. It is interesting to note that at one time all, or very nearly all, of Mrs. Edith Wharton's novels were on the library's banned list. One of her books back in 1913 were received rather doubtfully by the good members of the committee and a vote-immoral; the next reader may recommend the book for acceptance in no uncertain terms. It is interesting to note that at one time all, or very nearly all, of Mrs. Edith Wharton's novels were on the library's banned list. One of her books back in 1913 were received rather doubtfully by the good members of the committee and a vote-immoral; the next reader may recommend the book for acceptance in no uncertain terms. It is interesting to note that at one time all, or very nearly all, of Mrs. Edith Wharton's novels were on the library's banned list. One of her books back in 1913 were received rather doubtfully by the good members of the committee and a vote-immoral; the next reader may recommend the book for acceptance in no uncertain terms. It is interesting to note that at one time all, or very nearly all, of Mrs. Edith Wharton's novels were on the library's banned list. One of her books back in 1913 were received rather doubtfully by the good members of the committee and a vote-immoral; the next reader may recommend the book for acceptance in no uncertain terms. It is interesting to note that at one time all, or very nearly all, of Mrs. Edith Wharton's novels were on the library's banned list. One of her books back in 1913 were received rather doubtfully by the good members of the committee and a vote-immoral; the next reader may recommend the book for acceptance in no uncertain terms. It is interesting to note that at one time all, or very nearly all, of Mrs. Edith Wharton's novels were on the library's banned list. One of her books back in 1913 were received rather doubtfully by the good members of the committee and a vote-immoral; the next reader may recommend the book for acceptance in no uncertain terms. It is interesting to note that at one time all, or very nearly all, of Mrs. Edith Wharton's novels were on the library's banned list. One of her books back in 1913 were received rather doubtfully by the good members of the committee and a vote-immoral; the next reader may recommend the book for acceptance in no uncertain terms. It is interesting to note that at one time all, or very nearly all, of Mrs. Edith Wharton's novels were on the library's banned list. One of her books back in 1913 were received rather doubtfully by the good members of the committee and a vote-immoral; the next reader may recommend the book for acceptance in no uncertain terms. It is interesting to note that at one time all, or very nearly all, of Mrs. Edith Wharton's novels were on the library's banned list. One of her books back in 1913 were received rather doubtfully by the good members of the committee and a vote-immoral; the next reader may recommend the book for acceptance in no uncertain terms. It is interesting to note that at one time all, or very nearly all, of Mrs. Edith Wharton's novels were on the library's banned list. One of her books back in 1913 were received rather doubtfully by the good members of the committee and a vote-immoral; the next reader may recommend the book for acceptance in no uncertain terms. It is interesting to note that at one time all, or very nearly all, of Mrs. Edith Wharton's novels were on the library's banned list. One of her books back in 1913 were received rather doubtfully by the good members of the committee and a vote-immoral; the next reader may recommend the book for acceptance in no uncertain terms. It is interesting to note that at one time all, or very nearly all, of Mrs. Edith Wharton's novels were on the library's banned list. One of her books back in 1913 were received rather doubtfully by the good members of the committee and a vote-immoral; the next reader may recommend the book for acceptance in no uncertain terms. It is interesting to note that at one time all, or very nearly all, of Mrs. Edith Wharton's novels were on the library's banned list. One of her books back in 1913 were received rather doubtfully by the good members of the committee and a vote-immoral; the next reader may recommend the book for acceptance in no uncertain terms. It is interesting to note that at one time all, or very nearly all, of Mrs. Edith Wharton's novels were on the library's banned list. One of her books back in 1913 were received rather doubtfully by the good members of the committee and a vote-immoral; the next reader may recommend the book for acceptance in no uncertain terms. It is interesting to note that at one time all, or very nearly all, of Mrs. Edith Wharton's novels were on the library's banned list. One of her books back in 1913 were received rather doubtfully by the good members of the committee and a vote-immoral; the next reader may recommend the book for acceptance in no uncertain terms. It is interesting to note that at one time all, or very nearly all, of Mrs. Edith Wharton's novels were on the library's banned list. One of her books back in 1913 were received rather doubtfully by the good members of the committee and a vote-immoral; the next reader may recommend the book for acceptance in no uncertain terms. It is interesting to note that at one time all, or very nearly all, of Mrs. Edith Wharton's novels were on the library's banned list. One of her books back in 1913 were received rather doubtfully by the good members of the committee and a vote-immoral; the next reader may recommend the book for acceptance in no uncertain terms. It is interesting to note that at one time all, or very nearly all, of Mrs. Edith Wharton's novels were on the library's banned list. One of her books back in 1913 were received rather doubtfully by the good members of the committee and a vote-immoral; the next reader may recommend the book for acceptance in no uncertain terms. It is interesting to note that at one time all, or very nearly all, of Mrs. Edith Wharton's novels were on the library's banned list. One of her books back in 1913 were received rather doubtfully by the good members of the committee and a vote-immoral; the next reader may recommend the book for acceptance in no uncertain terms. It is interesting to note that at one time all, or very nearly all, of Mrs. Edith Wharton's novels were on the library's banned list. One of her books back in 1913 were received rather doubtfully by the good members of the committee and a vote-immoral; the next reader may recommend the book for acceptance in no uncertain terms. It is interesting to note that at one time all, or very nearly all, of Mrs. Edith Wharton's novels were on the library's banned list. One of her books back in 1913 were received rather doubtfully by the good members of the committee and a vote-immoral; the next reader may recommend the book for acceptance in no uncertain terms. It is interesting to note that at one time all, or very nearly all, of Mrs. Edith Wharton's novels were on the library's banned list. One of her books back in 1913 were received rather doubtfully by the good members of the committee and a vote-immoral; the next reader may recommend the book for acceptance in no uncertain terms. It is interesting to note that at one time all, or very nearly all, of Mrs. Edith Wharton's novels were on the library's banned list. One of her books back in 1913 were received rather doubtfully by the good members of the committee and a vote-immoral; the next reader may recommend the book for acceptance in no uncertain terms. It is interesting to note that at one time all, or very nearly all, of Mrs. Edith Wharton's novels were on the library's banned list. One of her books back in 1913 were received rather doubtfully by the good members of the committee and a vote-immoral; the next reader may recommend the book for acceptance in no uncertain terms. It is interesting to note that at one time all, or very nearly all, of Mrs. Edith Wharton's novels were on the library's banned list. One of her books back in 1913 were received rather doubtfully by the good members of the committee and a vote-immoral; the next reader may recommend the book for acceptance in no uncertain terms. It is interesting to note that at one time all, or very nearly all, of Mrs. Edith Wharton's novels were on the library's banned list. One of her books back in 1913 were received rather doubtfully by the good members of the committee and a vote-immoral; the next reader may recommend the book for acceptance in no uncertain terms. It is interesting to note that at one time all, or very nearly all, of Mrs. Edith Wharton's novels were on the library's banned list. One of her books back in 1913 were received rather doubtfully by the good members of the committee and a vote-immoral; the next reader may recommend the book for acceptance in no uncertain terms. It is interesting to note that at one time all, or very nearly all, of Mrs. Edith Wharton's novels were on the library's banned list. One of her books back in 1913 were received rather doubtfully by the good members of the committee and a vote-immoral; the next reader may recommend the book for acceptance in no uncertain terms. It is interesting to note that at one time all, or very nearly all, of Mrs. Edith Wharton's novels were on the library's banned list. One of her books back in 1913 were received rather doubtfully by the good members of the committee and a vote-immoral; the next reader may recommend the book for acceptance in no uncertain terms. It is interesting to note that at one time all, or very nearly all, of Mrs. Edith Wharton's novels were on the library's banned list. One of her books back in 1913 were received rather doubtfully by the good members of the committee and a vote-immoral; the next reader may recommend the book for acceptance in no uncertain terms. It is interesting to note that at one time all, or very nearly all, of Mrs. Edith Wharton's novels were on the library's banned list. One of her books back in 1913 were received rather doubtfully by the good members of the committee and a vote-immoral; the next reader may recommend the book for acceptance in no uncertain terms. It is interesting to note that at one time all, or very nearly all, of Mrs. Edith Wharton's novels were on the library's banned list. One of her books back in 1913 were received rather doubtfully by the good members of the committee and a vote-immoral; the next reader may recommend the book for acceptance in no uncertain terms. It is interesting to note that at one time all, or very nearly all, of Mrs. Edith Wharton's novels were on the library's banned list. One of her books back in 1913 were received rather doubtfully by the good members of the committee and a vote-immoral; the next reader may recommend the book for acceptance in no uncertain terms. It is interesting to note that at one time all, or very nearly all, of Mrs. Edith Wharton's novels were on the library's banned list. One of her books back in 1913 were received rather doubtfully by the good members of the committee and a vote-immoral; the next reader may recommend the book for acceptance in no uncertain terms. It is interesting to note that at one time all, or very nearly all, of Mrs. Edith Wharton's novels were on the library's banned list. One of her books back in 1913 were received rather doubtfully by the good members of the committee and a vote-immoral; the next reader may recommend the book for acceptance in no uncertain terms. It is interesting to note that at one time all, or very nearly all, of Mrs. Edith Wharton's novels were on the library's banned list. One of her books back in 1913 were received rather doubtfully by the good members of the committee and a vote-immoral; the next reader may recommend the book for acceptance in no uncertain terms. It is interesting to note that at one time all, or very nearly all, of Mrs. Edith Wharton's novels were on the library's banned list. One of her books back in 1913 were received rather doubtfully by the good members of the committee and a vote-immoral; the next reader may recommend the book for acceptance in no uncertain terms. It is interesting to note that at one time all, or very nearly all, of Mrs. Edith Wharton's novels were on the library's banned list. One of her books back in 1913 were received rather doubtfully by the good members of the committee and a vote-immoral; the next reader may recommend the book for acceptance in no uncertain terms. It is interesting to note that at one time all, or very nearly all, of Mrs. Edith Wharton's novels were on the library's banned list. One of her books back in 1913 were received rather doubtfully by the good members of the committee and a vote-immoral; the next reader may recommend the book for acceptance in no uncertain terms. It is interesting to note that at one time all, or very nearly all, of Mrs. Edith Wharton's novels were on the library's banned list. One of her books back in 1913 were received rather doubtfully by the good members of the committee and a vote-immoral; the next reader may recommend the book for acceptance in no uncertain terms. It is interesting to note that at one time all, or very nearly all, of Mrs. Edith Wharton's novels were on the library's banned list. One of her books back in 1913 were received rather doubtfully by the good members of the committee and a vote-immoral; the next reader may recommend the book for acceptance in no uncertain terms. It is interesting to note that at one time all, or very nearly all, of Mrs. Edith Wharton's novels were on the library's banned list. One of her books back in 1913 were received rather doubtfully by the good members of the committee and a vote-immoral; the next reader may recommend the book for acceptance in no uncertain terms. It is interesting to note that at one time all, or very nearly all, of Mrs. Edith Wharton's novels were on the library's banned list. One of her books back in 1913 were received rather doubtfully by the good members of the committee and a vote-immoral; the next reader may recommend the book for acceptance in no uncertain terms. It is interesting to note that at one time all, or very nearly all, of Mrs. Edith Wharton's novels were on the library's banned list. One of her books back in 1913 were received rather doubtfully by the good members of the committee and a vote-immoral; the next reader may recommend the book for acceptance in no uncertain terms. It is interesting to note that at one time all, or very nearly all, of Mrs. Edith Wharton's novels were on the library's banned list. One of her books back in 1913 were received rather doubtfully by the good members of the committee and a vote-immoral; the next reader may recommend the book for acceptance in no uncertain terms. It is interesting to note that at one time all, or very nearly all, of Mrs. Edith Wharton's novels were on the library's banned list. One of her books back in 1913 were received rather doubtfully by the good members of the committee and a vote-immoral; the next reader may recommend the book for acceptance in no uncertain terms. It is interesting to note that at one time all, or very nearly all, of Mrs. Edith Wharton's novels were on the library's banned list. One of her books back in 1913 were received rather doubtfully by the good members of the committee and a vote-immoral; the next reader may recommend the book for acceptance in no uncertain terms. It is interesting to note that at one time all, or very nearly all, of Mrs. Edith Wharton's novels were on the library's banned list. One of her books back in 1913 were received rather doubtfully by the good members of the committee and a vote-immoral; the next reader may recommend the book for acceptance in no uncertain terms. It is interesting to note that at one time all, or very nearly all, of Mrs. Edith Wharton's novels were on the library's banned list. One of her books back in 1913 were received rather doubtfully by the good members of the committee and a vote-immoral; the next reader may recommend the book for acceptance in no uncertain terms. It is interesting to note that at one time all, or very nearly all, of Mrs. Edith Wharton's

THE BOSTON HERALD

THURSDAY, OCTOBER 3, 1929

COPLEY CLUB SINGERS TO ENTERTAIN TONIGHT

The Copley Club singers and entertainers, under the direction of Pauline Hammond Clark, teacher-manager, and Dolores Rodriguez, pianist-contralto, will give a concert in the lecture hall of the public library tonight at 8 P. M. The program will include vocal solos, selections by the Copley Club singers, and numbers by Bernice Chute, whistler; Jane Loomis and Mary Sault, solo dancer; and Elizabeth Nichols Carey, reader.

Boston Transcript

324 WASHINGTON STREET, BOSTON, MASS.

THURSDAY, OCTOBER 3, 1929

Entertainment by Copley Singers at Library Tonight

The thirty-first season of free lectures and concerts in the Lecture Hall of the Boston Public Library will be opened at eight o'clock tonight by a program of singing, dancing and readings by the Copley Singers and Entertainers, under the direction of Pauline Hammond Clark, with Dolores Rodriguez, assisting at the piano.

THE BOSTON HERALD

THURSDAY, OCTOBER 10, 1929

OPPORTUNITIES IN BOSTON

If a man is "dumb" today, it's his own fault. There was a time not so long ago when the youngster who finished schooling in the grammar grades ended his education. He might learn from experience in trade or business, but his chances for self-development either intellectually or in the arts and crafts were definitely limited. Hours of work were long, and only the very ambitious and persistent youth had the determination to put in still more hours in study at home. Books were expensive and teachers scarce.

A fat pamphlet on adult education just issued by the Boston Public Library shows how different the situation is now. Courses on almost every conceivable subject will be given this winter in Greater Boston. Many of them are entirely free, some cost fifteen cents or a quarter a session, and others are slightly more expensive. They vary from the traditional or classical studies of languages and mathematics to the more prosaic, and often more lucrative, subjects of plumbing, automobile repairing, radio installation, sheet metal drafting, and the like.

A few titles will indicate the range: Ship design and calculation, Franklin Union; how to be interesting through conversation, Boston Y. W. C. A.; home flower gardening, M. A. C. home study course; the problems of religious knowledge in contemporary discussion, a course of lectures at King's Chapel; blueprint reading, State University extension; golf, Fenway school centre; Sanskrit, Boston University; catering, Trade School for Girls; auction and contract bridge, Boston Y. W. C. A.; railroad accounting, Boston University. Besides these formal courses, there are scores of free lectures at the Library itself, Lowell Institute, Old South Church, the Art Museum and other places.

What will you study this winter?

BOSTON EVENING AMERICAN

SEPTEMBER 30, 1929

BUSINESS AND FINANCE LOOM IN LIBRARY

By FRANK H. MELOON
Financial Editor

Newark (N. J.) Public Library recently obtained nation-wide publicity through publication of a list of business magazines and literature carried in its files to aid not only business and financial leaders, but also the rank and file of work-

(Photo copyright by Bachrach)

CHARLES F. D. BELDEN, Director Charles F. D. Belden, of the Boston Public Library, does not appear to have been neglecting any possible steps in rounding out the ever-growing list of such material.

In the Boston Public Library, the chief of the periodical department has a card classified list of "business periodicals," which is kept up to date and found very helpful by business and financial workers. Telephone requests are given prompt attention here.

One finds in checking the Newark list that the Boston Public Library has 148 on its regular subscription list. In addition to this, 112 titles are available at the Baker Business Library of the Harvard Graduate School of Business Administration. This library has been designated a branch of the Boston Public Library system, and this, for the present, does not make it necessary to add these 112 titles to the central library list.

Many readers are aware, of course, of the fact that a three-story downtown business branch library is now being erected by Louis E. Kirstein. This library will open for use in the spring of 1930. There are many periodicals on the Newark list that are more or less local in character, having to do with Newark itself or with New Jersey. These probably will not be found in the Kirstein branch, but their place will be taken by Boston and Massachusetts publications that will be of use and value to business men.

BOSTON POST

WEDNESDAY, OCTOBER 9, 1929

THE MUSIC COURSES

We invite the attention of our readers who love music to the seven courses in this engrossing and important branch of cultural endeavor to be given by the University Extension Division of the State Department of Education. In no other way and at so small an expense can those who take the course, or courses, obtain so much.

From piano lessons for beginners, to the proper understanding of a symphony programme; forms and style of music; history of composition; interpretative piano playing; appreciation of operatic works—all these things are to be treated by men and women who understand their subjects and who are thoroughly alive to the value of their teaching. Four of the courses are to be given in the lecture hall of the Boston Public Library and the remainder at the Boston University School of Music.

Boston well maintains her reputation as a musical centre by these fine courses.

THE BOSTON HERALD

MONDAY, OCTOBER 21, 1929

EDISONIANA

Here is one instance where the present has beaten posterity to it and recognized to the full the merits of an immortal while he is still a mortal. "Light's Golden Year" is a wisely selected list of Boston Public Library books and articles relating to Thomas A. Edison. There are six pages of titles, and their number and variety suggest the many aspects of his life which have appealed to our writers.

Edison and luck. Edison and his wife (an interview with Mrs. Edison). Edison and his work. Edison and the vitascope, Edison and rubber. Edison and the phonograph, Edison and the incandescent light, Edison and Firestone, Edison and music, Edison anecdotes, Edison's views on immortality, Edison as a boy, Edison and youth. Edison and the street car, Edison and school. Edison and the movies, Edison and information tests are a few of the titles. There are nine complete biographies, ranging from exhaustive works to compendiums of popular information.

Somehow, Edison has never wearied the American public nor the world. Boys still look on him as one of them in spirit, for has he not made life far more enjoyable to them especially? They love the story of his early struggles, and, without knowing it, they receive a lesson in application when they read of his long vigils in the laboratory. Just as Lindbergh is the young darling of our youth, Edison is their ideal of an old man. To how many men has it been given to hold the respect and affection of the world for so many years?

Many Jewish Boys Star at N. E. Colleges

was while he was studying at a

Cohen was educated at a for bombs in your family now?

naturally, "Oh, no, we have to look the outraged guest, "Oh, no, we

What does this mean?" demanded fully over the older Cohen's invited to a dinner and the host chuckle of the time when his father embarrassment. He tells with a have often caused him considerable family. His father, from whom upon one of the finest New York Jewish and backround. He belongs to the Sacco-Vanzetti case.

He spoke first about his family

Lowell, "Yes," he said, "this is

Lowell. On the wall hung a letter

West End House Notes

A meeting of the West End

House club directors was held on Monday, September 30, at the House, the meeting was held in the club house of the same name

ing. For particular interest in

ing a fine declamatory and debating

ing a fine declamatory and debating

ing a fine declamatory and debating

ing a fine declamatory and debating

ing a fine declamatory and debating

ing a fine declamatory and debating

ing a fine declamatory and debating

ing a fine declamatory and debating

ing a fine declamatory and debating

ing a fine declamatory and debating

ing a fine declamatory and debating

ing a fine declamatory and debating

ing a fine declamatory and debating

ing a fine declamatory and debating

ing a fine declamatory and debating

ing a fine declamatory and debating

ing a fine declamatory and debating

ing a fine declamatory and debating

ing a fine declamatory and debating

ing a fine declamatory and debating

ing a fine declamatory and debating

ing a fine declamatory and debating

ing a fine declamatory and debating

ing a fine declamatory and debating

ing a fine declamatory and debating

ing a fine declamatory and debating

ing a fine declamatory and debating

ing a fine declamatory and debating

ing a fine declamatory and debating

ing a fine declamatory and debating

West End House Notes

A meeting of the West End

House club directors was held on

Monday, September 30, at the

House, the meeting was held in

the club house of the same name

ing. For particular interest in

ing a fine declamatory and debating

ing a fine declamatory and debating

ing a fine declamatory and debating

ing a fine declamatory and debating

ing a fine declamatory and debating

ing a fine declamatory and debating

ing a fine declamatory and debating

ing a fine declamatory and debating

ing a fine declamatory and debating

ing a fine declamatory and debating

ing a fine declamatory and debating

ing a fine declamatory and debating

ing a fine declamatory and debating

ing a fine declamatory and debating

ing a fine declamatory and debating

ing a fine declamatory and debating

ing a fine declamatory and debating

ing a fine declamatory and debating

ing a fine declamatory and debating

ing a fine declamatory and debating

ing a fine declamatory and debating

ing a fine declamatory and debating

ing a fine declamatory and debating

ing a fine declamatory and debating

ing a fine declamatory and debating

ing a fine declamatory and debating

ing a fine declamatory and debating

ing a fine declamatory and debating

ing a fine declamatory and debating

ing a fine declamatory and debating

Young Judaea Activities

Due to the fact that the Young

Judaea activities as well as the number of clubs has been increased greatly during the last year, it was deemed necessary to divide Greater Boston into various districts. Every district will have a director who will aid the supervisor in his work to stimulate more interest in the clubs and to increase the number.

Such directors have already been appointed for the most important sections and the rest will be appointed shortly. Every director will try to increase the activities in his particular section and create a strong center of Young Judaea clubs. The directors already appointed are: Sheveta Karsh, Roxbury and Dorchester; Leah Robinson, Mattapan; Meyer Goldman,

Cambridge; Harold Goldberg, East

Thorp; Mrs. Rose S. Lerner, Winchester; Mrs. Fox, Lynn; Thine

Zwengbaum, Everett; and Harry

Cushing, Chelsea.

Most of the clubs of last year have already begun their activities and it is expected that the rest of the clubs will follow shortly. At present all Young Judaea Clubs

West End News

By ISADORE RODENSKY

Particular interest has been shown in the exhibition of the Young

Judaea Clubs in the preparation of the Boston Young Judaea

Convention which will be held in the city of Boston, November 2 and 3.

Time.

Among the boys performing on the program, "Sylv" Krivitsky will

show his wares as fall back on the

program. "Sylv" Krivitsky will

show his wares as fall back on the

program. "Sylv" Krivitsky will

show his wares as fall back on the

program. "Sylv" Krivitsky will

show his wares as fall back on the

program. "Sylv" Krivitsky will

show his wares as fall back on the

program. "Sylv" Krivitsky will

show his wares as fall back on the

program. "Sylv" Krivitsky will

show his wares as fall back on the

program. "Sylv" Krivitsky will

show his wares as fall back on the

program. "Sylv" Krivitsky will

show his wares as fall back on the

program. "Sylv" Krivitsky will

show his wares as fall back on the

program. "Sylv" Krivitsky will

show his wares as fall back on the

program. "Sylv" Krivitsky will

show his wares as fall back on the

program. "Sylv" Krivitsky will

show his wares as fall back on the

program. "Sylv" Krivitsky will

show his wares as fall back on the

program. "Sylv" Krivitsky will

show his wares as fall back on the

program. "Sylv" Krivitsky will

show his wares as fall back on the

program. "Sylv" Krivitsky will

show his wares as fall back on the

program. "Sylv" Krivitsky will

show his wares as fall back on the

program. "Sylv" Krivitsky will

show his wares as fall back on the

program. "Sylv" Krivitsky will

show his wares as fall back on the

program. "Sylv" Krivitsky will

show his wares as fall back on the

program. "Sylv" Krivitsky will

show his wares as fall back on the

program. "Sylv" Krivitsky will

show his wares as fall back on the

program. "Sylv" Krivitsky will

show his wares as fall back on the

program. "Sylv" Krivitsky will

show his wares as fall back on the

program. "Sylv" Krivitsky will

show his wares as fall back on the

WILLIS, INC.
FORD SALES & SERVICE
18 City Square
Just Across the Bridge from North Station
Charlestown
A complete line of Ford cars will be displayed and every convenience of the motorist.
been installed in our Service Department for the convenience of the motorist.
Service Dept., 93 Chelsea St.
Charlestown 2390

Page Eight- Part 2

SOME RECENT CREATIONS OF A MASTER'S ART

DR. NISSON TOUROFF
Distinguished Educator, First Dean of Hebrew Teachers' College, Now Professor of Hebrew at Jewish Institute of Religion of New York

EDWARD M. CHASE
Prominent Manchester Philanthropist, Known for His Local, Lithuanian, and Palestine Charities

HARRIET CANNER, Daughter of Carl Canner

The name of Jacob Binder has become almost a household word throughout New England. The best families are familiar with his striking artistic achievements in the realm of portraiture which have brought him the unconditional praise of distinguished critics and the whole-hearted applause of fastidious connoisseurs.

For years he struggled in misery and poverty dedicating his very soul to a study and interpretation of life through the divine lens of art. Recognition seemed remote and hardly conceivable during his own life-time as has so often happened in the case of many men of genius. During this time, however, his work was already being exhibited in other cities and drew the attention of Cardinal O'Connell of Boston, who commissioned him to execute several portraits. He also taught art at the Notre Dame Academy. But a persistent effort, an undying hope and, to be sure, fortuitous circumstances, soon brought to the forefront a superb portraitist who had been practicing his art in a garret and there hiding his genius.

Through the chance acquaintance with the late Dr. George Galvin, founder of the Emergency Hospital, who one day came to the artist's home to cure his sick mother, Jacob Binder was destined to become known to the world. The visiting physician, himself a scholar and art connoisseur, at once brought the artist to the attention of Boston's eminent art critic, A. J. Philpott and his friends. Recognition and distinction were now inevitable though gradual. The Jewish Advocate, through the efforts of Alexander Brin, later aided greatly in making Mr. Binder known to our own Jewish community, particularly through the purchase by public subscription of the artist's famous painting, "The Talmudist," and its presentation to the Boston Museum of Fine Arts where it hangs today as a tribute to Mr. Binder's distinguished art and as a symbol of the real character of Jewish life. For this gracious friendship and genuine recognition, the artist never tires expressing his sincere and profound gratitude.

Painted Several Leading Figures

Since Mr. Binder has become known to the community, he has painted several of its leading personalities. In fact, his portraits of the last few years would constitute a distinguished Jewish Who's Who in New England although he has also immortalized on the canvas several eminent non-Jews, such as Josiah Benton, chairman of the Board of Trustees of the Boston Public Library, whose portrait now hangs in the room of the trustees; also the striking portrait of the well known actor, Henry Jewett as Macbeth now hanging in the Repertory Theatre. The future historian through a study of the subjects of Binder's art, to understand the character not only of the latter's art, but also of our communal leadership. Men of distinction and various avenues of endeavor will be included. The fields of education, law, medicine, social service, philanthropy, will be represented through a portrayal of leaders of those spheres who have also been pioneers in the intellectual and charitable progress of our community.

Risen from Obscurity, Jacob Binder Gradually Ascends Ladder of Fame and Recognition—Has Virtually Become Artist to Our Community. Immortalizing Our Leaders and Communal Notables—Carries on the Tradition of Art in Its Nobliest Sense, Remaining Modest, Retiring and Self-Effacing, Religiously Devoted to His Cult of Art—Himself a Genuine and Lovable Character—His Artistic Achievements Are a Powerful Educational Factor in Bringing Us Face to Face With the Artistic Genius of an Eminent Master of Our Own People—He Harbors an Abiding Affection for All Who Have Been Sympathetic and Appreciative and Aided in His Rise to Fame—He Is Especially Fond of a Growth of Love for Art Among Jews.

By JOSEPH S. SHUBOW

And the fact that Jews are being a deep interest in art and are a great source of satisfaction to Mr. Binder who has always hoped for the day when our people would learn to appreciate art in art itself, and also as an opportunity for keeping vividly before them the personality and character of a loved parent, a devoted friend, the innocence and loveliness of a beautiful child, the inspiring char-ties of a distinguished communal leader, or the majestic spirit of a great sage. Such service on the part of the artist is of a highly beneficial character for the aesthetic and cultural education of our community.

Mr. Binder is happy not only in his art as such, but he especially delights in the fact that all who have sat for him and have had their portraits painted have at once become his true friends, regardless of how dignified and exalted their station in life may be. He points out with enthusiasm that many are realizing the fact that to hang the portrait of some dear one is a greater adornment on the walls of the most palatial home than would be even the most artistic piece of tapestry or generally significant work of art. Such a work serves as a sort of everlastingly illuminating inspiration in the home.

Art Is Soul of People

It is the justified joy of Mr. Binder that The Jewish Advocate was the first of the Anglo-Jewish papers in the country to devote considerable space to a statement on his art and on art in general, thus stirring up a lasting interest in this field among us. He reminds us that art is the soul of a people and dare not be stifled. Just as through the eyes one may read the character of a human being, so through art one may learn to understand the character of a people. It is for this reason that Mr. Binder may be looked upon as a champion of artistic enlightenment in our midst. It is noteworthy that since The Jewish Advocate's first interest in Mr. Binder's art to the extent of encouraging an exhibition at Temple Israel, several other such exhibitions have been held in the leading cities of the country, like New York, Chicago, Philadelphia, Cleveland, Detroit and San Francisco. In each one of these respective communities the outstanding artists were pleased to cooperate in making the exhibition a singular success. Mr. Binder may thus be looked upon as a pioneer in an attempt to bring art nearer to the appreciation of the masses.

Portraiture is the special genre of art in which Jacob Binder has attained universal recognition. It was no less a celebrity than John Singer Sargent, world renowned artist, who told Mr. Binder in the spirit of true admiration of his art: "You should have been commissioned to do the Hebrew prophets and not I, because as a Jew and as an accomplished craftsman, you would have given them true Jewish character." This was certainly a genuine appreciation of Mr. Binder's work as an eminent artist.

It is in the field of portrait painting that this artist reveals his own true soul. In a recent conversation on an exhibition of his art, he said in regard to portraiture: "A true portrait is true life; a good portrait reveals true character; life itself; it indicates those finer, more subtle, hidden and hidden springs of human emotion and energy. A true portrait is the concentration of all the qualities and characteristics even of a house as we gaze upon the ancient portrayed." It has been well said of Roman art that we can gain a clearer idea of Roman character through a study of Roman sculpture than we can from a reading of Latin literature. Similarly, we can obtain a more truthful understanding of the individuals painted through a study of their portraits than perhaps through a long acquaintance with them.

The art of Mr. Binder reminds one greatly of the great Rembrandt who also painted a number of the members of his community who were prominent and outstanding in the various pursuits of achievement. Like the great Dutch master he has a genuine Rembrandtesque element of chiaroscuro, exhibiting the most powerful effects of light and shade. Portraits done in this style by a recognized master serve as a superb and lasting memento to some great soul for the family or in the community. Those who contemplate an expression of such adoration would do well to remember the art of Mr. Binder, who is hailed by the most distinguished critics in the country.

JUDGE DAVID A. LOURIE
Prominent Boston Leader, Judge of the Superior Court, Known for His Zionist Activities, Interested in All Communal Affairs

JOSIAH BENTON
Late Chairman of Board of Trustees of Boston Public Library

HARRIET CANNER, Daughter of Carl Canner

If a n
There w youngste
mar grad from ex chances ly or in
ted. He very amb terminat
at home scarce.
A fat
by the l
ferent th
every co
ter in G tively fr
a session
They v studies more pr of plumi son, s
A few sign and Interests
C. A.; I study o edge in lectures
State U
centre;
tension
Trade bridge,
Boston
there a itself, I
Art Mus
What

DR. NISSON TOUROFF
Distinguished Educator, First Dean of Hebrew Teachers' College, Now Professor of Hebrew at Jewish Institute of Religion of New York

EDWARD M. CHASE
Prominent Manchester Philanthropist, Known for His Local, Lithuanian, and Palestine Charities

HON. A. C. RATSCHESKY
President of the United States Trust Company, Noted Philanthropist, Now Chairman Palestine Emergency Fund for New England

...of the Emergency Hospital who one day came to the artist's home to cure his sick mother, Jacob Binder was destined to become known to the world. The visiting physician, himself a scholar and art connoisseur, at once brought the artist to the attention of Boston's eminent art critic, A. J. Philpott and his friends. Recognition and distinction were now inevitable though gradual. The Jewish Advocate, through the efforts of Alexander Brin, later aided greatly in making Mr. Binder known to our own Jewish community, particularly through the purchase by public subscription of the artist's famous painting, "The Talmudist," and its presentation to the Boston Museum of Fine Arts where it hangs today as a tribute to Mr. Binder's distinguished art and as a symbol of the real character of Jewish life. For this gracious friendship and genuine recognition, the artist never tires expressing his sincere and profound gratitude.

Painted Several Leading Figures

Since Mr. Binder has become known to the community, he has painted several of its leading personalities. In fact, his portraits of the last few years would constitute a distinguished Jewish Who's Who in New England although he has also immortalized on the canvas several eminent non-Jews, such as Josiah Benton, chairman of the Board of Trustees of the Boston Public Library, whose portrait now hangs in the room of the trustees; also the striking portrait of the well known actor, Henry Jowett as Macbeth now hanging in the Repertory Theatre. The future historian of our community will be enabled through a study of the subjects of Binder's art, to understand the character not only of the latter's art, but also of our communal leadership. Men of distinction, in various avenues of endeavor, are included. The fields of commerce, law, medicine, social service, philanthropy, will be represented through a portrayal of leaders in those spheres who have been pioneers in the intellectual and charitable progress of our community. And the fact that these men are a great source of inspiration to Mr. Binder who has been painting for the day when our people will learn to appreciate their own personality and character, for keeping vividly before them the innocence and purity of a beautiful child, the importance of

HARRIET CANNER, Daughter of Carl Canner

EVELYN SHOOLMAN, Daughter of Max Shoolman

ties of a distinguished communal leader, or the majestic spirit of a great sage. Such service on the part of the artist is of a highly beneficial character for the aesthetic and cultural education of our community. Mr. Binder is happy not only in his art as such, but he especially delights in the fact that all who have sat for him and have become his true friends, regardless of how dignified and exalted their station in life may be. He points out with enthusiasm that many are realizing the fact that to hang the portrait of some dear one is a greater adornment on the walls of the most palatial home than could be even the most artistic piece of tapestry or generally significant

The art of Mr. Binder reminds one greatly of the great Rembrandt who also painted a number of the members of his community who were prominent in our leading in the various pursuits of achievement. Like the great Dutch master he has a genuine Rembrandtesque element of chiaroscuro, exhibiting the most powerful effects of light and shade. Portraits done in this style by a recognized master serve as a superb and lasting memento to some great soul for the family or in the community. Those who contemplate an expression of such valoration would do well to remember the art of Mr. Binder, who is hailed by the most distinguished critics in the country.

JUDGE DAVID A. LOURIE
Prominent Boston Leader, Judge of the Superior Court, Known for His Zionist Activities, Interested In All Communal Affairs

JOSIAH BENTON
Late Chairman of Board of Trustees of Boston Public Library

MAX SHOOLMAN
Prominent in Local Charities, An Ardent Supporter of the Zionist Movement

Boston Daily Globe

FRIDAY, OCT 18, 1929

LIBRARY CLUB BODIES HOLD JOINT MEETING

Stop Is Made at Westfield
During Trip to Lenox

Special Dispatch to the Globe

LENOX, Oct. 17—Members of the Massachusetts Library Club and the Western Massachusetts Library Club assembled here today for their annual joint session.

Many librarians from Boston and vicinity attended.

A stop was made at Westfield, where the visitors inspected the new Westfield Athenaeum. Harold T. Dougherty, librarian, who is president of the Western Massachusetts Library Club, welcomed the visitors and greetings were also extended by William F. Lyman, vice president, and Frank Grant, treasurer of the library corporation.

For those who arrived early by automobile a reception was held at the Lenox Library.

Tonight the first session was held in Sedgwick Hall in Lenox Library in charge of the Western Massachusetts Library Club. Harold T. Dougherty presided. Formal greetings were extended by Miss Heloise Meyer of the Board of Associate Managers of the Lenox Library Association.

William Webster Ellsworth, formerly president of the Century Company, New York, spoke.

In the afternoon, at the Lenox Library the public library division of the State Board of Education held a library day for the small town librarians of the counties of Berkshire, Hampden and Hampshire. About 40 attended.

Miss Kathleen Jones of Boston presided, and spoke on book selections. Miss Fitch of Lenox and Charles F. D. Belden of the Boston Public Library also spoke.

BOSTON EVENING TRANSCRIPT,

WEDNESDAY, OCTOBER 23, 1929

THE LIBRARIAN

In spite of what the literary log-rollers of New York would have you believe, all the amusing "columnists" are not herded together in that city. There is a delightful member of the guild much nearer to Boston than that. Under the heading "One Thing and Another," Mr. L. D. G. Bentley contributes frequently to the Newton Graphic. In a recent issue he describes some of the pests all libraries have to deal with, at some time or other.

The scene, Mr. Bentley explains, is the reading room of a public library—any public library like our own in Newton where the newspapers, magazines and other periodicals may be found on the tables and racks and are not obtained from an attendant. When newspapers, etc., are to be picked up by patrons there is nothing to prevent the first-comer from gathering in as many as he desires. And that's the joker I am holding up—some of these grasping people do that very thing. Instead of taking a newspaper or a magazine and sitting down and reading it, they collect a number—the choice, of course—and, hiding them as best they can, they go about the library.

It is laughable the way they go about it. They first take a newspaper and then slyly reach first for the Atlantic Monthly, we'll say, and then the Edinburgh Review, and so on until they have accumulated a goodly store, five or six together. They have no intention of carrying off any of these, but they want to be sure of getting them before their three hours' visit to the reading room has ended. When they have corralled all they wish, the newspaper is used to cover them. Simple, isn't it. And silly, too.

"What harm, someone may ask, if nobody else wants them? That's it. Someone may come in any minute looking for one of these very periodicals. Furthermore, can anybody read more than one magazine or newspaper at a single time?

Why this miserly, dog-in-the-manger business?

"For the life of me I cannot answer for these reading room hogs, but that's what they are, and certainly I am not going to sit up nights trying to figure out what is in the back of their heads."

Which reminds the Librarian of the stirring battle which goes on every afternoon in the newspaper room of the Boston public library. The scene of action is the "ladies' table," and the time a few minutes after half-past four, when the afternoon editions of local papers are set out. Instantly the air is filled with snorts and bitter muttering, for invariably one of the ladies (God save the mark) is accused by another of sitting on a part of the Globe while she runs through the stock market quotations of the Transcript. Whereupon a third (with a slight accent) coldly requests her neighbor to release her elbow from the home page of the Traveler, or else give up the front page. The elbow-clamper is all too likely to bring up her genealogy for some reason or other, declaring that a descendant of a Revolutionary general would never stoop to argue with one who is obviously a foreigner. Instantly the air is filled with determined though confused allusions to what America owes to Holy Russia or the Near East. The attendants, who have been supplying a man from Texas with a back file of his local paper, then have to dash over and shush agitatedly and straighten out both arguments and papers. By that time the Globe-sitter, who got up to see what was going on, finds that the paper has been "fleeched" from her chair by an unscrupulous neighbor, and the whole thing begins all over again. The Librarian understands that in the New York Public Library newspapers are not available on the day of issue.

THE BOSTON HERALD

WEDNESDAY, OCTOBER 23, 1929

FIND COPY OF ELIOT'S BIBLE FOR INDIANS

Book in English Cathedral—
Published by Greene, Cambridge, Mass., 1661

(Special Cable to The Herald)

LONDON, Oct. 22—A battered Old Testament which John Eliot caused to be printed in an Indian language and which he used in mission work among the American Indians, has been found on a dusty bookshelf in Exeter Cathedral. It is so rare it is difficult to estimate its value.

The find was made by chance when W. W. Rockwell of the Union Theological Seminary visited Exeter and recognized it immediately from a copy in the seminary library.

Printed in strange characters, the book is dated 1661 and was published by Samuel Greene of Cambridge, Mass. The entire text is in an American Indian language and is the earliest instance of publication of a re-translation of the English Bible in a foreign tongue as a means of evangelization.

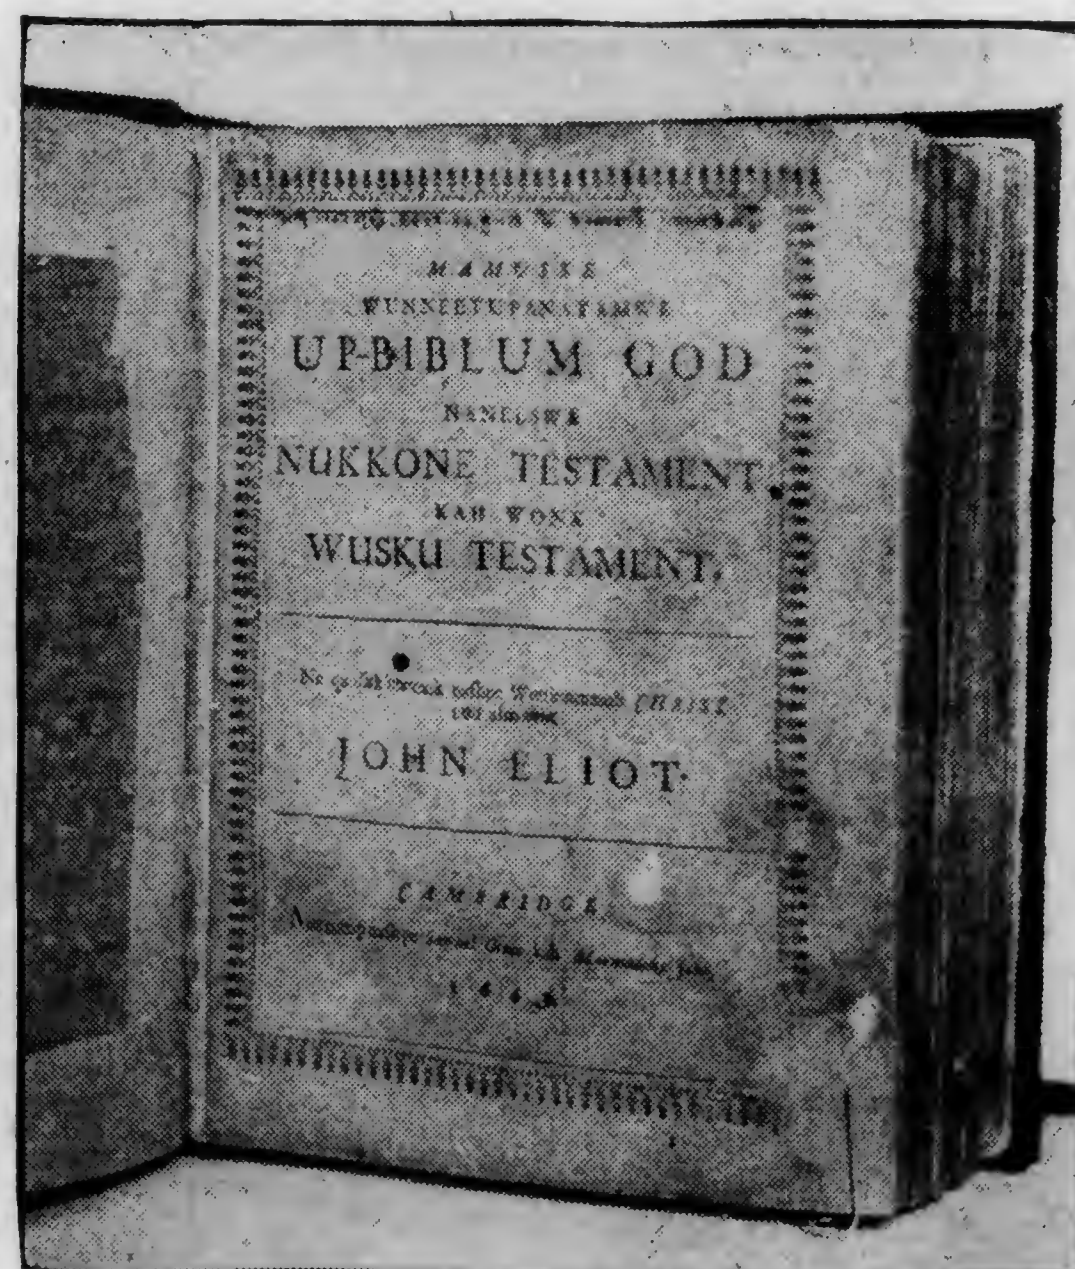

The exterior is in perfect condition; but as the frontispiece and first chapters of Genesis have been cut away and the cathedral book plates pasted over words scrawled in ink on the back of the front cover.

(Copyright, 1929, New York Times)

The printing of John Eliot's Indian Bibles was begun by Samuel Greene and Marmaduke Johnson of Cambridge in 1660 and finished three years later. The first edition consisted of 1000 copies of which only about 25 are said to remain in the United States. Twenty copies, with a dedication to Charles II, were sent to England. Copies of the first edition today have a great value.

THE BOSTON HERALD, THURSDAY, OCTOBER 24, 1929

ELIOT'S BIBLE FOR INDIANS

Title page of Bible printed by John Eliot for benefit of American Indians. A copy was found recently in Exeter Cathedral, London. There are about 25 copies in this country.

The Boston Post

WEDNESDAY, OCTOBER 23, 1929

The Observant Citizen

*****

Speaking of lectures: Thursday evening of this week at 8 o'clock in the lecture hall of the Boston Public Library, Sarah E. Palmer, M. D., F. A. C. S., will talk on "Columbus and His Voyages."

The doors will be open at 6 o'clock and will be closed when the lecture begins.

On Sunday afternoon, at the same place, Caroline Ticknor will give us "Some Glimpses of Literary London," while at 8 o'clock Sunday evening, the Hon. Roland D. Sawyer will talk about "The Average Man and Adult Education through the use of the Boston Public Library."

Boston Post

25 October 1929

DROPS 35 FEET, ALMOST UNHURT

Louis Hickson, 15, of 4 Clark court, Charlestown, employed as an errand boy at the Boston Public Library, while fooling with some other boys on the fifth floor jumped over a railing going through the skylight, falling to the second floor, a distance of 35 feet. He was removed to the City Hospital, where he was treated and later allowed to go home.

THE BOSTON HERALD

FRIDAY, OCTOBER 25, 1929

BOY, IN 4 STORY FALL, WALKS HOME

Lad Lands on Marble Floor—Escape from Death
Amazes Doctors

After a fall from the fifth floor of the Boston Public Library building in Copley square, 35 feet to the marble second floor, by way of a skylight, Louis Hickson, 15 years of 4 Clark's court, Charlestown, was taken to the City Hospital yesterday afternoon. He was attended by physicians and later was escorted home by several playmates.

The lad suffered no broken bones. He had a laceration of the chin, probably caused by glass and multiple abrasions of the back. The doctors at the hospital were amazed at the fact that he had not been killed or dangerously injured. Word of the accident to the youngster had preceded him when he reached his home and his parents were making arrangements to go to the hospital when he walked in upon them.

TERCENTENARY NEWS OF 1930

INFORMING LECTURES BEING DELIVERED

Tercenary Subjects Being Elucidated for Public Gatherings

Now in progress are three series of public lectures having to do with the period of American development, especially within the borders of the present Commonwealth of Massachusetts, whose 300th anniversary is to be commemorated by the Tercenary of next year.

In the preceding issue of "News of 1930" details were given of the courses provided by the State Department of Education through its University Extension Service; and an advance notice was given of a course by the Lowell Institute, in Boston.

A third series has started in the Lecture Hall of the Boston Public Library, arranged jointly by the Library and the Tercenary General Council. The first lecture was delivered the evening of Monday, October 7th, by Prof. Albert Bushnell Hart of Harvard University on the subject "The Greatest Opportunity for Massachusetts in 300 Years."

The second lecture in the Public Library series will be on Monday evening, October 21st, at 8 o'clock, by Hon. Herbert Parker, chairman of Massachusetts Bay Colony Tercenary Commission, with the subject "World Significance of the Tercenary."

Third lecture, Monday evening, November 4th, "The Religious Influences of the Puritans," Rev. Edward M. Noyes, Vice chairman of the Tercenary Committee on Spiritual and Religious Affairs.

Fourth lecture, Monday evening, November 18th, "Why we are to Celebrate in 1930," Hon. John J. Walsh, Acting President of Massachusetts Bay Tercenary, Inc.

Fifth lecture, Monday evening, December 2nd, "The Puritan and the American Revolution," Dr. Charles H. Bangs, Past President of Massachusetts Society of Sons of the American Revolution.

Sixth lecture, Monday evening, December 16th, "Our Debt to the Puritans," Hon. Michael J. Murray, Justice of the Municipal Court, Boston.

Seventh lecture, Monday evening, December 30th, "Dorchester Town in Boston and New England History," Rev. Adelbert L. Hudson, Pastor First Church in Dorchester.

The Lowell Institute series of lectures on the general subject "The Founders of the Massachusetts Bay," start the afternoon of Tuesday, October 15th, at 5 o'clock, with the second lecture on Friday afternoon at the same hour, October 18th, and then on Tuesdays and Fridays until completion of the series.

BOSTON POST OCTOBER 26, 1929

Little Walks About Boston

BY WILLIAM JUSTIN MANN

The first Boston Directory was issued in 1780. You can find that tiny little volume in the Barton-Ticknor room of the Boston Public Library. It could be easily carried in one's pocket, and presents a striking contrast when put by the side of its big successors of today. It has only 56 pages, and those pages are very small ones. It was printed and sold by John Norman, at Oliver's Dock.

In his modest introduction the editor of the Directory, "presents his grateful respects to the public, and flatters himself that the work is as free from errors as this first attempt will admit." He further states that any mistakes or omissions that have taken place, he will readily correct in the next edition. He asks for hints as to improving the present plan, and says that he proposes a new edition annually.

The first name in this first Boston Directory is "Adams Samuel, Hon. Winter Street." Under the letter "B," the first name is "Bowdoin James, Hon. Beacon Street." Under that same letter appears the names, "Brown Gaven, watch-maker, State Street," "Belknap, Jeremy, Rev. Summer Street," "Bulfinch Thomas, physician, Bowdoin's Square," and "Bulfinch Charles, gentleman, Marlborough Street."

Under the letter "D," the first name is that of Thomas Dawes, and under "E," the Rev. John Eliot holds the first place, with Samuel Eliot, merchant, a little further down the list. "F." is headed by the Rev. James Freeman, with residence on School Street, and Thomas and John Peet, printers and stationers at 5 Cornhill, are well-known names. Turning to the letter "H," the first name is "Hancock John, Esq. Governor, Beacon Street." "G." has the familiar name, "Olis Harrison-Gray, Esq. Cambridge-Street, office Court-Street." "I." shows the name "Phillips William, Hon. Beacon Street," while under "R," you come upon the famous name "Revere Paul, goldsmith, No. 60 Cornhill." The first name under "S," is "Stillman Samuel, Rev. corner of Salem and Shear Streets."

Under "T," you will find the name of John Tileston, the famous schoolmaster, while under "W," you read, "Wendell Oliver, Esq. Oliver's Lane." On the final pages of the Directory are lists of the "Acting Justices" and of lawyers, among the names being, Joseph Greenleaf, Robert T. Paine (Attorney General), and Christopher Gore. The names in that first Boston Directory bring to your mind many interesting chapters in the history of Boston.

BOSTON TRAVELER. OCTOBER 25, 1929 Grail Poorly Lighted

People's Editor:

It is a shame that Abbey's magnificent panels in the Boston Public Library picturing "The Quest of the Holy Grail" are so inadequately lighted that to the ordinary human eye they appear (with few exceptions) as a blur or as a conglomeration of beautiful colors.

I wonder if our mayor would take it greatly amiss if he was asked to call together the library trustees and instruct them to employ some well known electrical expert to remedy said condition? H. LINDQUIST.
Boston.

Townsend Dedicates Her New Free Library Building

Impressive Exercises Mark Opening of Structure Made Possible by Charles
B. Hart and Amanda E. Dwight

HART MEMORIAL LIBRARY, TOWNSEND.

Townsend, Oct. 31. The dedication of the Hart Free Library building and the Walter Fessenden Memorial room was held Wednesday afternoon in Memorial hall before an audience of nearly 500 persons, including former librarians and former Townsend residents. Many invited guests were present from all over the state, and many letters and telegrams were received from those unable to be present. Following is the program: Music; quintet; invocation, Rev. Sherman Goodwin, minister of the Congregational church; address of welcome, George L. Whitcomb, president of the day; dedication, presentation of the keys, by Carl B. Willard, chairman of the building committee; acceptance of the keys, by Frederick J. Piper, chairman of the Board of Selectmen; music, the Allison quintet; address, "The Newer Aspects of Library Service," Charles F. D. Belding, director of the Public Library of the City of Boston; greetings from invited guests; music, the Allison quintet; benediction, Rev. Wilbur T. Hale, minister of the Methodist church.

Following is the address of welcome, in part, made by George L. Whitcomb of Townsend, president of the day:

October 30, 1929, will fill a place in the history of Townsend different from any other day. We have celebrated important events in the past, but the event which brings us here together today is in a class by itself, and will be remembered as the day that the Hart Free Library building and the Walter Fessenden Memorial room were dedicated.

"Charles B. Hart and Amanda E. Dwight were both born and reared in Townsend, and like so many who have gone out to fill the larger places in life, have remembered the home of their childhood and young manhood and young womanhood in a way that will carry their names far into the future.

"It is not out of place at this time to express our appreciation for other gifts left by Mrs. Dwight. It is with especial gratitude that we remember the amounts left for the 'Book and Maintenance Fund' for the church of which she was formerly a member; the concerts and entertainments that we all enjoy so much; also the funds left for cemetery and the unfortunate.

"We remember all of these as expressions of her interest in her native town.

"This day is different from other days because the library is a part and a very important part that goes to make up a complete whole. The church, the school, and the various organizations carry on their particular part of the community work, still all of them are included in a greater or lesser degree to the library.

"The use of a library such as we now have is something that affects the lives of the people according as they use it, and we are pleased to remember the one who has been connected with this library for so many years and has given her best time and thought to help any and all.

"Up to the present time, Townsend has not received large gifts, but we have a gift in the Library building and room of which any town might justly be proud of. It is suited to the needs of a town like ours. Much credit is due the committee having the matter in charge in bringing this work to completion in so satisfactory a manner."

Mr. Whitcomb also introduced the following guests who gave greetings: Rev. Benjamin A. Willmott of Athol and Townsend; Dr. Aubrey Hart, nephew of one of the donors; Charles B. Hart, Miss Alice Chandler, Lancaster, and Mrs. Edith Nourse Rogers, congresswoman, of Lowell.

Others occupying seats on the platform were the library building committee: Mrs. Evelyn L. Warren, Mrs. Gertrude S. Copeland, Carl B. Willard, Robert G. Fessenden, Frederick J. Piper, Oscar B. Mudgett and Adney W. Gray; Mrs. Edward J. Sartelle, 80 years of age, of Montclair, N. J., who was elected librarian of this town 45 years ago, and Mrs. Fannie Adams; Rev. Hale, Rev. Goodwin and Charles F. D. Belding.

Ralph Colby, Richard Keefe, Merston Jeffs, Carmen Bomo, Charles Eaton, Donald Smith, Donald Don-

ina, William Creighton, Edgar Gannon and Paul Prevost were ushers. An informal reception was held at the Free Hart Library building immediately following the dedication exercises. The reception committee included Mrs. Evelyn L. Warren, Mr. and Mrs. Carl B. Willard, and Mr. and Mrs. R. G. Fessenden.

Five hundred Townsend Public Library bulletins were printed and presented to the library by John E. Bolger of New Bedford. These bulletins contain an exterior and interior view of the library, dedication program, history of the library, gifts, books added to the library, etc.

Refreshments were served in the historical room under the direction of Mrs. Robert Copeland, Mrs. Stephen Keefe and Mrs. Bernice Batchelder, assisted by Ruth Copeland, Barbara Batchelder, Avis Wilson, Dorothy Keefe, Paulina Cowdrey, Virginia Brown and Thelma Wright. Beautiful bouquets of flowers were given by Mrs. Ransom B. Adams of this town and Mrs. Rose Keene and daughter, Vivian, of Fitchburg.

The dedication day also marked the 35th anniversary of the services of Mrs. Evelyn L. Warren as librarian of the Townsend library and many voted prizes for this untiring and competent worker.

Among the guests present were Hon. George F. Kays, state representative, of Pepperell; Miss Kennedy, Wellesley librarian; George H. Evans of Somerville, president of the Massachusetts Library Club, and Miss E. Louise Jones, field secretary of the Massachusetts Library Commission.

This dedication was made possible by the wills of Charles B. Hart of Boston and Amanda E. Dwight of Melrose.

It was announced in 1925 that the town of Townsend was bequeathed the sum of $35,000 by the Hart will for a library building, the same to be of stone, brick or cement and to be known as the Hart Free Library building.

Under the will of Mrs. Dwight, $25,000 was left to the town for a library and site, in memory of her father, the late Walter Fessenden, also $20,000 in trust, the income to be used for the upkeep of the library and for books.

At a town meeting, March 2, 1925, it was voted to accept Mr. Hart's bequest and a committee was appointed to study the needs of the town relative to the site and the erection of a library building. The committee consisted of the selectmen, Oscar B. Mudgett, Frederick J. Piper and Adney W. Gray; the trustees of the public library, Carl B. Willard, Evelyn L. Warren and Robert G. Fessenden, and the town treasurer, Gertrude S. Copeland. This committee was attending its duties when Mrs. Dwight's bequest was made to the town in 1925. Mrs. Dwight's will was contested, finally a compromise was agreed to by which the town has received for a library $15,000, and the income from the trust fund of $12,000.

On March 1, 1926, the town, at its annual meeting voted that the same committee having charge of the Hart library bequest act as a committee to look after the town's interest in regard to the bequest of Amanda E. Dwight.

This committee gave careful consideration to its duties which resulted in the selection in June, 1927, of Charles G. Loring of Boston as their architect. They recommended to the town the combining of the two bequests, and having in the Hart Free Library building a site the committee chose the land west of the Townsend National bank, on the brow of the hill overlooking the Squannock river. It was the opinion that the building should be built of brick with granite trimmings. The town accepted the committee's recommendations and so voted.

On June 14, 1928, bids for the construction of the building were opened and the bid awarded to the Burton H. Wiggin Co. of Lowell, whose bid was $45,945.

The first sod was turned on June 15, 1928, and the cornerstone was laid July 26, 1928.

The opening of the library building to the public came on March 2, 1929. The librarian's desk is opposite the main entrance to the building. Back of the desk is a picture of Mr. Hart, the valued gift of his nephew, Dr. Aubrey W. Hart of Boston.

The Walter Fessenden room is to the right of the entrance. On the wall of this room hangs the picture of Mrs. Dwight's father, Walter Fessenden. At its entrance stands a beautiful grandfather's clock. Both were bequests to the library from Mrs. Dwight.

Boston Transcript

224 WASHINGTON STREET, BOSTON, MASS.

WEDNESDAY, NOVEMBER 6, 1929

THE LIBRARIAN

FOUR-going-on-five is rather young to be introduced to a great public library, but the young lady of that age expressed herself charmed at the prospect of seeing a big house full of books which had the added delight of a pair of lions in stone. With the little hop-skip-and-jump which is her usual method of progression the young visitor approached the Boston Public Library. She fell instantly in love with the bulky ladies in bronze who guard the portals and was all for climbing up in their laps to get a better view of their grave faces. The bronze entrance doors also tickled her fancy, possibly because they had no knobs, unlike one's own front door.

At the top of the stairs were the beautiful stone lions with stern yet tender faces. She patted the tail of one of them. By now the height and quiet of the building had subdued her dancing gait and ceaseless chatter. The walls covered with pictures impressed her, and if the lack of frames seemed unusual, she did not mention it. She saw the Bates Hall Reading Room from the best place of all—that little balcony which overlooks the stupendous bustle. The Children's Room was pleasant, more for the sight of other and slightly older readers, rather than the books. The latter were no novelty, for she had had her own little collection since she was two. An agreeable young lady proffered "Johnny Crow's Party" and the visitor glanced through it politely. A few minutes later, on the way out, sharp little eyes caught sight of a fascinating place. Everywhere there were drawers you could pull out. Enraptured, she trotted about peering in at the cards, ruffling them with immense concentration, discovering familiar letters with much excitement. She had just learned her alphabet from brightly colored picture books and behold, here were grown-ups putting S and T and U to practical use. Four-going-on-five insisted on trading all twenty-six about the room. Her parents are of the opinion that the young lady is a slight realist. At any rate, she will never stand in terrified helplessness before a card catalog.

TRAVELER, THURSDAY, NOVEMBER 7, 1929

Curley Seeks to Create Planning Board of 350

Mayor-Elect Outlines Proposition—Harvard and the Babson Institute to Be Represented—Will Study Needs of City for 50 Years

TELLS OF PLANS

Creation of a city planning board of 350 members who will anticipate the requirements of the city during the coming 50 years is part of the program planned by Mayor-Elect James M. Curley.

The membership of the board will represent the best interests of the community. The incoming mayor declares, and will carry out the first step of a program of constructive enterprise.

WIDE REPRESENTATION

Representatives of the leading financial, commercial, labor, industrial and educational organizations of the city will comprise the planning board which Curley considers the most important work of his coming administration. He plans to invite officials in all the leading universities to become members, drawing from the Harvard school of business administration and Babson Institute among others.

Among the important projects which Mr. Curley will suggest that the planning board work for are:

1. In the event of a consolidation of the New England railroads, insistence be made upon the electrification of these railroads within the metropolitan area.

2. The creation of a Greater Boston and the electrification of the railroads, within the metropolitan area, which would make possible the establishment of a belt line railroad terminal whereby direct connections could be established between the railroad lines entering Boston and the steamship docks.

3. The extension of the Boston airport to Governors Island by means of a filled-in land in the harbor. This area could serve as a location for industries engaged in international business and the former mayor believes that a great structure could be erected upon this reclaimed area which could be used for the manufacture and fabrication of products. He points out that there would be three means of transportation, by rail through the means of tracks running down the center of the area, by water through the construction of a 40-foot channel and by plane either from the roof of huge structures or by hydro-airplanes.

4. An immediate study of rapid transit needs and action for the relief of congestion at Governor square.

5. The widening of Summer street and L street from the army base to the Strandway in South Boston. The completion of the Strandway and the Columbus park improvements.

6. The smooth paving and establishment of a white way lighting system on Bunker Hill and Main streets in Charlestown, where 169 persons have been killed and injured during the last two years.

7. The location of a health unit in the vicinity of Madison park, South end.

8. Following out of his program inaugurated during previous administrations of a seat for every child in a permanent school building.

9. The extension of library facilities making Boston the best equipped in that respect of any city in the country.

Taking up the various projects which he will attempt to carry out when he assumes the office of mayor next January, Mr. Curley said:

The most important work during my administration will be the establishment of an enlarged city planning board. I propose to increase the board to 350 members, representing the leading industrial, commercial, financial, labor and educational organizations in the community.

I propose to invite representatives of all of the leading industries, including the Harvard school of business administration and the Babson Institute to serve as members. When the board is created it will be invited to work on the development of a program in anticipation of the requirements of the next 50 years. It will delve into all activities of the city and more particularly the ways and means of promoting industry and commerce here.

It should be possible, through the instrumentality of this great organization, in the event of a consolidation of the New England railroads, to insist upon an electrification of the railroads within the metropolitan area and create a Greater Boston. A Greater Boston with electrification within the metropolitan area should make possible the establishment of a belt line railroad terminal whereby direct connections could be established between the railroad lines entering Boston and the steamship docks.

TO EXPAND AIRPORT

The establishment of a belt line terminal would make possible, through the savings effected, competition by the city of Boston with other sections of the country. Immediate steps should be taken on a major scale for the extension of the Boston airport to Governors Island and to create a fill by pumping from the harbor bed alongside, making available for air transportation a great area extending into the harbor which should serve as an admirable location for industries engaged in international business such as the International Harvester Company, motor vehicle concerns and others.

In my opinion the proper inducements can be presented which will induce many concerns to locate on this reclaimed area. A great structure could be erected upon this area for the manufacture and fabrication of products. With railroad tracks running down the center, a 40-foot channel alongside they could receive raw materials at the back door and present the finished product at the front door. Such goods as required speed and delivery could be shipped from the roof by air or in hydroplanes or by other means of air transportation.

The policy of planning public improvements upon a major scale has achieved notable success in Chicago and New York, and not only does it represent a great saving to the people, but it substitutes the application of sound common sense for the haphazard, day-to-day method too long in vogue and destructive and expensive in character.

FOR TRAFFIC RELIEF

I favor an immediate study of the rapid transit needs and action for the relief of the congestion at Governor square. I shall advocate plans for the improvement of Governor square and the relief of traffic which would benefit persons living in the Brighton-Allston district. I prepared a plan of relief in 1925 and any longer delay is not only indefensible but absolutely inexcusable.

The widening of Summer street and L street from the Army base to the Strandway and the completion of the Strandway and Columbus park improvements are absolutely necessary for the relief of traffic congestion in the heart of the city and the recreation of people who, through the completion of the Strandway, are permitted to enjoy the health-giving advantages of this ocean park.

The widening of Summer street and the extension of the Strandway will afford easy access for traffic going either north or south from the city and minimize the danger that now exists.

The smooth paving and the construction of a White Way lighting system on Bunker Hill and Main streets in Charlestown will also be recommended. In a little more than two years 169 persons have been killed and injured on these streets and this improvement should be undertaken at once for the relief of traffic and the protection of human life.

NEW HEALTH UNIT

I will favor the location of a health unit in the vicinity of Madison park, if the law permits, or if it is necessary I will try and secure legislation for this purpose. The protection and safety of him who lives in a mansion is only secured just so long as the health of the most humble citizen in the community is considered.

I have always favored a seat for every child in a permanent school building and during my administration 17,000 such seats were provided. No portable schoolhouses were constructed by me. The time has arrived for a continuance of that policy inaugurated by me in previous administrations and which, if adhered to, would have resulted in the abolition of portables and higher quarters for educational purposes.

LIBRARY PROGRAM

I favor a definite program for the extension of library facilities and I shall recommend in January an appropriation of $200,000 for the erection of two branch libraries located wherever the library trustees think they are needed. I will continue to favor such a policy during my term as mayor and trust that my successors will continue this policy once it has been established.

Through this means it will be possible in the next 20 years, without burdening any generation, to make available the best library facilities in Boston of any city in the country.

The former mayor spent the entire day at his home yesterday, receiving friends and congratulations, flowers and innumerable telephone messages from well-wishers. Mrs. Curley, on whom the campaign was a considerable strain because of her ill-health, was also resting up after the strenuous efforts of campaign days and her decision to go out and vote for her husband. The wife of the mayor-elect received numerous floral tributes and donated most of them to churches and hospitals.

Mr. Curley said that his plans preceding his inauguration have not been formed although he will endeavor to obtain some rest. Whether or not he will go away for a vacation depends entirely upon Mrs. Curley's health.

PROGRAM FOR THE DEDICATION OF THE
HART FREE LIBRARY BUILDING
AND THE
WALTER FESSENDEN MEMORIAL ROOM

OCTOBER THE THIRTIETH
NINETEEN HUNDRED AND TWENTY-NINE
AT THREE O'CLOCK IN THE AFTERNOON

TOWNSEND, MASSACHUSETTS

THE SERVICE OF DEDICATION
WILL BE IN MEMORIAL HALL

Reproduction courtesy Trustees Boston P.

BOSTON EVENING TRANSCRIPT,

WEDNESDAY, NOVEMBER 20, 1929

Illustrations for Children's Books

Display at West End Library
Shows Many Original Pictures for Children's Book-Week

LITTLE EVA and Uncle Tom reading the Bible—negroes doing wild plantation dances—Olaf blowing his war horn—Agure and Bamba sliding down the silver mountain—the Snow Queen enthroned on modernistic blocks of ice—Queen Sigrid sitting pensively at her chamber window—Mammy Mina and young Margaret marketing in old New Orleans—Jack and Jill coasting down an icy New England hill—make thrilling the old colonial walls of the West End Public Library during Children's Book Week.

These are but part of an interesting and almost fantastic exhibit of artists' original drawings and paintings illustrating some of the more recent and important books for children, which, through the efforts of the library's custodian, have been coaxed from various New York and Boston publishers to grace this important occasion.

Louisa Alcott's "Jack and Jill" are here in a new dress—lovely water colored illustrations done by a New England artist, Hentree Stevens.

Theodore Nadejen's work—three drawings in color illustrating De La Mare's "Stories from the Bible"; James Daugherty's forceful black and white drawings for the marvelous new edition of "Uncle Tom's Cabin"; delightful sketches by Elmer Hader for Camp's "The Story of the Markets"; lovely imaginative things done by Ruth Reeves for Cooper's "Tall"; "War Paint and Powder Horn" illustrations by Louis C. Schroeder; and Frank W. Peers' black and white drawings for Gaer's "How the Great Religions Began," claim close attention.

Such artists as Angela Pruzynska, Boris Artzybasheff, Esther Brann, M. Burd and Henry Fitz also have their work here in illustrations for "The Trumpeter of Krakow," "Picture Book of Sculpture," "Nannette of the Wooden Shoes," "Simple Susan" and "Olaf the Glorious."

A Saturday Evening Post Illustrator

John Clair Minot's new book "Best Animal Stories I Know" is represented by some work of Charles Livingston Bull and Harold Cue.

Another of our own Boston writers, Louise Hubert Guyot, whose delightful stories for girls rank her with New England's own Louisa Alcott, has some illustrations for her latest book "The Gallant Lallanes" hung with this entertaining group.

This exhibit also includes copies of all of these recent books for children—many of them old friends in a new guise—as well as many other bits of juvenile literature, illustrations for which are not amongst those mentioned above.

Such an exhibit as this has not before been shown in Boston; publishers are not always willing to let their original illustrations go out of their hands.

"The object of the exhibit," says the custodian of the West End Library, "is to show the aesthetic development as well as the literary development in the make-up of children's books of today. As the days go along their books become increasingly charming and irresistible. Not only does the literary value of the book become important, but it has produced a new school of illustrators as well as authors. Writers and artists now cater to children of all tastes and ages."

M. C.

THE BOSTON GLOBE—TUESDAY, NOVEMBER 12, 1929

WALLS OF BUSINESS MEN'S BRANCH OF PUBLIC LIBRARY COMPLETED

FACADE OF KIRSTEIN MEMORIAL LIBRARY

Excepting only the roof, the outer shell of the Edward Kirstein Memorial, or business men's branch of the Boston Public Library, standing on the old Station 2 site at the head of Pl alley and facing the rear of City Hall, is completed.

In about three months the whole structure will be complete, furnished with an up-to-date business library and opened to the public, according to the donor, Vice Pres Louis E. Kirstein of Wm. Filene's Sons Company.

Mr. Kirstein gave $150,000 for the establishment. The city gave the land.

The facade is of Bulfinch style, a copy of Boston's first public library.

BOSTON EVENING TRANSCRIPT,

WEDNESDAY, NOVEMBER 20, 1929

THE LIBRARIAN

PUBLISHERS and booksellers have decreed that this is Children's Book Week, but the juvenile departments of branch libraries need no such reminder. Every week is Children's Book Week there, from the day school opens until well into vacation time. This is the season, however, when the greatest number of young readers crowd in to select books or to study. Indeed, in several of the branches of the Boston Public Library system children must form into long lines along the sidewalk in order to get a chance at the shelves. Even in frosty weather one may see this cheerful, pathetic "tail" stretching far down the street.

Within there is always a subdued buzz at the crowded tables as lessons are looked up in supplementary reference books. This in no way disturbs the readers-for-pleasure, sunk into an enchanted calm, while in imagination they are speeding with little Kay after the Snow Queen's sledge, or taking the road to Dover with young David Copperfield.

About the return and changing desks are orderly herds exchanging or receiving books at the hands of library attendants, who work at lightning speed, like subway guards in the rush hours, yet who retain a degree of amiability that is astonishing under the circumstances. Of all the children's room staff, the runner who unloads the book truck of fiction and fairy tales is in gravest danger of life and limb. The title "runner" is rather sardonic, considering that the young man must progress at a glacier's pace to avoid running down eager book selectors who surround the truck. Even before he can get to the shelves there is a brief, grim struggle and his stock has melted away mysteriously. The bright-eyed victors wriggle back to their tables, triumphantly clasping "Pinocchio" or "The Blue Fairy Book" to their hearts. Those who lost continue to lurk hopefully by the bare shelves, ready to rush the next book truck.

PROGRAM FOR THE DEDICATION OF THE
HART FREE LIBRARY BUILDING
AND THE
WALTER FESSENDEN MEMORIAL ROOM

OCTOBER THE THIRTIETH
NINETEEN HUNDRED AND TWENTY-NINE
AT THREE O'CLOCK IN THE AFTERNOON

TOWNSEND, MASSACHUSETTS

THE SERVICE OF DEDICATION
WILL BE IN MEMORIAL HALL

Armistice Week Program

THE GREATER BOSTON FEDERATION OF CHURCHES
PRESENTS THE DRAMA
"REAPING THE WHIRLWIND"

"They have sown the wind, and they shall reap the whirlwind."—Hosea 8:7
BY ELEANOR WOOD WHITMAN,
Author of "Jeremiah," "Isaiah," "Amos" et al.

This is the thrilling love-story of Hosea the Prophet. It was this real experience that originated the momentous conception that God is a God of Love, and of Love to All—the Spiritual basis of a World of Peace.

Hosea was the first of the Prophets to see the vision of the Age of the Covenant of Peace. Understanding, knowledge, love are here seen as the forces that will make a New Civilization.

This is not a solemn sermon but a gripping drama, a presentation of one of the great love stories of the world!

SYNOPSIS OF SCENES
ACT I: LOVE AND COLOR—A fig orchard near Samaria.
ACT II: HAPPINESS AND SHADOW—Hosea's Estate in Samaria.
ACT III: FALSITY AND TROUBLE—Hosea's Cottage of Hosea.
ACT IV: SORROW AND VISION—A Street with Baal Temple

Costs drawn from the best actors in the city. John Pratt Whitman plays the part of Hosea the Prophet. Oriental Music. Palestine Costumes and Properties—bright and colorful.

WEDNESDAY, NOVEMBER 13.—8 P. M.
AT THE Y. W. C. A. HALL, 140 CLARENDON ST.
Tickets $1.50, $1.00 and 50 cents.
Sold at office of Church Federation, 4 Park Street, Haymarket 0221

"Mr. and Mrs. Whitman's drama is convincing, artistic and helpful. This human love story, (Jeremiah) with its tragic struggle calls forth sympathy. Mr. Whitman's acting combines intense passion with a fine restraint."—THE CONSERVATIVE
"A wonderful success."—REV. M. LINSAY, D. D. Baptist Church, Brookline.

Illustrations for Children's Books

Display at West End Library
Shows Many Original Pictures for Children's Book-Week

LITTLE EVA and Uncle Tom reading the Bible—negroes doing wild plantation dances.—Olaf blowing his war horn—Agure and Bamba sliding down the silver mountain—the Snow Queen enthroned on modernistic blocks of ice—Queen Sigrid sitting pensively at her chamber window—Mammy Mina and young Margaret marketing in old New Orleans—Jack and Jill coasting down an icy New England hill—make thrilling the old colonial walls of the West End Public Library during Children's Book Week.

These are but part of an interesting and almost fantastic exhibit of artists' original drawings and paintings illustrating some of the more recent and important books for children, which, through the efforts of the library's custodian, have been coaxed from various New York and Boston publishers to grace this important occasion.

Louisa Alcott's "Jack and Jill" are here in a new dress—lovely water colored illustrations done by a New England artist, Beatrice Stevens.

Theodore Nadejen's work—three drawings in color illustrating De La Mare's "Stories from the Bible"; James Daugherty's forceful black and white drawings for the marvelous new edition of "Uncle Tom's Cabin"; delightful sketches by Elmer Hader for Camp's "The Story of the Markets"; lovely imaginative things done by Ruth Reeves for Cooper's "Tal"; "War Paint and Powder Horn" illustrations by Louis C. Schroeder; and Frank W. Peers' black and white drawings for Gaer's "How the Great Religions Began," claim close attention.

Such artists as Angela Pruzynska, Boris Artzybasheff, Esther Brann, M. Eard and Henry Fitz also have their work here in illustrations for "The Trumpeter of Krakow," "Picture Book of Sculpture," "Nannette of the Wooden Shoes," "Simple Susan" and "Olaf the Glorious."

A Saturday Evening Post Illustrator

John Clair Minot's new book "Best Animal Stories I Know" is represented by some work of Charles Livingston Bull and Harold Cue.

Another of our own Boston writers, Louise Hubert Guyot, whose delightful stories for girls rank her with New England's own Louisa Alcott, has some illustrations for her latest book "The Gallant Lallanes" hung with this entertaining group.

This exhibit also includes copies of all of these recent books for children—many of them old friends in a new guise—as well as many other bits of juvenile literature, illustrations for which are not amongst those mentioned above.

Such an exhibit as this has not before been shown in Boston; publishers are not always willing to let their original illustrations go out of their hands.

"The object of the exhibit," says the custodian of the West End Library, "is to show the aesthetic development as well as the literary development in the make-up of children's books of today. As the days go along their books become increasingly charming and irresistible. Not only does the literary value of the book become important, but it has produced a new school of illustrators as well as authors. Writers and artists now cater to children of all tastes and ages."

M. C.

WALLS OF BUSINESS MEN'S BRANCH OF PUBLIC LIBRARY COMPLETED

FACADE OF KIRSTEIN MEMORIAL LIBRARY

Excepting only the roof, the outer shell of the Edward Kirstein Memorial, or business men's branch of the Boston Public Library, standing on the old Station 2 site at the head of Pilgrimage and facing the rear of City Hall, is completed.
In about three months the whole

structure will be complete, furnished with an up-to-date business library and opened to the public, according to the donor, Vice Pres Louis E. Kirstein of Wm. Filene's Sons Company.
Mr. Kirstein gave $150,000 for the establishment. The city gave the land. The facade is of Bulfinch style, a copy of Boston's first public library.

THE LIBRARIAN

PUBLISHERS and booksellers have decreed that this is Children's Book Week, but the juvenile departments of branch libraries need no such reminder. Every week is Children's Book Week there, from the day school opens until well into vacation time. This is the season, however, when the greatest number of young readers crowd in to select books or to study. Indeed, in several of the branches of the Boston Public Library system children must form into long lines along the sidewalk in order to get a chance at the shelves. Even in frosty weather one may see this cheerful, pathetic "tail" stretching far down the street.

Within there is always a subdued buzz at the crowded tables as lessons are looked up in supplementary reference books. This in no way disturbs the readers-for-pleasure, sunk into an enchanted calm, while in imagination they are speeding with little Kay after the Snow Queen's sledge, or taking the road to Dover with young David Copperfield.

About the return and changing desks are orderly hordes exchanging or receiving books at the hands of library attendants, who work at lightning speed, like subway guards in the rush hours, yet who retain a degree of amiability that is astonishing under the circumstances. Of all the children's room staff, the runner who unloads the book truck of fiction and fairy tales is in gravest danger of life and limb. The title "runner" is rather sardonic, considering that the young man must progress at a glacier's pace to avoid running down eager book selectors who surround the truck. Even before he can get to the shelves there is a brief, grim struggle and his stock has melted away mysteriously. The bright-eyed victors wriggle back to their tables, triumphantly clasping "Pinocchio" or "The Blue Fairy Book" to their hearts. Those who lost continue to lurk hopefully by the bare shelves, ready to rush the next book truck.

THE THREE RECIPIENTS OF THE ROOSEVELT MEDAL FOR DISTINGUISHED SERVICE: OWEN D. YOUNG (Second From the Left), With Owen Wister (Left), the Historian of Frontier Life, and Robert Putnam, Librarian of Congress, Congratulated by James F. Garfield at the Presentation Ceremonies, Which Were Held at the Roosevelt House in New York City.

Boston Transcript

SATURDAY, NOVEMBER 30, 1929

One of the doctors points out the important part played by rest in the health of children. The leisure class which has just abandoned the Common for the Public Library finds the same thing true of adults.

Boston Transcript

124 WASHINGTON STREET, BOSTON, MASS.

SATURDAY, DECEMBER 7, 1929

Police Ask Aid in Finding Relatives of Thomas Sullivan

Captain James McDevitt of the Joy Street police station asked the aid of the newspapers in locating relatives of Thomas Sullivan, sixty-one, address unknown, who dropped dead Thursday afternoon in the West End branch of the Boston Public Library. Although Sullivan was a familiar figure on the lumber wharves, the police were unable to find anyone who knew where he lived or whether he left any near relatives.

Man, 60, Collapses in Library and Dies

A 60-year-old man, as yet unidentified, collapsed while reading a newspaper in the reading room of the Public Library at 131 Cambridge street, yesterday afternoon, and died before medical assistance reached him.

He is described as about 60 years of age, five feet seven inches tall, of light complexion, with a mustache. He was wearing a brown overcoat and soft hat, a dark gray coat and vest, with black trousers, and gold-rimmed glasses.

His body was taken to the northern mortuary for examination and possible identification.

Boston Post, Dec. 6-1929.

Boston Daily Globe

TUESDAY, DEC 17, 1929

the limits of our own Commonwealth.

JUDGE MURRAY GIVES PRAISE TO PURITANS

Founded Government That Influenced Civilization

Their So-Called Bigotry Like That of All Other Peoples Then

When considering the bigotry of the Puritans, their so-called "sins" in that respect should be viewed in the light of the times, when there was not a spot in which religious freedom of worship existed, Judge Michael J. Murray of the Boston Municipal Court told an audience at one of the lectures in the special tercentenary group at the Boston Public Library lecture hall last night.

Judge Murray's subject was "The Debt We Owe the Puritan." He said that their principal accomplishment was the foundation of a system of public education. Judge Murray said in part:

"A half-century back Massachusetts placed in the hall of the House of Representatives at the Nation's Capitol statues of John Winthrop and Samuel Adams. Though rich in great names, the selection of these two from the roll of her notables seems peculiarly apt.

"Civil Freedom Their Aim"

"Three centuries have passed since the first band of Puritans came to our shores. Time has but emphasized rather than dimmed the glory of the Puritan's fame. Succeeding generations have labored to strengthen and perpetuate the work so successfully begun by them of a Government which had for its aim civil freedom. But little of their time was given to pleasure and luxury.

"The Puritan was a deeply religious quantity. He founded our Government in the belief 'that it hath its foundation in the law of God.' A simple faith in a future life was his chief comfort and support in the sores and sufferings that he encountered. Today his influence reaches far beyond

No Religious Freedom Then

"The charge of bigotry has been laid at his door, a charge which readers of history will not attempt to deny. The religious freedom which they longed for themselves they wrongfully denied to others. But such is history's oft-repeated tale. In the words of a distinguished American, 'Religious intolerance, whenever and wherever it appears, is a grave violation of the rights of conscience and is a practice truly at variance with the teachings of Christianity.'

"But to measure the Puritan in this respect we should remember they are to be viewed in the light of their times. And there was not in that day anywhere a spot in which anything like religious freedom of worship existed. So that the sins of all should not be visited on the Puritans solely.

His Fundamental Work Stands

"But it was in the field of civil and political action that the Puritan achieved his greatest endeavor. Here an unsurpassed wisdom directed his policy and conduct so successfully that the march of 300 years has left unchanged the fundamentals of his work in Government.

"Their principal accomplishment is to be found in the system of public education which they created, and to which New England owes much of its character and success. His form of religious belief was destined to pass away. But the Government which he finally created and maintained has been a mighty influence in the progress of civilization.

Tercentenary Banner Year

"In the first band, headed by Winthrop, there was represented a fair measure of intelligence and education. Not a few had enjoyed the benefits of a college or university training in England. Added to this was their sound common sense and undoubted courage.

"For what they did and what they dared we remember them with gratitude today. The year 1930 should be a banner year in the life story of Massachusetts, and all of us of whatever national strain or religious belief will be but honoring ourselves to answer the call for a due participation in the celebration which will tell the world once more of the worthy achievements and the great accomplishments of the Puritan forefathers who gave to the country the Commonwealth of Massachusetts, today the brightest jewel in the Nation's crown."

THE BOSTON HERALD, FRIDAY, NOVEMBER 22, 1929

R.H. WHITE Company

In observance of National Children's Book Week we are reprinting an article on

CHILDREN'S READING

which is written by MISS ALICE M. JORDAN

Supervisor of Work with Children, Boston Public Library, for the Christmas 1928 issue of the Boston Book Merchants' Catalogue.

TO no part of the community do books mean more than to children. Can you doubt it when you see the way a child lives in a book? The mother of the eight-year-old who loves her Ivanhoe in its shabby brown binding so dearly that she wants to carry it to church with her; the father who, stopping to look at his little boy suspiciously humped up in the bed on a cold winter night, found him lying on his favorite books, "to keep them warm, Daddy"—these can tell you what precious possessions books may be, even to very young children.

Fortunate are the households where the first books include those classics of childhood which will stand the stern test of repeated reading aloud. Training in discrimination and good taste may begin very early with the picture books, rhymes, and nursery stories, for these are often artistic, with gay, colorful, and well-drawn illustrations, verses at once merry and musical, and short stories free from condescension or sophistication.

With the powerful aid of imagination, that great transforming force behind all creative work, all fine achievement, boys and girls see themselves as heroes and heroines, in many different situations, in many countries and times. That is all quite as it should be. Ideals of conduct are developed in this way.

You may choose your own books to suit the passing fashion, if you will, but your children's books should be chosen with an eye to their permanent value. For with all the wealth of literature to select from, with new editions of standards, well printed and attractively illustrated, there is no excuse for being satisfied with flashy stories or poorly manufactured volumes. And the glorious reading time of youth is so short! Yet all the good books are not necessarily old ones, even the Jungle Book, even Alice in Wonderland were once numbered among the new.

But one thing, at least, is certain, the sense of ownership increases the pleasure of reading—to every child his own home library. The demands of each vary with the growing mind, some can be completely happy for a time with fairy tales, others long for stories of real life, others, again, are avid for romantic adventure. Furthermore, wherever book shelves are available you may cultivate a systematic book-buying habit, looking toward additions, surely, on birthdays and at Christmas time, marking the advance in reading taste and skill. Here will be found books that are worth reading more than once; poetry, books of imagination, books of artistic charm, books telling of great deeds, books of information, leading from what is termed a "juvenile" to the best of general literature grasped early by active and inquiring minds.

If there is a better investment in the way of provision for the leisure hours of girls and boys, I do not know of it.

Library Is Kirstein's Monument to Memory of His Valiant Father

"Free City" Was What Late Edward Kirstein Called Boston—Pen Picture of a Fine Personality That Hated Tyranny

AS IT LOOKS NOW

View of the Kirstein Memorial Library as it looks in its present stage of erection.

BY CHARLES P. HAVEN

Saber-rattling autocracy stepped upon the stage in Germany, culminating in the crowning of William I, King of Prussia, as Emperor.

America again vanquished an autocracy that sought to make her a British dependency. Abraham Lincoln, backwoods rail-splitter, became President of the greatest democracy in the world.

Carl Schurz, intellectual revolutionary, the first German-born citizen to become a member of the United States Senate and Cabinet member, fled from the hated Prussian dictatorship shouting his condemnation of its perfidy to the world. His shouting was heard throughout Middle Europe, even to the borders of the Baltic Sea where those not perhaps, as well endowed with gifts for political action as himself, felt the sting of the Prussian Imperial knout.

In far Pomerania there lived a youth of 22, particularly well off in the goods of this world, but, in his inarticulate way, as fierce a hater of autocracy and as hot a lover of republicanism as his more articulate protagonist. He heard the call for abandonment of the Hohenzollernized Germany and, like his revered leader, got aboard ship and started out for the Land of Promise, the hope of the saber-slapped of the world.

A Fitting Monument

As a consequence of all these things, there is being erected in City Hall avenue, on the site of the old Station 2, a library to this Pomeranian youth's memory, a fitting monument to Edward Kirstein, for that was the name of our hero, one that he carried in honor until his death in 1894. It is a token of reverence from his son, Louis E. Kirstein.

There is nothing unusual for one of Louis Kirstein's race to reverence and honor his forebears.

And there is nothing, either, unusual in men of Louis Kir-stein's race to acquire the money to make that reverence known to the world.

But there is a distinctly unusual aspect to the form Louis Kirstein selected to honor his father.

The unusualness comes from two sentiments.

Edward Kirstein, quondam itinerant vendor of spectacles in the Land of Promise, had a great love, or rather, two great loves, apart from the love of family that is the mark of his race.

His first love was America and his second Abraham Lincoln.

In fact it was as much the advent of Abraham Lincoln in the life of his Land of Promise as the call of Carl Schurz that rooted Edward Kirstein from his centuries-old birthplace on the bleak north shores of Pomeranian Germany.

Boston His Ideal City

His ideals satisfied by the freedom that characterized nineteenth century America, Edward Kirstein found the full flower of idealism in Boston, when he used to journey here from Rochester after he had progressed to the prosperous condition in life of a traveling salesman. (They called them drummers, though, those days.)

In Boston he found his Carcassonne, his place of escape from all the tyrannies and prejudices of the Hohenzollernized Germany from which he had fled.

Here he told his son Louis, now one of the big figures in business and philanthropic life, was the Free City. (He always capitalized "Free City" when he mentioned it.)

Lincoln and Moses

And in Lincoln he found his Moses, like that greatest of Jewish emancipators, tall, gaunt, homely, lover of his fellow men.

One the actual Giver-of-Life for them; the other potentially one.

Louis E. Kirstein, donor of this library to the city in memory of his father, Edward Kirstein. (Photo drawn especially for the Sunday Post by Taffee.)

out a book as he journeyed from town to town about Rochester, N. Y., where he first settled. And he taught himself English as much by what he read as by what he heard as he bargained with his customers.

Every word he could read about his patron statesman, after he had picked up a smattering of English from his bargaining, was new fuel to his admiration. Books and clippings that he gathered are now in the possession of his son, who, by the way, has one of the finest collections of Lincolniana extant and who has named one of his own sons after the Emancipator.

Always, when young Louis accompanied his father on his trips, he heard about Lincoln. And when the eye-glass salesman came to Boston he often took Louis along with him. One day he said:

"Louis, I wish that one of my sons (he had three) would settle here in Boston. Here is where the great republican movement had its birth. Here America was founded. The America that is now ours. Yours and mine. America is for all those who are oppressed in the tired Old World. It is the home where young people can build their families without the terrors of the Hohenzollerns or the Hapsburgs."

The Sherman House

On their visits, father and son lived in the old Sherman House, in the middle decades of the last century, the sight now occupied by Thompson's new building, just across Pie Alley on the site of the new library.

Edward Kirstein loved the place. There, the bullied Jew of Russian ancestry, was greeted as a well-welcomed guest. Even as a man of importance.

No pers greeted old, bearded Edward Kirstein when he stepped up to the clerk's desk to register himself and his son. There was no fear that the clerk behind the register would suddenly turn to a menacing Prussian and order him and his son to the Otto.

Sitting in the lobby of the old Sherman House, the equal of any man eating an after dinner cigar, Edward Kirstein told Louis of the love he had for his land of promise. In his talks about Boston and his drives to the spots where great men had died, he made it possible for him to try an after dinner cigar check-bowl with an Adams, or a Hohenzollern, for that matter, he talked at it.

Met Mr. Lloyd

About this time, Louis was getting into 20's and Edward Kirstein was wearing eyeglasses to the optician's Boston. One of them, Andrew Lloyd, Edward Kirstein especially loved.

One day proposed to Lloyd that he finance him in establishing a first-class optician's store. Lloyd saw the possibilities outlined by his old friend and the rest is Boston business history.

Here came the chance to bring his son Louis to Boston. In his arrangement with Mr. Lloyd, the elder Kirstein made it a part of the contract that his son was to become a partner of a Lloyd. That was the beginning of the connection between Edward Kirstein's beloved Boston and one of his sons. Louis was to live in Boston. A Kirstein was to become a part of the life of the city of cities in the land of promise.

AS IT WILL LOOK

Architects' drawing of the Kirstein Memorial Library in City Hall avenue. (Courtesy Putnam & Cox.)

stein's name will be engraved in stone over the portals of the building in City Hall avenue and passers-by will, long after Louis Kirstein is dead, see the name of his father and ask something of the history and the personality of the man who gave to Boston another link in the chain of the education that makes men free.

Louis Kirstein uprooted himself from the family home in Rochester. He came here, not without the shedding of a few tears, you may well imagine, by his beloved mother, whose picture occupies the place of honor over his desk now.

Louis Kirstein prospered. All that his father had ever told him about Boston was true.

Time went by. Louis married and established a family of his own.

His father was taken to the bosom of Abraham. His beloved mother passed to the reward specially set apart for mothers, and Louis Kirstein sat back and considered how best he could make in the city of Boston a permanent place for the father who loved it so deeply.

An Appropriate Spot

Old Station 2 became obsolete. The smelly building was an eyesore. The spot upon which it stood was only a few feet from his father's dwelling place when here.

How better to give that permanent connection with Boston to his father than by building a library there—a library because of Edward Kirstein's great love of books.

Mayor Malcolm E. Nichols had reappointed Louis Kirstein a trustee of the Boston Public Library, after appointments by both Mayor Peters and Mayor Curley.

Louis Kirstein called upon the Mayor and outlined his plans and ambitions. He struck a responsive chord in the Mayor, who is himself a lover of lovely letters. The legal formalities were gone through and now we come to the fruition of those plans.

Edward Kirstein for all time is in the minds of the citizens of Boston. As long as the tides ebb and flow in the harbor that was the scene of a famous tea party, Edward Kir-

Large Business Section

In discussing his project with his fellow trustees on the library board, Mr. Kirstein found that the department which could be best aided through the new structure was that which treats of business subjects. Therefore, the new Kirstein Library will be devoted largely to business books. It will have the co-operation of the Baker Library at the Harvard School of Business Administration, the library at the Massachusetts Institute of Technology and the Widener Library.

Business libraries are the modern thing in library systems. Providence has one, as have Newark, Minneapolis, Indianapolis and Hartford. Mrs. Mary Watkins Dietrichson, who was for a dozen years head of the Minneapolis Business Library, will be the director of the new Boston institution.

The service the library will offer is especially to business people, clerks, salespeople, accountants, brokers, owners of small and large stores, etc. It will be a place where these people can drop in for a few minutes or as long as they like and read up on any question that interests them.

It will, in addition, have all the evarious types of books found in any branch library, biographies, fiction, travel books, reference books, maps, etc.

Thus will be perpetuated in his city of cities, the memory of the Pomeranian pedler who loved liberty, Lincoln and books.

THE LIBRARIAN

It is always with a sense of impending artistic pleasure that one takes up a new issue of the Boston Public Library Bulletin. The format in word which delights the Librarian who almost never has a chance to use it is so exactly right. That cover of bookish green, with its simple decorations in black, saved from too great austerity by narrow lines of rich orange, is in keeping with the beautiful typography within. It is evident that Mr. Lee, in charge of the printing department of the Boston Public Library, was influenced by his early days at the Kelmscott Press. Under his hand each paragraph and page shows a balanced perfection, rare in these slapdash times.

Mr. Zoltan Haraszti, the editor, writes with a vigor and grace that is astonishing, considering that English is an acquired tongue with him. He has also far-reaching thorough scholarship, which he wears, Continental fashion, as lightly as a flower in his buttonhole. Mr. Haraszti is likewise fortunate in his assistant, Miss Margaret Munsterberg, with her nimble mind and felicitous style. This month's leading article is by her and concerns the valuable collection of books, manuscripts and original documents on West Indian subjects bequeathed to the Boston Public Library, by Benjamin P. Hunt in 1877.

Mr. Hunt, it appears, was a native of Massachusetts and he resided for a long time in Philadelphia. From 1840 to 1850, he was United States consul at Port-au-Prince, Hayti. During his sojourn there he made keen observations, and these, supplemented with extensive researches into Haytian history and ethnology. When the United States Government considered purchasing the island, Mr. Hunt was appointed one of the commissioners. Though he had to decline the office on account of poor health, Miss Munsterberg quotes a passage from an obituary in the Philadelphia Inquirer, written upon his death in 1877, which gives an excellent idea of the man's personality and character:

"He was one of the earliest, most ardent and constant advocates in this city of the rights of the negro, rights now universally admitted but the vindications of which, at the time Mr. Hunt began his work, exposed their defenders to all the horrors of social ostracism. To the influence of Mr. Hunt's vigorous pen were due in a great measure those two acts of public justice, the admission of colored people to the street cars and the provision for the care of the families of the colored soldiers who had fallen in the service of their country." It is evident from this that the man was not one given merely to worrying the bare bones of history!

At the time of his death, Mr. Hunt left incomplete a history of "French St. Domingo and Hayti"; another unfinished manuscript, a more general study entitled "The Haytians," and a fragment of a history of "The Redemptioners"—a subject which naturally grew out of the author's West Indian researches. It seems that he left only manuscripts, except for a small pamphlet, published in 1859, on "Hayti and the Mulatto." The manuscripts of his histories, Mr. Hunt bequeathed to the Boston Public Library in the hope that some scholar might be tempted to complete them. He left also a large collection of manuscript notes, the results of his expert and devoted labors, and a number of original documents. All these, with some later additions, are bound in some forty-six volumes in the library.

To this valuable bequest, Mr. Hunt added his books, 669 volumes in all, which have to do with all the West Indian islands, though the largest number relate to St. Domingo and Hayti. Most of the books are of the latter eighteenth and early nineteenth, with a few earlier publications. One of these was printed in Seville in 1590, and contains the book-plate of the unfortunate Emperor Maximilian, of Mexico. There is also "The General History of Earthquakes" by Richard Blome, printed in London, 1694. One would expect a person living in the West Indies for any length of time to get interested eventually in earthquakes. As the writer suggests, it would be impossible to give a detailed description of the collection of books, but the Boston Public Library owns a full annotated collection in manuscript of the whole Hunt collection, including pamphlets, maps and charts, manuscripts and engravings.

Recent histories are inclined to slight the period of the first French Settlement in the West Indies, which occurred between 1625-1665. In his fragment of the history of "French St. Domingo and Hayti," Mr. Hunt presents this in great detail. His narrative is based on the records of the missionary Fathers Du Tertre, Le Pers and Labat.

According to the former, the earliest English as well as the earliest French adventurers lived on good terms with the Indians. "But the devil not being able to bear the sight of such great harmony, put it into the hearts of the Indians, that these foreigners had come into the island only to massacre them, as they had massacred their ancestors on the mainland." They accordingly invited the Indians of neighboring islands to help drive away the intruders, but as the Indians were betrayed by one of their own, the inevitable massacre followed.

English, French and Spanish settlements with the jealousy and dissension among them, is treated by Mr. Hunt. His second chapter concerns "The Boucaniers, Tibustiers and Engages."

Of the latter, he says, "they were French or other Europeans who engaged themselves by contract to sell their service for three years, on arrival, to the planter or others, in payment for their passage. The planters used them as slaves. Curiously enough, it was the mortality of these poor 'engages' which caused the importation of negro slaves by the Senegal Company in 1680—and this circumstance, as Miss Munsterberg points out, is at the root of the subsequent history of black Hayti.

Long years before William B. Seabrook lived among the natives, or wrote his "The Magic Island," Mr. Hunt had discovered much about Voodoo, or, as he called it, "Vaudouxism." This serpent worship, with other African superstitions, was imported in the slave ships and clung to the population, and these, Mr. Hunt records, had been known to touch even white onlookers of the savage rites—but never the police, who are enemies of the Vaudoux.

In a day when the great controversies about Women's Rights was raging in the United States, Mr. Hunt found that the female population of Hayti was not so badly off. "I should say that these business women of Hayti have as little to complain of in the matter of Women's Rights as any of their sex in the world. Public opinion excludes them from no branch of trade that they are disposed to enter into. Dry goods, provisions and coffee speculation are all open to them. They attend to their business in person, and being entirely independent of the men who act as their husbands, control their own earnings." Which undoubtedly would have surprised Susan B. Anthony had she heard of it!

Miss Munsterberg has discovered among the original documents in the collection, a letter with the autograph of Toussaint Louverture, that most romantic, almost legendary figure of West Indian history. The picture of the black general in French uniform with high plume on the helmet is, as she says, familiar as is his motto: "La couleur de mon corps m'est-elle un honneur et ma liberté?" His letter is dated 17 September, 1795, covers one sheet of foolscap and is signed "Toussaint Louverture."

Another document connected with the life of Toussaint is a manuscript of twenty pages which is called a "Report of a survey made from the village of La Vega to the Cape of Samanah by the citizens Barre and Lacroix, Engineers of the State." This survey was made by order of General Moyse, the nephew of Toussaint, to whom he gave military command in the North. But Moyse, himself cruel and ambitious, opposed Toussaint's policy of favoring the whites. "Whatever my old uncle may do," he has been quoted as saying, "I will not be the hangman of my own color." Finally a negro rebellion in the North, in which white inhabitants were massacred, was quelled by Toussaint and his nephew; Moyse was executed at his orders.

A letter-book of the French general-in-chief of engineers is included in the Hunt collection. The forty-seven pages of manuscript, according to Miss Munsterberg, is a disorderly affair, splashed with ink and full of corrections. A more peaceful document, also a French manuscript, of twenty pages, is the "First Report of the naturalists employed by the Commission of the French Government, at St. Domingo, sent from the Spanish port of St. Domingo in 1799." This contains a description of the topography and the products of the island.

Other excellent records and descriptions of the period may be found in the "Journal of Howard (Lt. of Hussars) in the British Army of Occupation of St.

Domingo, Feb. 8, 1796 to Jan 1798." As the writer of the article states, to understand the occasion of this Journal one must bear in mind that the French rule of Western St. Domingo did not remain unchallenged by the English. The culminating and unsuccessful English attempt to conquer the island was made in 1795, when General Howe landed with his troops at the port Mole-St. Nicolas which figures in the Lieutenant's Journal. In its pages the Englishman continually speaks of his enemies as "the brigands," apparently the uncivilized natives of the coast.

This interesting record of England's attempt to keep the sun from setting on her domains is contained in three notebooks and is written in an easily legible hand. The first book, well worn and blotted in places, contains brief entries—three, four, even as many as seven to a page. Thereafter one finds a continuous text of narrative and description which is carried through the third book. The officer's observations on the islands—their products, economies, the habits of their population—are detailed and, one is led to believe, trustworthy. Most of the observations were made in St. Domingo, but the author saw Barbadoes, Martinique, Guadeloupe, Porto Rico and the other smaller islands.

Even as American troops suffered from the broiling sun and the wrong sort of uniforms during the Spanish War, so did the British a hundred years before. "Owing to the troops," states the recording officer, "leaving the Mole at such an ill-judged hour they suffered terribly by their march the sun being so extremely hot and not a drop of water to be met with on the road none but those who have been obliged to march in this country can have an idea of the extremities to which the Army was reduced so great was it that before they halted which was about three o'clock in the afternoon no less than between fifty and sixty men had absolutely perished with thirst and were lying dead along the road."

Dec. 5, 1929.
BOSTON POST,

Mothers and fathers, uncles and aunts, and other relatives of children who like to read, would undoubtedly be interested in a visit to the Boston Public Library some time during the next 15 days or so, to examine the exhibit of children's books there.

In a little alcove at the foot of the stairs leading to the third floor, there is an exhibit of about 200 books, all new and all especially prepared for the young folks.

Miss Alice M. Jordan, the Public Library's supervisor of work with children, has charge of the exhibit, as she has charge also of the children's room.

A few words more about the library. During the snow storm the other day, a number of women took advantage of the hot air registers in the floor of the lobby and went in to dry their feet.

I saw one woman remove her thin satin pumps and stand in her dampened stockings over the comforting heat.

When her feet were thoroughly dried, she replaced her shoes and departed, looking far more cheerful than she had when she entered.

Boston Daily Globe

FRIDAY, DEC 6, 1929

LIBRARIAN USES PLANE AND GLOBE IN VINE STREET LIBRARY DISPLAY

Byrd Exhibit Being Admired by Two Roxbury Boys, Stephen Murray (Left), and Richard Keating

In the Mt Pleasant Branch of the Boston Public Library on Vine st., Roxbury, hangs a large toy airplane with pictures, and man regarding Reid that it might be utilized to help Richard E. Byrd. Under the display are grouped several books on Byrd's life and achievements, and a variety of books on aviation. The demand for such books is said to have increased to a marked degree since the flight was made.

This display, which has aroused much interest among visitors to the branch, was arranged by Miss Margaret H. Reid, branch librarian. The plane was given to the branch some time ago. Last Saturday, after reading of the flight, it occurred to Miss Reid that it might be utilized to help children become acquainted with Commander Byrd's work and with aviation in general.

Above the plane is a headline cut from the Globe, "Byrd Flew Over South Pole." Below is a picture of Byrd and a man of Antarctic both cut from the Globe with the words: "The Bottom of the World and the Man Who Flew Over It."

The Boston Post

SATURDAY, DECEMBER 14, 1929

PAINTINGS IN BAD CONDITION

Famous Murals at Public Library Damaged

The famous mural paintings at the Boston Public Library, painted some three decades ago by the celebrated French artist, Puvion de Chavannes, are in bad condition, and may have been permanently injured in some places due to long neglect, according to statement of Charles Durham, expert, who is now in charge of restoring them. The paintings are worth close to $2,000.

The murals were specially done for the library and are an attraction to art lovers the world over. The trustees decided just prior to Thanksgiving to restore them, and with the first efforts, Durham reported much damage, due to dust and mold. He stated last night that he hopes to be able to restore them to as near their original condition as possible.

THE BOSTON HERALD

SATURDAY, DECEMBER 14, 1929

EXPERT CLEANS LIBRARY MURALS

Charles Durham Says Chavannes Work Might Have Been Ruined

The famous murals on the staircase of the Public Library, painted by the French master, Puvion de Chavannes, were saved at a cost of $50,000 have been saved from permanent destruction by the timely cleaning and preservation ordered by the board of trustees last week. The work is being done by Charles Durham, famous expert in restoration and preserving painted works of art at the Fogg Art Museum.

Mr. Durham has been at work for the last week gently sponging a 20-year accumulation of dirt, grime and grease from the canvas. The task is of such a delicate nature that children's sponges and Mr. Durham's assistants are carefully trained by him at the Fogg Art Museum.

It is his opinion that if the murals had remained the way in which they had been for so long, the damage would have been irreparable. He said he was much relieved to find that the murals which were in such a bad condition when he was first called in to clean them, had not been ruined.

Boston Daily Globe

FRIDAY, DEC 13, 1929

PAINTINGS CLEANED AT PUBLIC LIBRARY

De Chavannes Pictures on Stairway Restored

The paintings by Puvion de Chavannes on the walls of the main staircase of the Boston Public Library are being cleaned for the first time in more than 20 years. These are among the choicest of the library decorations and cost $50,000 originally. In fact the series is considered about the best work of the great French master.

In addition the pictures all of the marble work is being cleaned and it is surprising what a difference it makes. It is understood the work is being done under the supervision of experts from the Fogg Art Museum.

Owing to the fact that thousands of people go up and down this stairway daily there is a fine film of dust in the air which has been deposited on these pictures and has obscured some of the more delicate colors almost completely. So the pictures already cleaned make a very strong contrast with those not yet cleaned.

The Abbey pictures in the delivery room were cleaned about a year ago under the supervision of Mr. Thompson of the Boston Museum of Fine Arts. When he got through with them they looked as "good as new."

Some Boston artists are fearful lest the Puvion de Chavannes pictures will be injured in the process of cleaning, but the officials of the library are satisfied the work will be well done—and carefully done.

NEW BUSINESS LIBRARY IN BOSTON DESCRIBED

William Alcott of Globe, in Radio Talk, Says It Will Include Best Features of Others of Its Type

"Business and Business Libraries" was the topic on which William Alcott, librarian of the Boston Globe and national president of the Special Libraries Association, spoke from the Boston Globe studio of WEEI, and he said:

"A little story, which illustrates the vast changes which have taken place in the use of libraries, is told about a famous librarian of the Harvard College library of nearly a century ago. At that time the purpose of a library was to keep and store books, rather than to loan them and have them used. One day, so the story goes, the venerable librarian almost boastfully stein, one of Boston's outstanding business men, and a trustee of the Boston Public Library. The memorial is named for his father.

"This Edward Kirstein Memorial Library building is the second building in America to be erected for a business library, the first being in Newark, N. J. Put the Edward Kirstein Memorial Library is the first business library building to be erected in the United States as a part of a business man. There are nearly 70 cities in the United States which are giving business library service, but not more than a dozen give this service through a separate business branch.

Dana Aided New Scheme

Just 25 years ago the librarian of the Public Library at Newark put into effect a wholly new idea in library work. That librarian was John Cotton Dana, a native of Vermont, a graduate of Dartmouth, who served for some years as librarian of the City Library in Springfield, Mass., and who went from Springfield to Newark. That was in 1902. In 1904 he opened a branch library of a kind different from any other public library branch in this country. He called it the business branch library. That library contained no fiction.

"But instead, he put upon open shelves, available to anybody and everybody, several copies of the Newark City Directory, and the New York City Directory, and the directories of such other large cities as he could procure. He added trade directories of all parts of the world, and professional directories such as law and medicine. He added maps of cities, States and Nations, municipal registers of every large city, and State manuals of every State in the Union. His aim was to collect in that branch library every sort of information that business men or individuals needed in their daily work. In a little while that Newark branch library was receiving visitors from all parts of this country seeking information which they could find nowhere else.

"At first the library was in rented quarters on the busiest street in the city. A few years ago, without opposition, the City Council of Newark appropriated nearly a quarter of a million dollars for a separate building for this branch library.

Describes Scene in Newark

"I had the privilege of visiting that library a few days ago. Three young women, assistants in the library, were giving information by telephone. A half dozen men were reading the bulletins and financial service publications relating to stocks and investments.

"On the shelves were the latest directories of every city in the United States of 200,000 population, while directories of cities in the 100,000 class, if not the latest, were not more than two years old. There were half a dozen Newark directories, and there was no waiting on the part of anybody to use their city directory.

"The State manuals of every State in the Union could be consulted there by anyone by simply going to the shelf to get the book. There were maps of hundreds of cities, there were books of cable codes, there were business magazines, and many useful reference books. Then there were directories of cities like London, Paris, Berlin, and Rome. Just ask yourself where you would go today if you needed to consult such directories. That will give you an indication of what Boston's new business branch will mean for your convenience.

"John Cotton Dana, who started that first business branch library, was a believer in the great value of that sort of information and he started the business branch library in the face of severe criticism from many of the old-type librarians. But he became in a few years the most valuable librarian in this country, if not in the world, if value is to be measured by salary received, for he was given the largest salary ever paid at that time to a librarian.

Curley Urged Library

"It was John Cotton Dana also who 20 years ago organized the association which honored me last May by electing me as president, the Special Libraries Association.

"Special libraries were not new at that time, but their librarians had not been brought together into an association of their own, and they had little in common with one another. Special libraries, like newspaper libraries, horticultural libraries, insurance and banking libraries, had been organized for many years, but there were other libraries of a business type which were new.

"Today, about 1000 special libraries in the United States and Canada, from the Atlantic to the Pacific, are associated for cooperation in such ways as are permissible.

"Just 15 years ago, while James M. Curley was Mayor of Boston, he undertook to provide a business library for Boston. The Aldermanic chamber in City Hall was available for that purpose and he commissioned one of the trustees of the Boston Public Library to visit other cities for the purpose of studying the business library situation. The trustee selected for this work was William F. Kenney, day editor of the Boston Globe. Mr. Kenney visited Newark and New York.

"He found that 200,000 people used the business branch in Newark, that 20,000 people used the city, State and telephone directories; that 15,000 used the maps and atlases; that 10,000 consulted the reference books, and that 1000 persons used the typewriter provided for the public.

"Mr. Kenney reported in favor of establishing a business branch library in Boston, but that was in October, 1914, when Europe was ablaze with war, and it blocked all plans for the time being. At that time, as Lincoln said of another war, 'neither party expected for the war the magnitude or the duration which it attained.' So not until Mr. Kirstein came forward with his generous offer to provide a building to contain a business branch library was it possible for Boston to proceed with its long cherished plan for a business library.

Librarian Already Chosen

"The Edward Kirstein Memorial Library will include the best features of all the other business branch libraries in this country, and will have other additional distinctive advantages. For some years the Boston Public Library, under the direction of Charles F. D. Belden, has had a working arrangement with the great Harvard Business Library by which the books of that collection are made available to the Boston Public Library. By another arrangement, the books of the Harvard University Library, the third largest collection in America, are made available. Mr. Belden also hopes to make an arrangement with the many special libraries in Boston for cooperation in supplying information through this business library.

"The person who will have charge of the Edward Kirstein Memorial Library has been selected. The librarian will be Mrs. Mary Watkins Dietrichson, who was for 12 years in charge of the Minneapolis business branch library, one of the outstanding business libraries of the great Middle West. Added to that experience has been a year of service at the Harvard business library, and another year in the statistical department of the Boston Public Library, which she has reorganized, and Boston is to be felicitated upon having a person of such exceptional training for the new Edward Kirstein Memorial Library.

"This library will have still one other distinctive feature. On one of the floors of the new building will be a new downtown branch of the Boston Public Library, giving to the people of Boston in the business center of the city all the excellent service which the branch libraries of Boston are noted for giving.

"In speaking of the Edward Kirstein Memorial Library, Mr. Belden, director of the Boston Public Library, said: 'The Edward Kirstein Memorial building is to be perhaps the outstanding center in America for obtaining information helpful to business in its widest sense. It will have a live collection of books and material. It will have the pick of books on many subjects. Through the Boston Public Library we have an arrangement with the Harvard Business Library, which will give the people of Boston unusual facilities. We are also planning for an advisory board of special librarians on the selection of the books, and we are looking for cooperation of the special libraries of this vicinity.'

"The new building is expected to be ready in the Spring of 1930, the year of Boston's tercentenary, and its dedication will not be the least among the many notable events which are planned for the coming year."

MRS. MARY WATKINS DIETRICHSON
Librarian of New Kirstein Business Library

remarked, 'every book belonging to this library is in its place, except one, but I know where that book is, and I am going right over to Prof. Norton's house and get it.'

"That was before the system of open shelves in public libraries had been devised and when the attitude of the librarian was wholly different from what it is today. Libraries have long since learned that its books are for use, and that the more the books are used the greater benefit the library gives, and the adoption of open shelves, freely accessible to those who wish to use the books, was a long stride forward in library service.

Business Man Neglected

"Another remarkable development in recent years is the service which libraries are rendering to the business man and business interests. Not that this service had never before been given, but it was formerly only incidental. The chief functions of the public library, among many functions, have been three:

"First, to supply recreational reading, which has been largely of fiction, a service enjoyed by all classes, old and young, rich and poor.

"Second, to develop reading habits in children, and every library employed a children's librarian just as soon as it could afford to do it.

"Third, to help the person, who in his youth was deprived of educational advantages, to pursue his education, a movement which has come to be known in library circles as 'adult education.'

"But in all this effort little attention was paid to the business man who wanted help in his business, or the individual who desired information not contained in books of fiction.

New Library in Boston

"The importance in which business as such is held today is shown by the great business schools which have been established in recent years. The most conspicuous of these is the Harvard Graduate School of Business Administration, a cause to which George F. Baker has given $6,000,000. Schools and colleges of business administration and schools of finance have a similar purpose.

"The latest addition in Boston to this field of service will be the Edward Kirstein Memorial Library, whose building is now approaching completion. It is located on City Hall av., in the rear of Boston's City Hall, and comes as a gift to the city from Louis E. Kir-

Boston Transcript

WEDNESDAY, DECEMBER 18, 1929

"For Unto Us a Child Is Born"

Members of the Dramatic Department of Community Service of Boston, Inc., Who Will Participate in a Nativity Play to Be Produced in the Lecture Hall of the Boston Public Library on Monday Afternoon, Dec. 23, and Again in the Evening. Arr: Left to Right—Shepherd, George W. Gold, Mary, Frieda Altman; Joseph, Ralph Wheeler, and Shepherd, Henry Enross.

The Book for the Play Was Arranged by Harold I. Undergreen and Is Being Directed by E. Van Cunningham. Music for the Play Will Be Furnished by Singers from Perkins Institution Under the Direction of Madeline A. Starbird. The Subject Will Be Madeline D. Brooks. Paul Mahoney of Boston University Also Will Sing. Other Members of the Cast Include John T. O'Callahan, Gabriel; Dan Smith, Harold; Alida Simmons, Shepherd; Ernest Gladstone and Julius Markert, Kings; Roger Merrill, Councillor; Dorothy Sammis, Slave.

Boston Transcript

SATURDAY, DECEMBER 21, 1929

President of Dickens Fellowship to Illustrate the Story

For the fourth successive year, Edward F. Payne, president of the Boston Dickens Fellowship, is to appear in the Public Library lecture course on Sunday at 3.30 P.M. His subject is "When Dickens Read the Carol in Boston on Christmas Eve." He will tell about the famous author's stay at the Parker House during the winter of 1847-48 and use the arrangement from which he read in Tremont Temple at that time. Stereotype illustrations from the text will follow.

The Dickens room in the new Parker House is decorated for the season. The same mantelpiece which was in his room in the old hotel is there, also the mirror before which he rehearsed before appearing.

Every year the branch, through its Tiny Tim fund, buys braces and necessary things for crippled children and thus "keeps his memory green."

WORKMEN SPEED TASK OF REINFORCING FOUNDATIONS OF BOSTON PUBLIC LIBRARY

SHOWING CONDITION OF PILES UNDER FOUNDATIONS OF BOSTON PUBLIC LIBRARY BEFORE REPAIRS WERE STARTED

The task of reinforcing the foundations of the Boston Public Library is progressing rapidly. The danger is over now, but if the weakening of the piles had not been discovered in time the results would probably have been serious. The library is on made land and supported on wooden piles. When repairs were being made on the great platform at the entrance, the main foundations at the front were examined. It was found that for some reason the water table was lower than when the building was erected 50 years ago. This had exposed the tops of the piles and these had rotted until in some places they were eight or 10 inches below the stones which were supposed to rest on them. Recognizing that a genuine emergency existed, an appeal was made to the city authorities for funds which were provided. The piles are in groups. It has been necessary to excavate around each group. The top of each pile is sawed off down to the water level and a steel column extends up to the level of the original top of the wooden pile. Then a solid block of concrete is formed encasing the steel column and the new top of the pile. The blocks are from 4 to 5 feet thick and from 10 to 16 feet square, making the most substantial sort of foundation. There is some reason to suppose that the piles in the rear of the building may not be in as bad condition as those in front. However, the condition of each will be examined. "No harm has been done to the library itself," said Frank H. Chase, reference librarian, in speaking of the damage to the piles. "It was, of course, fortunate we discovered it when we did. I have heard no very satisfactory explanation of why the water table was lowered, but it has been suggested that it may have been due to subway and other construction in the vicinity when a great deal of water was pumped out." The work on the foundations is only one of numerous repairs the past four years. These have included the complete renovation of the ventilating system, the rewiring of the building and the installation of a new switchboard, the reconstruction of the book railway and the pneumatic tube system, the relocation of the great lanterns at the main entrance, which had been removed because of their unsafe condition, and the installation of automatic sprinklers throughout the basement and adequate fire protection in the binding and printing departments. The furnaces have been rebuilt, a coal conveyor installed and modern lighting fixtures placed in many departments, including the book stacks. The roofs of the building, both the exterior tiles and the interior condensation roof of metal, have been largely reconstructed, and there have been extensive repairs to the marble floors. The lecture hall has been renovated with new seating equipment, an improved stage and a projection room with modern apparatus, and a workroom has been provided for the Children's Department.

Boston Public Library Incunabula
The current issue of "More Books," the bulletin of the Boston Public Library, begins the publication of a descriptive catalogue of the fifteenth century printed books in the library. Two years ago the Bulletin published a list of 150 incunabula manuscripts in the library, describing each not only as a specimen of printing, but as a book with interest to an author. The library had then between thirty and forty medieval manuscripts, and has between 175 and 180 incunabula. This small number, compared with the 3000 from the Bodleian, the Vatican, Congress and the New York Public Library, is not to catalogue these books as a task, Zoltan Haraszti, editor of the Bulletin. In a readable introduction to the installment of this catalogue, Haraszti outlines the ambitious scheme undertaken. This is to treat these books as not merely "items" but as objects which once served for reading, and to give the student, or tell where they may be found, but emphasis is to be placed on the cultural importance of the books described. The catalogue will tell what the books are about, something of their author, and sometimes describe their historical background. The notes may occupy a line or several pages, but they will be of interest, although numerous, to the reader who will supply the wants of those who are only in the craftsmanship of these books. The initial installment of this catalogue deals with the Gutenberg Bible and the first dated Bible of Post and Schöffer (1462), of each of which the library possesses a single leaf; the "Speculum Naturale" printed at Strassburg about 1470 by the "R. Printer"; Vincent of Beauvais' "Speculum Doctrinale," 1473; "Speculum Historiale" printed by Mentelin and "Speculum Morale" of 1475, the latter printed by Mentelin, not later than the Heinrich Eggestein's Latin Bible of 1466 and Bonaventura's "Aurea Mirabilia Testamenti," undated, but dated de Utino's "Sermones aurei de sanctis," printed by Martin Schöffer; Paul's "Sermones Quadragesimales," 1483 "Vitas Patrum," with a small number of Paul's "Sermones thesauri et maxime plenius," the "Flores Musulorum" by Johann Pruss, one of the oldest books in Germany; Johannes's "Discipulus de eruditione eruditissimi," 1490, also printed by Pruss; two copies of Gruniger's "Gesta Romanorum," 1490, Nicholas de Lyra and the "Opera" of Johannes Balbus, ante 1484; Colonne's "Historia Trojana," 1484; tholomaeus Anglicus's "Glanville Proprietatibus Rerum," 1485; 1486; "Opera" 1484 and Prator's "Mariale" of 1496.

High praise is due the Boston Library for this undertaking, and people are interested in these books, but do not know what they are. These notes in this unique catalogue will supply those details which will interest the general reader. They may contain facts that the reader already knows, or which they care little about, they contain superfluous. They treat of beautiful things, which hold the interest of readers for many generations.

BOSTON AMERICAN

A HOME PAPER FOR PEOPLE WHO THINK

BOSTON, WEDNESDAY, DECEMBER 18, 1929

Co-op-er for
The proposed act first calls for civil service examinations for censors of books, plays, pictures, music and dancing, the examination to include the standard Binet intelligence tests for mentality of 15 years, and general information and language tests, similar to those required for employees of the Boston Public Library. In addition, each censorship candidate would be required to submit to the State Department of Health satisfactory evidence of experience. Section 2 of the bill provides that in cases where the author or publisher of a book alleged to be unlawful or improper, reside in the country, will have a good effect on the country. Similar assurances of co-operation with the Hoover prosperity program have been received from industrial leaders representing some 187,000 workers in Massachusetts.

New Year's Excursion
MONTREAL
Coaches $10 Round Trip
Only
Leaving North Station on Regular Day and Night Trains
Sat. or Sun., Dec. 28 or 29
Tickets Good From
Ayer, Beverly, Boston, Clinton, Fitchburg, Gloucester, Hamilton, Haverhill, Hudson, Ipswich, Lawrence, Lowell, Lynn, Marblehead, Nashua, Newburyport, Peabody, Salem, Waltham, Wrentham, Worcester.
Leave Montreal Wednesday, January 1, on regular trains Passengers must carry identification
BOSTON and MAINE R.R.

Wooden Piers Under Boston Public Library

taken from The task of replacing the wooden piers with steel pillars is a big one and workmen are daily risking their lives in shoring up the foundation while they make the substitution. (Staff photos.)

THE LIBRARIAN

THOSE whose Christmas spirit threatens to break under the onslaughts of shopping crowds may find comfort and solace in a public library. There, one may view charming decorations without being trampled on by hordes of suburban ladies on their way to the hamper-chief counter. The West End branch of our own library has arranged some unusually lovely effects, which keep before the eye and mind the true meaning of Christmas. In the center of the beautiful old building which once was a church is a great Christmas tree, in front of which, facing the visitor as he enters, is a dignified figure of the Madonna, carved from oak, and holding the Christ Child, wrapped in swaddling bands. On each side are tall posts bearing the figures of kneeling angels, each holding a candle. This evening, the branch librarian, Miss Fanny Goldstein, carrying on the tradition of Beacon Hill, will dispense hospitality to all who come. Carols will be sung in the library by a group of carolers led by Dr. Richard Cabot; by the Children's Choir of St. Joseph's Church, in which eleven nationalities are represented, and by the male choir of the Polish Church of the West End, who will sing in their native language. During the intervals between the reading of the groups, library assistants from all over the city likewise will sing carols, accompanied by violin music. Tea will be served and everybody will be welcome. As to the Central Library, compounds of Christmas decorations will agree that the Children's Room has surpassed itself this year. Not only have Mrs. Alice M. Jordan and her assistants arranged wreaths about the fireplace, put up an illuminated tree, and "dressed up" a tree, as the children say, but one of the assistants, Miss Maria Van Eden, designed and made with her own hands an exceptional level table, which has even carved the figures from wood and bestowed them, as well as pointing the background of the day above Bethlehem, with the Star.

On the lower floor, the Information Office has its usual warmth and the light of red candles throwing its beams over a pleasant courtyard, rather than a raucous world. The bulletin board in the back hall of the library, by the employees' entrance, is almost completely hidden by a huge Christmas wreath which expresses the greeting of the director, Charles F. D. Belden, to his staff.

Library Extensions
The Boston Public Library trustees, after a most thorough investigation, are of the opinion that a fixed policy of establishing two branch libraries each year for a period of 20 years should be undertaken at once. The benefits of a method of distributing funds is so evident that it is difficult to understand why some such policy has not been previously followed. "I believe that it is sufficiently sound to justify adoption, and that it will prove a wise and profitable manner of making available its continuance. At the end of the 20-year period the plan adopted for the library would have in effect a standing reserve fund of $1,000,000."

WORKMEN SPEED TASK OF REINFORCING FOUNDATIONS OF BOSTON PUBLIC LIBRARY

SHOWING CONDITION OF PILES UNDER FOUNDATIONS OF BOSTON PUBLIC LIBRARY BEFORE REPAIRS WERE STARTED

The task of reinforcing the foundations of the Boston Public Library is progressing rapidly. The danger is over now, but if the weakening of the piles had not been discovered in time the results would probably have been serious.

The library is on made land and supported on wooden piles. When repairs were being made on the great platform at the entrance, the main foundations at the front were examined. It was found that for some reason the water table was lower than when the building was erected 50 years ago. This had exposed the tops of the piles and these had rotted until in some places they were eight or 10 inches below the stones which were supposed to rest on them.

Recognizing that a genuine emergency existed, an appeal was made to the city authorities for funds which were provided. The piles are in groups. It has been necessary to excavate around each group.

The top of each pile is sawed off down to the water level and a steel column extends up to the level of the original top of the wooden pile. Then a solid block of concrete is formed encasing the steel column and the new top of the pile. The blocks are from 4 to 5 feet thick and from 10 to 16 feet square, making the most substantial sort of foundation.

There is some reason to suppose that the piles in the rear of the building may not be in as bad condition as those in front. However, the condition of each will be examined.

"No harm has been done to the library itself," said Frank H. Chase, reference librarian, in speaking of the damage to the piles. "It was, of course, fortunate we discovered it when we did. I have heard no very satisfactory explanation of why the water table was lowered, but it has been suggested that it may have been due to subway and other construction in the vicinity when a great deal of water was pumped out."

The work on the foundations is only one of numerous repairs the past four years. These have included the complete renovation of the ventilating system, the rewiring of the building and the installation of a new switchboard, the reconstruction of the book railway and the pneumatic tube system, the recreation of the great lanterns at the main entrance, which had been removed because of their unsafe condition, and the installation of automatic sprinklers throughout the basement and adequate fire protection in the binding and printing departments.

The furnaces have been rebuilt, a coal conveyor installed and modern lighting fixtures placed in many departments, including the book stacks. The roofs of the building, both the exterior tiles and the interior condensation roof of metal, have been largely reconstructed, and there have been extensive repairs to the marble floors.

The lecture hall has been renovated with new seating equipment, an improved stage and a projection room with modern apparatus, and a workroom has been provided for the Children's Department.

Boston Public Library Incunabula
The current issue of "More Books," the bulletin of the Boston Public Library, begins the publication of a descriptive catalogue of the fifteenth century printed books in the library. Two years ago the Bulletin published a similar catalogue of the sixteenth century books.

Steel Pillars Replace Rotted Wooden Piers Under Boston Public Library

TOPS OF ROTTED PILES REMOVED IN RECONSTRUCTION

WORKMEN SHORING THE FOUNDATION

Otto Schon is shown looking at some of the rotted wooden piers which were taken from under the Boston Public Library. Workmen are replacing the piers.

The task of replacing the wooden piers with steel pillars is a big one and workmen are daily risking their lives in shoring up the foundation while they make the substitution. (Staff photos.)

THE LIBRARIAN

THOSE whose Christmas spirit threatens to break under the onslaughts of shopping crowds may find comfort and solace in a public library. There, one may view charming decorations without being trampled on by hordes of suburban ladies on their way to the handkerchief counter.

The West End branch of our own library has arranged some unusually lovely effects, which keep before the eye and mind the true meaning of Christmas. In the center of the beautiful old building which once was a church is a great Christmas tree, in front of which, facing the visitor as he enters, is a dignified figure of the Madonna, carved from oak, and holding the Christ Child, wrapped in swaddling bands. On each side are tall posts bearing the figures of kneeling angels, each holding a candle.

This evening, the branch librarian, Miss Fanny Goldstein, carrying on the tradition of Beacon Hill, will dispense hospitality to all who come. Carols will be sung in the library by a group of carolers led by Dr. Richard Cabot; by the Children's Choir of St. Joseph's Church, in which eleven nationalities are represented, and by the male choir of the Polish Church of the West End, who will sing in their native language. During the intervals between the coming of the groups, library assistants from all over the city likewise will sing carols, accompanied by violin music. Tea will be served and everybody will be welcome.

As to the Central Library, thousands of Christmas decorations will appear that the Children's Room has surpassed itself this year. Not only have Miss Alice M. Jordan and her assistant arranged wreaths about the fireplace, put up an illuminated greeting and "discoasted" a tree, as the children say, but one of the assistants, Miss Maria Van Eden, designed and made with her own hands an exceptionally lovely "dolly" which has even carved the figures from wood and fastened them, as well as painting the background of the sky above Bethlehem, with the Star.

On the lower floor, the Information Office has its usual warmth and the light of red candle throwing its beams over a pleasant courtyard, rather than a raucous world. The bulletin board in the back hall of the library, by the employees' entrance, is almost completely hidden by a huge Christmas wreath which expresses the greeting of the director, Charles F. D. Bolen, to his staff.

Library Extensions
The Boston Public Library Trustees, after a most thorough investigation, are of the opinion that a fixed program of establishing two branch libraries a year for a period of 20 years should be undertaken at once. The benefits of this program are many. It is a relief to the city, which has been previously followed by a plan of building new libraries as needed, and it is a sufficient reason for justifying the plan. It is a plan which will prove its value in the long run, so that at the end of the twenty-year period the plan of building new libraries will have been completely replaced by the plan of maintaining and extending the existing ones.

THURSDAY, DEC 19, 1929

FRANK C. BLAISDELL RETIRED FROM LIBRARY

Chief of Issue Department Has Served Boston
54 Years in "Pleasant Career"

FRANK C. BLAISDELL

Frank C. Blaisdell, chief of the issue department in the Boston Public Library, yesterday attained his 70th birthday, and automatically went on the retired list after 54 years of service to the book-reading public of Boston.

Anybody who has had occasion to engage in research activity at the library within the past three decades knows Mr. Blaisdell. Those who are not personally acquainted have probably noticed him at his desk in the delivery room—a quiet, friendly, spectacled, alert, young-appearing department chief.

Although he is still on the very top of his job, the law specifies that he must retire before Dec. 31. He thinks he won't come in to work today, but he will report as usual on Friday and Saturday, just to wind up his affairs after more than half a century of library work. Then, not unwillingly, he will retire. Yesterday he was busy all day long, receiving birthday felicitations and compliments upon his length of service.

Longest on Staff

Mr. Blaisdell has been in the library service 54 years, the oldest member of the library staff in point of service. He has served numerous literary celebrities in his long term as custodian of books, including Henry W. Longfellow, Oliver Wendell Holmes and Mark Twain.

On the morning of Feb. 17, 1876, Mr. Blaisdell was a second-year student in the English High School. On the afternoon of Feb. 17, 1876, his school career was ended. He was a page delivering books in the Public Library, then situated uptown on the present site of the Colonial Theatre.

There has never been a break in his career. Mr. Blaisdell has never known any employment except the library service of the city of Boston. Having reached the age limit, he is retiring on a pension.

Years ago, when he was in the catalogue department at the old building, he arranged to resign and enter the employment of a wool concern. But James Lyman Whitney, then head of that department, later librarian, said: "What am I going to do? Wait a minute!"

Mr. Whitney consulted William W. Greenough, then president of the trustees, and returning, said: "Mr. Greenough doesn't want you to go."

Series of Promotions

So Mr. Blaisdell remained in the library, to receive a series of promotions which some years ago landed him at his present post. He has also for 35 years been chief of the Sunday department, there are about 35 subordinates, and about 150 staff members of the Sunday and evening force have been under his supervision.

Besides working every day, Mr. Blaisdell has for years done extra duty two evenings a week and every Sunday in three.

What use he will make of his leisure he has not wholly decided. After years of confinement travel has allurements for him, and he may journey across the continent to be gone a spell.

Being well and extremely active, he rather thinks he may not go into absolute retirement, but will adjust himself to some part-time occupation in line with his experience.

"I have been anticipating retirement, of course," said Mr. Blaisdell, discussing his coming departure from the library service. "I have been preparing for it. But, in the end, I know it is going to be hard. I don't know if I am leaving so many pleasant associations, and friendly colleagues. I don't suppose one could have a more loyal staff than the young ladies who are serving under me here in the issue department."

"My plans? I have thought about the chance a bit, as any man would. I know that it will not do to let go entirely after more than 54 years' active service."

Pleasant Career

"So if something in the nature of part-time research work comes along I may accept it. I don't know. But first I'm going to see a little of the country."

"It has been a pleasant career. A boy is handicapped in a literary institution like this if he lacks a college training. But growing up with the library, I absorbed what I needed. 'Yes, I leave the service with my own private treasure house of memories.'"

SIXTEEN VETERAN CITY EMPLOYEES PLACED ON RETIREMENT ROLLS

GLOBE—WEDNESDAY, JANUARY 1, 1930

Frank C. Blaisdell (at left), of Boston Public Library, retiring, being presented with a purse of gold by Pierce E. Buckley, chairman of committee.

own private treasure house of memories. "I knew Henry W. Longfellow and Oliver Wendell Holmes. They used to come into the old library. When Emperor Dom Pedro of Brazil visited the library Mr. Winsor appointed me to show him around."

"I have a very distinct recollection of Mark Twain standing right over there in that doorway. Included in my collection of memories are the artists, Mr. Sargent and Mr. Abbey, directing the placing of their paintings in the new building."

"This is a key department, you see. It has the most direct contact with the public. All books are issued here, those that are applied for to be read in the library, as well as those that go out in circulation."

"Reading taste? In my judgment, they have improved somewhat. A large proportion of the applications are for light reading, but the non-fiction percentage is increasing."

One of Mr. Blaisdell's major trials has been the problem of lost books. According to the last figures given out by Librarian Charles F. D. Belden, the loss is about 1200 volumes a year.

Mr. Blaisdell believes that in a majority of cases, the original intention is not to keep the book. A person comes into the delivery room without a card, he says, and takes a book from the open shelf, which contains light reading, intending to bring the volume back, or a student snatches a textbook from Bates Hall which he is not permitted to take out, and is then afraid to return it.

Of the books taken out on cards and never returned, he says, carelessness is the common explanation. Two library messengers have steady employment tracing such stragglers.

Athletic Youngster

The retiring department head at the Boston Public Library had athletic inclinations in his younger days. He is a life member of the Young Men's Christian Union. Fifty-one years ago wearing the colors of the Union Athletic Club, he won the one-mile walk in old Music Hall, covering the distance in 7 minutes 57.1 seconds. He was awarded a gold medal.

Callers at the library notice the spring that is still in Mr. Blaisdell's step as he strides off toward the stacks in quest of a book.

For half a century, too, he has been an ardent baseball fan, and is frequently seen in the grandstand at Fenway Field and Fenway Park. When the World Series is not too far away, he goes to that.

A reader of the English classics most of his life, he says of late years he has had to safeguard his eyes after working hours, and has confined his reading mostly to literary criticism.

For some time, Mr. Blaisdell has been making a collection of picture post cards of libraries all over the world. When his friends go a-traveling, they send library pictures back to him. He intends to have these mounted and presented to the library in a portfolio.

Mr. Blaisdell, who prior to her marriage was for eight years a fellow worker in the Boston Public Library, died six years ago.

Mr. Blaisdell has made his home with his daughter, Mrs. William H. Carter at 41 Ridgmont st., Allston, where there are four grandchildren to keep him young.

The retiring librarian also has two married sons, Wilbur O. Blaisdell of Meriden, Conn., and F. Gardner Blaisdell of New York city, whom he frequently visits.

The latter son is a overseas veteran, 104th Infantry. He was wounded in action. Three years ago the Public Library veteran toured the battlefields of Europe with his war-veteran son.

Sixteen city employees were placed on the retired list under the Boston Retirement act at the close of the business day yesterday. Of the 16, eight are in the Public Works Department. The oldest man to be pensioned was, perhaps, Frank C. Blaisdell of 41 Ridgmont st. Allston, who had been connected with the Public Library in Copley sq. since Feb. 17, 1876. In January, 1909, he was appointed chief of the issue department, the position he held at the time of his retirement.

Before leaving the library, Mr. Blaisdell was presented with a purse of gold by Pierce E. Buckley, chairman of the presentation committee, who spoke of the 53 years' service which Mr. Blaisdell had given to the library.

Following is the list and age of those retired:

Dec. 19, 1929.

BOSTON EVENING AMERICAN

Has Held Post Since '76

Frank C. Blaisdell, veteran Boston Public Library employee, who goes on the retired list New Year's Day, entered the employe of the library in 1876, the day following his graduation from high school, has remained there ever since and knows the contents of the institution "like a book." (Staff photo.)

Vet Library Worker Is 'Regular Fellow'

Is your mental picture of a librarian a musty old crab, nose in a book, who would hold up his hands in holy horror at the idea of anyone "wasting a whole afternoon watching a ball game?" Forget it.

Frank C. Blaisdell, who will retire January 1, 1930, after nearly 54 years' service in the Boston Public Library, can sit with you at either of the big league parks in the city and tell you as each man comes to bat which minor league team he came from, for whom he was traded and his lifetime batting average.

Besides that, he can tell you all about Tommy Bond, John Morrill, George Wright and the other great stars of yesterday, whose names are written in baseball history.

He sat in the stands with Pierce E. Buckley, with whom he has worked for 40 years at the library, on the memorable afternoon at Soldiers Field when Little Dillon, Carlisle Indian, tucked a football up the back of his jersey and ran through the whole Harvard team for a touchdown while they were looking for the ball.

Books? Just ask him about any of the 1,500,000 volumes in the library and he will bring it to you without delay. He knows the contents of them, too.

He entered the library service in 1876, the afternoon after he was graduated from high school. The library was then located on the site of the present Colonial Theatre. There were less than 200,000 volumes in the collection then.

When the Emperor of Brazil visited Boston, Blaisdell was assigned to pilot him through the halls of the library. Henry W. Longfellow, Oliver Wendell Holmes and Mark Twain were visitors to the library during Blaisdell's career.

"Ellen Terry, the famous actress stood in that fireplace and posed for a picture," Mr. Blaisdell said, pointing to the spot from his desk in the circulation room. He has headed the issue department since 1905.

Because he has always kept his mind young and his body healthy, Blaisdell's 70 years rest lightly on his shoulders. He walks spryly about the library, hailing everyone with a cheery wave. They all know him, from the pages to the trustees.

He is going to rest a while after he quits at 6 p. m. December 31. One of his sons, a veteran of the World War, lives in New York, another lives in Connecticut. He makes his home with his daughter at 41 Ridgmont st., Allston. There are several grandchildren.

WEDNESDAY, JANUARY 8, 1930

"Public Library of the Seas" Appeals

Under the chairmanship of Mrs. I. Tucker Burr, the Boston branch of the American Merchant Marine Library Association is again seeking additions and replenishments for the libraries which are placed on merchant ships, lightships, in lighthouses and at coastguard stations. These libraries of seventy-five to eighty books travel all over the world. A library placed on a ship at Boston may be exchanged for another on a ship tied up at a pier in Shanghai, and later be transferred again in mid-Atlantic to a ship bound for South Africa. Every one of these books has been read and reread by these various crews. Naturally they wear out.

Last year such libraries were placed on 1738 ships. Lightships and lighthouses are particularly grateful for the service of the Association. It is impossible to tell how many men read each book, but the Boston port asks for 100,000 volumes. Some of these libraries will be gone six months or a year, others will be returned in a few weeks. Last year Boston took second place among the shipping ports of the United States in point of service by this organization.

This year as formerly, libraries, women's clubs, social organizations, churches, schools, colleges and news papers are cooperating in this patriotic endeavor, which has the highest commendation from President Hoover. Mrs. Burr is aided by Charles F. D. Belden, director of the Boston Public Library, Thomas S. Biddle, Mrs. Theodore G. Bremer, Silvio S. Connel, Frank S. Davis, Mrs. George H. Harding, Mrs. Henry W. Harris, Charles E. Lauriat, Jr., Miss Katherine P. Loring, George H. Lyman, Miss Ellen P. Mason, Mrs. Milton J. Rosenau, Miss Frank R. Shattuck, Henry G. Vaughan, Edwin Webster and Mrs. Stephen M. Webb.

Books may be sent to the nearest public library. Mrs. Burr, 475 Stuart street, Room 903, will be pleased to give further particulars.

BOSTON TRANSCRIPT

JANUARY 8, 1930

"Make-Believe" at Public Library

On Saturday, at 2:30 P. M., there will be given in the lecture hall of the Boston Public Library two acts of the play, "Make-Believe," by A. A. Milne, under the auspices of Community Service of Boston, Inc., and the Len-a-Hand Maquette.

Traveler

JANUARY 8, 1930

WILL GIVE PLAY AT PUBLIC LIBRARY

On Saturday at 2:30 P. M., there will be given in the lecture hall of the Boston Public Library two acts of the play, "Make-Believe," by A. A. Milne, under the auspices of Community Service of Boston, Inc., and the Len-a-Hand Maquette.

Gossip of the Town

Mrs. William L. Putnam, 49 Beacon street, of the Lowell and Putnam of Boston, has 16 grandchildren. Secretary of the Navy Adams, in Boston yesterday to deliver a Chamber of Commerce address, is brief, direct, short and sharply to the point, employing the greatest economy of words in answering all questions put to him. Except when somebody mentions yachting. The navy secretary, who has never been known to waste a minute of his life, has this one vulnerable point and it is always good for a lengthy conversation. Former Mayor Quinn of Cambridge lives out on Fresh Pond Parkway, as everybody knows, in the city that has made him its Mayor for 12 consecutive years—six terms—but not so many know that it is a two-family house, quite in the Calvin Coolidge-Northampton style, and that the rentals in that general neighborhood average in the $60 and $70-a-month figures. The most fashionable part of student life at Harvard, open incidentally to all students, is the Sunday afternoon teas given by President and Mrs. Lowell.

The youngish father-of-a-17-year-old son made him get out of their automobile and walk back to an elderly woman and apologize to her with his hat in his hand for deliberately frightening her by suddenly blowing the automobile horn. The son waited until he was very close to the woman before he warned her. She leaned against a lamp post, white with the terror of the shock, when father and son approached, the latter reluctantly, guiltily and sheepishly. Then after the boy was through with his speech, the father turned on him in full view of a small noon-time crowd on Boylston and Fairfield streets and gave him a hard slap across the face with his open palm. He offered to drive the woman to any place she wished to go, but she declined. "In any case," he said, "you want me or my son here for anything?" Charles F. D. Belden, head of the Boston Library in Copley square, is sensitive about his two middle initials and has been known to insist emphatically on their correct use. But he is so noted for his courtesy and indulgence that in giving folk the low-down on the proper use of the initials his method is to "enlighten" them rather than to "correct." Incidentally, the "P" stands for "Francis" and the "D" for "Dorr."

The oddest bit of information on the Copley Square Library has to do with a bathtub. It is said to be the only library in America with that equipment. In years past, it comes out now, there was a public trustee, stout, busy, hard-working, who simply had to have a bathtub when, after his attention to his own private business affairs, he came to assist in the administration of the Boston library system. Then he came to disregard the bathtub in the summer months. Because he found that the pool that helps to make the inner open-air court of the library so beautiful was excellent for swimming. But, of course, he waited until after the closing of the library at 10 o'clock for this sport in this unique place. Right now the pool serves only a decorative purpose for which the famous architect, Stanford White, originally designed it. The bathtub, however, is a non-decorative but a utilitarian object still. Until very recently some of the trustees had a change of clothes there, tuxedos and such, so that they could attend to library affairs and, without the need for going home to change, get into the right clothes for evening in the library itself. Some how the town's busiest and most successful men are named to trusteeships and library attendants marvel at the way they whip and drive themselves, making just a pace more furious and unrelenting than any they would dare exact from their employees.

Jan 8. 30
EVENING TRANSCRIPT.
Trade Library
in New School

In a letter today to Gordon Abbott, president of the board of trustees of the Public Library, Mayor Curley called attention to the unused library quarters in the Boston Continuation School, Common street, suggesting the opportunity to create a trade school library similar to the one in use in Detroit, where reference books relative to progress in trades and industries might be available to pupils and the public. The mayor asked for a conference.

January 9, 1930
The Boston Post
MAYOR URGES
TRADE LIBRARY
Would Have Books Available to General Public

Creation of an industrial branch library at the new Boston Continuation School at Common street in the downtown district was proposed yesterday by Mayor Curley in a communication to Chairman Gordon Abbott of the Public Library board of trustees.

The Mayor explained that the school authorities established library quarters in the new building but nothing had been done to establish a library service with reference books relative to progress in various trades and mechanical industries.

He urged the opening of a trade school library similar to one in Detroit, which could be made available for the general public as well as the trade school pupils.

BOSTON EVENING TRANSCRIPT
SATURDAY, JANUARY 25, 1930

BUSINESS HISTORY

To the Editor of the Transcript:

A recent article in the Transcript, written by N. S. B. Gras of Stone & Webster, stated "Business men need business history. We know political history, social history and constitutional history, but never business history." With due modesty I would like to inform Mr. Gras that I have been compiling such a collection. The response to my appeal to historic business houses of Boston and vicinity has been most gratifying. Fifty letters sent out asking for a short history with photographs of founders has brought in thirty-eight favorable replies. The firms which have published little booklets have sent their story. Others have sent typewritten sketches with photographs of founders. These have been placed in a scrapbook and will be added to from time to time. The collection when finished will be placed in the Boston Public Library for reference. As compiler of this collection, I wish to thank first Mr. Charles Belden, director of the Boston Public Library, whose loyal support has been most helpful in this work; second, the writers and publishers of those splendid historic manuscripts. The stories, I feel, will help the youth of New England to emulate the sturdy trails of their ancestors and make for a better citizenship.

ABRAHAM FRANCES (SLADE) FITZ
Boston, Jan. 24.

THE BOSTON HERALD
FRIDAY, JANUARY 17, 1930

SHAW AND BOSTON

To the Editor of The Herald:

For a long time I have heard about the culture and book learning of Boston, and I have come to learn that it is a reputation well earned.

Recently, to make myself more conversant with the Shaw plays, two of which are being given by the Theatre Guild players at the Hollis Street Theatre, I went to the Public Library to get copies. I wanted to read them first and then see if the company acted them according to my own visualization. But to my surprise all the Shaw plays had been borrowed from the library with a number of requests listed ahead of mine, which proves that Shaw is a favorite author here, and more convincing proof, that Boston is a city of culture, with a desire for the better things in literature.

FLORENCE E. LEE.
Allston, Jan. 15.

BOSTON IN BRITAIN

BAEDEKER states that perhaps this city is chiefly interesting from its associations with its famous American namesake, but visitors' registers at the church and at hotels show fewer American names than one would expect to find. For that matter it has taken me nearly thirty years after my first visit to England to reach the old town.

Boston Stump is the local name of the church tower. Seldom does one lose a building in its tower as in coming up from the station one sees across the Witham river this great looming pile—substantial, yet graceful and terminating in a lantern worthy of so exalted a place in the sky. When one enters the church there is surprise that it is so large. A recumbent figure in the nave is the representation of Dame Margery Tilney, who "layed the first stone of this goodly steeple of the parish church of Boston in 1309 and layed thereon five pounds sterling."

Wherever one turns in England as in America he finds important evidence of the large wisdom and far sight of George Peabody. He followed old precedents yet in many ways blazed the trails our later millionaires have followed to the advantage of all concerned. In Boston he helped establish a memorial chapel to John Cotton, binding again the dissenter with the mother church without sacrificing the distinctive contribution of each to modern life.

There is an ugly statue almost against the church which recalls a man named Ingram who was drowned in Lake Michigan. In the old market place is a staring sign fifty feet across. "Stump up to keep the Stump up!" Here are busses and autos and side cars and also bicycles and ponies and horses and boys and girls pushing and hauling and carrying heavy loads. Sheep and cattle stand bewildered in this conflict of historical periods and then attempt dashes into Still lane, Shodfriars lane, Dolphin lane and other delightful passages which lead to older and less confusing times.

The front of Shodfriars hall shows timber work and projections of great beauty. Guild hall was once the center of control of Boston's former great wool industry. The first floor kitchens show cooking equipments from a fireplace large enough to hold a roasting ox to an old-time waffle iron.

THE BOSTON HERALD
MONDAY, JANUARY 20, 1930

SHAW'S PLAYS

To the Editor of The Herald:

Florence E. Lee, in the Mail Bag the other day, commented on her experience in trying to obtain a copy of Shaw's plays at the public library. She was surprised to learn that there was quite a number of requests listed ahead of hers.

Several months ago I asked for a copy of Shaw's "Androcles and the Lion" and was informed that three copies were out and one was in the bindery. Two other attempts later on netted me the same results. I haven't given up hope for I am going to ask for that book every time I go in the library and I believe that if my courage lasts long enough I will be rewarded eventually.

I find Shaw stimulating and entertaining—and many, many other Bostonians, evidently, are of the same mind.

Allston, Jan. 18. OSCAR SCOTT.

One opening has a series of spits for lamb, pig and fowl. The old custodian points to a mechanism at the side "Aye and 'e 'ad a 'ead for 'e put that fan in the chimney so that the fumes from the roasts and the fire turned the spits. No old man need turn a crank 'ere!"

Upstairs is the room where stood Brewster, Bradford and other pilgrims on trial for attempting to leave England. The cells in which they were confined are still to be seen. How few in our Boston have ever visited the piece of the railing before which they stood and now in the far end of the delivery room of our public library! The number is even smaller of those who have gone to Trinity church to see near the Clarendon street side the window stone tracery given by the church in the mother city to the church of Phillips Brooks. Have you ever read Longfellow's ballad of the Saxon monk—Botolph, "the saint of seafaring men" who founded the monastery in 654 and left a name

"that, spoken loud and clear
And echoed in another hemisphere Survives the sculptured walls and painted panes."

Thirty-six of the bells in the Stump were cast at Louvain and on the wall is a case of hand bells, but none were ringing while we were there.

Higher up the Witham "runs level with its banks" here it is tidal and goes down to the Welland and on to the Wash, amid fields and fens like those of East Anglia. The coast line beyond in prehistoric times was the western bank of the river we now call the Rhine.

It was election time in England when we were in Boston—"Aye," said an old man as he pointed to the marks of the bullets of Cromwell's soldiers on the church walls—"aye and it may be we need another Cromwell these days, but England will abide though she sad needs mending!"

BOSTON STUMP
Lincolnshire, England

The Witham like a ribbon binds Shire Lincoln to the shore. Locked level with its banks Then tidal joins the Welland and the Wash.
The ancient Rhine bed and the Northern Sea.

Salt-savoured Boston reared a tower
A seaman's lantern landward shining—
North to the King's men,
South to Anglian Commons.
Here Saxon Saint Botolph and English
John Cotton
Shone bright in dark weather;
What men had made a prison cell
Became a pilgrim shrine
Since honoured by a Brewster's stay;
This market saw the early trader's flint and salt.
In these lanes once were Druids,
Tall priests of Woden;
Here Shodfriars sang
And Cromwell's men ran forth to leaden music
Against these walls of stone.
—FRANK A. MANNY.

OLD YORK

CATHEDRAL, Market and Wall stand out as the high lights. Flowers are more a matter of course with the English than with us. Coming from Market were representatives of well-to-do and poor carrying home food supplies and few of them had not invested in lilies of the valley, double buttercups that look like yellow roses, narcissus, pansies, geraniums, daffodils, lupins, daisies large or small, snapdragons, stocks, wall flowers or some others from the profusion of choice.

Flowering trees are on all sides—especially striking when seen from the city walls—laburnum hung in great golden chains on hundreds of trees; then there were white and pink horse-chestnuts and hawthorn and white and colored lilac. Apple blossoms were well past. Along the Ouse river were quantities of wild mustard and hedge parsley, oftentimes of great brilliance and size.

People whom I asked about flowers and birds were usually well informed, as I had found them to be in Ireland and Scotland. A fourteen-year-old boy at Six Mile Cross gave the name of every flower but one we found in a long walk along the road and "on a bonny bank." Sometimes he had the Irish as well as the English names. On the York wall near Bootham Bar a workman on Sunday morning told of his experiences with many kinds of birds—he had heard the cuckoo but once this season, on May 13th.

For stained glass go to York! The "Five Sisters" called us back a score

Reprinted from NORTH SHORE BREEZE
Manchester, Mass., of Aug. 9, 1929

CITY RECORD

OFFICIAL CHRONICLE OF BOSTON MUNICIPAL AFFAIRS.
VOL. 21. SATURDAY, DECEMBER 14, 1929. No. 50

BOSTON LIBRARY DEPARTMENT HAS STRIKING GROWTH IN PAST FOUR YEARS UNDER MAYOR NICHOLS—TREASURES AND ART PIECES PROD ROOMS—FOUNDATIONS RE, LIVES AND VOLUMES.

QUARE, SHOWING HOW PILES UPON THAT SECTION OF BUILDING IN Y.

of times and window after window gives a sense of radiant restfulness. Cleaning the windows is going on—it costs several thousand pounds to take out, clean and replace a single large window 78 by 30 feet which in the year 1400 cost only sixty pounds.

Seldom are epitaphs so well worth reading—some written two hundred years after Chaucer's still have his charm. There is a strange sense of nearness to Essex county immigrants when one reads from the stone what they must have read before they left the old home.

The war memorial chapels are gaudy and very unsatisfactory—the striking colors of their decorations startle the observer. Even the Dean who was responsible for them states that he will go down in history as the man who ruined York Cathedral! —F. A. M.

AN AMERICAN GIFT TO SCOTLAND

ON the most beautiful street in the world—Prince's street, Edinburgh—looking down on the loveliest of gardens with the Castle and the High street far above and Calton hill beyond, stands the Scott monument—possibly the most satisfying structure of remembrance we have. In this setting Americans decided to set up a statue to celebrate Scotch character. It seems presumptuous, but the undertaking has been successful and the new work but makes the old more lovely still. A highlander in kilts leans forward, every sense alert; yet he has in his face an expression of what our fumbling words call second sight.

"The call—1914—a tribute from men and women of Scottish Blood and Sympathies in the United States of America to Scotland."

"A People that Jeopardied their Lives unto the Death in the High Places of the Field." JUDGES V. 18.

"If it be Life that Waits
I shall live forever unconquered;
If Death, I shall die at last strong in my pride and free."
—R. TAIT MCKENZIE*, 1923-7.

*"The Diver" is a fine example of Dr. McKenzie's work, standing in the University Club at Boston. —F. A. M.

serious attention from Mayor Nichols of this study of the needs and requirements of the library but there have been for provided appropriations amounting

100,000, between the trustees of the library—Baker Library of the Graduate School oratory, also the establishment and main-

1 improvements at the Central Library, treasures in the library; also $200,000 showed the building in serious danger. has been the agreement made by the 7, in 1927, by which the Baker Library of the Boston Public Library. Under-ries are placed at the disposal of every ory of business have been transferred-ks of the Central Library and consoli-

(Continued on page 1759.)

Jan 8, 30
EVENING TRANSCRIPT.
Trade Library
in New School

In a letter today to Gordon Abbott, president of the board of trustees of the Public Library, Mayor Curley called attention to the unused library quarters in the Boston Continuation School, Common street, suggesting the opportunity to create a trade school library similar to the one in use in Detroit, where reference books relative to progress in trades and industries might be available to pupils and the public. The mayor asked for a conference.

January 9, 1930
The Boston Post
MAYOR URGES
TRADE LIBRARY

Would Have Books Available to General Public

Creation of an industrial branch library at the new Boston Continuation School at Common street in the downtown district was proposed yesterday by Mayor Curley in a communication to Chairman Gordon Abbott of the Public Library board of trustees. The Mayor explained that the school authorities established library quarters in the new building but nothing had been done to establish a library service with reference books relative to progress in various trades and mechanical industries. He urged the opening of a trade school library similar to one in Detroit, which could be made available for the general public as well as the trade school pupils.

BOSTON EVENING TRANSCRIPT
SATURDAY, JANUARY 25, 1930

BUSINESS HISTORY

To the Editor of the Transcript:

A recent article in the Transcript, written by N. S. B. Gray of Stone & Webster, stated "Business men need business history. We know political history, social history and constitutional history, but never business history." With due modesty I would like to inform Mr. Gray that I have been compiling such a collection. The response to my appeal to historic business houses of Boston and vicinity has been most gratifying. Fifty letters sent out asking for a short history with photographs of founders has brought in thirty-eight favorable replies. The firms which have published little booklets have sent their story. Others have sent typewritten sketches with photographs of founders. These have been placed in a scrapbook and will be added to from time to time. The collection when finished will be placed in the Boston Public Library for reference. As compiler of this collection, I wish to thank first Mr. Charles Beiden, director of the Boston Public Library, whose loyal support has been most helpful in this work; second, the writers and publishers of those splendid historic manuscripts. The stories, I feel, will help the youth of New England to emulate the sturdy trails of their ancestors and make for a better citizenship.

ADRIENNE FRANCES (SLADE) FITZ
Boston, Jan. 24.

THE BOSTON HERALD

FRIDAY, JANUARY 17, 1930

SHAW AND BOSTON

To the Editor of The Herald:

For a long time I have heard about the culture and book learning of Boston, and I have come to learn that it is a reputation well earned. Recently, to make myself more conversant with the Shaw plays, two of which are being given by the Theatre Guild players at the Hollis Street Theatre, I went to the Public Library to get copies. I wanted to read them first and then see if the company acted them according to my own visualization. But to my surprise all the Shaw plays had been borrowed from the library with a number of requests listed ahead of mine, which proves that Shaw is a favorite author here and more convincing proof that Boston is a city of culture, with a desire for the better things in literature.

FLORENCE E. LEE.

Albion, Jan. 15.

THE BOSTON HERALD

MONDAY, JANUARY 20, 1930

SHAW'S PLAYS

To the Editor of The Herald:

Florence E. Lee, in the Mail Bag the other day, commented on her experience in trying to obtain a copy of Shaw's plays at the public library. She was surprised to learn that there was quite a number of requests listed ahead of hers.

Several months ago I asked for a copy of Shaw's "Androcles and the Lion" and was informed that three copies were out and one was in the bindery. Two other attempts later on netted me the same results. I haven't given up hope for I am going to ask for that book every time I go in the library and I believe that if my courage lasts long enough I will be rewarded eventually.

I find Shaw stimulating and entertaining—and many, many other Bostonians, evidently, are of the same mind. Albion, Jan. 18. OSCAR SCOTT.

CITY RECORD

OFFICIAL CHRONICLE OF BOSTON MUNICIPAL AFFAIRS.

VOL. 21.

SATURDAY, DECEMBER 14, 1929.

No. 50

BOSTON LIBRARY DEPARTMENT HAS STRIKING GROWTH IN PAST FOUR YEARS UNDER MAYOR NICHOLS. TREASURES AND ART PIECES PROTECTED BY NEWLY REMODELED FIREPROOFED ROOMS. FOUNDATIONS DISCOVERED TO BE ENDANGERING STRUCTURE, LIVES AND VOLUMES.

PHOTO OF VIEW UNDER FOUNDATION OF PUBLIC LIBRARY, COPLEY SQUARE, SHOWING HOW PILES UPON WHICH FOUNDATION RESTED HAD ROTTED AWAY, LEAVING THAT SECTION OF BUILDING IN DANGER OF COLLAPSE. MENACING LIVES OF ALL USING LIBRARY.

One of the departments of municipal government receiving most serious attention from Mayor Nichols during his administration has been the Library Department. As a result of this study of the needs and requirements of the department not only has there been a steady growth of the work of the library but there have been several outstanding events as outgrowth. To make these possible the Mayor provided appropriations amounting to $450,000.

Among these was the agreement, effected with the aid of Mayor Nichols, between the trustees of the library and the President and Board of Fellows of Harvard University, whereby the Baker Library of the Graduate School of Business Administration has been made a branch of the Boston Public Library, also the establishment and maintenance in the downtown district of a business branch.

Under Mayor Nichols there has been appropriated for fireproofing and improvements at the Central Library, among them providing for better protection for the valuable art and literary treasures in the library; also $200,000 for foundation improvements at the central building, investigation of which showed the building in serious danger.

Perhaps the most significant accomplishment, investigation of which showed the building in serious danger, of the library with the President and Fellows of Harvard University, in 1927, by which the Baker Library of the Graduate School of Business Administration has been made a branch of the Boston Public Library. Under this agreement the resources and facilities of this greatest of business libraries are placed at the disposal of every citizen of Boston. Thousands of volumes of material bearing on the history of business have been transferred from the Central Library to the Baker Library, relieving pressure in the stacks of the Central Library and consolidating rare material where it will be most useful.

Continued on page 1, 30.

In a left
president of Public Libr
tion to t
the Boston street, sug
create a m
the one in ence books
and indust pupils and
for a conf

The MAY TRA Would
able 1

Creation library at t
School at C town distr
by Mayor to Chalmers
the library
The May authorities in the new been done with refe progress in cal industr
He agree school libr which coul general pu school pup

BOSTON
SATURDAY.

BT
To the Edit
A recent written by Webster, a business hi history, soci
history, bu
With due m
Mr. Gras t such a coll
appeal to Boston and fying. Fifty a short his founders ha
vorable repl published in story. Oth sketches w
These have
and will be The collect placed in th
reference.
I wish to th
director of whose loyal ful in this publishers manuscripts help the yo late the stur
and make for a better citizenship.
ANDREW FRANKS (SLADE) FITZ
Boston, Jan. 24.

1758

10 Boston, fair City enthroned like a radiant queen,
From thy hills looking down on the ship-
peering plain of the ocean,
May thy future be bright, thy skies beam
with light all serene, Assured by thy sons and thy daughters'
unselfish devotion!"
From Boston Centennial Poem by NATHAN HASKELL DOLE.

CITY RECORD.

Published weekly under legislative act by the City of Boston, Massachusetts.

FRANK H. CUSHMAN, Editor, Room 73, City Hall.
JUSTICE H. JONES, JR., Associate Editor.
EDWARD F. O'DOWD, Business Agent, Room 73,
City Hall.

Entered as second class matter at Boston Post Office.

By Subscription . . . . . $2.00 Per Year
Single Copies . . . . . 10 Cents

STREET AGENCIES.

Pharmacist Newsstand, Court Square, front of City Hall Annex.
Old South Newsstand, Old South entrance to subway.

IN ADVANCE.

A rate of $2 per inch of 12 lines (not solid) has been established for such advertisements as under the law must be printed in the City Record. Advertising and other copy must be on hand by Thursday of each week to insure its publication in the Saturday issue.
Copies for sale at the Statistics Department, Room 73, City Hall.

MUNICIPAL CALENDAR.

Meeting of the City Council Monday,
December 16, at 2 p. m.
A regular meeting of the School Committee of the City of Boston will be held in the Administration Building, 15 Beacon street, on Monday, December 16, 1929, at 7 o'clock p. m.
Meetings of the Transit Department are held on Monday and Thursday of each week at 11 a. m.
Board of Zoning Adjustment. Public hearings and executive meetings are held on the first Friday of each month,
Room 30, City Hall, at 2 p. m.

MUNICIPAL SERVICE.

Complaints, inquiries or suggestions regarding the work of municipal departments should be made in writing to the officials directly in charge. The failure of such official to make reply within a reasonable length of time should be brought to the attention of the Mayor.
Communications should be directed as follows:
To THE BOARD OF STREET COM-MISSIONERS, Room 401, City Hall Annex, for information relative to the laying out, relocation, widening and the discontinuance of highways; the taking of real assessments of betterments for streets and sewers; the plotting of undeveloped area for streets and the opening of private ways; the granting of licenses for the storage or sale of merchandise in public streets; the making of specific re-

CITY RECORD.

pairs in public streets; the naming of public streets; the planting and removal of trees in public ways; the issuing of licenses for the storage of gasoline, oil and other inflammable substances or explosive compounds; the use of the public ways for any permanent, or temporary obstruction or projection on, under or over the same, including the location of conduits, poles and posts for telephone, telegraph, street railway or illuminating purposes, signs, marquis, bay windows, coal holes and vaults.

To THE BOSTON TRAFFIC COMMISSION, 151 Berkeley street, for information relative to regulation of vehicular street traffic on all or any streets, ways, highways, roads and parkways under the control of the City of Boston, the issuing of all permits in connection therewith.

To THE COMMISSIONER OF PUBLIC WORKS, Room 511, City Hall Annex, for information as to the watering, cleaning, lighting and repairing of streets, the construction and care of sewers and catchbasins, the operation of the ferries, the maintenance of bridges and drawbridges and the removal of ashes and offal.

To Room 604, City Hall Annex, for information relative to the supplying or metering of water and the water charges of the city.

To THE HEALTH DEPARTMENT, Room
1107, City Hall Annex, for information relative to the inspection of milk, vinegar, meat, fish and vegetables, the issuing of permits for stables, slaughter houses, etc., smoke nuisances, the existence of contagious diseases, of public health nuisances.

To THE BOARD OF PARK COM-MISSIONERS, 33 Beacon street, for information as to the care of the Common,
Public Garden, Franklin Park, Franklin
Field, Commonwealth avenue, Back Bay
Fens, Marine Park, and the small parks

MORTALITY REPORT.

For the week ending Dec. 7, 1929.
Population estimated, July, 1929,
United States Census estimate, 805,100;
number of deaths (stillbirths excluded):
Residents, 180; nonresidents, 33; total, 213.
Death rate per 1,000 of population:
All deaths, 13.75; nonresidents deducted, 11.62.

REPORTABLE DISEASES—CASES AND DEATHS.

Diseases.	Cases and Deaths— Reported Weeks Ended Dec. 7, 1929.	Cases and De- aths— Reported Weeks Ended Dec. 8, 1929.
Anterior poliomyelitis	1	1
Diphtheria	24	1
Enteropituitary	1	1
Influenza	1	1
Measles	1	1
Measles-pneumonia	1	1
Pneumonia lobar	1	1
Scarlet fever	1	1
Tuberculosis-pulmonary	1	1
Tuberculosis-other forms	1	1
Epidemic fever	1	1
Whooping cough	1	1

* Residents and nonresidents included.

Dec 11

Dec 11

CITY RECORD.

1759

GROWTH OF BOSTON LIBRARY DEPARTMENT IN PAST FOUR YEARS.
(Continued from page 1757.)

ANOTHER VIEW OF CONDITION OF PILING UNDER LIBRARY, THE REPAIRING OF WHICH IS BEING DONE UNDER ORDERS OF MAYOR NICHOLS.

Business Library Down Town.

This agreement with Harvard, which provided for the cooperation of library and university in the establishment and maintenance of a business library in downtown Boston, has been crowned by the acceptance by Mayor Nichols of the offer of Mr. Louis L. Kirstein, a trustee of the library, in 1928, to erect in memory of his father, a memorial library building for the use of the long-desired downtown business branch. The abandoned police station in City Hall avenue was transferred by the Mayor and City Council to the trustees of the library during the present year, and an attractive building has been erected on the site, which is ideal for the purpose.
Ten thousand dollars have already been expended in the purchase of books for the business branch, and preparations have been made for its opening early in 1930.
The Central Library Building has undergone extensive repairs during the past four years as the result of the close study given to its needs by Mayor Nichols.
These have included the complete renovation of the ventilating system, 1926; the rewiring of the building, and the installation of a new switch board, 1927; the reconstruction of the book railway, 1928, and the pneumatic tube system, 1929.
The recreation of the great lanterns at the main entrance, which had been removed because of their unsafe condition, 1926;

the installation of automatic sprinklers throughout the basement and of adequate fire protection in the building and Printing Departments, 1928; the rebuilding of the furnace and the installation of a coal conveyor, 1928; and the renovation of the heating and lighting of the building with the installation in many departments including the book stacks, of modern adequate lighting fixtures.

The roofs of the building, both the exterior tiles and the interior condensation roof of metal, have been largely reconstructed and there have been extensive repairs to the marble floors. The lecture hall has been completely refitted with new seating equipment, an improved stage, and a projection room with modern apparatus for showing both talking slides and moving pictures. In connection with this work, a work room has been provided for the Children's Department.

Preservation of Ancient Manuscripts.

In many rooms of the library building has been laid, and the fountain basin in the Court, which was showing decks, was rebuilt in 1929. The mural paintings by Ashby and Pavis de Char-vannes have been cleaned during the present year. An addition to the memorials in the library was made last summer by the erection of a tablet in memory of Thomas Sergeant Perry on the wall of the Court.

The most conspicuous improvement to the building has been the reconstruction of the North Gallery, the Barton-Tucknor Room and the Brown Music Room, which is now in progress. Plans for the approximate cost of $250,000 made by the Mayor and City Council in 1927. These three rooms, being made safe for the proper housing of the object treasures of the library, by means of steel equipment.
The North Gallery, in which most of the special collections of the library are housed, was completed in October, 1929, and gives the library a fitting home for its rare books. The Barton-Tucknor Room is now being reconstructed as the headquarters of the Music Division, and the former Brown Music Room is to be transformed into a treasure room, where those books which form the chief pride of the library will be properly guarded with adequate provision for their exhibition.
These rooms set a new standard of attractiveness and efficiency for the whole library.

In a letter president of U Public Library tion to the the Boston Co street, suggests create a trade the one in us ence books rel and Industrie pupils and the for a conferen

The I MAYO
TRAD
Would H
able to

Creation of library at the School at Con town district by Mayor Cu to Chairman C ilic Library boi The Mayor i authorities cal in the new b been done to r with referen progress in var cal industries. He urged i school library which could b general public school pupils.

BOSTON EV
SATURDAY.

BUST

To the Editor:
A recent ar written by N. Webster, stat business histo history, social history, but With due mod Mr. Gras tha such a collect appeal to his Boston and vi flying. Fifty i a short histo founders has vorable replie published littl story. Other sketches with These have b and will be a The collectio placed in the reference. At I wish to thir director of t whose loyal s ful in this ve publishers o manuscripts. help the youth into the sturdy and make for a better citizenship.
ARTHUR FRANCES (SLADE) FITZ
Boston, Jan. 24.

1780

CITY RECORD.

Dec. 14

ROTATING PILING ENDANGERS BUILDING.

During the present year the discovery was made that the piles on which the library was supported had rotted badly as a result of the lowering of the water table. This condition presented an emergency which was promptly met. Funds were provided for the remedy of this serious condition, and foundations of steel and concrete are rapidly replacing the old piles, many of which had ceased to give effective support to the building.

During the four years under review the invested funds of the library have been increased by annual gifts of $1,000 to the fund created by Louis E. Kirstein; and by the creation of new funds of $25,000 in memory of J. J. Storow for the purchase of Italian books (1927); of $5,000 under the will of Alfred Hemenway (1928); and of $2,000 under the will of Gardner O. North (1928); and of $1,000 as a memorial to Guilford S. Reed.

The collections of the library have shown satisfactory growth during the past four years, although there have been no large gifts of books. Among noteworthy accessions have been a considerable number of rare books for the Bowditch collection, selected with the aid of Dr. Harlow Shapley of the Harvard Observatory; 5,000 lantern slides to round out the circulating collection of this material; and the library of Prof. William P. Trent of Columbia University, purchased during the present year.

This library is notable for its material bearing on the life and work of Daniel Defoe, of which it contains perhaps the best collection in existence. Among the significant items are first editions of every one of Defoe's novels, with a single exception; a set of the "Review" liner than that in the British Museum; and numerous tracts believed to be unique. This collection forms a worthy addition to the resources of the library for scholars.

BRANCH SYSTEM IMPROVEMENTS.

The buildings of the branch system of the library have been considerably improved during the period, although no new branch has been opened. At the request of the Board of Trustees and the Examining Committee a survey of the city was undertaken by the Branch Department in 1928 and maps and guides prepared for the sections served by the thirty-one branch libraries; the results of this survey, applied to large maps of the city, will form the basis for future branch extension. Mention has already been made of the affiliation of the Baker Library of Business with the Boston Public Library and of the new Kirstein Memorial Library, the two lower floors of which will be operated as a business branch and the upper floor as an ordinary branch library for adults.

In 1926 the old Warren Street Branch was given up and its work transferred to new quarters provided in the Memorial High School Building; the activity of this branch, now known as the Memorial Branch, has greatly expanded in its new location. The Fellows Athenaeum building was completely remodeled in 1926, making it modern in every respect. In 1927 a Children's Room was added to the Dorchester Branch, and in the following year the City Point Branch obtained a new adult reading room and the Boylston Station a new Children's Room. The present year has seen the securing of new quarters for the branches at Allston, Orient Heights and Mt. Bowdoin, all three of which had been badly cramped for room.

DETAIL OF ONE OF ALCOVES OF NEW BARTON-TICKNOR ROOM. WORK WAS COMPLETED THIS YEAR.

ANOTHER VIEW OF TREASURE ROOM AS IT IS IN PROCESS OF RECONSTRUCTION.

Dec. 14

CITY RECORD.

1761

VIEW OF NEW BARTON-TICKNOR ROOM AS RECONSTRUCTED UNDER MAYOR NICHOLS IN ORDER TO PRESERVE THE TREASURED VOLUMES AND ARTICLES FOR THE PUBLIC.

TREASURE ROOM, CENTRAL LIBRARY, IN PROCESS OF RECONSTRUCTION FOR BETTER PRESERVATION OF ARTICLES OF VALUE.

An important event of the period under survey was the appearance in a new form, with the title "More Books," of the library's "Bulletin." This periodical, which is issued monthly, has received praise from many sources; in addition to the list of accessions, each number contains a leading article on some library topic of importance, and notes on current literature.

EDUCATIONAL ACTIVITIES.

In 1927 an important step was taken toward improving the personnel of the library by the organization of a training class, in which both employees of the library and citizens of Boston applying for employment can receive proper training. The course covers one year, and the class usually contains about twenty students; the results of its work have been valuable both in the provision of new personnel and in the setting of an improved standard for promotion.

In 1928, as a part of the library's work in adult education, a room on the ground floor of the Central Library was appropriated to the use of a reader's adviser, who has done valuable work in guiding those who wish to follow definite courses of reading. This is an important extension of the educational activities of the library. In the fall of the same year, the library, through its director, took part in the selection of titles for the catalogue of "Better Books," issued by the Boston booksellers. This catalogue has continued to be issued quarterly, and through it the library is enabled to exercise some influence on the taste of book buyers.

The lecture courses of the library, which have been continued for thirty years as a free service to the people of Boston, have been amplified by the addition of a Sunday evening course, consisting almost entirely of musical programs. This Sunday evening series, which had its inception in the concerts of chamber music generously provided by Mrs. Elizabeth Sprague Coolidge, reached its full growth in 1927; since that year the library has offered a program on every Sunday evening from October to May, in addition to the long-established courses on Thursday evenings and Sunday afternoons.

GROWTH RAPID IN PAST FOUR YEARS.

In the year 1927 the library observed its seventy-fifth anniversary by a historical exhibit illustrating the growth of the institution. This growth was never more rapid and healthy than during the past four years. Complete figures for 1929 are not available, but the following figures covering the three years from December 31, 1925, to December 31, 1928, are significant: Circulation of books in 1925, 3,129,781; in 1928, 3,899,286; accessions during 1925, 85,163; during 1928, 96,163; volumes bound in 1925, 54,661; in 1928, 71,363; inter-library loans in 1925, 1,701; in 1928, 2,215. At the end of 1925 the library system contained 1,363,515 volumes; by the end of 1928 this number had increased to 1,442,892. At the close of 1925, 129,127 persons held library cards; in three years this number grew to 148,671. It is safe to say that the progress apparent from these figures has been well maintained during the year 1929.

APPROPRIATIONS FROM TAXES

	Regular	Special
1920-21	$661,130	$7,080
1921-22	717,120
1922-23	741,993
1923-24	779,935
1924-25	828,367
1925 (11 mos.)	863,772
1926	1,000,981
1927	1,104,595
1928	1,138,004
1929	1,171,544

LOANS AUTHORIZED

1920-21
1921-22	$65,000	Branch Library, West Roxbury 1922-23
1923-24	$50,000	Central Building, Allston, Lequipping, etc.
1924-25
1925 (11 mos.)
1926	$250,000	Central Building, Improvements, etc.
1927
1928	$200,000	Central Building, Foundation Improvements, etc.
1929

54
Jan 8. 30
EVENING Trade L
i

In a letter president of the Public Library attention to the the Boston Con street, suggest create a trade the one in use ence books rela and industries pupils and the for a conference

Jan
The MAYO
TRADI

Would H
able to

Creation of library at the School at Con town district by Mayor Cu te Chairman C the Library be The Mayor authorities es in the new been done to with referen progress in va cal industries. Ho arged school library which could t general publ school pupils.

BOSTON E SATURDAY.

BUS

To the Editor
A recent a written by N Webster, sta business hist history, social history, but With due mod Mr. Gras th such a collec appeal to hi Boston and v fying. Fifty a short hist founders has vorable repli published lit story. Other sketches with These have and will be e The collecti placed in the reference. A I wish to the director of whose loyal ful in this w publishers manuscripts help the youth late the sturdy trails of their ancestors and make for a better citizenship.
ADELINE FRANCES (SLADE) FITZ
Boston, Jan. 24.

THE BOSTON HERALD
FRIDAY, JANUARY 17, 1930
SHAW AND BOSTON

THE BOSTON HERALD
MONDAY, JANUARY 20, 1930
SHAW'S PLAYS
The Herald

1762

CITY RECORD.

LIST OF GARAGE PETITIONS FOR HEARING BEFORE THE BOARD OF STREET COMMISSIONERS.
MONDAY, DECEMBER 23.

NAME.	Location.	Ward.	Petitioning for.
G. N. Tolson.	12 Eldridge road.	19.	One car.
Charles V. Benjamin.	50 and 61 Prospect street.	20.	Two cars.
William D. Copeland.	11 Colinton road.	21.	Two cars.
Bernard Goldberg.	38 Claymore road.	21.	Two cars.
Mary Grady.	20 Albion place.	2.	Two cars.
R. Earl Hoffman.	85 and 87 Rowe street.	19.	Two cars.
Catherine A. Jester.	222 East Cottage street.	7.	Two cars.
Ervin L. Kelley.	16 Frost avenue.	16.	Two cars.
James F. Kilduff et al.	35 Greenwood avenue.	18.	Two cars.
Mary I. McGuinnis.	19 Rosemore road.	11.	Two cars.
John Larson.	106 Kittredge street.	18.	Maintain one car.
W. E. Nicholas.	80 Chiswick road.	20.	Maintain one car.
Joseph Gochberg.	56 Torrey street.	17.	Three cars.
Boston Transit Mixers, Incorporated.	15 Harrison street, etc.	19.	Business garage.
Dorchester Real Estate Corporation.	1010 Morton street, etc.	17.	3,000 gallons gasoline.
Anna Bell Shea.	109 and 111 Western avenue.	22.	3,000 gallons gasoline, 150 oil.
Eva B. Zinner.	1-81 John street.	19.	4,000 gallons gasoline and oil.
Thomas Machine Company.	27 Cambridge street.	1.	Acetylene and oxygen.
Arthur Duto.	6 Basile street.	19.	500 pounds celluloid.
Cooperative Novelty Shoe Company.	90 Wareham street.	8.	Rubber cement, etc.

PROPOSALS ADVERTISED.

Bids have been asked for by advertisement in the City Record for the following departments. The attention of contractors and others is especially called to the closing time of the receipt of such proposals. This will be published weekly.

FIRE DEPARTMENT.

Advertisers for proposals for laundering linen of the Boston Fire Department for the year 1930. Surety bond will be required in an amount equivalent to 40 per cent of the contract price. Blank forms for proposals may be obtained at the office of the Commissioner, 60 Bristol street. Bids, accompanied by certified check in the amount of $200, to be filed at the same office. Duplicate bid, without check, to be filed with the City Auditor.

Bids close Wednesday, December 18, 12 m.

HOSPITAL DEPARTMENT.

Advertisers for proposals for new engine generator set in the power house. Surety bond will be required in an amount equivalent to 45 per cent of the contract price. Blank forms for proposals may be obtained at the office of the architects, James H. Ritchie and Associates, 100 Arlington street. Bids, accompanied by certified check in the amount of $5,000, to be filed at the same office. Duplicate bid, without check, to be filed with the City Auditor.

Bids close Tuesday, December 17, at 12 m.

PUBLIC WORKS DEPARTMENT (Sanitary Service).

Advertisers for proposals for removing manure from the city stables. Surety bond will be required in an amount of $500. Blank forms for proposals may be obtained at the office of the Public Works Department, Room 508, City Hall Annex, Boston. Bids, accompanied by certified check in the amount of $200, to be filed at the same office. Duplicate bid, without check, to be filed with the City Auditor.

Bids close Wednesday, December 18, 12 m.

PUBLIC WORKS DEPARTMENT (Sewer Service).

Advertisers for proposals for sewerage works in Weld Park Outlet, Section No. 2, in West Roxbury Parkway, between Centre street and Parkvale road, West Roxbury. Surety bond will be required in an amount equivalent to 50 per cent of the contract price. Blank forms for proposals may be obtained at the office of the Public Works Department, Room 508, City Hall Annex, Boston. Bids, accompanied by certified check in the amount of $1,500, to be filed at the same office. Duplicate bid, without check, to be filed with the City Auditor.

Bids close Thursday, December 19, 12 m.

DEPARTMENT CHANGES.

The following changes in the number, rating and compensation of the city employees have been made during the week ending Thursday, December 12:

ASSESSING DEPARTMENT.

Thomas A. Collins, clerk, on leave of absence without pay from July 1, has been reinstated at $1,900 a year.

BUDGET DEPARTMENT.

Edward C. Wade, secretary, has been given an increase of salary from $2,900 a year to $3,000 a year.

HEALTH DEPARTMENT.

Approval has been given for the permanent appointment of Maurice G. Fitzgibbon as caretaker in the Charles-ton Health Unit at $5 a day.

Approval has been given for the permanent appointment of Elizabeth E.

Costello as cook's helper, at $17 a week to be employed at the new health unit.

Approval has been given for the permanent appointment of Ellen J. Deane as helper to the cook, to assist in preparation of food for undernourished children, on the roof of the East Boston Health Unit, at $17 a week.

Approval has been given for the permanent appointment of Samuel Silberman as caretaker in a health unit at a day.

Approval has been given for the continued temporary appointment of Gertrude M. Kannon, nurse, at $1,400 a year for a period of three months, effective December 17.

Approval has been given for the permanent appointment of Harry T. Flannery as assistant chemist at $1,800 a year.

Approval has been given for the transfer of Michael H. Murray from collector, at $5 a day, permanent, caretaker in the new health unit at a day, permanent.

Approval has been given for an increase in compensation for Joseph McLoe, caretaker, from $5 a day to $2,000 a year.

Approval has been given for the permanent appointment of John J. Delaney as rat catcher at $5 a day.

HOSPITAL DEPARTMENT.

The following persons have been employed at the Boston City Hospital during the week ending Thursday, December 12:

To Fill Vacancies.

Permanent.—Katherine Carpenter, cleaner, $15 a week; Catherine Falk, ward assistant, $12.50 a week; Theobald, ward porter, $24 a week; Nat Rosenthal, male nurse, $30 a week; J. J. Dettlough, orderly, $16.50 a week; Mildred Sonia, ward assistant, $17 a week; Joseph Mahoney, electrician helper, $30 a week; Mary Woods, ward maid, $15 a week.

Temporary.—Ellie Yeo, ward maid, $12.50 a week; Edward McManis, orderly, $13 a week; Isabelle McCarr, chambermaid, $15 a week; Ada Bell, victress, $15 a week; Harold D. elevatorman, $15 a week; John Conolly, Mark O'Shea, house cleaners, a week.

Special Nurses:

Harold Plenty, Loretta O'Hern, M. Grady, Mary Deas, Isabelle Walker, Julia Cooney, Dorothy Haines, C. Miller, Esther Tuxbury, $12 a week.

The following changes in salaries have occurred:

Walter Ward, center orderly at $15 a week; John Conway, male nurse at $30 to instructor of orderlies at $35 a week; Mary Grady, head nurse at $19.50 a week; Mary L. head nurse at $100 a month to $230 a week; Marion Hampshire, nurse at $100 a month to $120 a week; Alice S. nurse at $90 a month to $20.71 a week; Ann Sullivan, nurse at $100 a month to $23.01 a week; Margaret H. Sullivan, head nurse at $85 a month to $120 a week; Rose Golden, technician at $15 a week; Margaret Maisov, dress at $17 to $18 a week.

South Department.

Floor Nurses.—Margaret Denney, Sarah O'Donnell, Anna O'Leary, McDuffie, Mary MacKay, Winifred P. Helene Brady, $125 a month; M. Dietsch, head nurse, $85 a month.

Dec

A Book From the Governor to the Seamen

Commonwealth Presents Gift to Merchant Marine Library Association Officers at State House
Left to Right—Charles F. D. Belden, Mrs. Theodore G. Breuer, Governor Allen, Mrs. I. Tucker Burr and Mrs. Francis E. Shattery

Boston Daily Globe

SATURDAY, FEB 8, 1930

URGES INFORMATION
FOR 1930 VISITORS

Frank C. Brown Predicts
10,000,000 Tourists

Library Club Hears Librarians
Discuss Varied Topics

Declaring that approximately 10,000,000 people will visit Massachusetts and New England this year, Frank C. Brown, Boston architect and author, opened the afternoon session of the Massachusetts Library Club at the Boston Public Library yesterday with a talk on "The Tercentenary and the Public Library."

Mr. Brown pointed out that it was up to New England to satisfy these visitors by giving them information on local history, customs and manners of Puritan New England.

"No other group can be of such help in giving information," declared Mr. Brown, who suggested that the libraries arrange special displays on their shelves of books relative to the tercentenary celebration.

Miss Mary L. Guyton, supervisor of adult alien education, spoke on "Cooperation of Library and School in Work with the Foreign Born." She was followed by Mrs. John Fignic, librarian, Plymouth Public Library, on

"Important Books on the Slavonic Peoples with Special Reference to the Russians."

Dr. William J. Rose, department of sociology, Dartmouth College, talked on "The Slavonic Peoples with Special Reference to the Poles." This program was arranged through Miss Edna Phillips, library adviser on work with foreigners of the Massachusetts division of public libraries.

There was on display a series of dolls representing the background of Massachusetts foreign-born residents, and the ushers were dressed in national costume.

Frank H. Chase, reference librarian, Boston Public Library, spoke on the "Acquisition and Use of Reference Material." He was followed by Miss Barbara H. Smith, librarian, Levi Heywood Memorial Library, Gardner, on "First Choices for the Limited Budget."

Leslie T. Little, librarian, Waltham Public Library, closed the morning session with a talk on "The Subscription Book Situation."

Pres. George H. Evans, librarian, Somerville Public Library, presided. Pres. Evans is also chairman of the president's committee of all library associations in New England, New York and New Jersey. The committee will hold a meeting today at the State House in regard to bringing the Northeastern convention to Swampscott in June.

Dr. William L. Stidger, pastor of the Copley Methodist Church, delivered the main address at the evening session at the University Club.

Dr. Stidger centered his talk about the analogy of the pulpit with human attributes of Lewis Carroll's "Alice in Wonderland." The lock was in search of books as the only means of opening itself to the fullness of life. Dr. Stidger expressed the thought that librarians are the most eligible persons in directing others toward right reading.

BOSTON EVENING TRANSCRIPT.

SATURDAY, FEBRUARY 1, 1930

Noted Musicians by Boston Artist in Library Exhibit

In the music room of the Boston Public Library is being exhibited until March 1 a group of portrait drawings of notable musicians by Lydia Hess.

Strong in drawing and with brilliance of technique, these portraits convey the individuality and temperament of the persons depicted and form a group which will be of interest to both artists and musicians.

Included are drawings of Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, Glazunov, Galy, Maier, Samson; a crisp water color of Henry Zelenka made on the occasion of his presentation of his Japanese Symphony this fall, heads of Chase Baranov, Vanni Maronox and Margherita Salvi of the Chicago Civic Opera Company; a spirited portrayal of Ethel Levenson in action, a print of a linoleum cut of Dr. Karl Muck made especially for his birthday celebration recently; a print from the linoleum cut of Arthur Hessler created at the time of the Esplanade Concerts, an unusual and vigorous drawing of Roland Hayes and a charming portrait of Gertrude Ehrhardt.

Miss Hess obtains a powerful graphic contrast in whatever medium she uses, whether water color, charcoal or ink so that individually and as a group these drawings present a vivid appearance. She is a graduate of the Massachusetts School of Art and the Museum School.

Boston Transcript

WEDNESDAY, JANUARY 29, 1930

Tansmanic Hour

Mr. Alexander Tansman of Poland and of Paris is again on tour in America as composer-pianist. Yesterday he was passing through Boston, and one and another of his friends, eager to pay him a compliment, persuaded him to an hour of his own music, last evening, in the Lecture Hall of the Public Library. Not too numerous or too adept an audience musically sat by. Mr. Slonimsky, out of old acquaintance, introduced the guest in friendly fashion. Mr. Burgin of the Symphony Orchestra joined him in his Tansman-sonata for Violin and Piano. Next Mr. Tansman played five of his own Polish mazurkas, a lullaby and a dash of burlesque, ended with his Second Sonata for Piano. The listeners were attentive and appreciative.

Three chamber-pieces—the first to be heard in Boston from Mr. Tansman—received in kind and degree the impression of his symphonic music as it has come and gone at Symphony Hall. He writes with Polish flavors in his brief Mazurkas, which are half-concentration, half-idealization, of a national dance turned moody. The casual listener suspects a kindred folk-tune in the Lullaby and in the slow movements of the two sonatas. Polish or not, they are written with a sonful and romantic warmth rare in the younger composers of these days when cerebration and science are check-rein to emotion. Unfettered and honest, Mr. Tansman looks in his heart and writes—yet writes with a modernistic splendor. He was abundantly re-entitled through the S suite for Violin and Piano, deepened his slow movement with their values both united and contrasted; set them, through the scherzo, in vivid rhythmic play. The Piano-Sonata ran in more virile and passionate vein. The first division clanged with superposed sonorities, the Largo, the Vivace, was pensive or darting interlude; the Finale was release in the energy of a mazurka. Mr. Tansman's music, large or small, is the music of a composer who feels, then, taking thought, sets down his measures with wit and full-furnished. Between these virtues and the public ear intervenes a veil of improvising fluency—and he pays the penalty.

January, 1930

Our Own Public Library

I WONDER how many printers in Boston, searching around for new ways of doing old things or in old way of doing new things, know what a wealth of material they could find in our own public library. And how many printers do you know who subscribe to or in some way obtain the publications of the library?

The last edition of "Alone Books," the bulletin of the Boston Public Library, begins the publication of a descriptive catalogue of the fifteenth century printed books in the library. Mr. Zoltan Haraszti, the editor of the library bulletin, and he brings a very fine temperament and fine scholarship to the task. The notes which he supplies, and which may occupy a few lines or several pages in the bulletin, aim at giving to the book or books a cultural rather than a bibliographical or a topographical interest, although many of his facsimiles will amply the wants of those interested in the craftsman's hand of the old books.

The first installment of the catalogue just received deals with the Gutenberg Bible and the first dated Bible of Fournier and Schoeffer.

Boston printers ought to familiarize themselves with the research possibilities of the library, almost at their very doors.

Boston Transcript
February 21, 1930

Dr. Lynn H. Harris to Speak on Rachel Lindsay's Work

The lecture in the American People's Association course at the Boston Public Library on Sunday at 2:30 P. M. will be given by Dr. Lynn H. Harris, president of Howard Seminary at West Bridge, Wrentham. The subject, Dr. Harris has chosen is Rachel Lindsay. The speaker has an intimate personal acquaintance with this poet and has contributed to her as a house guest.

After a brief sketch of the poet's points of view, Dr. Harris will discuss her work in detail, and its significance. His points of departure will be the familiar critical data, the influence of Aristotle, "All Art is an Imitation of Nature," the second from Matthew Arnold, "All Literature is a Criticism of Life." The speaker will illustrate his points with brief readings in the land of the poet.

The president, Henry Lee Higginson, will preside.

HOTEL AND TRAVEL NEWS

Friday, January 31, 1930

Free Lectures at the Public Library Lecture Hall include "The Art of Florence" by Mrs. Everett W. Varney on Sunday afternoon Feb. 2, at 3.30. On Sunday Evening, February 2, "A message Through Drama" Lucille Vandiver, illustrated by one-act play presented by the Parker Memorial players under her direction. "Egypt, Ancient and Modern," an illustrated lecture by Mme. Beale Morey with music by members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, Thursday Evening, February 6, at 8 P. M.

The Boston Post

FRIDAY, FEBRUARY 14, 1930

THE PUBLIC LIBRARY

To the Editor of the Post:
Sir—I was greatly pleased to read in the newspapers that Mayor Curley intends having all the outdoor statuary cleaned, also the City Hall.
I was sorry that the Public Library was not added to the list, as it seems a great pity that the beauty of this building should be permitted to be so marred by the great accumulation of grime with which it is covered. If the city cannot afford to have it cleaned I am sure there are citizens of means who are public-spirited enough to contribute the price if their attention is called to it. One of the most disgraceful conditions of filth is to be found in our subways and the stairways leading to them. Something should be done about it.
A POST READER.

BOSTON EVENING TRANSCRIPT.

WEDNESDAY, FEBRUARY 26, 1930

To Sponsor Free Lectures
as Tercentenary Feature

The Massachusetts Society of the Colonial Dames of America will provide an instructive feature for this year of the tercentenary. Under their auspices a series of four lectures on early Colonial subjects will be given at the Boston Public Library by Rev. Carroll Perry. These will be on Monday evenings at eight o'clock, as follows:

March 3, "Anne Hutchinson"; March 10, "The Whitecraft Delusion"; March 17, "Dorothy Quincy and John Hancock"; March 24, "Anne Bradstreet." The public is cordially invited and admission will be free.

Boston Sunday Globe

SUNDAY, MARCH 2, 1930

PROPOSES DELAY ON LIBRARY BRANCHES

Committee Against Mayor's $200,000 Order for Two

Would Await Trustees' Locations—
14 Councilors Want Buildings

With 14 City Councilors asking for new branches of the Public Library for their districts, and Public Librarian Belden saying branches are needed in 13 districts, while Mayor Curley has planned for only two new branches this year the situation is interesting. It is said the finance committee of the Council, with a view to postponing action on building any new branches till the Public Library trustees say where they believe this year's two new ones should be located, will report tonight not to pass at today's meeting, in reference to the Mayor's order appropriating $200,000 for the two branches.

The Mayor's plan, suggested by the Library trustees, is to provide two new branches annually for the next six years.

Librarian Belden has named these districts as needing branches: Ashmont, Charlestown Heights, Clarendon Hill, Day sq., Easton sq., Fenway, Forest Hills, Franklin Field, Germantown section, West Roxbury, North Brighton, Roslindale, South End, North End, and Mattapan.

14 Councillors All Trying to Get Buildings

It is very probable that the second branch library will be placed in East Boston.

It was Councillman McGrath of Dorchester who admonished his colleagues to stop "log-rolling" tactics and to vote

“Log-rolling” tactics were dropped by the City Council when fourteen members fighting for the two branch libraries which will be built this year voted after an hour’s debate to approve Mayor Curley’s $200,000 loan order and leave the selection of sites to the library trustees.

Good discipline was observed both by the staff and the patrons of the library during all the excitement, and the director, Charles F. D. Belden, had only praise to give, when interviewed today, regarding their conduct and the competent work of the fire department.

14 City Councilmen Clamoring for Two Libraries Planned This Year

The clamor of city councilmen for the two branch libraries which Mayor Curley intends to establish this year has produced an unexpected situation which will not be determined until the trustees of the Public Library specify to the council the districts where there is pressing need of library accommodations.

At least 14 councilmen are insistent upon obtaining a branch library for their districts and as the allotment is restricted to two buildings, 12 are doomed to disappointment.

Pending a conference with the trustees, the council committee on finance will report "ought not to pass" tomorrow on the $200,000 appropriation order recommended by the mayor.

The obtaining of a branch library loans as one of the few "plums" that councilmen expect to be able to secure this year. The library issue has suddenly assumed a political significance indicative of the determination of a majority of the councilmen to take advantage of every opportunity to enhance their prestige.

Librarian Charles F. D. Belden has enumerated 13 districts in which branch libraries are needed. He has listed Ashmont, Charlestown Heights, Clarendon Hill, Day square, East Boston square, Fenway, Forest Hills, Franklin field, Germantown section of West Roxbury, North Brighton, Readville, the Rugby section of Mattapan and Savin Hill.

Mayor Curley has approved the plan of the trustees to erect two branch libraries annually for the next six years. The cost of each will be $75,000 for land and building and $25,000 for equipment.

There is no sentiment in the council opposed to additional branch libraries but before an appropriation is voted the districts in which the two buildings to be erected this year will have to be designated.

The council committee on finance decided yesterday to allow the trustees to designate the two districts where buildings should be erected. Whether the council will make a similar agreement is uncertain but the most pressing business which confronts most of the councilmen is to obtain a branch library without awaiting the pleasure of the library trustees.

The Boston Post
TUESDAY, MARCH 4, 1930

FOR $200,000 BIG CITY JOBS

Council Approves Branch Libraries Loan Order

"Log-rolling" tactics were dropped by the City Council yesterday when 14 members fighting for the two branch libraries which will be built this year voted after an hour's debate to approve Mayor Curley's $200,000 loan order and leave the selection of sites to the library trustees.

As the measure was adopted by a vote of 21 to 1, only Councilman Peter A. Murray of the Mayor's home ward in Jamaica Plain stood out against the passage of the necessary loan order until informed as to the two districts which would be given the new library branches. He declared that Forest Hills had been promised a branch for the past 25 years and that the people had a right to know when they were going to get it before he would vote for the $200,000 loan order.

Councilman Murray had many supporters when the order was brought up, for the committee on finance had reported it out "ought not to pass without prejudice," explaining that word was being availed from the trustees to determine the locations.

But Councilman McGrath of Dorchester warned his colleagues against log-rolling which would delay the $200,000 building programme planned by the Mayor to give work to the unemployed.

The $200,000 will be available on March 14, at which time work will be started on plans for the construction of the first two branches. The first will be erected at Parker Hill, Roxbury, next to the Mission Church.

It is very probable that the second branch library will be placed in East Boston.

BATTLE ON BRANCHES OF LIBRARY

14 Councillors All Trying to Get Buildings

With 14 City Councillors, representing as many districts of the city, seeking to obtain the two new branch libraries which Mayor Curley proposes to build this year, the committee on finance will report "ought not to pass" on the necessary $200,000 loan order at tomorrow's full session, pending a decision on the locations.

40 TO BE ERECTED

Though the Mayor has recommended the construction of 40 additional branch libraries, he laid out a plan through which two would be established each year for the next 20 years, and the various Councillors have started a battle for the two which will be built this year.

To settle the controversy, Chairman Timothy F. Donovan of the finance committee has sent an invitation to the board of library trustees to appear before the committee and select the two districts where the branch libraries are most urgently needed.

Following a survey by experts, Director Charles F. D. Belden of the central library has sent the Council a list of 13 districts where present conditions demand additional branch libraries. He listed Ashmont, Charlestown Heights, Clarendon Hill, Day square, East Boston, East Boston square, Fenway, Forest Hills, Franklin field, Germantown section of West Roxbury, North Brighton, Readville, the Rugby section of Mattapan and Savin Hill, Dorchester.

Cutting the list of 13 down to the two that will be built this year is the task facing the library officials, with each of the Councillors insisting that the demand of his home district is most urgent. Securing a $100,000 branch library for the home district gives the Councillor a good talking point for re-election. For each branch library, $75,000 will be allotted to the construction of the building and $25,000 for the purchase of a site and necessary books.

for the order on its merits. He advised allowing the trustees to determine the needs of the library. Among his supporters were Councilmen Cox, Bush, Ruby and Fitzgerald. Councilman Murray refused to concur on the ground that the Forest Hills section has awaited a branch library for 35 years and that the people are entitled to know when they can expect to have their need recognized.

ACCEPTANCE OF STREETS

In the anticipation that many unaccepted streets will be laid out as public ways this year an avalanche of orders for the acceptance of streets was filed. Councilman Cox of West Roxbury presented 50 such orders and announced that he would offer 40 more next week. There are 138 unaccepted streets in West Roxbury, which has an assessed property valuation of $45,000,000, of which $6,000,000 has been added in the last four years.

An order for an appropriation of $10,000 for a new garage at police station 12, South Boston, was introduced by Councilman Mahoney and sent to the committee on finance.

Councilman Wilson's order calling upon Police Commissioner Wilson for the names and addresses, at the time of appointment, of the last 500 patrolmen added to the department, was adopted, after he had called attention to the fact that 50 per cent. of city and county employees live outside the limits of Boston. Among them he specified "nearly all the headmasters of grammar schools, who are paid $4700 a year but who have moved outside where the air is probably a little better."

THE BOSTON HERALD.
TUESDAY, MARCH 4, 1930

TRUSTEES TO PLACE BRANCH LIBRARIES

City Council Votes $200,000 for Two This Year

Objection to resort to "log-rolling" to obtain branch libraries by the application of political pressure upon the trustees of the Public Library forced councilmen, other than Peter Murray of Ward 19, to surrender and vote an appropriation of $200,000 for two branch libraries to be erected this year. The selection of the districts where they will be located will be made by the library trustees.

It is certain that one branch will be established on Parker Hill, Roxbury. The committee on finance reported "ought not to pass" on the appropriation order and the council accepted the report. Otherwise, President Lynch ruled, the order would be resubmitted to the committee.

Under the rules the council must pass the order twice prior to March 14 but there must be a lapse between the readings of a loan order. No opportunity will be given the council to pass the order on a second reading and it will automatically be sent to Mayor Curley for his approval.

It was Councilman McGrath of Dorchester who admonished his colleagues to stop "log-rolling" tactics and to vote

THE BOSTON GLOBE
TUESDAY, MARCH 4, 1930

